are iermés, I then have no way of locating my limbs in space. Then it's the numbness of my face that begins, I no longer feel my lips, nor my cheeks. When I dissociate myself deeply, it takes the whole body and I feel like a piece of wood... Even worse than unbundling physical, this is what happens at the mental level when the whole body is numb. The only thing I could compare that with is the white noise from static radio, it leaves me dizzy with lost eyes in space. The thoughts that arrive pass at the speed of light without any coherence, organization or form. I am in the total confusion. This can range from a somewhat hazy state and slightly hovering to the real blank page where I see nothing and where I hear nothing (...) When I come back to myself, I don't immediately and consciously realize that I have lost hours[288]."

Dissociation is a psychological and neurological defense mechanism that manifests itself at the time of trauma. During stress severe, the cerebral amygdala will activate to produce stress hormones and thus provide the body with something to deal with the danger. These hormones produced immediately, like an alarm, are adrenaline and cortisol. In a second step, it is the frontal cortex that will manage and modulate this production of hormones, or even turn it off, depending on the degree of stress. In the an extreme situation in which one is blocked and sequestered, such as rape or torture, there is then a psychological astonishment, i.e.

that the cortex is paralyzed, it no longer responds. The consequence is that it will not be able to regulate the emotional response by controlling the flow stress hormones from the amygdala on alert. The amygdala will therefore produce adrenaline and cortisol in large quantities, in too large quantities quantity... These two hormones have their use in preparing the body to make unusual efforts, but in too large quantities they can represent a vital risk at the cardiovascular and neurological level (discontinuation cardiac and epilepsy). Faced with this saturation of stress hormones, the body has an ultimate protective function, it will break just as does an electrical circuit that is flying over. For this it will isolate the cerebral tonsil that will no longer be able to secrete adrenaline or cortisol.

When this process of disjunction occurs, the victim then finds himself in a "second" state, in a kind of unreality... that's what this is called unbundling. As adrenaline and cortisol are no longer injected into the body by the tonsil, suddenly the victim does not feel the more this strong emotion and it is as if it became foreign to the the situation she is currently experiencing. The individual becomes as a spectator of the traumatic scene in which he is involved, he is disconnected, moreover there may be some kind of decorporation. Some victims report that they were no longer in their physical bodies at the time of the they clearly saw the scene from the outside (we will delve deeper into this in the next chapter).

According to psychotraumatologist Muriel Salmona[289],this ultimate process of brain disjunction occurs when the brain secretes morphine and ketamine-like. It is this chemical cocktail that would therefore seem to be at the origin of the natural phenomenon of dissociation during extreme trauma. This cocktail creates an emotional anesthesia but also strong physical anesthesia. The victim then feels nothing and accesses to a kind of parallel world with sometimes an exit out of the physical body.

It is then said that the victim passed through the Mirror of Alice in Wonderland, she went Beyond the Rainbow (in reference to the Wizard of Oz). These are the Metaphorical images that are used by the executioners programmer MK for represent the unbundling process. Programmers thus push the small victims to dissociate themselves during traumas by guiding them to a alternative reality in order to escape the terror and physical pain they inflict. Once the child is in this state completely dissociated, the deep work of programming can begin because it is in this state that the child has his subconscious and his doors spiritual wide open. Once the child has been completely dissociated and disconnected from his body, there is a split, another alter personality is then created to "take care" of the body of the small victim. It is this alter, this personality split, that records the traumatic memory that unfolds, while the victim (the personality that disappeared during the traumatic experience) will be totally amnesic of this memory. During this disjunction, all the Usual memorization work by the hippocampus will be interrupted and the Event memory will remain stored pending, as in a "box" black'' who would have recorded all the data. This is called the traumatic memory, or traumatic amnesia. In a disorder identity, these "black boxes" of memories are held by the different alter personalities.

- r* and

Following these painful experiences, victims will generally continue to self-treat, to self-dissociate themselves so that they can continue to live relatively normally. That is to say, they will adopt strategies to anesthetize this traumatic memory. The organization that has already made a

First experience of anesthesia during aggression will seek to reproduce this process. This can be done by taking alcohol or drugs that have dissociative effects, so there can be strong addictions that are set up in a victim." But one important thing to add is that stress can also cause these dissociative states, so it can also create a strong addiction. When waking up from a traumatic memory, the victim relives the event and his body reproduces the disjunction with the cocktail morphine/ketamine, which are hard drugs. So very quickly there is a the phenomenon of tolerance and habituation that is taking place, hence the extreme behaviour of victims who scarify themselves, who are

ui uiem, etc.,

in order to calm down and anesthetize by raising the stress level to cause disjunction, dissociation. They are not aware of the process in progress, but feel the "soothing" effect of these acts self-harm. This is no more and no less than a question of substances chemical in the brain, a kind of ''shoot dissociative''. Violence against others also generates this stress which injects certain substances into the blood.

The survivor of ritual abuse and mind control Jay Parker, described how the Monarch mind control system leads to an addiction to this endogenous chemistry secreted by the brain and which makes the victims perpetuate their dissociative states. In the global network practicing abuse ritual and mind control, the executioners only repeat on others what they have usually undergone themselves. It is a vicious circle, a infernal process. Child victims will develop a strong addiction to violence against others to create these numbing states, and dissociative, they in turn will become aggressors. Just like a drug addict and the phenomenon of addiction that makes it constantly increase the doses, the executioners will have to constantly go further in horror for continue to anesthetize.

The earlier the individual has started practicing ritual abuse, the more extreme practices he will need to dissociate himself... It's perhaps one of the reasons why the blood of the victims terrorized and then sacrificed is sometimes consumed: it contains a cocktail hormones acting as drugs that will help the executioner to reach this state of disjunction, perched in extreme dissociative anesthesia. the practitioners of satanic ritual abuse seek to be disjunct, consciously or not, in order to self-treat their own traumatic memories.

The more inhumane the acts of barbarism, the more it will be effective. In transgenerational satanlest families, this is a real vicious circle where dissociation becomes a real way of life. It is a process which is the automatic, natural and vital escape for these children during ritual abuse and mind control. But these troubles dissociatives will continue to interfere throughout the individual's life. A child dissociates easily, in the face of traumatic situations it divides his own consciousness in several parts, often for long periods of time.

His "me" is set aside, he is buried in order to be protected. It is about safeguarding what is most precious in the world, its divine essence, its true identity, the pearl that Satan cannot touch. The victim will always keep somewhere in him this root divine, his true "me". This precious seed is protected by alter personalities who serve as a cuirass in the face of violence because they encapsulate traumatic memories.

3 - Traumatic (or dissociative) amnesia

Traumatic amnesia is intimately linked to dissociation and dissociative identity disorder. It is characterized by an inability to evoke important personal memories, usually traumatic or stressing, this disability is not explained by a poor memory. The disorder includes reversible impairment of memory, during which memories of personal experiences cannot not be expressed verbally. Nor can it be explained by the effect direct physiological of a neurological disease substance or factor or other medical factor. Traumatic amnesia manifests itself most of the time as a memory hole or a number of oversights aspects of the personal history of the individual. These memory lapses are often associated with traumatic or extremely heavy events. During a Localized amnesia, the person does not remember the events of a period accurate, usually that of the first hours after an event extremely heavy.

Traumatic amnesia, which may be complete or piecemeal, is a common phenomenon among victims of childhood sexual abuse.

This psychotraumatic consequence is unfortunately little taken into account in legislation; which means that a victim who has had a long period of amnesia with the impossibility of denouncing sexual crimes in time will not be able to file a complaint because of the limitation period that will be obsolete. However, many clinical studies have described this phenomenon, which is known since the beginning of the twentieth century and which had been described in soldiers traumatized and amnesiac following fighting. But it is in the victims of sexual violence who are found the most amnesia Traumatic. Studies have also shown that the memories found were reliable and in every way comparable with traumatic memories which had always been present in the consciousness of the individual. These memories most often reappear suddenly and in an uncontrolled way, with very precise details and with obviously a lot of emotions, distress and amazement, because the victim relives the memory as if it were taking place in the present moment.

Michel Darves-Bornoz explained that traumatic memories do not are not memories like the others. Indeed, the trauma will modify the normal mechanisms for encoding and recovering traumatic experience. On the one hand, trauma can cause hypermnesic phenomena (i.e. an exaltation of memory that allows access to extremely detailed autobiographical memories and connected to the entire sensory system) as well as amnesic phenomena. In terms of psychotraumatology, hypermnesia and amnesia are therefore paradoxically linked (this is a key point, we will come back to it in the chapter 8). Indeed, when amnesic traumatic memories redo surface in consciousness, it is with such force that it becomes from hypermnesia, i.e. the memories that emerge become extremely clear, much clearer than a banal memory, assimilated by the explicit (narrative) and conscious memory. The traumatic experience is imprinted much deeper in the victim than any other lived experience, which is why when these memories dissociative resurface, they are particularly invasive and very detailed because all the senses relive the scene. This question of encoding and recovering traumatic memories is important because there is a controversy over true and false memories of sexual violence, and ritual abuse. You should know that only memories that have been encoded under a language form (explicit memory) are likely to be accessible, while non-language memory (implicit memory) is not susceptible to be accessible to consciousness. This non-verbal encoding of memory, therefore difficult to put in a narrative, chronological and autobiographical context, will not be fully aware by the victim[290].

These traumatic amnesias are the result of the dissociative mechanism triggered by the brain to protect itself from terror and extreme stress generated by violence. There is then a disjunction of the emotional circuit but also of the circuit of memory in connection with the hippocampus: an area of the brain that manages memory and tracking spatio-temporal, without it, no memory can be memorized, nor remembered, nor temporalized. As long as there is this disjunction of the circuit of memory, the hippocampus cannot do its job and this emotional memory, like the "black box of violence", is trapped out of time and consciousness... it is traumatic memory. Nowadays, it is possible to detect signs of memory impairment thanks to brain scans, indeed the tonsil complex and the hippocampus show a significantly smaller volume in people who have suffered severe Trauma.

When the dissociation ceases, the traumatic memory can finally reconnect to the consciousness and re-arise for example during an event reminiscent of violence. It then invades the psychic space of the victim making him relive the violence like a time machine. those memories that go back to consciousness are unbearable for the victim, it will therefore set up avoidance pipes to protect itself from anything that could trigger these memories again. As we have seen more high, it will also set up dissociating pipes for anesthetize and make the emotional circuit disconnect again and memory. Alcohol, drugs, risky behaviour, endangerment, but also violence against others, allow this dissociation and this disjunction by again producing extreme stress. The victim can therefore oscillate between periods of dissociation with significant memory, and periods of activation of traumatic memory where it will relive the violence.

Traumatic memory can be treated, but unfortunately professionals do not seem trained in psychotrauma and immense the majority of victims of childhood sexual abuse are abandoned and are not identified, protected, let alone treated. In many cases, victims whose traumatic memory resurfaces are not believed. he they are told that they are fantasies, psychotic hallucinations or well of "false memories" indusing[291].

To further complicate matters, trauma can cause the Broca area, the area of the left hemisphere of the brain that allows to verbally transmit an experience, to put words about the trauma experienced. Verbal communication being the means that we generally use to tell our experiences to others, the disruption of this function will be one more obstacle to the recognition of the victim[292].

In 1993, a study on traumatic amnesia was published in the Journal of Traumatic Stress. This study entitled ''Sef- reported amnesia for abuse in adults molested as children'' (Testimonies of adults reporting amnesia following sexual abuse during childhood) was led by Dr. John Briere. In this study, a sample of 450 adult patients (420 women and 30 men) reported abuse sexual were subjected to a questionnaire. The question of amnesia Traumatic was as follows: "Between the moment when are produced sexual abuse and your 18 years, was there a time when you did not you did not remember this experience of sexual abuse?'' The results have showed that out of a total of 450 subjects, 267 or 59.3%, replied that they had no memory of their abuse before they were 18 years old[293].

The phenomenon of amnesia (traumatic memories) caused by dissociation during trauma is something still very much controversial within psychiatric and judicial institutions. Why is this field of psychotraumatology, although very serious, so neglected and even discredited within the institutions guaranteeing justice, justice and the child.

security and care for victims? Yet the examples there is no shortage of concrete dissociative amnesias, as well as research on this ionction peculiar to the brain numarn. The few testimonies that follow show us that this is something that is recurrent, but which

yet remains covered by an institutional and media leaden screed which prevents this question of traumatic amnesia, yet so crucial for the understanding of the paedocriminal system, does not come to be found on the public square... In fact, it is always and again a question of the control of information dear to our "sorcerers-controllers" and social engineering

of the French campaign "Stop déni au Déni" (2015) in support of small victims of sexual violence, a contributor testified about sexual abuse in schools. Here's what it brings back to about his traumatic amnesia: "It took me more than 35 years to lift the fog that fell on my eyes that day, to know, to integrate into my memory, in what year and in what year region I was at CP. And two more years to get out of this amnesia traumatic, to sort, disassemble, and understand the strategy punishment-rape

Used. Today, I still get lost in the corridors when I enter in a school, I still feel the head of this man, there nearby, I hear and I still feel his breath on my face, I still feel pierced, scratched in it, I hurt. I wish I could finally let the tears out rapped in my throat that day, and I can't do it. Not yet[294]."

also a testimony of traumatic amnesia reported by Isabelle Aubry, founder of the International Association of Incest Victims (IIA): "It's been six months now since I remembered things that he who destroyed my life gave me subjected. For seven, eight, nine years... I don't know... I had forgotten everything or at least buried everything at the bottom of my memory... Now flashes have reappeared for me and I can't not think about it anymore. I remember a phrase that I cannot hear today without memory... Now flashes have reappeared for me and I can't not think about it anymore. I remember a phrase that I cannot hear today without think about all that. When my parents weren't there and since they weren't often there, I don't know how it started anymore, I don't know how many time it lasted, I don't know how far he went, I don't know when it happened I just know it was when I was in elementary school... it wanted me to massage him... I do not know anymore, I know that this massage was not a massage only from the back... I think he was naked but I don't know more. I miss a lot of things from those moments and I find it very hard not to know how far it went. I think I would like to know what it really happened. At that time, I thought it was normal what I was doing, I was consenting. But now I suffer a lot from it. I myself mutilate, I vomit, sometimes I eat a lot and sometimes not at all.

In moments of despair I start drinking, taking medicines in a whole box. This past eats away at me and I can't ignore it. I believe that what I have become makes my friends suffer and they must be really understanding to still manage to support me. I would like to go see someone, a psy, I have the numbers but I can't get the phone. I have more and more nightmares of rape, incest, suicide. My friends don't know what to keep quiet anymore. I haven't told anyone about it about my family and it seems impossible to me[295] !"

In 2013, in an article for the New Obs entitled "Raped at 5 years,she remembers it at 37 years old: with terror, the brain can disjunct", psychiatrist Muriel Salmona writes: "When in 2009, during a first session of hypnotherapy, after having relived very brutally and in a precise way - like a film - a scene of sexual violence committed by a relative of her family when she was 5 years old, Cécile B. To be worn complaint,she learned that the facts were prescribed (...) She was then 37 years. Cécile B. had lodged this appeal to challenge the validity of the prescription in respect of her, since a traumatic amnesia of 32 years had prevented her from becoming aware of the acts of rape suffered at the age of 5 and which lasted for 10 years, and that therefore she had never been able to denounce them before their recollection (...) As a specialist in psychotraumatology caring for victims of sexual violence, I can only fully understand and support it. Many of my patients are in the same case as her, they have had long periods of traumatic amnesia and have been unable to report to time sexual crimes suffered in their childhood due to delays in prescription exceeded (sometimes by only a few days), others were prevented for many years from denouncing them because of conduct avoidance,or the grip and threats of the entourage, and when they are finally ready, they can no longer file a complaint.'

In 2015, French journalist Mathilde Brasilier published an autobiographical book entitled ''There was the day, there was the night, there was incest'' in which she reports her Traumatic amnesia. For 30 years, this woman had an amnesia that has totally concealed the memories of her father's rapes that she had suffered during childhood. His brother was also abused by the father and he unfortunately committed suicide in 1985 a few days after saying to his father "After what you have done to me, I have nothing more to tell you".

It was following this tragedy that Mathilde Brasilier began to question herself and to consult a therapist... For a long time she thought she had lived a perfectly happy childhood in a privileged environment, without have no recollection of sexual abuse. In a radio interview, she said of her father: "The relationship was difficult because I couldn't stand to look him in the eye (...) This was one of the topics I was discussing with my mother:

"It's curious, I like Dad, but look him in the eye, it's unbearable to me.'' But I didn't know why (...) Mathilde Brasilier said that her traumatic memories came back suddenly (...) at a moment T one after the other (...) It's like a film that suddenly unfolds[296].

On January 16, 1998, French actress and singer Marie Laforêt testified at the 20 Heures de France 2 JT about traumatic amnesia.

Indeed, at the age of 3 she was raped several times by "a neighbor", this memory was repressed for years to resurface in her forties. Here is the transcript of his testimonial:

- Marie Laforêt: I relived exactly what had happened, the name of the gentleman, his costume, his way of doing things, everything. Everything is returned at the same time. It was impossible for me to talk about it for three days and three nights of tears... I received this in my face, you do not can in no way confuse it with anything else, nor with a premonition, nor with a history of mental confusion. This is not mental confusion, on the contrary, you are excessively precise.

- Reporter: How can you explain that your memory buried this event there for so many years?
- ML: I think it's in the same area as autism, fainting or coma. There is a painful episode, and we will decide to put an end to it.

- Carole Damiani (Psychologist): The memory left in the unconscious has not been destroyed and sometimes it is thanks to links associations,i.e. from memories to memories we end up getting close to the traumatic event. This may also mean that the no one was ready at that time to face it, whereas until then it had not was not.

Van Derbur, the Miss America of 1958, daughter of millionaire Francis Van Derbur, revealed in her autobiographies the consequences of the paternal incest she suffered during her childhood. She says that until the age of 24, she had totally repressed the memory of his father's rapes. In her autobiography entitled "Miss America By Day", she publicly reveals: "In order to survive, I divided myself into a "child of the day", joyful and smiling, and a "child of the night" curled up on she herself, at the mercy of my father... Until I was 24 years old, the child of the day had no awareness of the existence of the child of the night (...) During the day, there was no anger or embarrassing look between my father and me, because that I was not aware of the traumas and terrors of the child of at night. But the more the child of the night deteriorated, the more necessary it was that the child of the day excels; of the ski team of the University of the Colorado, from the Phi Beta Kappa club (editor's note: prestigious student club) to my miss America nomination, I thought I was the happiest person I had ever lived."'

It was a young pastor of his Church who sensed this heavy secret. At the age of 24, he managed to break the barricades she had set for herself.

built in his mind and that's when the memories emerged. Following this, she invested herself at a crazy pace in her public career in order to repress a second time all these heavy traumatic memories. At the age of 45 years, his life has changed... From the age of 45 to the age of 51, it has completely sunk, from violent memories are again reassembled with this time pains physical and paralysis. Her body was completely derailed, she could no longer move her arms or legs, and she was hospitalized in a psychiatric institute. She wrote that she could never have imagined that incest could have such repercussions! Who could believe that incest can have such effects on the body 30 years later?

Marilyn Van Derbur therefore had a traumatic, dissociative amnesia for several years following the repeated rapes of her father. that that she later described, from the age of 45, is a conversion disorder

(or dissociative conversion disorder), i.e. a sudden loss of its motor functions and its sensitivity, without medical explanation. For Marilyn Van Derbur, it was a paralysis most likely related to the sexual abuse she had experienced as a child. She also writes in her book about her father: He "worked" me night after night. Like a delicate piece of crystal broken in concrete, my father stripped me of my own belief system and my "me", but also of my soul which he broke into pieces.''

The autobiography of this Miss America contains both the glorious story of Marilyn Van Derbur, a dizzying ascent to the glory, but also an essential source of information about abuses sexual on children with this mechanism of dissociation and compartmentalization traumatic memories[297].

American actress and singer Laura Mackenzie also says that during her childhood,she was regularly raped by her father, John Phillips, a rock legend... In 2009, she read a passage from her memoirs "High on Arrival" in the television show "The Oprah Winfrey Show": "I'm wakes up that night coming out of a blackout, realizing that he was raped by my father... I do not remember the beginning of the abuse, nor how it took end,was it the first time? Had this happened before? I do not know and I remain in doubt. All I can say is that it was the first time I became aware of it. For a while I was in my body, in this horrible reality, and then I switched back into a blackout. Your father is supposed to protect you, he is supposed to protect you, not you "kiss[298]"."

Mackenzie says she was 17 or 18 when she began to remember her father's rapes. At that time, it was known by millions of people like the child star of the sitcom "One Day at a Time". No one realized then what she was experiencing in private...

"Very early on I started compartmentalizing and repressing difficult memories. And that's the root of all experiences difficult ones that happened afterwards."

She also said of her father: "I have no hatred against him. I understand that he is a truly tortured man, of a somehow he passes this unhappiness through me (...) It is a kind of Stockholm syndrome where you begin to love your aggressor. I felt a great love for my father.''

Cathy O'Brien, victim of the MK-Monarch, also describes how the memoirs traumatic and dissociative work in a small child who undergoes incest day after day: "Even though I could not understand that what my father was doing to me was something wrong, the pain and the suffocation during his abuse was so unbearable that I developed a dissociative identity disorder. This was impossible to understand, there is had no place in my mind to be able to handle such horror. I have thus compartmentalized my brain, small areas separated by barriers amnesiacs used to partition memories of abuse so that the rest of my mind can continue to function normally, as if nothing had happened arrived... When I saw my father at the table at dinner, I couldn't remember not sexual abuse. But as soon as he unbuttoned his pants, a part of me, the part of my brain that knew how to manage these norriuies abuse woke up, it was as if a neural junction opened so that the part of my mind could undergo my father again and again, according to the needs...

I certainly had a lot of experience in this "brain compartment"

who handled my father's abuse, but I did not have the full extent of perceptions,I had a very limited perception, a very limited vision[299].

Régina Louf, The X1 witness in the Dutroux case, reported that a dissociated part of herself was never "present" during the abuses sexual. This part of itself could therefore continue to live "normally" without having to deal with this heavy memory of abuse in his conscience. Conversely, the part of herself who was present and therefore raped during the abuse, Ginie, was hardly aware of the life led at school or in the family. It was as if Ginie was being sidewayed until she resurfaced again and took the relay when the executioner was back with Regina[300].

an article entitled "Multiple Personality Disorder in Childhood", M.Vincent and M.R. Pickering gives the example of a woman who described her experience at the ages of 3 and 4 when she was repeatedly raped by her adoptive father. It is a description of the dissociative state with a passage in a alternative reality, we find there the split in two "me" different: "It had become customary for her to remain passive and wait for the change of state of consciousness that would carry her from a heavy agony to a state of calm and even joy. She did this without even know that she saved her skin every time, feeding two "me" to the interior of her, each unaware of the existence of the other... Loving what is killing you is impossible. She couldn't do it. It is a infernal dilemma in the child's mind. She therefore left herself free to love, and left "the other" free to hater[301]..."

To correctly diagnose a dissociative identity disorder, it is the alter personalities that are first sought, and not traumatic amnesia itself. People with post-traumatic stress disorder, borderline personality disorder or other specified dissociative disorders may also experience one-time amnesia. Dissociative amnesia is caused by traumatic events that can be traced back by flashbacks, while true amnesia in dissociative identity disorder is caused by the alternation between distinct alter personalities from each other.

4 - Dissociative identity disorder (T.D.I.)

a/ Some historical cases

In 1793, Dr. Eberhardt Gmelin wrote the first detailed 87-page report on a case of "dual personality", which he described as "umgetaushte Personlichkeit" (exchange of personality) in his publication entitled "Materialien für die"

Anthropology''. The case was taken up and described in detail in 1970 by Henri Hellenberger in ''Discovery of the Unconscious'' She was a 21-year-old woman, from Stuttgart, who suddenly showed a new personality speaking French much better than German while adopting a change complete behavior. The two personalities, who each spoke a different language, had no awareness of the other. The "French woman" systematically remembered everything she had said or done, while the "German woman" forgot her actions. Gmelin had discovered that he had the ability to easily trigger the change of personality simply by a movement of the hands... What is reminiscent of the system trigger codes programmed in MK slaves, as we will see in chapter 7.

In 1840, psychotherapist Antoine Despine described the case of Estelle, an 11-year-old Swiss girl who had paralysis with a extreme sensitivity to touch. She had a second personality who could walk and play but could not stand the presence of her mother, a reaction possibly due to a traumatic memory related to his mother. Estelle showed a glaring difference in the behaviour of a personality at the other. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, Dr. Pierre Janet reported a number of cases of multiple personalities in his patients: Léonie, Lucie, Rose, Marie and Marceline. Leonie had three, if not more personalities including a child alter named "Nichette" In the case of Lucie, who was also described with three personalities, there was an alter named "Adrienne" who had regularly flashbacks of a trauma dating back to his early childhood. Rose had sleepwalking states as well as an alternation between paralysis and ability to walk[302].

The first observation of a duplication of personality popularized in the general public is known as the "Lady of Mac Nish''. A famous case that will be the subject of several publications between 1816 and 1889. This young woman, her real name Mary Reynolds, presented an alternation of two personalities between the age of 19 years and 35 years. Finally one of the two personalities finally prevailed on the other. His case is mentioned in the book ''De the intelligence'' of the French philosopher and historian Hippolyte Taine, it is he who will rename Mary Reynolds the ''Lady of Mac Nish''. The girl, who lived in the United States, was by nature calm, rather reserved and melancholic and of good health. His troubles began around the age of 18 following prolonged syncope, she then began to present an alternation between two very different personalities from each other. One of them was very playful in nature and sociable, a personality with a lively and cheerful character that does not was afraid of nothing and who obeyed no one. After about ten weeks,she again had a kind of strange syncope and she woke up again with her original personality. She had no recollection of the period that had just passed but it had found the same reserved and melancholic character. The alternation between these two personalities continued. thus for years, the transition was often done at night, during his sleep. When one of the personalities disappeared, Mary Reynolds found exactly in the state in which it had "disjunct" the time before, but without any memory of what had happened in the interval. That is to say, with one personality or another, she knew nothing about her second character. If, for example, he was introduced to someone in one of these states, it no longer recognized it in the other state. It's towards the age of 35 that the sociable personality began to impose itself more often and for longer periods of time. This personality ended up to impose itself definitively until 1853, when Dame Mc Nish died at the age of 61.

Another known case of the nineteenth century is that of Félida, described by Dr. Azam who followed it from 1860 to 1890. Azam is the author of the book "Hypnotism and Double Consciousness" (1893) in which he describes the case of this young woman. In 1860, he introduced his patient to the Society of Surgery and the Academy of Medicine, this case had an influence considerable on the question of the phenomenon of duplication of personality.

There is now a whole library on this case. Dr. Azam has met Félida for the first time in 1856, he then followed her during 32 years. Here's how he describes personality changes: "Almost every day, with no known cause or the influence of emotion, she is caught up in what she calls her crisis; in fact, it enters in its second state. Having witnessed this phenomenon hundreds of times, I can describe it accurately... I am describing it now from what I have seen.

Feida is seated, some kind of sewing work on her knees; all of a sudden, without anything being able to predict it and after a pain in the temples more violent than usual, her head falls on her chest, her hands remain inactive and descend inert along the body, she sleeps or seems to sleep, but a special sleep (...) After this time,

Feida awakens, but she is no longer in the intellectual state where she was when she fell asleep. Everything looks different. She raises her head and, opening her eyes, greets the newcomers with a smile, her physiognomy is illuminated and breathes cheerfulness, her word is brief, and she continues, humming, the needle work that in the previous state it had begun. It is lifts, her gait is agile and she barely complains of the thousand pains that, a few minutes before, made her suffer (...) His character is completely changed: from sad she has become cheerful, for the least reason,she emotions in sadness or joy. Indifferent to everything she was, she became sensitive to excess (...) In this life as in the other, his Intellectual and moral faculties, although different, are unquestionably whole: no delusions, no fakes appreciation, no hallucination. I would even say that in this second state, in this second condition, all its faculties seem more developed and more complete. This second life where physical pain is not done feeling is much superior to the other; it is above all superior to the fact that considerable that Feida remembers not only what happened during the previous bouts, but also all her normal life, while during her normal life she has no memory of what happened during her access[303].

Félida therefore has this particularity of being amnesic only in one sense, her original personality having no memory of her second personality while this one accesses all the memories (we there will come back regarding MK-Monarch programming). Dr. Azam appoints this phenomenon "periodic amnesia".

Little by little the second personality, the most playful, began to encroach on the first to end up imposing itself most of the time.

When her former personality reappeared at times, she thus found itself confronted with large black holes where it had forgotten three quarters of its existence...

Feida showed in an episodic way a third personality that Azam will have seen emerge only two or three times, the husband of Feida had it observed only about thirty times in sixteen years. This third personality alter appeared in a state of unspeakable terror, his first words were: "I'm afraid... I'm afraid...'', she won't recognized no one except her husband. Was it a traumatized alter by his memoirs? It should be noted that at that time, the link between identity dissociation and trauma had not yet been established by the doctors who cared for these patients.

One

of the Most Remarkable Of the French Cases is that of Louis Vivet. Between 1882 and 1889, it was studied by many scientific authors, including by Bourru and Burot who wrote in 1895: "These facts of variation of personality are less rare than we suppose". In 1882 Camuset noted in his report on Louis Vivet: "We are tempted to believe that these cases are more numerous than one would suppose, despite the rather rare observations that one has''. It is with Louis Vivet that the term ''personality multiple'' was used for the first time to replace "double personality". Louis Vivet had six different personalities characterized by changes in memory, changes in character, as well as changes in changes in sensitivity and behavior. With each change of personality, it was noted that his memoirs changed accordingly and that the personalities all ignored each other. Here's how Bourru and Burot describes his change of personality: "All of a sudden, the tastes of the subject have completely changed: the character, the language,physiognomy, everything is new. The subject is reserved in his outfit. He no longer likes milk; however, it is the only food he takes usually. The expression of his physiognomy has become softer, almost shy: the language is correct and polite. The patient just now if arrogant is now remarkably polite, no longer tutoie anyone and calls everyone 'Sir'. He smokes, but without passion. He has no opinion, either in politics or in religion, and these questions, it seems to say, do not concern themselves.

not an ignorant like him. he is respectful and aiscipune. The word is much sharper than before the transfer, reading aloud is remarkably clear, the pronunciation is quite distinct, it reads perfectly and written quite a lot. It is no longer the same character (...) In a few minutes the transformation is complete. It's not the same character anymore:

the constitution of the body has varied with the tendencies, and feelings that translate. It is a total transfer. The memory has changed, the subject does not recognizes more neither the places where it is located, nor the people around it and with whom, a few moments ago, he exchanged his ideas. A such an unexpected and radical change was likely to amaze us and make us think (...) We have renewed this application several times in the most conditions various and the result was consistent. The same character reappear, always identical to itself. It was a transformation so to speak mathematical, always the same for the same physical agent and the same point of application[304]. "

Also worth mentioning is the case of Clara Norton Fowler (under the pseudonym Miss Christine Beauchamp) whom Dr. Morton Prince, a neurologist from Boston, met in 1898 when she was 23 years old.

The use of hypnosis revealed in her the existence of four different personalities. In this case, it was reported that the girl had suffered many traumas during his childhood. Miss Beauchamp was a reserved and shy young woman while her others personalities were extroverted, capricious and angry. But the Amnesic polarities between each personality were rather complicated: one was unaware of the existence of all the others, another was aware of the existence of only one other personality, etc. One of his personalities has shown a total amnesia of the last six years that preceded his appearance. A peculiarity in the case of Miss Beauchamp was the use of first names for the different alter, one of the personalities chose herself to be called "Sally". Dr. Morton Prince considered Sally the most personality interesting and it is with her that he collaborated most easily. Prince was looking among the personalities who was the authentic Miss Beauchamp, the real original personality. He came to the conclusion that this original personality had in fact disintegrated to make way for several specific identities. In using hypnosis, he gradually dissolved the amnesic barriers partitioning the alter to make them merge together! [305]).

Another case was reported in 1916 by Dr. James Hyslop and Dr. Walter Prince in the Journal of the American Society for the Psychological Research. This is Doris Fischer, born in Germany in 1889. This woman has developed five distinct personalities, each has a particular name. The five alter personalities showed varied and very different characteristics from a psychological point of view.

As is usually the case, they have developed as a result of shocks deep emotional. Behind Doris's personality, "Real Doris", were:

- "Margaret": The alter personality that was created by the first dissociative shock. An alter having a state emotional and mental little boy of five or six years.

- "Sick Doris": This is the personality alternated following the second shock traumatic. Sick Doris had no memory of events or even any notion of verbal language, it did not recognize no one and no longer knew how to use the objects of everyday life. It does not showed no affection.

"Sleeping Margaret": this alter personality seemed to sleep all the time, she hardly ever spoke except in a kind of foggy speech whose understanding was difficult.

- "Sleeping Real Doris": This is the name that was given by "Margaret" to the sleepwalking personality that was created at the age of eight. She had memoirs that "Real Doris" did not have.

"Real Doris" had no knowledge of the thoughts or actions of his secondary personalities.

She couldn't remember anything about what was going on during periods when another alter had emerged. The alter personalities have merged one by one during therapy sessions, so as not to

finally only to the "Real Doris".

In 1928, another case of multiple personality was reported in the book "Multiple Personality" (W. Taylor and M. Martin, 1944). The patient was a man named Sorgel who lived in Bavaria and was epileptic. It showed two organizations of conscience well distinct: a criminal personality and an honest personality. THE honest personality had practically no memory of his other life, while the criminal personality remembered both lives very well! [305]).

Here we find once again this notion of "one-way" amnesia, that is to say that a deeper alter personality accesses all the memories, while another, on the surface, remains totally unaware of "her other life"... A key point to which we will return in the chapter 7 on MK-Monarch programming.

The most publicized and therefore the best known cases of the twentieth century are those of Christine Costner Sizemore (The 3 Visages d’Eve), Shirley Ardell Mason (Sybil), Truddi Chase (When Rabbit Howls) et Billy Milligan (L’homme aux 24 personnalités).

The story of Christine Costner Sizemore was reported in a book written by her psychiatrists, Corbett Thipgen and Hervey M. Cleckly. The sweet and shy young woman had turned to them because she suffered from terrible migraines that seemed incurable. During his therapy, a new rebellious personality and turbulent emerged. The first personality had no awareness of the existence of this other alter, the turbulent, which she, had perfectly awareness of the existence of the first. This case of multiple personality was brought to the screen by Nunaly Johnson in 1957, in a film entitled "The 3 faces of Eve". It was the actress Joanne Woodward who successively played the three personalities, Eve White, a docile and shy young woman, Eve Black, the turbulent seductress and finally Jane, a much more balanced personality, a kind of fusion of the two Eves. This film is one of the few that has not fallen into the stereotypical representation of a T.D.I.

with an alter criminal personality. The version of the 1957 film is introduced by journalist Alistair Cooke who says: "This is a true story. You have often seen films that claimed such a thing. This sometimes means that a certain Napoleon did exist, but that any resemblance between his real life and the film in question would be due to the miracle. Our story is true. It is that of a nice housewife and obliterated, who, in 1951, while living in her native Georgia, frightened her husband very much by a totally unusual conduct. There is nothing about it rare: we all have our whims, all we repress a desire to sing a being we admire. One writer claimed that in every fat man, sleeps a skinny man. In this young housewife, in a frightening way, two well-marked personalities were literally struggling to impose their will. It was a case of "multiple personality". We read this in the books, but few psychiatrists have seen them themselves. Until the day when the Dr.

Thigpen and Cleckley of Georgia Medical College were in the presence of a woman with one more personality than Dr. Jekyll. In 1953, they presented this case to the American Psychiatric Association, a case that has become a classic of the psychiatric literature. So this film didn't matter about a screenwriter's imagination. Truth itself went beyond fiction. Everything you will see has happened to the one that has been baptized "Eve"

White". Much of the dialogue comes from the clinical notes of the so-called Dr. Luther."

However, the film which shows only two personalities (who end up merging) does not reflect the exact reality since

Christine Costner actually developed more than twenty different personalities, as she would later reveal in her memoirs, published only a year ago.

During the 70s, the case of Sybil is certainly the one that made the most known the dissociative disorder of the identity. Shirley Ardell Mason was a young woman of 25 years who due of his visions, nightmares and terrible memories, went consulted Dr. Cornelia Wilbur. It was then that six different personalities emerged during the therapy. Shirley discovered that she had been the victim of severe humiliation and sexual abuse by her mother when she was a child. This case could have remained in the shadows as for many others, but Flora

Rheta Schreiber published in 1973 a novel based on the true story of Shirley, a novel entitled "Syblil" which became a real bestseller. Following this huge success, a few years later in

In 1976, Daniel Petries produced a film based on the novel. A film that will carry besides the same name, Sybil, and which was also a great success. For many therapists, this case has marked the history of which still surrounds this mysterious personality disorder today multiple...

T.D.I.. There was a before and after Sybil, leading to a whole controversy

Truddi Chase, born in 1935, is the author of an autobiography entitled "When Rabbit Howls" (1987), his case a

also the subject of a tv movie: "Voices Whithin

The Lives of Truddi Chase", broadcast in 1990 by the American Broadcasting Company (ABC).

It was during therapy that it was discovered that Truddi was suffering from multiple personality. She was abused from the age of 2 until her adolescence. Her stepfather abused her physically and sexually while her mother neglected her. She has always remembered sexual abuse and abuse,but never being able to recall them in detail, this until she began therapy with Dr. Robert Phillips. Truddi

Chase has always refused to merge his many personalities, thinking they were a cooperating team. She died in March 2010 at the age of 75.

Another historical case of multiple personality is that of Billy Milligan, born in 1955 in the United States. In 1975, Milligan was arrested for several crimes including rape. This case was over-publicized at the time of the trial because of the particular psychological profile of the accused... His rape trial sparked outrage when defense pleaded not guilty

because of multiple personalities. Milligan stated that it was not he who was present at the time of the assaults sexual about female students, but an alter lesbian personality. THE it was obviously very difficult for the public to believe the version of events of the rapist. The "Milligan case" has been studied for many years and reported in detail by Daniel Keyes, Milligan's biographer. Keyes devoted sixteen years of his life to collecting information, investigating and interviewing "the Professor" (Miligan's multiple alter personalities merged into a single personality) as well as the people who have been close to him. Two books came out of it: "The Minds of Billy Milligan" and "The Milligan Wars", available in French under the titles: "Billy Milligan, the man with 24 personalities" and "The a thousand and one lives of Billy Milligan".

In Keyes' biography of Milligan, it is stated that his personality split occurred when the child was constantly humiliated and beaten by his father-in-law, who was also abusing sexually from him. A total of 24 personalities have been diagnosed at Milligan. Among these alter personalities, some had tendencies criminal and destructive, this is what brought him severe trouble. By against, his other personalities showed skills and competencies extraordinary. "Arthur" was one of his alters who had learned medicine on his own and who spoke several languages, it was him who managed to connect all the alter personalities: Arthur played the role of mediator in the internal system.

Other alter personalities had a real artistic talent for the painting, each with a different style. There were also alter personalities having the age of a child, a common thing in the T.D.I.. In her biography, Milligan explains the benefits of having several personalities, including alter children: "This allows you to have a new look at the world. A completely different look that allows you to see things that another would not have seen."

In 1979, Milligan was interned at the State Hospital for the Mentally Ill in Lima, Ohio. There, he will undergo a real hell: racketeering, beatings, electroshocks, chemical straitjacket... It remained in Lima until 1983, when he returned to the hospital. psychiatric of Athens where he will progress in his therapy to reach finally to merge all his alter personalities. Here is what he says about the merger (integration, concepts that will be developed later) of his alter personalities: "I had been told that the union of all my parts would be even stronger than the sum of my individual personalities, iviais in my case it is not true, the union of my personalities is less strong."

Despite the fusion of his alter, his mental state remained very precarious and unstable due to the many years during which he suffered prison, psychiatric internments, psychological and physical attacks, death threats, but also political instrumentalization by senators, magistrates, directors of hospitals or prisons... his healing was therefore far from being fostered by a climate of security and stability. It sadistic behaviour has been reported by "carers" and everywhere seemed to reign brutality and instrumentalization around him. Daniel Keyes denounces the American prison system with its opportunism, the corruption within its own management as well as its inability to deal effectively sensitive cases like billy milligan's.

One case that is less well known because it is non-criminal and much less publicized is that of Robert Oxnam. This man has been the president for more about ten years of the Asia Society, a prestigious American cultural institution. Robert Oxnam is a specialist in Chinese culture and language, he has accompanied people like Bill Gates, Warren Buffet or George Bush during their travels in Asia. It is the author of an autobiography entitled "A Fractured Mind" in which he reveals that he suffers from a disorder dissociative identity. In 2005, the CBS News program 60 Minutes devoted a report to him! [307]] to expose this particular mental disorder.

Robert Oxnam received a very rigid education and a strong pressure was put on him for his social and professional success. sound father was a university president and his grandfather was a bishop but also

President of the World Council of Churches (WCC). Following brilliant Studies, Oxnam was very quickly put forward in the major media and it has quickly obtained a prestigious and elitist position. From the age of thirty, he was appointed president of the Asia Society. Robert Oxnam was on the roof of the world but inside of him there was a mixture of depression, anger and rage. On the one hand, it and had this sparkling social and professional success, and on the other a bad being and a permanent depression that was getting worse. In the 80s, Oxnam was followed for alcoholism and bulimia, it is also in this period that his first marriage collapsed. Consultations with a psychiatrist for his addiction problems and recurring memory lapses did not improve anything at all. Sometimes he woke up with traces of beatings and injuries on his body without having any idea what could have been the cause, or even in what context it could have been arrive. He apparently had another life in parallel... One day, he got found lost in the crowds of Central Station in New York, he was in a trance state and he heard voices harassing him by telling him that he was bad, that he was the worst person ever to live. In 1990, during a therapy session with Dr. Jeffrey Smith, Robert Oxnam is suddenly become someone else... His psychiatrist reports that there was a complete change, in his voice, in his attitude and in his movements.

During one session, Dr. Smith reported that Oxnam's hands were like claws, he was in terrible anger. This anger came from a little boy named "Tommy".

When Smith told Oxnam what had happened during the session, he stated that he knew nothing about this Tommy and that he had no recollection of what had just happened in the cabinet.

of the therapist. It was then that Dr. Smith realized that he may have case to a case of multiple personality. On the announcement of this possible diagnosis,Robert Oxnam reacted strongly by declaring: "It's rubbish, I saw Sybil, I'm not like Sybil!"

During the course of therapy, eleven distinct alter personalities emerged independently of one another. Among them were "Tommy", an angry young boy, the "Witch", a terrifying alter or "Bobby" and "Robby". "Bob" was the dominant personality, i.e. the "host" personality:

the public façade, in this case an intellectual who works at the Asia Society. In his public life, Robert Oxnam went about his business and business, multiplying meetings with high-rankings dignitaries like the Dalai Lama. But this public life gave no glimpse of his deep personality disorders... THE

seems to be no exception. During his therapy, an alter named "Baby" reported memoirs about childhood abuse. These were severe sexual and physical abuses, always accompanied by these kinds of words: "You are bad, this is a punishment! [308]]."

Did Robert Oxnam experience ritual abuse? Did he undergo an intentional personality split during childhood? Is he part of one of these families?

elitist practicing systematic mind control over his offspring? Where did the terrifying alter "Witch" come from?

Has he undergone mental programming in preparation for the future career elitist into which it was quickly propelled? The fact remains that his case demonstrates well how an individual can have a dissociative disorder of identity while conducting business to a high post while maintaining a completely normal public façade. Is this what Fritz Springmeier refers to when he talks about slaves under mental control that are completely undetectable, to describe these deliberately split and programmed individuals?

b/ Definition of T.D.I.

Over the past thirty years, the assessment and treatment of dissociative disorders has been improved by better clinical identification, by numerous publications of research and academic work as well as

than by specialized instruments. International publications from clinicians and researchers have appeared in many countries.

concern clinical case studies, psychophysiology, neurobiology, neuroimaging, etc.
All these publications confirm the existence of the T.D.I. and therefore give it a validity comparable to other diagnoses well-established psychiatrics. A 2001 study entitled "An examination of the diagnostic validity of dissociative identity disorder" by David H. Gleaves, Mary C. May and Etzel Cardena clearly demonstrates that this psychiatric disorder is at take it very seriously! [309]).

The Dissociative Disorder of Identity has had many names throughout history: "double existence", "double personality ", "dual consciousness", "personality state", "personality transfer", "dual personality", "plural personality", "dissociated personality" (DSM-I, 1952), "multiple personality", "divided personality", "alternating identity" and "disorder of the personnalité multiple" (DSM-IV, 1980).

It is a complex and chronic post-traumatic dissociative disorder that develops, in most cases, as a result of sexual abuse and/or severe and repeated physical abuse in early childhood.

It is a disruption of the functions of identity, memory or consciousness. The alteration may be sudden or progressive, transient or chronic. The identity, or habitual personality of the person is then forgotten and a new personality is required (an alter). This is often accompanied by a memory disorder with important events only cannot be remembered (DSM III, 1987). Dr. Richard Kluft defines it this way an alter: "It works both as a receiver,processor, storage center for perceptions, experiences and their elaboration in connection with the events and thoughts of the past and/or the present and even the future. He has a sense of his own identity and ideation as well as an ability to initiate thought processes and

of actions."

Most patients with an I.D.T. will also suffer from various mental disorders such as chronic depression, stress post-traumatic, anxiety, strong addictions, disorders eating, narcissistic disorders and somatization. They will be able to be diagnosed with borderline personality disorder, schizophrenia, or bipolar or psychotic disorder if dissociation and presence of personalities alter was not detected or even searched. These misdiagnosis occur especially if the evaluation interview does not contain questions relating to dissociation and trauma or that it focuses solely on the most apparent comorbidity problems (i.e. disorders associates cited above).

The Manual on Diagnosis and Statistics of Mental Disorders, DSM-IV (2000), defines the following criteria for Dissociative Disorder of Identity:

A. Presence of two (or more) identities or personality states - each with its relatively permanent mode of perception, relationship, of thought on the environment and on oneself.

B. At least two of these identities or personality states take control - on a recurring basis - of the person's behavior.

C. Inability to remember very personal information: an important oversight that must be distinguished from what is commonly forgotten.

D. The disturbance is not due to the direct physiological effects of a substance (drug intoxication or alcohol) or to a problem general medical (for example complex partial epilepsies). note:

in children, symptoms are not attributable to companions imaginary or other whimsical games.

The individual is unable to remember certain important personal information and he shows too great memory gaps and profound so that it is a simple oversight. Many patients get also complain of having severe migraines. This disorder can lead to a dissociative runaway, which manifests itself as a sudden and unexpected departure from home or workplace, accompanied by an inability to remember one's past. There is then confusion about identity personal or the adoption of a new identity (partial or complete).

In his book "Discovery of the Unconscious", Henri F. Ellenberger established from different cases the various aspects that could be presented by these fractional personalities:

1 : Simultaneous multiple personalities.

2 : Successive multiple personalities: a/ mutually conscious of each other.

c/ amnesiac in one direction only.

Each personality lives with his personal and individual history, his own memories, his own character and they may even each have a different name. These personalities can also know and interact with each other within an inner world complex. It is an internal system where alter can coexist peacefully but more or less severe conflicts can also divide them. In the in most cases, there is a dominant personality, called the "personality first" or "host personality", which is surrounded by a series secondary personalities usually organized hierarchically.

The two largest case studies on this topic are those of Dr. Frank Putnam: "The clinical phenomenology of multiple personality disorder : Review of 100 recent cases” (Journal of clinical Psychiatry 47 - 1986) et celle du Dr. Colin Ross who studied 236 cases.

When asked what they think they are, they answer: a child (86%), an assistant or helper (84%), a demon (29%), a person of the opposite sex (63%) or they cite another person (alive) (28%) or a family death (21%[31°1).

German therapists Angelika Vogler and Imke Deister listed the types of alter personalities frequently found in patients suffering from a T.DIJ311!:- the Host/Hostess: The first function of the host or hostess is to ensure the right operation of the multiple system in everyday life. Its age corresponds to usually at the physical age of the body and its gender identity corresponds to the sex of the body. Generally, the hostess knows very little or even ignores the existence of other personalities in the system and it has large memory holes. The hostess usually passes for someone from very reliable but his basic temperament is often depressive. Like us let's see it in chapter 7 on Monarch programming, these are these personalities "Hosts" who serve as a façade personality, a personality public, among MK slaves.

- The Observer: Practically in every system there is at least one observer who monitors everything that happens and who does not have so no memory hole. This personality reacts rather in a way rational and does not show feelings since she needs to keep a great distance from the inner and outer world in order to ensure its role. It is for this reason that the observer does not emerge in the foreground (does not take control of the body) but he/she can take contact with different alters of the system.

- The Protector: The protective personalities of a system emerge and take control of the body as soon as an alter or the system is feel threatened by a certain situation. These protective personalities can be very aggressive and it is important to understand and value their protective function.

- Personalities identifying with executioners: These are the personalities who remain faithful to the sect. These personalities identify with their executioners and values.

They often have the function of punishing other alter personalities (by example by self-harm) who wish to break contact with the sect or who would like for example to reveal information about it during a therapy session. If the multiple person is still in contact with the sect, these alter personalities can transmit to them the content of the therapy session without the other personalities of the system noticing.

- "Captive" children and adolescents: In practically every multiple system there are children. They remained captive for a certain period of time. There are children who keep a certain age for a long time while others are maturing. It is also possible that an alter-child who has kept the same age for a long time begins to age afterwards.

An amazing feature of the T.D.I. is that in the same individual, alter personalities can show remarkable physiological differences in visual acuity, in the response to medications and psychotropic drugs, in allergies, in heart rate, blood pressure arterial, muscle tension, immune function but also in electro-encephalographic tracing. Physiological differences irrational since these alter personalities share the same body physics.

Already in 1887, Pierre Janet, had demonstrated that some individuals could develop several psychic centers, each of which had its own own peculiarities and activities. He had already named these dissociated centres

"Personalities". Janet worked with what was called at the time

"hysterical", women whose different personalities coexisted and operated at a subconscious level, taking only occasionally the control of normal consciousness during hypnosis or writing sessions

automatic. Janet had discovered that personalities suoconscientes ae ces "hysterical" had been created in response to a traumatic event that had occurred fixed in the subconscious to become the seed of new personalities. With this understanding, Janet's therapeutic system finally became effective in understanding and treating this disorder in which a variety of personalities emerged spontaneously to interact with the outside world. at from there, the Dissociation/Trauma model was established in psychotherapy and it began to appear in the multiple personality case descriptions! [312]).

In 1993, during his research on multiple personality disorder, Dr. Adam Crabtree wrote: "The recognition of the phenomenon of dissociation used to treat a traumatic episode by the creation of several psychic centers, leads to effective psychotherapy of the disorder of multiple personality. The etiological role of child abuse has not been recognized at all until our modern age. But the evidence Statistics of crimes on children of the late nineteenth century new offer a fruitful path of research. A review of historical cases raises questions about the equivocity of the phenomenon of multiple personality, it also reveals data that have not yet been fully recognized by clinicians Modern! [313]]."

T.D.I. develops during childhood. As we have seen, the process of dissociation is a natural protection mechanism against a psychologically insurmountable situation. Just as a circuit breaker avoids a short circuit, this human function makes it possible to survive severe and repetitive traumas, this in order to be able to continue to live then in a relatively normal way. This process has the effect of encapsulating memories, affects, sensations or even beliefs in order to to mitigate their effects on the overall development of the child. According to the severity of trauma, the impact of dissociation can go as far as personality splitting. The T.D.I. seems to be the level of the most extreme dissociation. Pierre Janet himself acknowledged that "extreme dissociation" resulted in the creation of a multiple personality. The origin of this disorder, in at least 80% of cases treated by psychiatry, lies in traumas experienced during childhood, especially before the age of 5. Dr. Philip M. Coons compared twenty patients with an I.D.T. to a control group of twenty people of the same sex and age, not dissociated, non-schizophrenic, no Psychotic. While two people in the control group had suffered from

had been physically and/or sexually abused! [314]).

Dr. Richard Kluft arrives at similar data linking T.D.I. to early childhood trauma: "In two large groups, 97% and 98% had been victims of physical and sexual violence during childhood, or psychological abuse as well as neglect! [315]]."

Dr. James P. Bloch wrote that childhood trauma is today perceived as a primary etiological factor in the formation of dissociative disorders! [315]1.

According to Dr. Colin Ross, "the degree of dissociation is clearly related to the severity and chronicity of abuse."
Ross considers that, on statistical average, patients who have developed a

T.D.I. is said to have been physically abused for fifteen years and sexually abused

can therefore understand why many victims of ritual abuse

Satanic have developed a dissociative identity disorder. The T.D.I. is even certainly a strong indicator of a past related to ritual abuses.

Dr. Frank Putnam said in 1989: "I am struck by the level of extreme sadism reported by most victims with a T.D.I.. Many of them told me that they had been sexually abused by groups of people, forced into prostitution by their families, or offered as a sexual bait for their mother's lovers. After working with a number of patients with t.d.i., it has become apparent that abuse severe and repeated in childhood are a major cause of multiple personality."

Traumatic memories can therefore be "stored", or "encapsulated", in an alter personality and the host personality will not have no awareness of this reality. It is when this personality alters will emerge that it will be able to express and transmit this memory (usually in physically and emotionally eriving the trauma, a phenomenon that is calls abridgement). It will describe very precisely how the abuses took place. past, since it was he (or she) who lived them directly, while the host personality was "disabled"/disassociated to make way for the alter. Dr. Adam Crabtree reports that in 1926, the American psychologist Henry Herbert Goddard published a report describing the treatment of a young woman, Bernice R., diagnosed with a multiple personality. goddard used hypnosis to try to merge two personalities. For this, it put one of the alter personalities in a state of trance to try conscious of the existence of the other in order to make them merge. By this Procedure, Goddard did a very good job for emotional release from the patient's traumatic memories. Among these memoirs, the young woman had clear and vivid memories of her father's rapes. unfortunately ae ia cleaner

Goddard classified these memoirs of sexual abuse as hallucinations, in explaining that the incestuous acts allegedly happened at the age of 14 had not been mentioned by Bernice before the age of 19. This we indicates that Henry Goddard did not really know how it worked dissociation and traumatic amnesia. He therefore validated the theory smoker of "hysterical sexual hallucination"...

Theory still used today to discredit the victims, "hysteria" having given way to the "syndrome of false memories" (which we will develop in chapter ICM[318]]).

It will still take some time for the issue of childhood trauma to be truly taken into account and recognized as one of the the root causes of the fractionation of nersonality. Of our days of many clinicians have the idea that T.D.I. is a very rare disorder or well simply do not recognize its existence. This is primarily due to the lack of information and training of clinicians about the dissociation, dissociative disorders and the effects of trauma psychological; this diagnosis is therefore rarely considered and even less so reserved. However, T.D.I. and dissociative disorders are not uncommon. Studies in North America, Europe and Turkey have shown that between 1 and 5% of patients in psychiatric units for adults and adolescents, as well as in services for the treatment of substance abuse, disorders eating and obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD) may respond to diagnostic criteria for T.D.I.. But many of these patients will not be never clinically diagnosed with dissociative disorder[319]].

In his book "Cuit and Ritual Abuse", Dr. James Randall Noblitt gives some statistics concerning the recognition of the T.D.I. in the psychiatric professional environment:

A study conducted in 1994 interviewed 1120 psychologists and psychiatrists employed by the Veterans Administration, 80% of whom replied that they approved of the diagnosis of T.D.II[320]!..

Another study conducted in 1995 on 180 Canadian psychiatrists reported that 66.1% of them believed in the validity of the diagnosis of T.D.I. against 27.8% who did not validate this diagnosis, 3.3% were undecided! [321]!.

In 1999, a study of 301 psychiatrists showed that 15% of them believed that the T.D.I. should not be included in the diagnostic manual (DSM), 43% thought it should be included with reserves and 35% thought it should be included without reservations. On the question of evidence for the scientific validity of the diagnosis of T.D.I., 20% responded that there was little or no evidence of validity, 51% responded that there was partial evidence of validity and 21% felt that there was clear evidence that validated T. DT[322]!..

In 1999, the Washington State Supreme Court ruled that the diagnosis of T.D.I. met the criteria for the Frye standard (the Frye test is used to determine the admissibility of scientific evidence within a legal framework). This means that Expert evidence on the T.D.I. is admissible in the Federal Court because it was determined that this diagnosis was generally recognized in the community of mental health! [323]).

Today, there are a few tests that are used to detect the presence of dissociative disorders in a patient. The Dissociative Experiments Scale (DES) was designed by psychiatrists Eve Bernstein Carlson and Frank W. Putnam in 1986

(Annex No. 3). Another test is the "Multidimensional" Inventory of Dissociation” (MID) (Inventaire Multidimensionnel de Dissociation) developed by Paul Dell. This test is of the same type as the previous but with many more items. However, these tests do not allow not to establish a diagnosis, it is only by more structured professional interviews than a T.D.I. can be observed or excluded.

c/ T.D.I. and neurology

In recent decades, medical imaging tools to study brain function have expanded considerably.

Improved. Techniques such as resonance imaging magneuque pKivij and tomograpme by emission ae positrons (PET) allow among other things to visualize the activation of different areas of the brain during certain tasks or certain behaviors.

In November 2001, researchers from Melbourne, Australia, gathered in what the Herald Sun described to the epoch as "the world's first study" on multiple personality disorder. The purpose of this meeting was to try to resolve the controversy within the psychiatric scientific community. The study resulted in the conclusion that "individuals suffering from multiple personality (T.D.I.) did not simulate their changes of identity".

The brain waves of individuals diagnosed with T.D.I. were compared with those of actors simulating personality changes. Although the actors convincingly reproduce changes in identity, researchers found that there were quite distinct changes in the brain waves of those who actually changed their personality while these changes did not appear in the brains of those that simulated another personality[324].

This same type of comparative study was conducted by Annedore Hopper and Dr. Joseph Ciorciari at the University of Swiburne in Victoria in Australia. Five patients with a T.D.I. and five professional actors have participated in the experiment. The study clearly showed a difference electro-encephalography (EEG) between the host personality and the alter personalities in patients with a T.D.I., while this change in EEG was not observed in actors who simulated for example a child's personality. For Dr. Joseph Ciorciari, this study clearly demonstrates that patients suffering from T.D.I do not simulate their different personalities, he said: "Patients with T.D.I. have been compared with professional actors who reproduced age and personality corresponding to each alter personality of the patients and to each of their host personalities. Significant differences in EEG between the alter personalities and the host personalities have not been observed when it was the actors who played the role of personalities, which is clear physiological evidence of the authenticity of T.D.II325]."

In December 1999, the BBC's "Tomorrow's World" programme broadcast a report showing a neurological study.

on the T.D.I. led by Dr. Guochuan Tsai (Harvard Medical School). For the first time, a patient with a disorder identity dissociative was subjected to an MRI scan during the transition from one personality to another. Louise, the patient who volunteered for this study, had developed with the help of Dr. Condie (his therapist), an ability to voluntarily trigger changes in Big shot. This ability to change personality on demand has made it possible to to observe live the functioning of his brain in the MRI scanner during transitions between one alter personality and another. Dr. Tsai clarifies that before we didn't have an MRI scanner, so we couldn't do this kind of study quickly and correctly. In addition, we did not have the right subject knowing how to control the changes of alter. Because we need there to be this change during mri.

The CT scan showed significant changes in the brain just as Louise changed her personality. Curiously the hippocampus, an area associated with long-term memory, has become extinct during the alter change and it reactivated after the transition Carried out. A control test was also carried out: Louise to simply imagine herself as an eight-year-old girl, without switch to another alter. The test showed none of the changes previously noted. For Dr. Tsai, this is a sufficient scientific basis on which to build further research. For Louise, it's a proof to bring in front of all those people who deny the existence of the T.D.I..

Following the documentary, Dr. Raj Persaud said on the set of the BBC: "Like most psychiatrists, before the coming out of this study, I was very skeptical about this multinle nersonality disorder. This is due to the fact that in England, we let's do it less frequently this diagnosis only in the United States. In England, we generally think that these people can pretend to have this disorder to attract a certain watch out for them. But the important and very persuasive thing of this new study is that when this woman was in the scanner and she had switched to another personality, there was a significant change in her brain activity, unlike when she only imagines having another personality. This is proof that the personality disorder multiple is not just simulated but that it really exists."

Neurological research has shown that repeated childhood abuse has a significant and measurable effect on volume of certain areas of the brain such as the hippocampus and the complex tonsil. A study conducted in 2006 revealed that the volume of the hippocampus and of the tonsil is significantly smaller in people diagnosed with an I.D.T. in comparison with a group of subjects without T.D.II326]..

A study published in 2003, entitled "One brain, two selves", compared activated areas of the brains of two different personalities of a subject with a T.D.I.. the brain regions of 11 women with T.D.I. were explored in using a neuroimaging technique, PET ( positrons). Following some therapeutic work, women were able, like Louise, to control the required personality changes for the study. During PET scans, subjects listened to recordings with autobiographical and traumatic content in two personality states different. Only one of the two personalities studied confirmed that the content was autobiographical since it was the personality who had itself experienced the trauma, the other personality did not have the memory of having lived the trauma. The results of the study showed that this different perception of the same content is found in the different activated areas of the brain: the alter personality that recognizes the content because it is stored in its memory, shows a different brain activation profile than that of the alter personality that does not recognize the content. For the researchers, such a difference in the level of activity of certain brain areas cannot be explained simply by imagination or by a change in mood in the subject! [327]).

When we are inundated by danger stimuli in a traumatic situation, the collaboration of the tonsil complex with the hippocampus is strongly disturbed. Incomplete processing of information will make that these will not be integrated into a spatio-temporal order and therefore remain isolated memories.

In traumatized people, research on physiological brain processes by tomography makes it possible to locate areas of the brain where changes in metabolism take place, here glucose. with

This imaging technique, it is possible to visualize the increase in the glucose consumption in certain brain areas and deduce the areas that are more or less activated. In a study conducted by Bessel Van der Kolk, traumatized people had to remember personal trauma. in comparison with non-traumatized people (control group) who had to remember a serious event in their lives, people traumatized showed a significantly elevated activation of the complex tonsil, insula, medial face of temporal lobe and cortex right visual. During the evocation of traumatic memories, the right hemisphere of the brain was particularly active while a decrease in activation of the left hemisphere was observed. A decrease particularly pronounced in the underside of the frontal lobe and in the Broca area which plays an important role for language. Professor Van Der Kolk deduced from these results that the brain cannot process and completely understand a traumatic stimulus since the broca area, responsible for the verbalization, is then inhibited. These neurological studies show us how physiologically difficult, if not impossible, it is, for victims of deep trauma to verbalize and explain

when traumatic memory rises to the surface. Van der Kolk explains that "when these people relive their experiences traumatic, their frontal lobes are impacted, with the consequence that the thought and speech are damaged. They are no longer able to communicate to others what is happening (...) The imprint of the trauma does not sit at the verbal level, at the level of the part of the brain related to understanding. It sits much deeper in the regions of the amygdala, hippocampus, hypothalamus and brainstem, areas that are only marginally related to thought and cognitioni[328]!."

Traumatic experiences are therefore not recorded via language, but mainly via the memory of bodily sensations, by smells and sounds. When a stimulus (such as physical contact, some odors, engine noises, screams) activates the memory of an event traumatic, there is not necessarily a rise of memory with a content narrative. While narrative memory is capable of integration and of adaptation, non-narrative traumatic memories seem to be inflexible, activated automatically and completely dissociated from the event. This dissociation of traumatic memories explains why these do not fade over time, but retain their initial strength and become what Van der Kolk calls "parasites of the soul" (We will see in the next chapter that these memoirs isolated traumatics would rather be related to "soul fragments"). Information on traumatic experiences is present in memory at a certain level, but so they are totally dissociated from narrative memory. Without further processing aimed at integrate into narrative and analytical memory, i.e. memory autobiographical, these traumatic memories can potentially be reactivated negatively throughout life. They will manifest themselves, for example, by hypermnesia, flashbacks, hyperactivity, amnesia, emotional disorders and avoidance behavior. In the context of trauma-based MK programming, it is these traumatic memories unconscious that allow access to personalities alter by codes acting as stimulus and triggering in the same way certain controls implemented during trauma.

Physiological studies of the brain are now able to explain why traumatized people often do not have the possibility of situating in time their traumatic memories. When they are there access, they live this traumatic memory as if it were in the process of happen in the present moment. Some research also explains why therapeutic methods based solely on verbal language are generally not effective in treating trauma. one

Effective psychotherapy must take into account narrative memory and explicit (localized in the left hemisphere of the brain) but also the implicit memory related to sensations and emotions (localized in , the right hemisphere of the brain). Events that are only registered as implicit memory must be built-in to become explicit memory and autobiographical. In other words, the negative intrusions of these memories should be replaced by an integrated, coherent and chronological memory so that it no longer harms the staff[329]!.

d/ T.D.I and schizophrenia

At the phenomenological level, there is a significant overlap between the symptoms of dissociative disorders (especially T.D.I.) and schizophrenia. These similarities create confusion in circles hospitals and therefore lead to misdiagnosis with significant impact on patients.

Dissociation caused by a division into several personalities implies the separation of normally well-integrated structures such as sensory perception, memory, attention, thought; while that in schizophrenia these processes remain integrated, they are simply Deteriorated. In the T.D.I., the link with reality remains intact, while in schizophrenia there is an almost total break with reality. in The T.D.I. the fractionation of the personality is done by a division within the person, just like a cell division, as if each cell was a new and different personality. In schizophrenia, this division occurs between the "inner self" and the outer world, the connection with reality is lost and the person then lives in his world! 330).

One study showed that a group of patients diagnosed with schizophrenia by a psychiatrist or psychologist, to whom you give a standardized interview related to dissociative symptoms showed that 35 to 40% of these patients, believed to be schizophrenic, will come out with the diagnosis of dissociative identity disorder. Conversely, in a patient group diagnosed with an I.D.T. to whom you are interviewing related to schizophrenic symptoms, two-thirds will come out with a diagnosis of schizophrenia. A group of 236 patients with T.D.I. To shown that 40.8% of them had previously been diagnosed with schizophrenia! [33] .

One of the common points between schizophrenia and T.D.I. can be auditory hallucinations, it is often "voice in the head". These voices can come either from the inside or from the outside, they can be friendly or hostile. There is no reliable feature to determine automatically and with certainty that it is a "schizophrenic voice" or a "dissociative voice". Some therapists use the criterion of outer voice or inner voice to discern if it is schizophrenia or T.D.I.. Auditory hallucinations appear to come from the outside will show more of a schizophrenic tendency as the voices coming from the interior can be those of alter personalities, in this case, there are probably a personality split. According to Dr. Colin Ross, a another clue is that fractional personalities generally hear more voices from children than schizophrenics. In the 1994 edition of the DSM, the symptoms of voices that dialogue between them or who systematically comment on the doctor could therefore make a diagnosis of schizophrenia on this symptom alone, however many professionals have discovered that these voices are more common in multiple personalities than in schizophrenics! [332]).

Many psychotherapists working with patients with I.D.T. have found that this phenomenon of voices in the head was somewhat something common in these people. More and more studies seem to make the link between dissociation and these "auditory hallucinations". Some Studies have devoted themselves exclusively to this question, in particular that of and dysfonctionnal affiliations in childhood : An exploration of their impact on voice-hearer’s appraisals of power and expressed émotion”, ou encore celle de Vasiliki Fenekou et Eugénie voices : A qualitative study”.

Georgaca : “Exploring the expérience of hearing

The question of "voices in the head" is delicate, knowing that psychotronic technologies like "The Voice of God" or "Voice to Skull" can also produce this kind of phenomenon. (See in Chapter 1: Psychotronics)

A study! [333!] conducted with the Dissociative Experiment Scale (Annex No. 3) a showed that 21% of inpatient psychiatric patients and 13% of patients non-hospitalized psychiatric patients have a dissociative score above the pathological threshold. They conclude that dissociative disorders are still significantly underdiagnosed! [334!.] In a study entitled "Dissociation and Schizophrenia" published in 2004 in the journal "Trauma and Dissociation", Dr. Colin Ross and Dr. Benjamin Keyes assessed the symptoms dissociative in a group of 60 individuals treated for schizophrenia. They found that 36 subjects had dissociative characteristics

60% of their sample. These dissociative symptoms were accompanied by a high rate of childhood trauma as well as major disorders such as depression, personality disorder limit (Borderline) or the T.D.I.. Whether in the case of T.D.I. or schizophrenia, dissociation is something underlying, as is the traumatic origin of these

Despite studies that have clearly shown the link between psychotic disorders and dissociative disorders, there is a sharp decline in the use of the diagnosis of dissociative disorders. This decline can be explained by in particular by introducing the term "schizophrenia" to describe patients showing this type of symptoms. Between 1911 and 1927, the number of cases reported multiple personality, now named T.D.I., has decreased by almost half following the replacement of the term "dementia" preacox" by "schizophrenia" by the Swiss psychiatrist Eugen Bleuler.

Le Dr. Rosenbaum explique cela en détail dans son article “The rôle of the term schizophrenia in the décline of diagnoses of multiple personality" (the role of the term schizophrenia in the decline of multiple personality diagnosis! [335!)]. In "Oxford Textbook of Psychopathology", Paul H. Blaney tells us that a search on PubMed (the main search engine of bibliographic data of all areas of specialization of the Dioiogie et ae ia meaecmej nee a la scnizopnrenie genere a result of 25 421 articles, while a search related to the T.D.I. gives only 73 publications.

One of the negative consequences of these misdiagnosis is that the treatment given for "schizophrenia" will be based mainly on a heavy and addictive or even dangerous medication. While like us let's see, in the therapy of T.D.I., treatment with drugs is something secondary. They can be used to treat comorbidity but they are not therapeutic as such. We have seen that first, the T.D.I. Has been replaced by a catch-all diagnosis- all named "schizophrenia", and that secondly the treatment protocol for the "schizophrenic" will be a heavy chemical medication usually inappropriate, which will never help the patient to understand his disorders and to free himself from them. Disorders in most of the time related to childhood trauma. in indeed, the psychiatric institution seems to have little will to come truly assisting victims and survivors of neglecting or totally ignoring the subject of psychotraumatology. here is what psychotraumatologist Muriel Salmona says about this: "We are very little informed in the context of psychotraumatology, there is no training in medical studies, no training during the specialization in psychiatry. There are also many experts who are not trained in psychotraumatology, so they do not have knowledge of traumatic memory and processes (...) Psychiatrists who care for abusers often have no training in psychotrauma at all. They will take them in load without supporting traumatic memory, and suddenly, they do not go not treat what makes people very dangerous! [335]]."

the survivor of ritual abuse and mind control, Lynn Moss Sharman, said during a radio interview with Wayne Morris (testimony in chapter 7): "I had come across some information - in a library - indicating that the Scottish Rite (Freemasonry) in the United States had financed, through its donations of "charity" means research on schizophrenia. I remember reading sharply thinking it was rather curious, it even made me cold in the back, which the high ranks of this secret society choose to use their "charitable" funds to finance research on schizophrenia (editor's note: Scottish Rite Schizophrenia Research Program, SRSRP). A disorder that is very similar in some respects to the diagnosis of the disorder multiple personality or dissociative identity disorder that is diagnosed in 99% of survivors of ritual abuse, and certainly also in survivors of mind control. I very naively asked Mr Tooey

(Peter Tooey, freemason, ex-policeman) if he was aware that funds were used for these purposes, and he very proudly replied, "Well yes, here in Thunder Bay, all the money that the Scottish Rite paid was spent on fund a research project on the study of schizophrenia at the University of British Columbia." I found this very worrying, and another times, very scary that the money of this community in the Ontario, received by this secret society, is routed directly to a University of the West Coast of Canada. And then I came across another information shortly after: There are research grants available at York University - something called the Rohr Institute, funded by the Masonic Foundation of Canada and headquartered in Hamilton in Ontario. This institute offers grants for research and $35,000 grant comes directly from the Scottish Rite Foundation

Charitable' of Canada, via the Rohr Institute. The goal is to offer scholarships for studies/research in the field of "intellectual disability".

I don't think it's something that's very well known and I wonder what kind of studies are actually being conducted at York University with these funds! [337]]."

We have seen that T.D.I. and schizophrenia are two intertwined psychiatric disorders, but schizophrenia seems to be a kind of "catch-all drawer" used rather to crowd out diagnoses that could be more precise, more detailed, and therefore more appropriate for the treatment of patients.

e/ T.D.I. and psychophysiological variations

A number of studies and reports indicate the existence of significant psychophysiological variations between altering personalities of a patient with an I.D.T.. These may be differences in allergic or gastrointestinal reactions, the quality of vision may also varied from one alter to another: some cases show that a blindness may vary depending on the alter personality. The change of voice and writing is something recurring. There are also differences at the level of sensitivity to pain, heart rate, pressure arterial, blood circulation and immune functions. others differences were noted especially in glucose levels in alter diabetic patients! 338). It has been shown that people who simulate alter personalities cannot but that they undergo a real change of personality acting on biological functions that are not normally controllable! 339!.

a lecture given in 2009 on the phenomenon of multiple personalities, the Father François Brune mentions several examples of these remarkable physiological changes: "In reality they have already made absolutely extraordinary discoveries, in particular that we can deal with very different differences.

strong according to the personalities that invade the main personality. So we are finally forced to talk about 'main people' and 'main people' and 'main people'.

"secondary persons". How are they distinguished? The person main is the one that controls the body most of the time, unlike the others (...) For example, we will find that they do not need the same glasses (...) We will also find that for some drugs it will be necessary to change the doses, especially for diabetics. We will find that some are left-handed at one point and right-handed at another when the personality cnange.

We will also find that they are not all sensitive to the same anesthetic (...) A mentally ill person (officially considered as such) suffering from duplication and even the tripling and quadrupling of personality, which had to be operated, a demonstrated that his anesthesia prevented suffering to some of the personalities who lived in it while the others complained of having suffered. They could also describe the whole operation, so they were not asleep at all. When a few years later, this same no one had to have surgery again, so we had to wait patiently that all personalities emerge one by one in order to know which anesthetic would suit everyone (...) we are here in California with competent doctors... but in France, obviously it's hard to imagine... Imagine a French hospital agreeing to get into it? Then their career would be very quickly over! There are also allergies that are not the same. has cases of people who normally do not see the colors, who when inhabited by others, report that they can again distinguish them. Another case studied in a very scientific way was that of a person who was asked to observe a flash lamp to study with an electroencephalogram the reactions in his brain. When this was not the same personality who was in control, the reactions of the brains were not at all the same. This has been scientifically established during very serious and rigorous research." (For Father François Brune, this phenomenon of multiple personality is a possession by human souls disembodied. We will address this issue of possessions in the next chapter)

A particularly strange aspect of these physiological changes concerns the effects of medications on alter personalities.

According to some reports, it would seem that their effects may wander completely compartmentalized and even annihilated. The survivor of ritual abuse and

Australian mind control Kristin Constance has been hospitalized three times before finally being diagnosed with an I.D.T.. In 2011, during a lecture, she described how she made a suicide attempt in swallowing a cocktail of anxiolytics, antidepressants and antipsychotics...

She didn't even fall asleep... The chemical cocktail would have been partitioned in a certain alter personality and would have had no impact on the personality who was in control of the body (his testimony is transcribed in full in Chapter 7).

A phenomenon that is totally irrational, but as we will see in the next chapter, the T.D.I. can also fall under the paranormal domain.

Another survivor of ritual abuse with a T.D.I. He also testified in 1997 on the show "Your Turn" on the American channel FOX 13 News. Dejoly Labrier described how one of her alter personalities named "Ginger", needed Prozac because she was depressed. "They" (the alter system) so took this drug for this alter Ginger for two years... but according to Labrier, there was only Ginger to feel the effects... (his testimony is also transcribed in full in the chapter 7).

Alter personalities seem to be able to block or on the contrary increase the effects of medications, just as they can "deceive" other alter by not taking the medications or by taking higher doses of them while the other alter would like to follow the treatment correctly, but they are not aware of these sabotage behaviors from others alter due to amnesic walls.

An article in the newspaper "Dissociation", published in September 1994, recounts the case of a series of surgical operations with general anesthesia performed on a patient with t.d.i.. It was found that his needs for anesthetics were rather atypical:

She received a normal dose of muscle relaxant, however the dose

of analgesics differed totally from the norm, it required only only 16 to 33% of the dose that is usually used for a patient adult without T.D.I.. The dose of anesthetics was also lower than the standard, with 50-80% of the normal dose used during operations usual surgical. The patient explained that an altering personality child was in control of the body before each operation, the change alter would appear to have been caused by anxiety. This could explain why the doses of analgesics and anesthetics required were much higher low only for an adult dosage. This phenomenon has been commonly observed by clinicians from several countries, they report that patients with a T.D.I. require smaller doses of sedatives when an alter child is in control of the body! [340]!.

Psychophysiological variations also concern blindness. In November 2015, the Dailymail published an article titled "Blind woman, 37, with multiple personalities lost her sight after an accident but can still see when in her teenage boy character" (a 37-year-old woman with

personalities, who have become blind following an accident, regain their sight when emerged his teenage boy alter). This article describes the case of a woman

German diagnosed with cortical blindness at the age of 20

following an accident. Since then, she had been walking with the help of a guide dog. sound medical record shows that she received a series of tests that did confirmed blindness. As there was no physical injury to his eyes, it was assumed that the problem certainly came from damage to the brain occurred at the time of the accident. 13 years later, in psychotherapy, she was diagnosed as suffering from a T.D.I. with a dozen personalities Alter... It is during the treatment of his dissociative disorders that he is happened something remarkable: while his boy alter teenager was at the "controls", his eyesight recovered. Her therapists reported that this woman's vision shifted from darkness to light in a few second, depending on the alter personalities that emerged. German psychologists Hans Strasburger and Bruno Waldvogel, who conducted the study, have used an EEG (electroencephalogram) to measure how the sound area sight-related cortex reacted to visual stimuli. It was then found that when the patient was in a "blind" alter, her brain did not respond to the images, while with an alter "showy" personality, the measurements were normal. His blindness came and went according to the alter personalities at the controls of the body. Doctors think that his blindness was caused by a strong emotional reaction during the accident.

Dr. Strasburger said: "It probably serves as a fallback function (...) During an emotionally very intense situation, the patient can sometimes react by becoming blind, and therefore no longer having

"need to see"." There are other cases where blindness varies depending on the alter that emerges, including Diana's testimony in a documentary of the series "The Dxtraordmary" dedicated to the T.D.I., broadcast on the channel

Australian Seven Network in the 90s.

Note here that just as psychophysiology can vary from one alter to another, the writing style can also totally change from one personality to the other. The writing of an individual is a mark that allows identify it and analyze its psychological profile, it is unique and definitively, as a result the police sometimes use graphology techniques in its investigations. Psychotherapists working with patients with T.D.I. have noted glaring differences in writing style between the alter personalities of the same person, and graphological analysis of this writing may reveal information about a particular alter. It is therefore possible to identify the alter personalities by their type of writing! [341]).

f/T.D.I. transgénérationnel

"It is common for adult women to be treated for an I.D.T.

clearly describe symptoms of T.D.I. in one of their parents or even in both parents. Testimonies that may include clear descriptions of alternations of personalities but also the names of the altering personalities of the parents." "The Osiris Complex" - Dr. Colin Ross

In his book "Childhood Antécédents of Multiple Personality", Dr.

Richard Kluft reports cases of patients with several family members suffering from conditions

dissociative, this from generation to generation. It describes, inter alia, the case of a 22-year-old man who was subjected to a psychiatric examination by a judge, the possibility that he was suffering from an I.D.T. was then considered. The man was being prosecuted for the murder of his father. He told the police that his father was a renowned pharmacist, one of the "pillars" of the community local. But he also reported that his father was involved in drugs and that he had connections with organized crime. The accused confessed that he was himself an accomplice in his father's drug trafficking because he was sometimes deliveries of goods. He also confessed that his father had large debts and that it was he himself who had asked him to kill him.

so that life insurance money can be used to cover these debts. the pere also believed that a "suicide" could cancel out the debt. All these information was validated by others during the investigation. the young man not being able to kill his father himself so recruited another person to commit murder. The son and the murderer were finally both arrested by the police.

Dr. Kluft spoke with this young man daily for some time and confirmed the personality diagnosis multiple. Kluft himself observed the changes in attitudes, voices, facial and bodily expression in the individual. In addition, interviews with his two brothers, his sister, his wife, his cousins and his neighbors, have confirmed that the young man had behavioural changes characteristics of a T.D.I.. Based on the statements of the accused, of his family and his wife, it was also found that the father most likely also had a T.D.I.. He was described as an unpredictable man who entered into inappropriate rages with voice changes and unusual behaviors. The accused as well as some members of his family reported that the father acted as if "he were two different people", claiming that he was both a "drug dealer" and a "pillar of the community" (i.e. he had an activity on one side occult criminal and on the other a very respectable public façade). These statements may be consistent with a T.D.I..

The information gathered from the young accused, his wife, brothers and sister also suggests that the mother was living her also dissociative episodes. All sources have certified that it is unstable and had a very variable mood, she was described as a hysterical one. This woman who was usually in a wheelchair had amazing periods of improvement in her condition physical during which she walked without problem, something that was medically inexplicable (it is possible that it was a dissociative conversion disorder, which could manifest as point paralysis).

The information given by the son and his family also suggests that the paternal grandmother suffered from a T.D.I.: she was constantly described as "unpredictable", "changing", and plagued by "memory problems". All family members described her as a "terror" because of her inappropriate screams and behaviors Uncontrollable. In addition, his attitude with his children was totally random. There have been reports of physical abuse of his children, but paradoxically, she sometimes showed great affection. This illustrates the Incompatible pattern between love and abuse frequently reported in families of patients with T.D.I.. In that case, the jury did not taking into account the psychiatric report provided by the defence and the patient was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

The data collected by Dr. Richard Kluft from several patients support the hypothesis that dissociation and T.D.I. are presumably transgenerational. Evidence of dissociative disorders has been observed and reported in eighteen families of diagnosed patients with a T.D.I. and followed by Dr. Kluft. This demonstrates some connection transgenerational, however several factors still require clarification on the mechanisms of this connection. Dr Kluft legitimately claims that this type of information is collected on an ad hoc basis when it should be studied systematically and methodically in order to be able to derive from it.

statistics and conclusions. In-depth studies would thus make it possible to

from generation to generation! [342]).

How are these dissociative disorders transmitted from one generation to the next? Perhaps we can respond in part to this issue through the practice of transgenerational ritual abuse within occult networks? The case reported above by Richard Kluft shows us a young man suffering from a T.D.I., therefore deeply traumatized since his early childhood. His father being a notable pharmacist with a solid reputation visibly leading a double life by trafficking drugs in parallel with his professional activity. Everything suggests, according to Kluft, that the father suffered himself from a T.D.I., just like his wife and mother... So here we have the classic context of a family practicing the ritual abuse of generation to generation, all members of which are stuck in states dissociative. I.D.T. are caused by extreme trauma and repetitive, they do not appear overnight as a result of a bad flu. In addition, the illegal activities of the father, leading to a double life, reinforce the idea that this is a family making part of an occult network, drug trafficking being a common thing in these environments.

The process of systematic repetition of traumas on the offspring is a vicious circle fed by traumatic memories that require dissociative anesthesia. This process certainly has a large part of responsibility in the generational transmission of states dissociative and particularly from the T.D.I.. The victim will self-treat himself by physical and psychological violence against others, usually his children, who will in turn dissociate and repeat the violence, and so on generation to generation. This phenomenon can happen without it being a question of Satanic rituals, "simple" recurring domestic violence and incest can create this vicious circle if the disorders are not treated and cured.

Sexual abuse also marks the victim's DNA, predispositions to dissociation and other harmful consequences (depression, bipolarity...)

therefore also transmit genetically. This genetic factor linked to dissociation is a brand sought after and cultivated by some families

Luciferians (we will return to the question of the traumas that mark

Let us recall here a case that took place in Paris in 2012.

The case relayed by BFMTV concerned children of a Parisian couple whose man was (precisely) a pharmacist. "It was the doctors at the Necker Hospital who alerted the police. The 2 1/2-year-old girl is transported to the emergency room for convulsions a month ago. Her blood and urine results show that she has been taking regular drugged by adults... under what circumstances and for what purposes?

A judicial investigation had been opened by the Paris public prosecutor's office, where is this serious case today? Where are these children at the moment! [343]] ?

g/ T.D.I. and alter animal

In a T.D.I., the presence of alternate personalities children or of the opposite sex is something very common. What is less common is the presence of a non-human alter. In some cases, the alter personality may be totally dehumanized to the point of believing that it is really an animal. The presence of these "alter animals" usually indicates that the person has experienced ritual abuse. The development of an alter animal occurs during extreme trauma in early childhood. The child may have been forced to behave and live like an animal. For example, he may have witnessed the mutilation of an animal, forced to participate in or witness acts of zoophilia, or been forced to kill an animal. In Monarch-type mind control, dehumanization and the alter animal are deliberately created by the programmer in an extremely sadistic way. However, these dehumanized alters may be present without there having been a voluntary mental programming, but in any case it is the culmination of inhuman traumatic treatment, voluntarily dehumanizing the little victim.

Here are some cases that the newspaper "Dissociation" reported in 1990 in an article entitled: "Animal alters: case reports". It was written by psychiatrist Kate M. Hendrickson, Professor Jean M. Goodwin and Teresita McCarty. The content of this paper was presented at the Sixth Annual Conference on Dissociation and Multiple Personalities in Chicago in October 1989.

The first case reported is that of a 38-year-old woman who very often referred to animals during her therapy. The patient recounted how her father sometimes caught birds to lock them with her in the toilet when she was punished, so they came to prick her head with their beaks. It terrorized her, she explains: "When I'm too terrified, I turn into a bird and I fly in the toilet." Sometimes his father hung rabbits or dead birds above his bed. He then told his daughter that she could be strangled just like these animals if she did not do what she was told to do or if she talked about abuse. She was also forced to eat leftovers in a dog bowl, etc. When the family cat gave birth to her young, the father would show his daughter what he would do to her if she got pregnant. For this he opened the abdomen of kittens after strangling and dismembering them. These horrors made on the animals were a way to terrorize and traumatize the little girl.

When her father raped her at the age of eight, she began to be terrorized at the thought of getting pregnant and suffering the fate of the kittens. When these horrors began to rise in therapy, she said she heard "strange baby screams inside her. The screams she heard were inconsolable and she was terrified of leaving the therapist's office because she said "everyone would know." She was terrified that other people could hear these cries and thus know that she herself had participated in the mutilation of small kittens. She stated that she tried to help the cat mom by taking her with her kittens inside her so that her father could no longer harm them. She was terrorized by one of her alters in which the suffering of the kittens' mother was internalized. This cat alter himself terrified by the patient's father. After describing and understanding how the kittens had been internalized, it then became possible for her to talk about her incest pregnancies that occurred at the ages of fourteen and sixteen. The father having killed the babies from birth, hence the strange cries of inconsolable babies inside her. She says that one of her babies was dismembered like the kittens.

After the patient talked about kittens inside her, she was able to remember dissociated and repressed memories of incest, pregnancies and infanticide. At the very beginning, she could only talk about these heavy traumatic memories through her cat alter. This alter cat could "talk" about these awful stories while the main personality of the patient could not. It was found that when the patient was "triggered" by the evocation that she had not been able to save her children or the kittens, she self-infected with a razor blade at the tips of her fingers, fingers that ended up looking like claws. She will also describe a similar behavior when she found herself in bed in an ambivalent way with men: the alter cat could make many scratches on their face or chest.

Another reported case is that of a 35-year-old woman who when terrified turned into a dog. This may give rise to smiles, but there is absolutely nothing comical about the substance of the problem. Her parents of German origin punished her by making her eat on all fours in a dog bowl, they forced her to behave like a dog. During individual therapy, a T.D.I. She was diagnosed and she revealed that she had been raped by her father who in addition to this involved the family dog in zoophile acts. Any reference to sex, to the fact that she was mean or bad made her "turn" into a dog. When this happened in therapy session, the patient began to have dog behavior and speak in German (her usual language was English, it is possible that the parents spoke in German during traumatic acts). Statements about dehumanizing treatment of forcing him to behave like an animal preceded statements about sexual abuse.

The newspaper article Dissociation also reports a criminal case, that of a woman with a dissociative disorder who was convicted of murder by evisceration. Some evidence has shown that she may have used her teeth and nails at some point during the crime. This is what she also thought because of the taste of blood that remained in her mouth as she was totally amnesiac about this crime. During the investigation, she was interrogated under hypnosis. When she was in a hypnotic trance, it was suggested to her to imagine herself in a peaceful place, so she described that she was in a jungle and that she herself was a panther in the branches of a tree. After several sessions of hypnosis in an attempt to reconstruct and understand the crime, she said during a trance that a warthog had attacked the panther and that he had been disemboweled. Evidence showed that the nails of his hands had been used for the crime but strangely no trace of blood had been found under his nails. One explanation would be that she would have licked them just as a feline washes its paws. The woman's amnesia also covered much of her early childhood, but no history of violence could be discovered.

When a patient behaves like an animal, it may seem like a particularly severe psychotic behavior. But these strange symptoms must be observed and examined carefully, as must dreams and fragments of memories that should be systematically explored and dissected. Alter animals can be partly linked to dissociated memories and they can be used to block access to a specific memory area. When the reasons for its development and the functions of the alter animal have been discovered and understood, this alter can then be connected with the memories of early childhood and the trauma that is the cause. Contact with these alter animals is an open door to the victim's most violent alters (which can be animal or human). These alters represent the identification of the victim with the most violent acts of the executionersx[344].

In satanic ritual abuses, torture and killing of animals is commonly used to intimidate and silence victims. The child is told that he will suffer the same fate if he talks about anything. In addition, he is forced to participate in barbaric acts in order to make him feel guilty in order to make him in turn "guilty", as we saw in chapter 4. The animal can therefore internalize itself to become a fractionation of the personality dissociated by trauma, an alter can show extreme rage. But through contact and reconciliation, an alliance can be created with the alter animal in order to make it a valuable tool that can help the victim in his recovery.

h/ T.D.I and therapies

This sub-chapter on therapy is not intended to serve as a medical or therapeutic guide. It is intended to provide some additional information to help us understand a little better the functioning of a split personality, as well as how the problem can be approached to provide support and help.

The therapeutic strategy for T.D.I. consists in "reuniting", or "merging", the personalities alternate with each other. It is a question of reducing their number until they have only one, usually the one that was originally present, the so-called "host" personality. This mechanism is called "integration", it is based on the following principles listed by Dr. Colin Ross:

- Contact all personalities using hypnosis.

- Gather all the constituent elements of the history of all alter personalities.
- Consider that each personality is a part of the whole.
- Develop mutual understanding and cooperation between the different alter personalities.
- Control alter personality changes. (switch)
- Make agreements with each personality in order to oversee the entire system.
- First of all, establish fusions between personalities according to their affinities.
- Progress towards the final integration and strengthen it by relying on the help of the patient's social relations.

Here are the types of questions that can be asked when coming into contact with an alter personality, taking care to respect agency and ask permission to ask certain questions:

- What's your name?
- How old are you?
- What is your role?
- Why are you here?
- How long have you been here?
- What follows what event?
- What are your memories?
- Is there anyone else?
- How many are you?
- Are there children?
- Who is in distress?

In an article entitled "Dissociative phenomena in the everyday lives of trauma survivors", psychotherapist Janina Fisher gives four simple "laws" to understand the internal system of a dissociated personality and thus be able to work serenely with it(s):

- An alter is only a fraction of a whole: No matter what state the patient may find himself in at any given time, no matter how regressed, impotent and confused, there will always be other alter adults who will be confident and competent to move forward positively in therapy. No matter how self-destructive the patient may show at any given time, there are other alters who want to live and struggle to survive. There are always alters who will fight to live and who will fight to keep control over these overwhelming feelings of helplessness and demoralization. The patient must keep in mind that no matter which alter(s) dominate at a given time, it is only a fraction of a system designed to be in balance.

- The system is designed for survival and not for destruction: This "law" will allow the therapist to save unnecessary exhaustion during recurrent seizures and prevent unnecessary hospitalizations. Therapeutic work consists in helping the patient to adapt to this system so that he can cope with its complexity and the challenges that this poses in his present adult life. These dissociative functions, these personality changes, can be exploited constructively to be able to stay the course and be able to lead a life that has meaning, to be able to find pleasure in living and creating it. The fact that this system was designed to be adaptive also means that every crisis, every new "glitch" that occurs, actually provides the possibility of adjusting the system in another way to make it even more suitable for the patient's life. These crises therefore make it possible to understand a little better the functioning of the internal system.

- For each action, there will be an opposite and equal reaction: This means that each fraction, each part of the "Me", will have its opposite polarity or its opposite. For example, suicidal and self-destructive alters will have, as opposed, alters determined to live and fight and alters terrified at the thought of dying or having to feel pain. Alters who live in shame by wanting to hide and be invisible will be balanced by narcissistic alters or even exhibitionists. At any time,

be balanced internally by an equal opposite reaction. This systematic balance of opposites can have both positive and negative consequences because there is also an opposite response during positive changes or events. For example, if some alter develop greater trust and proximity to the therapist, others alter will feel threatened and try to sabotage the therapy to put distance with the therapist. While some alters will relentlessly test the skills, consistency and reliability of the therapist, other alters will feel sadness and desolation and will then want to redouble their efforts to please the therapist.

- The therapist is the therapist of all alter: The therapist is the therapist of the whole system and therefore of all the parts that compose it. To work only with certain alter while neglecting other parts would be to say that we only work with half of the patient. Whether with the "nice half", the "young half", the "self-destructive half" or the "good half" of the patient, therapeutic work cannot be effective by taking into account only part of a whole. If the therapist is the therapist of all parties, he will be neutral, he will not take sides and he will not keep secrets. He will thus discover the potential and usefulness that each alter brings to therapy and to the system as a whole, including violent, suicidal or self-destructive alters. He will see the interactions between the different alters, which will highlight the internal conflicts, just as a family therapist would. In the same way that the family system works, the patient will not be identified with any of his alter but rather with the global alter system. Due to the fact that in dissociative patients the system and the patient are one and the same person, the therapist must avoid a common pitfall in the treatment of dissociation: i.e. to talk to the system as if it were a single person acting as a "revolving door" giving access to the different "family members" so that they come to tell their stories successively. It is generally more useful to work mainly with the parent(s), i.e. the adult alter or the host personality, in order to teach them to acquire the necessary skills to promote communication and internal cooperation between all the alter.

At the beginning of therapy, due to his dissociative traumatic amnesia, the patient with an I.D.T. will first of all report a fragmented and incoherent experience. His complete and chronological personal history will come with time, through the gradual integration of memories and dissociated personalities. The process of integration can be compared to the construction of a puzzle that could not take shape without the different pieces that make up the life experiences that have been split by dissociation. Integration therefore consists in assembling these puzzle pieces to recreate a coherent whole including all the memories, whether they are valid or not. The pieces of memory belonging to the different senses (hearing, smell, touch, sight, taste: non-semantic memory) are managed by the hippocampus whose role is to transfer them to thecerebral cortex so that they are processed and integrated consciously. Thus, they go from an unconscious mode to a conscious mode, from a dissociated mode to an associated or re-welded mode. They become an integrated memory which can now be verbalized consistently[345].

The term merger is also used to describe the integration process. A mind that has not suffered trauma and dissociation works in a unified way. For a dissociated and fractional mind, fusion is the moment when two (see more) alter personalities become mutually aware of their respective existences. They then experience a kind of fusion, a dissolution of the amnesic walls that means that they will no longer have any separation and will therefore share the same memories. The "final fusion" is the intended purpose of therapy. The patient passes from a state with several identities to that of a unified subjective self, it is unification.

It is recognized by therapists that there are three main steps in the integration process. But above all it is absolutely necessary to establish a feeling of physical and mental security in the patient, as well as a stabilization and reduction of symptoms (comorbidity). This stabilization will make it possible to work on traumatic memories, memories that must be consciously integrated. The integration, or fusion of alter personalities, as well as rehabilitation, are reaching the final stage. These three steps may overlap due to an alter that might drag out more than others, but usually the therapist treats one step at a time.

- Phase 1: Safety, stabilization and reduction of symptoms:

First of all, it is a question of creating a kind of alliance between the patient and the therapist to establish confidence and stability. In this step, it is a question of minimizing behaviors that can be dangerous for both the patient and those around him. It is also necessary to reduce negative thoughts that can make it vulnerable to further external attacks. The management and control of post-traumatic stressis also a priority in Phase 1. Other behaviours that will have to be regulated are eating disorders, risk-taking, violence, aggression, etc. Alter personalities involved in violent behaviour and identifying with the aggressor(s) can be particularly difficult to manage. It is therefore a question of identifying them quickly to try to make an agreement, a kind of contract with them to help the patient to secure himself. These frightening, angry and violent alters often have a protective role, despite appearances, they are there to protect the patient.

The alter "observers" can be very useful to reconstruct chronologically the shattered memories in order to know what happened, the course of events (or the illusion and manipulation that the executioners wanted to create).

Generally, alter personalities consider themselves as a truly separated person, outside the alter group and autonomous. It is when they become aware of the existence of other alter, that they will realize that they are multiple and that they belong to the same physical body. This awareness will, for example, avoid self-harm and a commitment can be concluded with each of them to avoid self-destructive behaviour. Many alter feel empty, depersonalized or uncertain of their identity, it is precisely because they are only part of a whole. It is all together that they form a complete person. It is therefore a question of creating a form of cohesion where each alter knows the others and finds its place in the group, or internal system.

Making alter assistants in therapy is a major asset, it is also necessary to develop strategies to improve their understanding and mutual communication because the patient loses a lot of energy to have to manage internal conflicts between them. The development of a relationship of trust and dialogue with alter personalities will be the key to discovering trauma (phase 2) and achieving stability and integration (phase 3).

Non-verbal and emotional communication is also an important point. Some alter will need to be hugged, while others will take this gesture for an attempt at sexual approach. Some alter are unable to look straight into the eyes the person in front of them.
Some will express themselves in an extroverted way while others will be totally terrified and will just need to listen to reassuring words. Some can not speak, they will need to communicate through writing, drawing or through another alter who will have a role of mediator. The therapist should not fall into favouritism and should treat each alter equally. Nor should he be frightened by those who seem hostile because they use anger to protect the most vulnerable alter, who are usually young children. During this phase, there may also be the use of anchoring techniques in the present moment and methods of self-hypnosis. Sometimes it will be necessary to resort to medications to compensate for risky behaviors, but this should not be the heart of the treatment. It is also in this first phase to develop in the patient acceptance and empathy for each part of his split personality, each alter must be considered for what he is and as having his role to play in the therapy and in the life of the patient.

- Phase 2: Confrontation and integration of memories Traumatic:

The second phase focuses on the traumatic memories of the patient. At this level, there is still a lot of work to help him accept the different parts of his personality and the alter must continue to get to know each other and live together. In this stage, the work is also to overcome the problems of blocking the patient in his past. One of the most difficult tasks in this phase is going to be to overcome the fear of traumatic memories in order to be able to integrate them effectively. The patient and the therapist will have to discuss together to reach an agreement on the memories that must be treated as a priority. Once these traumatic memories are processed and integrated, they must be shared with every alter personality who was not aware of them. This pooling of traumatic experiences with all the alters of the system is called "Synthesis". Once this Synthesis is successful, it must continue to lead to the full awareness that the traumas have been experienced, treated, and that they are now part of the past: it is the "Realization". Thus the patient will be able to give a precise place to the trauma in the chronology of his life. As a result, the pieces of the memorial puzzle will be reconstituted little by little to form a real chronological frieze. Synthesis is also followed by "Personification", i.e. the awareness that these traumatic memories belong to the patient, and to no one else. Finally, thanks to this work on traumatic memories, the patient can transform his memories, previously dissociated and scattered, into a coherent and understandable narrative, it is the "Narration". It is the transition from a non-verbal memory to a narrative and analytical memory.

During this stage, strong emotions will burst when the traumatic content of the memories will emerge to the consciousness. The patient may then manifest shame, horror, disgust, terror, anger, helplessness, confusion or grief. It is then a question of giving an adequate recovery time between each session so as not to destabilize or retraumatize the patient. But even with careful therapeutic planning, it may be necessary to make returns in phase 1 for a new stabilization when the rise of a memory is particularly violent. As traumatic experiences are integrated, alter personalities will become less and less separate and distinct. Spontaneous fusion can also occur but a premature global unification test can cause stress that would be negative for the patient. As the fragmentation of the patient subsides, he will acquire a certain inner calm with a sense of peace, especially when the therapy is accompanied by a spiritual renewal. Thanks to this new internal state, the patient will be better able to understand his traumatic history and to assume the problems of everyday life. The patient will begin to focus less on the traumas of his past to channel his energy into the present moment, which will help him a lot to develop new perspectives to project himself into the future.

- Phase 3: Integration and rehabilitation:

The third phase is aimed at the integration (final unification) of the personality. In the first two stages, the patient learned to overcome the fear of other parts of his personality and the fear of his traumatic memories. He also accepted and integrated the idea of having been abused as a child. Like a painful grief, the patient will have to abandon old beliefs to consider new perspectives. He will now have to learn to deal with emotions that can arise such as shame, fear, terror, anger and grief. The emotional manifestation of trauma can occur for more than two years, as a result of which unification is considered safe. During this period, the patient may spontaneously return to phase 2 because new traumatic memories may still emerge. After the final integration, the unification of all alter personalities, the patient will usually retain the skills and attributes of the different alters that were dissociated from his personality.

These three phases of treatment of T.D.I. are probably inspired by the work carried out in the nineteenth century by Pierre Janet. His psychotherapeutic method for the treatment of post-traumatic stress included the following three steps:

1 : Stabilization of symptoms in preparation for the liquidation of traumatic memories.

2 : The identification, exploration and modification of traumatic memories.

3 : Relief of symptomatological residues. Reintegration and rehabilitation of the personality. Relapse prevention.

Regarding the use of drugs, it is not a first-class treatment for dissociative disorders, but it can have its usefulness. Indeed, some patients require specialized treatment for substance abuse or eating disorders. Many therapists use hypnosis, this technique is intended to calm, soothe, contain or strengthen the "me". Hypnosis also provides access to alter personalities that are not directly accessible without a modified state of consciousness. Since the beginning of the nineteenth century hypnosis has been used for the treatment of T.D.I., it has emerged many studies demonstrating that these patients are highly hypnotisable in comparison with other clinical groups. The higher the hypnotistability of the individual, the more effective it will be in therapy. Hypnosis andself-hypnosis can also be very effective in the treatment of post-traumatic stress generally present in patients with T.D.I..

Other specialized therapeutic methods can be useful for these patients, such as family or expressive therapy, remodeling and dialectical behavioral therapy (TCD), sensorimotor psychotherapy, "primal" therapy, neuro-emotional integration by eye movements (EMDR), etc...

EMDR (Eye Movement desensitization and reprocessing) is a therapy of desensitization and reprocessing by the rapid movement of the eyes, this technique first of all used to erase post-traumatic shocks allows to treat many psychic traumas. Biofeedback or neurofeedback devices can also be an additional aid for the patient, as can acupuncture and even changes in food mode.

Group therapy is not recommended in the case of T.D.I., as many of these patients find it difficult to tolerate the process that encourages group discussions about participants' traumatic experiences. However, from a certain stage of integration, group energy may be an effective support for the patient. The treatment of T.D.I. is usually done on an outpatient basis (not requiring hospitalization), however, hospital treatment will be necessary if the patient shows risks against himself (self-harm, suicide attempt) or against others during the dissociative phases.

Expressive therapies will also play a positive role in the patient's recovery. Journaling, art therapy, music therapy, horticultural and animal therapy (especially with horses), movement therapy, psychodrama, occupational therapy and recreational therapy offer the patient the opportunity to apply a wide range of techniques that can provide a means of expression and stabilization. This will facilitate the concentration, pragmatic thinking, organization and cooperation of the internal world (the alters). Artistic practices such as painting, writing, collage, sculpture, etc., can serve as a visual and palpable recording of the experience of alter personalities, productions that can thus be examined at any time of the treatment.

To conclude this sub-chapter on therapies, here are some practical tips and exercises[346] directly aimed at patients with dissociative disorders:

It's about becoming aware of Tici and now." For this, it is useful to observe and perceive oneself consciously, without making judgments. When you notice that you are entering a dissociative state, that is, that you are starting to leave, that you are no longer quite there, that you perceive yourself less well, try to mark a pause. By practicing, and perhaps even with therapeutic support, you will be able to learn to answer the following questions:

- What situation did I find myself in when I started to dissociate myself?
- How did I feel on the bodily and psychic levels?
- What's the last thing I remember?
- I knew I was entering a dissociative state because:

1/ I started for example to swing, to perceive myself as in a fog, to have headaches……………………………………………………

2/ I stopped for example to speak, to think clearly, to be in eye contact ...

3/ I began to tell myself that I could die, that no one could be trusted, that I never do anything right...

- What did I try to avoid?
- What could I have done instead?

If, over time, the patient is able to answer these questions better and better, he will be able to better control his dissociative behaviors and will have more control over things.

What can you do when you enter a dissociative state?

- Realize that you are in a dissociative state, a state that will pass as everything goes.

- Also be aware that this behavior occurs because it protected you in the past. Now you don't need it anymore, you have other ways.

- Find a formula like: "Now I am an adult and in security". Say this sentence out loud to yourself.

- Keep your eyes open and feel the ground under your feet.

- Do you have an object that you liked (for example a plush or other benevolent companion)? Perceive it consciously.

- Activate your senses with the help of something cold (for example, pass ice cubes or cold water on your hands, arms, face).

- Become aware of the difference between then and now. Tell yourself aloud the date of the day, where you are and how old you are.

- Breathe consciously. Feel the air come in and out of your lungs. Breathe with your eyes open, focus a little more on exhalation.

- Do something that demands your attention and activates your senses: read or watch a picture, listen to music, touch a stone, smell the smell of a flower or essential oil, consciously taste the aroma of a raisin, sunflower seeds or something spicy.

- Move: walk around, shake your limbs, tap your feet, dance...

- Do something with your hands: write, paint, gardening, a puzzle, crafts, etc.

- Take a shower and focus on water contact.

- Be understanding of yourself. You deserve to be gentle towards yourself.

- Be sure to surround yourself with people who do you good and with whom you do not feel threatened.

- When you are sure of this, you can say to yourself: I am now with such and such, I know that he wants me good. If I now enter a dissociative state, it has to do with old memoirs. As of this moment, I am safe.

- Imagine that you put in a safe all the elements of the past that weigh you down. Once locked up, they will no longer bother you.

5 - Development of T.D.I. in children

a/ Introduction

The T.D.I. starts in early childhood, its development will be done in the long term and it will generally be more obvious and more recognizable in adulthood. Dr. Greaves writes that "Personality fractions usually manifest themselves in early childhood, as early as 2 1/2 years of age and typically around the age of 6 or 8 years[347].

In an article entitled "Incipient multiple personality in children: Four cases", Dr. Fagan and Dr. McMahon reported the case of four children who developed the onset of personality splitting. The youngest was 4 years old and the oldest was 6 years old. Fagan and McMahon state in this article that "multiplicity is around 5 years of age until 8 years at the latest, but this will generally not be diagnosed until adulthood[348]."

In an article entitled "Psychotherapy with a ritually abused 3-year-old: deceptive innocence", psychotherapist Leslie Ironside reports that "dissociated identities were diagnosed in a child as young as three years old, ritually abused and having endured extreme levels of trauma[349]. "

The existence of T.D.I. in children was established by Dr. Antoine Despine in 1840. He reported the case of an 11-year-old Swiss girl, Estelle, which was described earlier in this chapter. Dr. Richard Kluft has also published several papers on children and T.D.I. including the case of an 8-year-old child, Tom, which we will describe later. Morris Weiss, Patricia Sutton and A.J. Utecht reported in the Journal of the American Academy of Child Psychiatry in 1985 the case of a 10-year-old girl in an article entitled "Multiple Personality in a 10-

Year-Old Girl".

In her book "Healing The Unimaginable", Canadian therapist Alison Miller writes: "I dealt with the case of a 10-year-old girl who had just an alter personality in addition to her host personality, a 3-year-old alter (...) When she was bored at school, the 10-year-old girl "went inside her head", the 3-year-old alter then emerged and took control of the body by behaving like a 3-year-old child, which was of course inappropriate in a classroom. The 10-year-old girl therefore found herself in the principal's office without having any idea what had happened[350].

Of course, the systematic response to such behavior in a child will be to say that it is a question of whims, a voluntary regression of the child "who makes his baby". But dissociative disorder and dissociative amnesia shed light on this kind of "capricious" behaviour from a completely different point of view. Of course, children make whims and sometimes act in a way that is not appropriate for their age, but there are certain criteria for determining whether it is a dissociative disorder, as in this case when the little girl does not seem to remember her baby behavior.

Many patients reported that their alter personalities were born during their childhood. Unfortunately in children, dissociative disorders are usually undiagnosed for several reasons:

- Children with T.D.I. usually have secondary signs and symptoms of the disorder. They will frequently have attention deficit, hyperactivity, behavioural disorders, high anxiety, depression, somatization, post-traumatic stress, dissociation and symptoms that may appear to be psychotic in nature. Vomiting and nausea, headache and fainting are the most common somatizations in a child. Trance states or conversion symptoms (dissociative paralysis), which are common in adult patients, are rarer in children. The inner voices that the child may hear may be misdiagnosed as "schizophrenia".

- Due to the fact that dissociation and the states that may resemble it are more common phenomena in healthy children than in healthy adults, these dissociative symptoms can be ignored and misinterpreted as normal child behavior.

- Intra-family abuse, a chaotic family environment and psychiatric disorders of family members will not only complicate the diagnosis but will also prevent proper follow-up of the child.

- But above all, the most important cause of misdiagnosis is the insufficient training of clinicians and their lack of experience with T.D.I.. Their disbelief about the legitimacy of this diagnosis of multiple personality disorder will mean that they do not seek in any way to detect its presence[351].

In children, amnesia, alternations of totally different behaviors and hallucinations (usually auditory) are symptoms of a dissociative disorder. Amnesia can manifest as "holes" during the day, meaning that dissociation has occurred at some point. In adolescence, the symptoms will begin to be more marked than in children under 11 years of age, so adolescents will be more easily diagnosed with t.d.i.. Any child with a history of physical or sexual abuse should receive an assessment for the presence of a dissociative disorder. When the abuse began in early childhood, was recurrent and sadistic, involved ritual practices and the parents themselves have severe mental disorders, then a prolonged observation of the child must be made, as well as a history of all the encounters that the child may have had with adults. This work must be accompanied by attentive interview sessions to establish an accurate diagnosis. Children whose parents themselves suffer from a dissociative disorder should be particularly monitored on a regular basis. Several authors have reported the link between dissociated patients and their dissociated families. The majority of these dissociated parents themselves have a history of physical or sexual abuse dating back to their early childhood[352]. A vicious circle that must be understood, especially with regard to satanic transgenerational families...

Here is a list of the child's behavioral disorders that may possibly be related to an T.D.I.:

Intermittent depression - Trance or self-hypnotic state - Fluctuation in intellectual abilities and moods, rapid regressions - Amnesia - Auditory hallucinations (especially with inner voices) - Recurrent imaginary companions - Speaking alone - Sleepwalking - Night terrors - Sudden paralysis - Hysterical symptoms - Refers to himself in the third person - Responds to another name, or uses another name - Significant changes in the head onality and behaviour - Forgetting or confusing basic and basic things - School work fluctuating from one opposite to another - Hyper-destructive behaviour - Self-harm - Violence against others - Suicidal words or behaviour - Inappropriate sexual behaviour - Social isolation, anti-social behaviour[353].

b/ The case of a three-year-old child

In September 1988, the journal "Dissociation" of the International Society for the Trauma and Dissociation (ISSTD) published an article describing the case of a little girl showing a dissociation of the personality caused by repetitive traumas. The authors of this article entitled "The development of symptoms of multiple personality disorder in a child of three" are Dr. Richard Riley, who worked for the U.S. Army in the Efmp (Exceptional Family Member Program) in Belgium. , and Dr. John Mead, a private practitioner from Pasadena, California.

The child was followed from the age of 14 months, she suffered multiple repetitive traumas that developed in her a dissociative state. The progression of his dissociative disorder was recorded on videotape during a legally ordered follow-up.

Cindy (pseudonym) was first followed by Dr. Riley at the age of 14 months. It was decided that she should be examined for assessment following a conflict between the foster family, Joan and David (pseudonyms) and the biological mother Diane (pseudonym). Cindy had been returned to the care of the foster family on the second day after her birth. She had had very limited contact with her biological mother between the ages of 3 months and 4 1/2 months, but had not had any since.

In the first evaluation session, Cindy showed a very positive attitude. She was curious and exploring the office, visibly cheerful and confident. She appeared as a child receiving a lot of love and affection, it was clear that there was a strong attachment between her and her host family. She was also able to let the couple leave the room without showing anxiety.

When Cindy was seen in the clinic at the age of 16 months, her biological mother came to visit her for a few hours twice a week at the host family's house. It was then reported that Cindy was sleeping badly, that her appetite had deteriorated and that she was having tantrums. Unlike the previous meeting, she was restless, she clung to her foster mother and became very anxious when she left the room to leave her alone with the doctor. All these findings were reported to the judge, however custody of the child was entrusted to the biological mother with gradual access from the foster parents so that Cindy could adapt to the change. However, the biological mother followed this visiting schedule very sporadically and it was learned too late that during this period she had given birth to another baby girl, who died of sudden infant death syndrome at the age of 3 months.

At the age of 20 months, Cindy returned to a clinical visit, accompanied by Diane, the biological mother, and Joan, the foster mother. Cindy had accepted everyone's company and she seemed comfortable in this situation. At the age of 23 months, during another visit with her foster mother, Cindy was very frightened and clinging to her. In the months that followed, her emotional state deteriorated completely, she insisted that she be huged and she cried if she was not in physical contact with her foster mother. She had recurring health problems and once arrived on a visit with a hematoma on her earlobe. She then confessed that her biological mother had beaten her. She also stated that she was called "Lila" by members of her biological family. She repeatedly made it clear that her half-brother was touching her genitals and that he was inserting objects into her vagina. She regularly reported being physically and sexually abused.

Following these statements, a decision was made so that custody in the biological family was only limited during the day, Cindy was then 2 and a half years old. Her condition then improved and her anxiety decreased, but she was still very angry and continued to cling to her foster mother. She even wanted to sleep with her and woke up several times a night to check that she was there. Joan reported that the little one was talking during her sleep by repeatedly repeating "my name is Cindy R." (the name of the host family). Cindy continued to talk about physical and sexual abuse during day visits to her biological family and she began to replicate these abuses on her adopted sister, David and Joan's biological daughter...

Another medical expert was then appointed to examine the child in the environment of his biological family. He reported that Cindy was "cheerful and outgoing and had no abnormal or unusual behavior." During this time, the foster mother paid an unexpected visit to Cindy in her biological family and the little one did not seem to recognize her or pretended that she did not know her...

The first filmed session happened when Cindy was 3 years old. Three sessions had been scheduled to determine the state of relations between Cindy, her biological mother and her foster family, but also to record all the reports of abuse on videotape. She spontaneously reiterated her testimony about the sexual abuse perpetrated by her brothers as well as the fact that her biological family systematically called her "Lila" instead of using her real name. At one point during a session, she reacted when the word Lila was mentioned by saying "What?", as if it were she who was being called. She denied her visits to her biological family, while talking about them in a direct way. She also reported that her biological mother called her little. When she talked about the members of this biological family, her way of talking about them and her behaviour became totally different. Her language became immature, her body postures and manners were like those of a doll. This series of video recordings was provided as evidence of ill-treatment before the jury. As a result, the duration of childcare in the biological family has been further reduced.

Three months later, the biological mother made a request by her lawyer for a session with her daughter to be filmed with her: the alter personality Lila presented herself directly during this session with the biological mother. There were then five meetings, four of which were recorded. During the premiere, Cindy was ready to answer any questions about the host family without hesitation. She gave emotional and emotional answers about the death of the foster family's paternal grandfather, while questions about the biological family were usually ignored or had the only answer: "I don't know." When it was announced to her that she would return the next day for another session, she nodded; but when it was added that she would come with her biological mother, she first remained silent, then she answered negatively and she ended up denying that she had just been told that she had to do a session the next day with her biological mother.

Following this, the child presented himself alternately with one of the two distinct personalities, it depended on the questions that were put to him. These personalities were those of Cindy or Lila. Lila said she wanted to be called that, and she didn't answer questions about the foster family or she said she didn't know. Sometimes she would hide behind the dollhouse or chair, out of sight of her biological mother, and Cindy could then emerge. At the end of a session, the little one wanted to stay to put away the mess she had put in the room, which was totally alien to Cindy's character. During the next three sessions, Cindy and Lila appeared alternately: with the presence of the biological mother, Lila was the active personality, but Cindy could sometimes emerge to play aggressively while criticizing Lilac for her behavior. Lila could answer some questions about the foster family but she had very limited knowledge about the family. She identified Joan R., the foster mother, as the "babysitter". In addition to this memory gap in her personal history, Lila seemed psychologically younger and her general knowledge was more limited than Cindy's. When Lila made a mistake, Cindy could emerge to correct her. Lila also had inappropriate sexual behavior in some games. Her language was less developed than Cindy's and phonetically more immature. An important point to point out is that Lila didn't seem to know Cindy, while Cindy was aware of Lila, she remembered the smallest things she had done. She didn't like him and she didn't like anyone in her biological family. Cindy was self-confident and dominant when she was not threatened. She also showed guilt and remorse when her behaviour hit someone.

The video recordings of the sessions were provided as evidence but were never used. The court explained that because not all the experts agreed in their conclusions and recommendations, the Court did not need these recordings. On the other hand, all the guards and the visits with the biological mother were stopped, and a follow-up in psychotherapy was set up for the little girl. Twelve sessions were scheduled over a four-month period. Her foster mother was always present and her adopted sister, Cheri, was present at three sessions. In the first session, Cindy was showing anger against her attackers and was encouraged to express it in her games. It was then that she let out the fear of her biological mother. Alter Lila emerged intermittently during this session and a few others thereafter. As the sessions progressed, Cindy began to call her adopted sister by the name of alter Lila. She made requests or gave him orders using the same stern tone as her biological mother. Little by little, Cindy began to love the alter and want Lila to live with her in the host family. She then let the alter take part in the games more freely. The two personalities also began to give information about the biological family without showing anxiety. One day Cindy said that she was older than Lila, she also strangely identified her foster mother as "Lila's mom". During another session, Cindy responded positively to the idea that she and Lila could get together. As a result, she seemed to be doing much better and she started going to school. In one of the last few sessions, she explained that she and her sister were both Lila, but that one of them had grown faster.

The case of little Cindy therefore showed two criteria related to the T.D.I.:

- Presence of two identities or personality states, each with its own mode of perception, relationship with others and thought, as much on the environment as on oneself.

- At least two of these identities or personality states take control of the person's behavior, on a recurring basis.

Cindy and Lila are both complex personalities, each having their own memories, their own behavior with different social relationships. Cindy stated that she was older but also bigger than Lila. She referred to Lila as someone separated from her and living elsewhere. Lila was more immature than Cindy, both in her language and in her manners. Her level of general knowledge was lower than Cindy's. Alter Lila also seemed more dependent and submissive while Cindy's personality was aggressive, assertive and enterprising: she blamed Lila for things she had said or done. For Cindy, Joan was her mother while for Lila, she was simply her "babysitter". Cindy knew Lila while Lila didn't seem to know Cindy. Both personalities showed amnesia. The child could change his personality simply by moving or changing his position body: the transitions (switch) were very fast.

The case of little Cindy responds to five symptoms of T.D.I. listed by Dr. Fagan and Dr. McMahon in their article cited above:

1- She sometimes showed dazed or trance-like behaviour.

2- It answered more than one name.

3- It showed very marked changes in behaviour.

4- She was lost in memory about recent events.

5- She showed a variation in her knowledge and skills.

The authors of the article conclude: "What would have happened to this child if she had not been removed from her biological family? Probably she would have continued to develop and strengthen her personality disorder with this alter Lila allowing her to be able to manage the circumstances of traumatic life[354]."

c/ The case of a seven-year-old child

Psychologist Wanda Karriker reported the case of a 7-year-old girl, whom she named Katie (pseudonym). Her parents had brought her for a psychological assessment following the advice of her teacher because she behaved strangely at school. She had extremely variable results and sometimes she sucked her thumb while having a baby's behavior. Sometimes she seemed to be like locked into her own world. During the interview with the parents, the mother said: "It's as if she has two extremes, sometimes she's totally passive and sometimes she becomes violent, she's in a murderous mood."

Following an evaluation session of her RQ, little Katie looked at the erasable painting and asked if she could draw something on it, to which the psychologist obviously answered in the affirmative. The little one then asked "Tell me what to draw?, Why not an image of your family?", retorted Karriker. Katie then began to draw three ghostly figures on the painting by subtitling them "dad", "mom" and ... ''Lucy''. She represented in her family a child named Lucy, but did not represent herself as Katie. ''You know what?'' she said, looking under her shirt, ''I can press my navel to get Lucy out.'' The psychologist then asked if this Lucy looked like her and the little girl replied: "She is cute, she has short blond hair with blue eyes". (Katie had long brown hair with dark eyes). The little one continued: ''You know what? She always gives me the answers in mathematics.'' After this the psychologist asked her if she could speak directly with Lucy and again, Katie looked under her shirt pressing her navel and saying, ''Lucy, come here!'' It was then that her facial expression turned into a much more mature child, with an obvious change in body language. She introduced herself and said, ''Hi, I'm Lucie.'' The psychologist then asked where Katie was now, to which the little girl replied "Up there", while pointing to a corner of the ceiling. "Can't you see her up there?" she said. The child seemed to experience depersonalization, a phenomenon in which a person feels detached from his body (we will return to this in the next chapter).

After this the psychologist asked her if she could speak directly with Lucy and again, Katie looked under her shirt pressing her navel and saying, ''Lucy, come here!'' It was then that

The psychologist then asked where Katie was now, to which the little girl replied "Up there", while pointing to a corner of the ceiling. "Can't you see her up there?" she said. The child seemed to experience depersonalization, a phenomenon in which a person feels detached from his body (we will return to this in the next chapter).

When the little one saw the camera in the therapist's office, she immediately started dancing and singing, and then suddenly she tung herself to the ground, kicking in the air and moaning: "No, no! Don't do that to me,' while putting his hands on his mouth and rolling in the fetal position. It was as a result of this that Wanda Karriker seriously began to question the mistreatment that little Katie might have suffered to the point of developing these deep dissociative disorders. Troubles that her teacher described as a withdrawal from her own world.

When Karriker gave her findings to the parents, she specified to them the change in behavior between Katie and Lucie, a radical change that had been filmed. The psychologist told the parents: ''I don't have to make a formal diagnosis, but I believe that your daughter has created at least one imaginary friend, if not perhaps an alter personality, in order to help her cope with something that she could not bear.'' The psychologist explained to the doubtful parents that she herself had never observed a multiple personality disorder in a child before that. She explained that when a child is faced with unbearable trauma, he or she can unconsciously create different "states of mind" in order to help him or her mentally and emotionally overcome the pain. Following this interview with the parents and the explanations concerning the issue of trauma, the psychologist never saw little Katie again to be able to tell her to see her again...

A few weeks later, Katie's mother called Karriker back to tell her that she had been diagnosed with an STD (Sexually Transmitted Disease) and that the pediatrician had recommended a psychiatrist for the little one. Shortly after, Wanda Karriker was contacted by Katie's father's lawyer, informing him that she would soon receive a subpoena... Indeed, the little one had just confided to the psychiatrist that her father had done bad things to her. sexual abuse, which has therefore been reported to the social services.

During her testimony in the presence of the defense lawyers, psychologist Wanda Karriker stated that the child had never verbalized the abuse before her, but that she had been excluded from the therapy when she suggested the possibility that trauma could have induced the dissociative behaviors of the little girl... Wanda Karriker was only able to know the outcome of the case through the lawyers, but it would appear that the accusations of sexual abuse have been confirmed. Little Katie was taken away from her parents and placed in the care of social services.

Subsequently, a therapist contacted Karriker to obtain copies of the various psychological tests she had been able to do at the time with little Katie; this therapist wrote to her: "Katie is an enigma. We are not getting much progress with it. She always finds herself in conflict, but then she denies having done anything wrong. Sometimes she behaves like a baby, she has a lot of angry seizures while she can sometimes be totally pa.ssive, not responding to anything For example the way she refuses to see her mother or father when they come for supervised visits. "

Wanda Karriker couldn't help but ask this therapist if the little one had been treated for her profound dissociative disorders. To which the therapist replied: "But Dr. Karriker, this little girl does not show any symptoms of multiple personality".

Later, recalling the degree of dissociation of little Katie, as well as how she behaved when a camera was spinning in the cabinet, Karriker realized that if she had been able to work longer with her, the little one would certainly have revealed more things to her about abuse. Her behavior in front of a camera led the psychologist to think that her parents used her to produce childpornography and God knows what other horrors[355].

The case of this little girl illustrates some of the practices denounced in chapter 3. That is, all those children dissociated and divided by intra-family abuse, children removed from their families to be placed and who potentially become targets and prey for paedocriminal networks and mind control programs. In the case reported here by Dr. Wanda Karriker, we have a little girl visibly divided by traumas who finds herself separated from her parents and it is interesting to note that the psychiatrist in charge of caring for little Katie once she has been placed, states that she shows absolutely no symptoms of multiple personality... In other words, he keeps Pandora's box closed by completely ignoring the dissociative disorders of the little girl, or else he is in no way trained for it.

The book entitled "Childhood Antecedents of Multiple Personality", published by Dr. Richard Kluft reports some cases of children whose personality is split. In particular, it describes in detail the case of an eight-year-old boy.

Tom was a boy with multiple personality disorder. It was later discovered that his grandmother also had a T.D.I.... One of the grandmother's alters admitted to abusing the mother, who was probably also suffering from severe dissociative disorders. So we are still here in a context of transgenerational T.D.I.

Tom was usually a wise and exemplary child, but he could suddenly become extremely difficult while denying any bad behavior he might have had, even if it had just happened moments earlier. He began to lie blatantly while totally refuting his participation in acts that his entire family had witnessed. His voice, his verbal and body language, as well as his friendships, varied with what seemed to be his "moods"... Sometimes he even said he was a girl and then behaved in an effeminate way. Following these episodes he admitted in a very embarrassed way that he thought he was a girl, but that nevertheless he had no memory of having behaved in this way... He had a predisposition for accidents but did not seem to learn any lessons from them. His academic performance was extremely erratic. Often it was found by his teachers that he had not understood certain subjects and when questioned, he said that he had never been taught these things... His teachers therefore concluded that he was slow-witting and that he simply had learning difficulties.

Tom also frequently said that some of the clothes in his wardrobe were not his and he became confused when his mother tried to remind him when they bought them together. The child was often depressed, especially when called a liar, especially when confronted with acts in which he had just denied having participated. The child was perfectly aware of his efforts to cover his holes with recurring memories because he knew well that he was often "in the moon".

Tom confessed that he heard voices in his head, both girls' and boys' voices.

During the interview with the therapist, several types of behaviours were noted, as well as changes in his voice. In addition, there were glaring amnesias regarding the content of the interview. His therapist used hypnosis to explore Tom's personality. The therapist reported that as soon as Tom found himself in a hypnotic trance, a personality with a deep voice spontaneously emerged. This alter said his name was ''Marvin'' and that he was an astronaut. Marvin told the therapist that Tom needed help because he "wanted to be a girl", this alter also gave some written advice to the therapist. Following this hypnosis session, Tom was totally amnesiac of this conversation between Marvin and the therapist. It was also found that Tom and Marvin's writings were totally different. A total of five alter personalities were discovered in this child. Tom was depressed and rather weak, which is classic for the "host" personality Alter Marvin's role was to help him in the face of anger and inconceivable fear. Tom had another alter named Teddy, as well as two female personalities named Wilma and Betty. Their characteristics were those of a mother, while Marvin and Teddy were rather a representation of the father with a rational and brutal character.

It appeared during the therapy that the young patient had dissociated himself in particular during an NDE (experience at the borders of death) at the age of two and a half years. He had fallen into a pond and almost drowned there. He had been taken out of the water lifeless to finally "resurrect[356]".

e/ Report on five cases

Here are now five cases that have been described as part of a dissociative disorders program set up at the Psychiatric Department of Istanbul University in Turkey. The study was conducted by Dr. Salih Zoroglu. The cases were reported in 1996 by the journal "Dissociation" in an article entitled "Dissociative disorder in childhood: five turkish cases".

Hale :

Hale was a ten-year-old girl who had recurrent migraines and nausea. She was irritable and crying for no apparent reason, she talked to herself, she laughed inappropriately, she had trance states and she self-harmed. She even behaved as a delinquent and also made up and dressed inappropriately. In addition she had night terrors and visual hallucinations.

Her mother first brought her to see a "Hoca" (traditional healer) who stated that she was possessed by jinn (demons in the Muslim tradition), but this consultation did not improve her psychic state.

During the first clinical session, she told the therapist that she had been hearing voices in her head for a long time. One of those voices was that of "Cisem", a very nice girl. The other voices were bad, they belonged to "people" of different ages and genders. It was these voices that forced her to do bad things and systematically commented on her behavior. As the therapy progressed, eleven alter personalities manifested themselves. Among them was Cisem, an older girl who wanted Hale to be happy and behave well. Cisem was frightened by the other alters who could punish her when she wanted to help Hale. The "Big Boss" was an elderly man who was the leader of the group of bad alters. Hale confided that this alter "Big Boss" and his acolytes could connect directly to what she was saying and what she was doing through an (internal) computer. They could also use this computer in observation mode and thus know everything it was doing in every detail. Hale therefore sometimes felt like a robot when she was under the control of this computer. There were in all six alter personalities who were under the control of the "Big Boss". In addition, there were two other suicidal alters completely separated from the others.

Hale was severely beaten in early childhood. During the therapy, she revealed that Cisem had been raped by a man named Erhan. The latter then became one of the alter persecutors, one of the assistants of the "Big Boss". Memories of the rape came up with flashes, but Hale did not accept the fact that it was she who had been raped and she insisted that she was totally separated from Cisem. Finally, after a long therapeutic work, all the alter personalities were integrated and all symptoms disappeared.

Mine :

The nine-year-old girl was taken to the children's psychiatric unit of the clinic where her mother was already staying. His father and brother had noticed that his behaviour changed abruptly when the father returned home. She had a very whimsical and aggressive behavior. She often cried and acted as if she saw faces that she seemed to be afraid of and talked to all the time.

One day, she went to the police and said that two men were following her. These two men were in fact her father and her brother whom she no longer recognized... She then spent the night at the police station (for her safety), and the next morning, after returning to her normal state, she could not remember anything that had happened the day before.

The girl told her mother that she had a friend inside her. A friend she could see and play with, she also helped her keep her father and the boys at bay. Mine heard voices in her head, one of them was that of a girl one year younger than her. This alter emerged during a therapy session called "Ayse". This alter personality stated that she had been with Mine for three years and that she was on good terms with her. When asked where Mine was at that moment, she replied that she didn't know while continuing to play with a puzzle. Later, when Mine "came back", she looked at the puzzle half reconstructed by Ayse but without having any idea of the time that had happened or what Ayse had done during that time. Subsequently, another alter personality of the opposite sex was identified. It has been reported that his father was a chronic alcoholic who beat his wife and children. In the case of Mine, the therapy was unfortunately very random because it is was based on his mother's hospitalizations.

Mehmet :

Mehmet's family had regularly observed that his behaviour was changing dramatically. This 11-year-old boy sometimes began to read and write in a way that was totally immature for his age. He could no longer pronounce the letter "R", he did not even know his name or age. The only thing he remembered was his parents. In those moments, he would become like a small introverted child and he would have fun with toys that were inappropriate for his age. In addition, he no longer had any notion of time during his "crises".

Mehmet was followed in therapy once a week for two months. In the fourth session, he arrived with his premorbid personality, he no longer recognized his therapist and did not seem to remember the previous sessions. This personality was that of a friendly boy with a very mature behavior and speech for his age. He was particularly interested in science. He was totally amnesiac of the times when he acted like a very young child.

His parents reported that the personality changes had begun three months earlier. Each personality would emerge for three or four days, then he would not remember anything at all when another alter had taken over. Mehmet sometimes had paralysis of one arm that lasted ten to thirty minutes as a result of which he was hospitalized four times in different hospitals, including two university clinics. Comprehensive examinations (neurological, cranial, electro-encephalogram) showed nothing abnormal, the paralysis of the arm were diagnosed as a dissociative conversion disorder. The prescription of anti-psychotics, antidepressants, tranquilizers and anti-epileptics did not help him in any way, on the contrary, these drugs caused him a violent behaviour.

During her therapeutic follow-up, two other alter personalities were observed. One with which he lost his ability to walk and speak: he was clearly an alter at the baby stage, his voice and expressions attested to this. In the other alter personality, he exclaimed "I'm crazy, I'm crazy!" and he didn't recognize anyone at all anymore.

In his case, no psychological or physical trauma was revealed. Her older sister also claimed that there had been no abuse or neglect in the family. None of Mehmet's alter personalities had visual or auditory hallucinations, nor any such manifestation by which an alter could communicate. The boy could easily be hypnotized but alter personalities did not emerge by this method. The changes came rather spontaneously and Mehmet remained totally amnesic of these "crises". The family eventually stopped the therapy and reported a year later that the dissociative disorders had ceased and that Mehmet had regained a good level of maturity.

Emre :

Emre was a five-year-old boy when he was hospitalized in a clinic at his mother's request. The boy had sudden aggressive behaviors during which he broke objects, attacked his friends, strangers and even his mother. He also had short periods of trance, in addition he heard voices, he had horrible visions and many somatic symptoms such as migraines and nausea. Sometimes he seemed to talk to himself, laughing and chatting for hours with who knows who... His behavior was completely polarized and he had sexualized attitudes inappropriate for his age.

He said he heard the voices of four girls and six boys in his head, all between the ages of four and twelve. he could see them, play with them and chat with them when he was all alone. One of the girls, "Gamze the Witch", had a pistol with which she frightened Emre and the other children. Sometimes she would hit Emre and break her toys, or she would have fun scaring him at night. During the third therapy session, Emre stated that a twelve-year-old girl named "Cunyet" wanted to talk to those present. This is how the alter Cunyet presented herself: she was the eldest and it was she who protected Emre and the other children of the witch Gamze, the alter persecutor. When the therapist asked where Emre was, Cunyet designated an empty chair saying he was sitting there listening to them. Although it was reported by his parents that the child was often amnesiac, there was no amnesia between these two alternate personalities during therapy. No traumatic past was reported in the case of this boy.

Nilgun :

This 10-year-old girl was once brought into therapy by her father. Her symptoms were recurrent boredom, sadness, crying for no apparent reason, loss of appetite, trance states, severe migraines, fainting, nausea, stomach pain and extreme tantrums.

Nilgun was diagnosed with depression by two psychiatrists. During the first interview, the girl stated that there was an older girl inside her named "Fatma". She said she had been hearing his voice almost every day for more than two months. This voice comforted and encouraged her, she also commented on her behaviors, feelings and thoughts. She also warned Nilgun never to tell anyone about this, including the therapist. At first alter Fatma refused to talk to the therapist, then he began to communicate through Nilgun, only to emerge completely: Fatma then told the therapist that she had to "go" into Nilgun following a disastrous event that only she knows, this in order to help the girl. She said that she did not have the same relatives as Nilgun and that she had taken control several times to help him but that Nilgun did not know what she was doing because she did not see her. She also stated that she didn't know everything Nilgun was doing...

When alter Fatma emerged, Nilgun's mimics, his way of speaking and his way of behaving with people was totally transformed. She seemed very serious and she gave concise and precise answers.

During the sessions, Nilgun liked to have fun with toys or puzzles, but Fatma was not interested in them at all. She said she was too old to play that way. She also claimed that Nilgun was inside her. While Nilgun was a blonde little girl with blue eyes, Fatma described herself as having brown eyes and hair. Nilgun was amnesic about the periods of time when Fatma took control. No past traumatic experiences were discovered in the case of this little girl[357].

a/ Documentaries

During the 90s, the Australian television channel Seven Network devoted a documentary to the phenomenon of multiple personalities in its series "The Extraordinary".

In 1993, the American channel HBO broadcast "Multiple Personalities: The Search for Deadly Memories", a documentary entirely devoted to the T.D.I..

In 1999, a French-language documentary was released in the series "Phenomena unexplained" entitled "Dédoublement de la personnalité" (originally directed by Gloria Sykes and produced by A&E Television Network). It seems that it is the only documentary in French on the subject.

In 1999, a documentary entitled "Mistaken Identity" was broadcast on the English channel BBC2 (in the series of programs "Horizon"), it gives the floor to several patients suffering from T.D.I. as well as therapists.

In 2004, a report entitled "The Woman With Seven Personalities", shows Dr. Ruth Selwyn accompanying Helen, a woman who has developed several personalities as a result of ritual abuse including sexual violence.

The documentary appears to be the most recent is from 2010, it is entitled "When The Devil Knocks" and was produced by Bountiful Films (Canada). It tells the story of Hilary Stanton, a woman diagnosed with an I.D.T. and followed by therapist Cheryl Malmo.

b/ Cinema and TV series

It is interesting to note that despite the fact that this psychiatric disorder is more or less hidden from the general public, many film productions have used it as a basis for establishing their script, here are some examples of films:

- The Case of Becky (1921)
- Dr Jekyll & Mr Hyde (1941)
- The Dark Mirror (La Double Énigme, 1946)
- The Three Face of Eve (Les Trois Visages d'Ève, 1957)
- The Manchurian Candidate (1962)
- The Nutty Professor (1963)
- A Clockwork Orange (1971)
- Sybil (1976)
- Dressed to Kill (Pulsions, 1980)
- Zelig (1983)
- Voices Within : The Lives Of Truddi Chase (Démons Intérieurs, 1990)
- Raising Cain (1992)
- Conspiracies (1997)
- Fight-Club (1999)
- Session 9 (2001)
- The Bourne Identity (2002)
- " Dédales " (2002)
- Identity (2003)
- Secret Window (2004)
- Hide & Seek (Trouble jeu, 2005)
- Mr Brooks (2007)

- Shutter Island (2010)
- Frankie & Alice (2010)
- The Crowded Room (2015)

We can also mention the television series Dollhouse, featuring the exploitation of "dolls" human programmed and amnesiac or "United State of Tara" which tells the story of a mother suffering from a T.D.I., but also the Canadian series "Shattered" whose main character is a policeman with a multiple personality... Trevor Sands' short film ''Inside'' features a patient with a rather motley multiple personality. The web series ''Neuroblaste'', produced in 2011 by Radio-Canada in motion comic format (animated comic strip), is inspired by the work on MK-Ultra-type brainwashing carried out at Montreal in the 1960s by psychiatrist Ewen Cameron.

Generally in film productions, the T.D.I. is represented in a stereotypical and biased way, showing only the attractive and sensational side of the multiple personality and overshadowing the other characteristics of the disease. In addition, most films dealing with this subject highlight extremely conflicting, violent, even murderous characters. This vision of the T.D.I. is limiting. In addition, cinema tends to mix and confuse schizophrenia and T.D.I., which further aggravates the general confusion between these two diagnoses. Since cinema is a visual art, the usual cinematographic representation of the T.D.I. does not make it possible to distinguish the true duplication of personality from the hallucination, which reinforces the confusion between schizophrenia and T.D.I[358].

As for the media image of mind control based on T.D.I., here is what therapist Alison Miller writes: "The popular representation of mind control by the mass media usually involves spies or assassins who work for the CIA or other military, political or even private companies, without their knowledge. This is because they have other "personalities" who act in these activities. Take for example Jason Bourne, the hero of the film "Conspiracies", or Echo in the series

"Dollhouse", among other American productions. These fictions that feature special agents suggest to the public that they were recruited as adults, even making a deliberate choice to participate in these things. Once they have been recruited, the story begins, their old memories are erased and a new personality with specific skills is then created. However, there is only one stage of life during which programmers can create an individual who can practice such activities without having any awareness of it, without having any resistance... There is only one way to do this, and that is through the abuse and torture of a young child. The awful reality is that there is no adult who would voluntarily engage in such things, there are only small victims[359].

c/ The incredible Hulk...

Everyone knows the character "Hulk", this man who turns into a kind of green giant with tenfold strength when something triggers in him an extreme rage. The Incredible Hulk is a creation of screenwriter Stan Lee and cartoonist Jack Kirby. This fictional character was popularized by Marvel Comics where he first appeared in the United States in 1962. What people know less is that the story of the incredible Hulk is based on a psychiatric disorder that is nothing but the T.D.I. with its dissociative amnesia. Without a split of his personality, the hero Bruce Banner would not turn into the incredible Hulk...

On the website of the publishing house[360] we can read a very detailed description about the hulk's world and particularly about his personality splitting. The publishing house perfectly describes the traumatic and dissociative context behind the story of the "green giant". We learn that Bruce Banner is the son of an alcoholic who hated him deeply. His father mistreated and terrorized him, even killing his mother before being interned in a psychiatric hospital. Very early on, Bruce showed signs of great intelligence but also of a withdrawal into himself. On can read on Marvel.com that he has "developed a duplication of personality to help him treat his pain and rage", the famous and incredible Hulk therefore suffers from a dissociative identity disorder...

At school, Bruce Banner was so unsociable and violent that he ended up putting a bomb in the basement of his school... which drew the attention of the army to this little genius who would later become a physicist working for the latter. It was accidental gamma irradiation that caused this phenomenon of radical physical transformation. At the beginning of the saga, Bruce transformed into a gray Hulk at sunset and he regained his human form at dawn. Subsequently, his change to "green giant" will be triggered by a strong adrenaline release when Bruce enters an extreme rage, at any time of the day. The Green Hulk does not have the same intelligence abilities as Bruce, nor the same memory, he is a furious mad alter that can be a real threat to society. It is important to note that Bruce Banner suffers from amnesia, he never remembers what Hulk did and he must reconstruct the events from the damage that his green alter caused in his path... This is clearly an uncontrollable rage where Bruce Banner enters a dissociative state. We are told that he constantly struggles to control these "switch" and maintain a stability of his own personality...

The story continues... One day, psychiatrist Leonard "Doc" Samson captures The Hulk and manages to separate Bruce Banner's personality from that of the Hulk. Without Bruce's personality to channel and restrain him, Hulk becomes even more dangerous. Bruce then judges that the only solution for him to control the "green giant" is to merge with the monster. But the stress of reintegration creates another alter: "Joe Fixit". This alter is a bad-tempered brute whose personality resembles that of Bruce's father. It is from this moment that a real battle is created in Bruce's subconscious to know which alter personality will take control and have supremacy. However, through hypnosis sessions, Banner, Hulk, and Joe Fixit are all put on the same level of consciousness so that they face unresolved issues together, that they finally face their inner demons. Bruce Banner must then confront the memories of his father who raped him and murdered his mother. By integrating this, Bruce becomes able to merge alter personalities to finally find an inner appeasement: another personality will then emerge, a new Hulk who will have the mental abilities and intelligence of Bruce Banner while keeping the strength of the incredible Hulk. This new personality will be called "The Professor"...

As you can see, we are swimming here in the middle of the subject of the functioning of multiple personalities, or even the process of mind control.

Hulk is one of those American superheroes (the Marvel Comics universe) that are often implicitly linked to dissociative identity disorder. Superheroes with on the one hand a completely classic civilian identity and also a secret identity with superpowers such as Batman, Superman or Spiderman (these three keep the memory of their transformation). We can mention characters like Double Face (one of the supervillains of the Batman universe) with a benevolent personality and a malevolent personality, or the character Legion, inhabited by multiple personalities each with psychic powers. Let's also mention the superhero Moon Knight who also has a T.D.I. with three alter personalities. In addition, he is in a relationship with an Egyptian god allowing him to become even stronger, especially on full moon nights... All these characters illustrate the marked presence of the T.D.I. in the culture of comics and superheroes. Dissociative amnesia is also present: The X-Men character, James Howlett, has an alter named Wolverine who is accustomed to amnesia, he never remembers the massacres he regularly engages in, just as Hulk does not remember his destructive rages. It is a perfect illustration of the phenomenon of traumatic amnesic walls in dissociated states.

It should be noted that in 1992, the X-Men series made a clear reference to the MK-Ultra program in one of the episodes of season 4 entitled "Weapon X, Lies and Videotape".' In this episode the X-Men discover a laboratory where they had undergone mind control years before. They find in particular a video recording that contains the description of the experiments that have been made on them, here is what the cartoon reveals to us: "Anonymous subjects have been tested and conditioned with trauma. We are able to reintegrate these men into society when the secret services need them, without them having any memory of having been programmed. They are conditioned and they don't remember anything... The key is to reach their subconscious. For this the subject must be repeatedly exposed to simulations of extreme emotional traumas. By using drugs, we impass false memories in the mind of the subject in order to saturate him emotionally and split him to make him controllable... This process seems to work best when the traumas are real..." ... THE MK-Ultra program summarized in a few lines, but of course all this is just science fiction for belated teenagers...

7 - Conclusion

For Dr. Colin Ross, the serious study of T.D.I. should have caused a real paradigm shift in modern psychiatry, he writes: "T.D.I. is the most important and interesting disorder in psychiatry, which is why I study it. I believe that this is a key dia.gnosticin this imminent change in the para.digme of psychiatry, because the T.D.I. best illustrates the characteristic response of the human organism to severe psychological trauma; but also because trauma is a major cause of mental illness from a public health point of view. I believe that trauma is a major underlying cause in many mental illnesses, such as depression, eating disorders, personality disorders, substance abuse, psychosomatic disorders and all forms of self-destruction and violence. Biological psychiatry should achieve much better results if it focused on thepsychobiology of trauma[361].

It would seem that Francophone psychiatry is poorly trained, or even in no way trained in psychotraumatology and even less in terms of dissociative disorders.... French-language resources (publications of scientific studies, publications of testimonies, specialized works, investigations and journalistic reports) concerning the T.D.I., and more generally psychotraumatology, seem very limited if not non-existent. This is rather strange when this disorder is officially recognized in the DSM and there are a very large number of English-language books on the subject. Why such a gap in the French-speaking world? Why isn't psychotraumatology more developed? This would make it possible to better help the victims. Why is the existence of the T.D.I. vigorously attacked and discredited by a certain medical elite or pseudo-experts? Which not only do not recognize the phenomena of personality fragmentation, but also relativize the consequences that childhood trauma can have on the future life of the child.

It is a real leaden screed that covers this Pandora's box represented by ritual abuse and mental control based on trauma: that is, the neurological process of dissociation and traumatic amnesia. To teach in medical faculties the scientific functioning of dissociation, amnesic walls, and personality splitting would be to publicly and academically reveal some occult knowledge. A knowledge yet as old as the world and used nowadays in a systematic and malicious way by certain groups of powers. The process of functioning of slaves under mental programming is not supposed to reach the public and profane sphere. Most psychology and psychiatry students do not believe that such mind control is possible. This for the good reason that they have no knowledge of the basic concept behind the MK, ie the T.D.I., a personality disorder essential for a human to work like a robot in clandestine operations... or not.

In an article entitled "The Dissociative Disorders, Rarely Considered and Underdiagnosed", Dr. Philip M. Coons confirms that dissociative disorders are generally underdiagnosed because they are not taken into account due to lack of training. Dr. Coons notes that psychiatric professionals are not familiar with this diagnosis or even with dissociative symptomatology because, according to him, professionals seriously lack epidemiological data concerning dissociative disorders. Why such an omission in the psychiatric environment?

autobiography, "America in the Middle of Trance-Formation". Mark Phillips writes about psychiatric institutions: "To date, neither the American Psychiatry Association nor the American Psychological Association has published a model for the development of an effective therapeutic protocol for dissociative disorders (considered to result from repeated trauma). A number of factors make the development of such a model difficult. The first of these factors concerns the secrecy that the National Security applies to the research on the control of the mind. In the current climate, a,train victims of mind control to psychiatric professionals for treatment would be equivalent to entrusting a patient requiring emergency surgery to a surgeon who would have been blindfolded and handcuffed (...) What would perhaps allow us to lay the foundations for an explanation would be to identify "who", within our government, would have an interest in blocking crucial discoveries of medical research and other technological information vis-à-vis the psychiatric professions (...) Moving on to the next step and then providing you with a copy of The Faculty Professor's Oxford's Companion To The Mind (Oxford Press, 1987), you can find practically everything related to mind research without the slightest reference to mind control. Perhaps you will now have the opportunity to realize through the omissions of random house, webster and other Oxford Press, that you are a victim of the control of Vinformatioh362}. "

The survivor of the MK-Monarch program, Cathy O'Brien, writes in this book: "There are many similar facilities in our country, within various CIA, army and NASA complexes, where the government's hyper-advanced knowledge is developed, tested and modified. The people I met, who had studied in depth the scientific mechanisms of the brain and the ins and outs of the mind, used this accumulation of secret knowledge to manipulate and/or control others (...) (Editor's note: Senator) Byrd explained to me that the 'New World Order' "saw its powers strengthened' by allowing its lobby, the American Psychiatric Association (APA), only partial information and/or deliberate misinformation of the psychiatric community regarding the modalities of treatment of serious dissociative disorders resulting from the control of the mind! Its authors believed that the retention of knowledge and the proliferation of deliberate disinformation allowed them to control their secrets and, subsequently, humanity. This could well be the case if no one could or would react to the information presented in this book! 363]."

Here is a dialogue from the book "For Reasons of National Security" which illustrates the lack of knowledge of the psychiatric world on this subject:

- I made a lot of phone calls, marsha begins, it's really complicated to approach psychiatric professionals on a "classified" topic such as mind control. They like to believe that they already know everything about it. Mark and I nod their heads.

- Have you tried using the term "brainwashing"? I asked him.

- Yes, Marsha replies, I have even resolved to use the expression "behaviour change", and I still have difficulty describing the disorders, and even more so finding an institution able to take care of them. If you agree, I'll run a search again, but this time to find someone who could diagnose him with TPM (T.D.I.).

- Is there anyone in this state who knows how to treat these disorders? Mark asks. According to current psychiatric standards, it takes on average 8 and a half years to diagnose this syndrome, and during this time there must be treatment. Until the "types of intelligence" have disseminated to psychiatric settings the data allowing accurate diagnosis and adequate treatment, our only solution lies in the old, obsolete therapies in the long term. How do you plan to find someone in this state to diagnose the consequences of the CIA abused Kelly! [354]]?

Mental health professionals are obviously not trained to properly diagnose a person suffering from a dissociative identity disorder... This psychiatric disorder is not taught in the faculties, so we do not try to detect it and if you do not look for something, you do not find it... so it does not exist, the circle is closed. The lack of a correct diagnosis, by depriving the patient of adequate treatment, is the most important and common problem for patients suffering from t.d.i.. The latter will generally be diagnosed as schizophrenic, bipolar or borderline... not to mention, of course, the heavy prescription of psychotropic drugs that are part of the therapeutic protocol, copiously fattening pharmaceutical laboratories, by the way...

In Canadian therapist Alison Miller's book, "Healing the Unimaginable", a patient (LisaBri) testifies: "In the early 90s, I was diagnosed with all kinds of disorders, from schizophrenia to premenstrual syndrome. I was told to find a hobby and not drink in the evening. The psychiatrist would pull out of his office a box of white pills every time I showed an emotional sign. All the therapists, doctors and psychiatrists I met wanted me to stifle my emotions or keep them away from me. But where could these emotions go? The more I suffocated them, the worse I went, until the day I found myself wandering in the secure area of a psychiatric hospital... I managed to get medication and alcohol and finally found a competent therapist to work with. I was determined to do everything to curb these intense emotional states that I was experiencing. I was quickly diagnosed with a T.D.II365].."

By studying more closely the question of T.D.I., it is easy to understand that the dissociative and amnesic functions of the human mind can be exploited for the purpose of manipulation and exploitation of the individual. This is a true parallel psychiatric science, which is put in the wrong hands and becomes a traumatic science and an undetectable weapon of mind control. If this fractional personality disorder with its amnesic walls is not taught in medical schools and is systematically controversial and decrepit by an elite of experts, it is for the simple reason that it is the main axis of mind control practiced by certain dominant occult organizations. This is the cornerstone of the "nameless religion": the ritual abuses allowing MK programming, itself based on the structuring and organization of an internal system resulting from a T.D.I..

In addition, the T.D.I. opens the way to the question of demonic possession and the possible existence of an occult science mastering the parameters of this possession by certain entities. For as we will see in the next chapter, T.D.I. and demonic possessions are intimately linked. Nowadays the ability to study both the spiritual and psychological aspects of mental control phenomena is often lacking, but there are exceptions such as Dr. Loreda Fox's book "The Spiritual Dimensions of MPD". It is inevitable to address at some point the issue of demonic possession in the trauma-based mind control process. Traugott Konstantin Oesterreich, who was professor of philosophy at the University of Tubingen in Germany, closely studied multiple personalities and demonic possession. He wrote a reference book which was translated into English in 1930 under the title "Possession: Demoniacal and Other". His anthology work on the subject provides documented cases indirectly revealing that trauma-induced mind control was practiced in Germany, France and Belgium long before the twentieth century. Oesterreich's research of the early 1900s was the kind of research of which MK Nazi programmers were very aware. In 1921, Germans such as Oesterreich described abrupt personality changes by the term "sleepwalking possession" (hypnotic states) or "demonic sleepwalking" or what can be called "Besessenheit von Hypnotismus und bôsen Geistern" (possession by hypnosis and evil spirits! [355]]).

Traumatism, Dissociation and Connection to Other Dimensions

> If we walk in the flesh, we do not fight according to the flesh. For the weapons with which we fight are not carnal, but they are powerful before God, to overthrow fortresses.
> 2 Corinthians 10:3-4

Father Hilarion Tissot believes that all nervous diseases accompanied by hallucinations and delusions are demonic possessions, and by understanding things in the sense of the Kabbalists, he would be fully right. ''The History of Magic''

Éliphas Lévi (1913)

In 1 Cor. 15:44, we read: "He is sown animal body, he resurrects spiritual body, there is an animal body and there is a spiritual body"." We thus know that we have a physical body and a spiritual body. It is through this biological body that we have physical contact with the material world around us. We are not aware of having a spiritual body until the death of our physical body. This is what God has intended for us. Through rituals, Satanists use demons to separate the spiritual body from the physical body. When the soul and spirit have been separated and the spiritual body has been separated from the physical body, then the person enters in a fully conscious way into a completely different dimension. This is the dimension that I call the inner world. This world is as vast and as real to the individual as the physical world is to us. We think of spirits as if they had a 'vaporous' state, but the people who went into this dimension told me that the demons did indeed have a weight and a substance. 1 - Introduction

We will now put a foot in another dimension, in the paranormal... The question is whether there is a link between the dissociative identity disorder and the demonic possessions; dissociation and psychic powers; with what seems to be a common factor: childhood trauma. We will see that severe trauma causes a kind of spiritual "unlocking" creating an opening to what can be called the spirit world, that is to say dimensions beyond our physical and material reality. The dissociation caused by severe trauma opens some spiritual doors but it also shapes the neurological construction in children. As we will see, these two things combined can cause paranormal psychic faculties such as mediumship, clairvoyance, remote vision, etc. But this traumatic process is also the door open to certain entities that will take advantage of these breaches, or frackings, to enter the spiritual world of the victim.

Initiation rituals that voluntarily provoke trauma are practiced to open doors to other dimensions and spiritually link the initiate (the child victim) with the spirit world. The phenomenon of psychic dissociation linked to trauma would therefore be a kind of bridge linking normal cognitive functions to paranormal cognitive functions, linking the physical world to the metaphysical world. The corresponding metaphor is that of Alice who crosses the mirror to access another world. It is the access to this "inner world" that many survivors of ritual abuse and mental control talk about, a psychic and spiritual fracturing that creates an opening to another dimension of the human being... The process of dissociation is the basis of all spiritual practices aimed at accessing other dimensions (from mediumship to "Astral Journey"), and secret societies of the Masonic type study and teach these things.

The exploration of the link between the phenomenon of dissociation and the phenomenon of demonic possession can pose a certain problem that must be overcome. Indeed, clinicians and other therapists working on psychotraumatology and dissociation already have great difficulty in credibly recognizing the reality of dissociative disorders, without having to be linked to the image of the "archaic, wild and primitive" world of traditional indigenous healers and other exorcists chasing demons. However, these two worlds are inseparable to have a good understanding of the subject: dissociation and possession are an integral part of pre-industrial and even ancient religious traditions. The world of modern medicine would have much to learn from the world of traditional healers, particularly in the psychiatric field. The spiritual side of personality disorders is generally overlooked by therapists and mocked by Cartesian minds who will quickly criticize the subject of demonology, relegating this to superstitious devilry, the vestige of an obscure medieval past. Why not? But knowing that there are real followers of occultism, rituals of all kinds and black magic, people who firmly believe that they are working hand in hand with Lucifer, the prince of this world, as well as with his army of demons: rejecting the problem of the "devil" is not an option because it would be like falling into his trap, that is to say denying his existence... We would then find ourselves totally subject to his tricks and at the mercy of his spiritual attacks. Even if you do not believe it, know that some believe in it hard as iron and apply certain rituals to the letter...

Author Fritz Springmeier makes an interesting analogy between demonology and microbiology. Most people have never seen a demon just like they have never seen a virus. Yet they deny the existence of one and take antivirals to protect themselves against the other. There will always be differences of opinion on demonology, but just as it has been useful for the health of many patients to treat viruses, victims of ritual abuse and mind control have had the utility of dealing with demons, i.e. the spiritual side of their psychic disorders. Wasn't it Father Georges Morand who declared on France Culture in 2011 that the victims of satanic cults he had met had only escaped by the prayer of exorcism? Are the entities that the Siberian shamans rub shoulders with or fight in their astral journeys just icy winds? Wasn't one of the main activities of Jesus Christ when he trampled on this earth to cast out the demons, to deliver the sick through prayer? Did any of these patients healed by Christ have a split in the personality and even the soul? In his book "Jesus: The Evidence", Ian Wilson advances the thesis that the many possessed people who were healed by Jesus Christ may have suffered from an I.D.T..

- As soon as Jesus had landed, a man coming out of the tombs and possessed of an impure spirit came before him. He had his home in the tombs, and no one could bind him anymore, even with a chain.

For often he had had the irons on his feet and had been bound with chains, but he had broken the chains and broken the irons, and no one had the strength to tame him. He was constantly night and day in the graves and on the mountains, screaming and bruising himself with stones. He saw Jesus from afar, ran, bowed down before him, and cried out in a loud voice:

- What do you want me, Jesus, Son of the Most High? I beseech you in the name of God, do not torment me. For Jesus said to him:
- Get out of this man, unclean spirit. And Jesus asked him:
- What is your name?''
- Legion is my name," he replied, "for there are several of us.

Marc 5 : 2-9

The possessed responds to Jesus Christ that he is legion, and that there are many of them. Is it an army of demons? A personality divided into a thousand pieces? Or a mixture of both? Whatever the answer, the Lord delivered and freed this man.

The Spirit of the Lord, Jehovah, is upon me,

For jehovah has given me anointing.

He sent me to bring good news to those who are humiliated;

To bandage those who are heartbroken,

To proclaim to the captives their release

And to the prisoners deliverance.

When the Bible speaks of "broken heart", it is natural to think at first that it is the figurative meaning, a metaphor that is sometimes used to describe a romantic relationship: "he broke her heart". But just as Jesus Christ declared "eat, this is My Body, drink, this is My Blood", this expression of "broken heart" is not figurative or symbolic.

John Eldredge, the author of "Wild at Heart: Discovering the Secret's of a Man's Soul'', explains:

"When Isaiah speaks of the "broken heart," God does not use a metaphor. In Hebrews, it is called shabar (''leb'' for ''heart'', and ''shabar'' for ''broken''). Isaiah uses the word ''shabar'' to describe a bush whose dry twigs are broken (27:11), to also describe the idols of Babylon lying and broken on the ground (21:9) just as a statue breaks into a thousand pieces when you throw it to the ground; or to describe a broken bone (38:13). Here God speaks literally, he says, "Your heart is in pieces, I want to heal it."

The Hebrew word ''leb'', in addition to meaning ''heart'', can also be translated as ''spirit'', ''soul'' or ''consciousness''. Theologians tell us that in the New and Old Testaments, references to the mind, soul and heart relate to one and the same thing. This means that in Isaiah, the "broken heart" is equivalent to the broken consciousness or the broken mind, literally divided into a thousand pieces. Is this a reference to unbundling? To a personality split? Note that in the Old Testament, the Hebrew word for evil is ''ra'', from the root ''Ra'a'', a word that also means to break, break, to put in pieces.

Traumatic rituals resulting in states of trance, of possession, with this psycho-spiritual process that is the dissociation of the personality, were necessarily present in biblical times, but also in the antediluvian and Babylonian times. The Epic of Gilgamesh, written in the third millennium BC.C. in Mesopotamia, or the Iliad of Omer around 800 B.C., report testimonies that correspond to what we would call today a dissociation during a trauma. Nowadays the image of cracking and breaking is something recurring in the symbolism of Monarch mind control displayed in the entertainment industry. A doll or model with a cracked or broken face, which symbolizes an alter, is a classic representation of an MK slave with a fractional personality (We will return to this in chapter 9)

2 - Multiple personality and demonic possession

"A curious phenomenon that has been observed for centuries but which has not yet received its full explanation, is that in which the individual seems to be the vehicle of a personality that is not his own. Someone else's personality seems to "possess" it and express itself through its words and a.ctes,while the true personality of the individual is temporarily absent."' Dr. D.Laing - "The Divided Self"

Dr. James Randall Noblitt, referring to recent discoveries on dissociative disorders, said: "Perhaps we are approaching a new naturalistic theory of possession by a mind. A theory applicable not only to mental health, but also to anthropology and historical interpretations of European witchcraft."

In the dissociative disorder of identity, the "Me" is fragmented while in possession, the body is shared. In the T.D.I., it is the entity Me (the main personality) that is broken up into several pieces, while in possession there is invasion of an external entity. In other words, in the T.D.I., the alters, although separate, are considered as several aspects of a single individual. Whereas in possession, there are supposed to be several external entities independent and quite distinct from the individual. In the T.D.I., the alters will have to be integrated and merged to reconstruct the personality during psychotherapy, while in possession, the external entities are exorcised and driven out of the person during an exorcism. But as we will see, these two phenomena very close to each other sometimes overlap and even seem to merge. It is therefore difficult to assert that all cases of demonic possession are systematically part of a psychiatric disorder, just as it is to assert that the intervention of an external entity is only superstition.

In his book "Occult Bondage and Delivrance", Dr. Kurt E. Koch writes: "The doctor and famous preacher, Dr. Martyn Lloyd-Jones had invited me to speak to a group of psychiatrists about esotericism and occultism (...) As a result, I was attacked by two psychiatrists who claimed that the biblical accounts of demonic possessions to which I referred were in fact cases of mental illness, such as epilepsy or hysteria (...) A man then stood up to defend me by declaring that by his own experience as a practitioner, he alone could cite eleven different cases of demonic possessions. Another psychiatrist then agreed with what his colleague had just said, adding that he himself had encountered three or four cases[367]. As we saw in the previous chapter with the work of Dr. Janet, what was called "hysteria" at one time usually related to cases of multiple personality.

In the book "The Discovery of the Unconscious", Henri Ellenberger traced the origins of dynamic psychiatry by going back to the magical worlds of shamans and medicine-men, in particular through the historical reports of demonic possessions in Europe. He writes in his book that ''Possession'' may have disappeared, but it has been replaced by ''Multiple Personality''. With the modern era of scientism, the phenomenon of demonic possession has given way to an unresound psychiatric symptom of which even today, academic medicine really ignores the ins and outs...

Is it a question of sweeping away with the hand a "diabolical", "superstitious" phenomenon, to replace it with a purely "neurological" phenomenon? Aren't the two linked? Could not certain mental disorders caused by traumatic fractures cause an "opening" for external entities? But are we really trying to find out the root cause of these personality disorders? Certainly, today, we are beginning to seriously point the finger at trauma and to understand its impact at the neurological level. But this phenomenon of the multiple personality still hides many secrets, and we note that very few means are implemented to seriously study the question... which, as we have seen, remains buried under a thick screed of lead.

The first reported cases of multiple personalities mention individuals possessed by the devil or demons. This is the case of Jeanne Fery, a young French Dominican none of 25 years who lived in the region of Mons in the sixteenth century. His case was described by Dr. Désiré Bourneville in 1886 in the book "La Possession de Jeanne Fery". Bourneville himself will say that Jeanne Fery represents "the most perfect case of a duplication of personality".

Bourneville speaks of a case of "duplication of personality" and his description of it contains all the criteria referenced today in the psychiatric manual DSM to describe the T.D.I.. Jeanne Fery's exorcist priest described a "fragmentation of his identity" and also evokes a story of trauma in his early childhood. Jeanne Fery was possessed by several "demons" who had different functions. There was a demon who controlled her eating disorders and another named the "Bloodthirsty" who made her self-harm by scarification because he wanted pieces of flesh. A third "devil" was called "Garga", her function was to protect her so that she did not feel the pain of the blows received in her childhood. However, he would make her live the traumas again by making her hit her head and hit her on the body. Garga also made him make several suicide attempts by scarification or strangulation.

Jeanne Fery also showed dissociative symptoms such as amnesia during these personality changes, trance states, inner voices and second states where she showed extreme rage or equally extreme sadness. She was sometimes described as "forced with rage", unable to sit down, let alone go to bed, for up to seven days and seven nights. Fery stated that she had visions of St. Mary Magdalene who was sometimes a bulwark between her and the demons. Some authors claim that it would be another of his personalities, the alter Mary Magdalene, the most rational and useful personality, she usually appeared in the most critical moments to calm the situation.

''Cornau'' was the first ''devil'' to have possessed it, and he will reveal from the mouth of the nun that he had been the father of the young woman since she was 4 years old. We will then learn that the little girl had been cursed by her biological father when she was 2 years old, which had paved the way for this Cornau who caused her very strange eating disorders. Jeanne could see these "devils", she heard them inside her and they sometimes violently took control of her body by tantrums during which she had to be controlled and locked up. They were also manifested by childish behavior, or by sobs and severe physical pain. The clinical picture was very similar to that of today's patients who suffer from severe dissociative disorders.

During the period when exorcism rituals were practiced, there were improvements and relapses where symptoms escalated, but overall, Jeanne's condition improved. Her treatment, which lasted 21 months, included the sisters' ongoing care and Jeanne's consent for her to accept that her "demons" who played the role of father and grandfather be exorcised. Jeanne Fery kept a diary concerning her own exorcism performed in 1584, an exorcism that was also described in detail by the priest in charge of the ritual:

- April 12, 1584: The demon "Namon" reveals his name. Jeanne lost all her religious knowledge.

- June 28, 1584: Mary Magdalene appears again and Joan tells her about written contracts hidden inside her body, those that are written with blood bind her to demons.

- August 25, 1584: Mary Magdalene appears and speaks for the first time. Jeanne signs a written contract to break the bond with her demons. New episode of scarification, but the decision is made to continue the exorcism. The demons give back a piece of her flesh that Jeanne had given them. The exorcism is considered a success because the demons broke a tile when they left, a signal that had been concluded before.

- September 1584: Jeanne is very ill and suffers from her self-inflicted wounds. She now feels freed from her demons, except Garga and Cornau.

- November 9, 1584: When she was 4 years old, Cornau became her father. He seduced her with sweets and sweets. Without him, she would be mute and ignorant. Canon Jean Mainsent spoke to Cornau and promised him to become Jeanne's father in his place. Mary Magdalene still appears and offers protection. Jeanne becomes like a child. She asks the archbishop to become her grandfather, which he accepts.

- November 12, 1584: During mass, she plays with the holy image of Mary Magdalene as a child with a doll. She also shows her heart indicating that there is pain there. Jeanne regresses to the pre-verbal stage. The archbishop then begins to teach her as if she were really 4 years old. He blesses every part of his body and reads his previous written confession. After listening to her confession, Jeanne still behaves like a child, but she can again walk and speak in a more assertive way. For 9 days, the archbishop will question her about her early childhood. She receives absolution and goes to live a year in the archdiocese with her nurse, Sister Barbe, in order to complete her release from demons and for her rehabilitation. Mary Magdalene disappears. The blurred vision of his right eye, which has been present for 10 years, also disappears.

- January 6, 1586: Joan falls into ecstasy during Mass and sees Mary Magdalene. Joan tells the archbishop that Mary Magdalene has kept the promise she made a year earlier and that she is now freed from demons. She has regained her spiritual strength and is returning to the convent to resume her place in community life.

Here are some notes based on what Jeanne herself reported in her diary about the evolution of her troubles: "At 2 years old, she is given to the devil by her father who curses her. At the age of 4, she is seduced by the devil Cornau who appears as a handsome young man offering her apples and white bread. She then accepts him like her father. From 4 to 12 years old, another devil appears (MaybeGarga). The devil Garga promises her that she will never feel the blows she receives again. As a teenager, for more freedom, she lived with her mother. She is apprenticed to a seamstress in the city of Mons. She must do whatever her demons ask of her or face torture. A multitude of new demons enter her. Previously, it had only two or three (probably Namon, Cornau and Garga). She promises the demons to keep their presence a secret. During her first communion, she must fight against them. They undermine her resolutions by all means, take control of her tongue during confession, one gives her sweets during the Eucharistic fast, another hurts her throat so that she spit out the host, etc. Despite these obstacles,

They undermine her resolutions by all means, take control of her tongue during confession, one gives her sweets during the Eucharistic fast, another hurts her throat so that she spit out the host, etc. Despite these obstacles, Jeanne entered the Dominican convent, but the internal conflict continued. New demons appear: "Traitor", "Magic Art", "Heresy", and many others. They demand control of his memory, intelligence and willpower. She begins to get involved in false ceremonies, she signs pacts written in foreign alphabets with her blood. The demons demand that she renounce all ties, except those who bind her to them. They give her banquets, they please her, they also cause pain when she tries to eat on Christian holidays, they make her body then reject the food. The demons "True Freedom", "Heresy" and "Namon" will even go so far as to implicate him in sacrilege. ''Sanguinaire'', ''Arc'' and others make her slash pieces of flesh, she will even consent to be hanged by the demons and will verge on death. She feels that she only loves demons and that she is afraid of people.'

Jeanne Fery declared that she was no longer able to control her body and that she always said the opposite of what she meant, a symptom that is now considered a clinical sign of T.D.I.. Another clinical sign is the amnesia she presented when she had a child's identity or when she lost objects "hidden" by demons. The alternation between a good functioning and an extreme dysfunction, the vision of the "demons", which she hears and who converse with each other, also suggest that it is a personality split. In addition to the amnesias and manifestations of different personalities, Jeanne Fery had serious somatic disorders: she regularly suffered from blood loss, vomiting, suffocation, spasmodic movements of her limbs, physical pain (head, heart and abdomen), insomnia, loss of appetite, loss of speech, blindness... but also sometimes of extreme muscular strength. which is a criterion of demonic possessions according to exorcist priests. She said that certain "devils" inhabited and disturbed particular areas of her body, such as her blasphemous tongue, her blind eye, or her painful throat.

Jeanne Fery's case gives some indications of physical abuse she may have suffered in early childhood, perhaps even sexual abuse. One of her first dissociations appeared as a "devil" when she was beaten when she was little. Subsequently, the devil Garga helped him not to feel the blows. Jeanne also mentions that her father cursed her and that he "offered her to the power of the devil" when she was two years old. She was then seduced by the devil Cornau at the age of 4 and she took this devil as her father. This may possibly suggest sexual abuse on the part of her father when she was 4 years old because Jeanne seems to have created an alter to replace him. Indeed, a 4-year-old child is unable to merge the image of the good father with that of the aggressor. Nowadays, very young children will attribute their abuse to monsters or vampires. The cultural context in which Jeanne lived could have given her this image of the devil[368].

Another case, dating from 1623, is that of Sister Benedetta Carlini in Italy. This woman has been described as being possessed by three "angelic boys" who sometimes took control of her body. Each of these "boys" spoke through her with a different dialect, a different voice and had different facial expressions. Benedetta was totally amnesiac about what was happening when the different "boys" emerged.

She also had eating disorders and was self-harming. In her case, it was also alluded to traumas that she would have suffered in childhood, her parents were themselves possessed, it was said... The child had been placed in the convent at the age of 9, the age at which his alter "Splenditello", sexually abused, had remained fixed. His symptoms became uncontrollable after his father's death

Did Jeanne Fery and Benedetta Carlini "simply" have a split personality without any intervention from external malevolent entities? It's hard to say anything... An ordinary psychiatrist would answer us that it is only a severe dissociative disorder while an ordinary priest would tell us that it is indeed evil spirits outside the person. But researchers believe that these two phenomena are intimately linked.

In a lecture given in 2008, Father François Brune cites a case of possession that occurred in Italy. A case reported by the demonologist Bishop Corrado Balducci. This affair lasted for seven years, from 1913 when the infestation began, to 1920 when the deliverance took place: "Following the blessing, she confided herself to the priest. She told him that at certain times of the day, a mysterious force, superior to her own, took hold of her body, her soul, and that then, despite her resistance, she began to dance to a tango rhythm for hours and hours until she fell from exhaustion. She said that with a beautiful voice, she sang verses, romances, pieces of opera that she had never heard before. She held endless lectures in foreign languages she did not know, in front of an imaginary crowd. She sang poems that announced her impending death and that of all her sisters. Often, she would tear with her teeth everything she could tear. She terrorized everyone who was there, she roared, she meowed, she screamed louder and louder, sowing terror to such an extent that at certain hours the whole house turned into a kind of menagerie of ferocious beasts. "

Father Brune tells us that the woman even showed a phenomenon of levitation 50 centimeters above the ground. Something that a psychotic alone can not do, no one can usually do such a thing. This woman was perfectly aware of her strange acts directed by an evil force outside her. It was a situation that despaired her and even made her consider suicide. In this specific case, there was no amnesic wall between his states of possession and his normal state, moreover it is a question of an "external force" influencing the person. The demonic possessed have often shown behaviors of the supernatural and even exceeding the unimaginable. The most 'spectacular' demonic possessions are absolutely not explainable by a psychotic mental disorder, even the most extreme. There is necessarily an intervention of external forces that transcend the laws of physics. In a 2008 lecture entitled "Les Possessions Démoniaques", Father François Brune described some rather impressive cases. It tells of an exorcism that was conducted in Germany in 1842 by a Protestant pastor to deliver a young woman named Gottliebin. The pastor's only weapon was prayer, faith and fasting... The doctors of the time who witnessed these phenomena understood absolutely nothing about it. The entities that possessed the young woman turned out to be a veritable legion. The demons first declared to be 3, then 7, then 14, then 175, then 425. It may be that the figures given by these entities are obviously fanciful but one thing is certain, it is that a host of demons inhabited this woman. In this case, there is apparently no mention of any change in personality, amnesia or traumatic past concerning the woman, the pastor speaks only of acts of witchcraft. In his lecture, Father Brune quoted a few passages from the report of this German pastor, Johan Christoph Blumhardt, translated into French by him:

"It was terrifying for me to realize that what was previously considered a most ridiculous popular superstition was coming out of the world of tales to emerge in reality. It began with vomiting of sand and pieces of glass. Little by little came pieces of steel of all kinds, old wood nails all curved. I saw one day, after a long choking, fall twelve in a row into the basin that we we must hold before his mouth. Then they were shoelaces of different shapes and sizes, often so long that it was difficult to understand how they could get out of the gosier. Once also a piece of metal so large and so wide that she lost her breath and remained as dead for several minutes. There were also incredible amounts of pins, needles, and pieces of knitting needles, sometimes alone and sometimes mixed with paper and feathers (...) From the nose also I pulled a lot of pins (...) From the needles, I removed quantities from the lower and upper jaws. She first felt terrible toothache when you couldn't see anything, and finally you could start to feel the spikes. They kept coming out more and more and came a time when I could grab them but it still took me a lot of effort to get them out. Two old pieces of wire, all bent the length of a finger, were once manifested in his tongue. Another time, she had under the skin of her body two long iron wires twisted and tangled in several places. With my wife, it took usanhour toextract them completely and Gottliebin lost consciousness more than once, as often happened. In addition, it came out of the whole part of the upper body, pieces of knitting needles or whole needles so often at various times that I can estimate the number at least thirty. They were either located either lying down,or planted vertically,in the latter case, often right in the heart area. If the needles were already halfway out, it took me half an hour, pulling with all my strength. I can't really blame anyone for being skeptical of such stories because it's too far beyond anything one can believe or imagine. But I was able to make all these observations and experiences for almost a whole year and always in the presence of many witnesses. I was very keen to avoid bad rumours, which is why I can tell these events in complete serenity, because I am absolutely sure, if only because of gottliebin's character that there was never and could not be the slightest deception. Every time I went to see her at that time, whether I was called or not, something would happen again and after a while, a new turn of witchcraft would occur in one or the other part of her body. The pain was always terrible and almost every time she lost consciousness. She usually exclaimed "I'm going to go there!", but prayer came to the end of everything, to itself. If she started complaining about suffering somewhere, it was enough for me to put my hand, usually on her head. Taught by a long experience in the Faith, I was sure to see immediately the effectiveness of the short prayer I said. She immediately felt that the thing was moving in her or turning around to find a way out. The most difficult was the crossing of the skin, and it was often felt for a long time that something was growing from the inside out. She never bled, it wasn't like an injury. At most we could recognize for a moment the place from which something had come out, at least as long as everything had happened by the force of prayer alone."

In a program of the channel Planète sur les exorcistes broadcast in April 2004, Msg Laroche, an Orthodox bishop, claimed to have personally seen a possessed spit out tiny toads and small worms...

Conversely, certain supernatural phenomena, this time of divine order, have regularly manifested themselves in the lives of the saints, such as the gushing through the mouth of petals of fresh roses. Father Brune notes that there is a parallelism between the phenomena of possessions and mystics. These are the same kind of manifestations but in positive, in something beautiful. This is the case of Mother Yvonne-Aimée of Jesus of the monastery of Malestroit who in her bed, feeling oppressed, saw a red carnation come out of her body at the level of the heart. ''It seems to me that I hear the flesh cracking, it tears, then when the carnation came out, the wound of the heart closed without scarring.'' (...) ''The roses continued to come out of Aimée's heart. We now have five. The last one came while she was at the foot of the altar. (...) The rose rose went up to the neck, I pulled it with force, its long stem covered with thorns had a hard time getting out. It was this last rose that made Aimée suffer the most, the others were without thorns.''

In his book entitled ''What to do with all these devils?'', the Italian exorcist Raul Salvucci writes: ''During the possession or the diabolical obsession, the personality of the human being disappears; in its place, another entity intrudes which takes the body, the meaning, the faculties and which speaks, acts, moves, expresses itself by means of this human body. When liberation occurs, the person has two sensations:

- The first is that she does not remember anything she said or what happened, as if she had been anesthetized for surgery. Sometimes she also asks, "What time is it, where am I?" After her release, looking at the bruises she had on her wrists, provoked by those who had been trying to hold her for several hours, a possessed said: "Who did this to me?"

- The second is that she feels completely exhausted by the violence that has been done to her to put out of use her personality "of evil".

Why can some people be so cruelly beaten and how do we get to this appalling form of evil possession, it is difficult to say[369].''

In 2010, a study was conducted in Uganda. His goal was to explore the relationships between demonic possessions, dissociative symptoms, and trauma. The study consisted of a group of 119 individuals diagnosed by traditional healers as possessed, compared with a control group of 71 non-possessed individuals. The assessments included demographic elements, dissociation criteria and potentially traumatic elements of the lives of individuals. In comparison with the control group, the possessed group showed more severe dissociative disorders but also more traumatic elements in their lives. The links between these traumatic events and dissociative disorders were significant. The study concluded that possession by entities was dissociative disorder, or more accurately a "dissociative trance state" related to traumatic events. Here is a short excerpt from the study showing the strong similarity between demonic possession and dissociative disorders: "Entering another state of consciousness and speaking in a language that people have never learned before. Later they no longer remember speaking in these languages[370].

Disturbances of the state of consciousness, identity or memory occurring once or in an episodic manner, specific to certain places and cultures. Dissociative trance involves a narrowing of the field of perception of the near environment, as well as stereotypical behaviors or movements that subjects feel are beyond their control. In the state of possession, there is, instead of the feeling of one's own identity, a new identity, attributed to the influence of a spirit, a power, a deity or another person. This may be accompanied by amnesia. It is perhaps the most common dissociative disorder in Asia. Amok (Indonesia), Behainan (Indonesia), Latab (Malaysia), Pibloktoq (Arctic), Ataque de Nervios (Latin America) are known examples.

Another study concerning the link between possession, dissociative trance state and T.D.I., was conducted in Italy by Stefano Ferracuti in 1995. The recruitment of the subjects was done through the exorcist of the diocese of Rome, Don Gabriele Amorth. In this study, ten people who were following exorcism sessions against demonic possessions, were studied with the criteria for diagnosing dissociative disorders as well as with the Rorschach test. These people were overwhelmed by paranormal manifestations, claiming to be possessed by a demon. They obviously had great difficulty in maintaining a normal social life. These people had much in common with patients with I.D.D. and Rorschach tests showed that they too had a complex organization of personality. The dissociative trances of these "possessed" people showed great similarities with the T.D.I.. The study report states that dissociative trance states, particularly possession disorder, are probably more common than we think, but that there is too little specific clinical data on this topic. In this study, subjects stated that psychiatric treatment did not improve their symptoms in any way, while exorcism rituals brought some improvement. Almost all of these people said that exorcism had helped to keep the demon under control, that he harassed them less after prayers[371].

For Father Angelo, exorcist of an Italian diocese, possession has nothing to do with the T.D.I.. In the book "Confidences d'un Exorciste", here is what he confides to the two French journalists Nathalie Duplan and Valérie Raulin:

"The devil, in the case of possession, invades the body of man and he takes control of it, as if it were his own. The spiritual creatures being devoid of them, they use the organs and the members of the possessed to move, to speak, without the unfortunate being able to prevent them. Despite the torment inflicted by the demon, the soul remains free. This proves that the devil does not have unlimited power over man, god not allowing him to possess the soul. I also insisted that possession is not a "multiple personality disorder" or a "dissociative personality disorder", as psychiatrists argue, but a spiritual reality that is beyond our comprehension and is mysteriously part of God's purpose. The devil cannot undertake what God forbids him and his power of nuisance is not unlimited (...) It is very impressive to see Satan, or some other demon, inhabit a body, move it as it pleases, manipulate it implausively, and then be submissive, unable to resist when the priest lays his hands on him. Again, submission is not immediate, especially if we are dealing with very powerful demons. I recall that, like angels, demons are spirits within which there is a hierarchy. Archangels are more powerful than angels. Among the demons, the same is true, some are superior to others. Powerful demons are quickly recognized because, at first, they do not react, they resist, while demons of a lower rank are forced to go first[372].

In his book "Exorcisms and powers of the laity: Diabolical influences", Father Ovila Melançon writes: "We do not know that there are neuroses-diseases and neuroses-demonics. A doubling of the personality will sometimes be attributed to what will, in fact, only be the intervention of a fallen mind. It should also be known that a true diabolical possession is almost always accompanied by mental and nervous disorders, which are produced and amplified by the demon and whose manifestations and symptoms are medically identical to those produced by neuroses (...) Father Francesco Palau, beatified by Pope John Paul II on April 25, 1988, was quite right to welcome the mentally ill and exorcise them all, so "those who were possessed healed; those who were sick remained sick," as Father Gabriele Amorth indicated in his volume entitled "An exorcist tells". The same author was quite right to write also: "I have agreed with all the other exorcists I have consulted to affirm that the use of an exorcism, in cases where it was not necessary, has never been harmful"." This is the true pastoral that should be found in the Church, pastoral that corresponds to the authentic doctrine of the Church concerning exorcisms[373]!"

In a 2011 interview, the exorcist of the Diocese of San Jose in the United States, Father Gary Thomas, said: "Generally, people can be touched (by the demon) when they have experienced difficult things in their lives. It is my opinion that is based on my experience. With people with a history of sexual abuse, this is even more revealing. These are deep wounds of the soul and it affects the person in his life at all levels (...) Demons want to attach themselves to people with a history of sexual abuse. I would say that eight out of ten people who come to me for demonic possessions have been sexually abused, usually by a relative, brother or other family member. This does not mean that anyone who has been sexually assaulted will have problems with demonic possession, but the risk is greater[374].

In the DSM-IV, both possession and T.D.I. were classified as "dissociative disorders". In its new definition of dissociative identity disorder, the 2013 DSM-V states: "Disruption of identity by at least two distinct personalities, which can be described in some cultures as an experience of possession."

We therefore note that the ambiguity is real and that no serious study, at least made public, is being carried out to understand this phenomenon. The symptoms of demonic possession and multiple personality are indeed remarkably similar, professor and clinical psychologist James Randall Noblitt has listed these points common[375]:

- Possession and T.D.I. are both more common in women than in men. This phenomenon is seven times more common among women than men, with women appearing to dissociate more easily than men.

- They are both reported following traumatic experiences, rituals or initiation trials.

- They are both associated with primitive or pre-industrial cults, but also modern.

- Secrecy is often a common factor in possession and in the T.D.I.

- Individuals report amnesia both in possession and in T.D.I.

- Trance experiences are common.

- Individuals experience at some point a common consciousness shared with the alter personality or entity.

- Individuals act with a behavior that is not in their usual characteristics.

- The identity usually present is usually named "host".

- Entities or alters that take control of the body can present themselves as an animal, a spirit, a demon, or a deity.

- Individuals may behave beyond the physical limits of the human body, especially with regard to pain.

- A significant number of individuals affected by a possession or a T.D.I think that they have particular psychic powers.

In psychic disorders or "mental illnesses", the spiritual side touching on the other dimensions of the being, is today totally ignored by modern medicine. While in traditional pre-industrial cultures, this spiritual side was on the contrary the first thing that was treated during physical or psychic disorders, especially by shamanism and exorcism. For example, in India, it has been reported that 75% of psychiatric patients also consult a religious healer in parallel. Similarly, in a rural community in South Korea, 15-25% of psychotic patients were treated with shamanic therapies[376].

It is important to take into account all the dimensions of the human being to address the question of T.D.I. which seems to go far beyond the simple physical / neurological functioning.

Professor Emilio Servadio, expert in psychoanalysis and honorary president of the Italian Psychoanalytic Society, also a specialist in paranormal manifestations, told journalist Renzo Allegri about exorcisms: "There are individuals everywhere with much more complicated problems and inexplicable and sometimes frightening pathological manifestations, which we are not able to classify and even less to treat. Faced with these cases, secular science stops, it stops its research, because it no longer knows in which direction to make investigations and refuses to formulate hypotheses. But the most open psychiatrists and psychoanalysts sense that they are faced with phenomena that go beyond the limits of medical science to engage in areas inexplorable by human reason. They are aware that they cannot do anything and understand that it is their duty to give free rein to theologians and, possibly, to the exorcists themselves. I consider that science must indeed recognize its own limits[377\\."

Professor Chris Cook of the Department of Theology and Religion from Durham University wrote an article entitled "Demon Possession and Mental Illness: Should We Be Making a Differential Diagnosis?" (Demonic possession and mental illness:

should we make a different diagnosis?), of which here are some excerpts: "Demonic possession and mental illness are not just two different diagnoses (...) However, if these two things are connected, we need to know the nature of the connection between the two (...) We must distinguish which of these two things we are dealing with, but we must also identify which of the two problems leads to the other as a secondary "complication" (...) Demonic possession is essentially a spiritual problem, but mental illness is a multifactorial matter, of which spiritual, social, psychological and physical factors must play an etiological role. The relationship between these two concepts is therefore complex. Different diagnoses can a,see a role to play to help those whose problem could be of demonic or medical / psychiatric origin. However, spiritual discernment has equal if not greater importance than scientificdiscernment! 378]. "

Pastor James Friesen is the author of the books "Uncovering the Mystery of M.P.D." and "More Than Survivors". He worked with many patients and described in detail how multiple personality disorder was related to satanic ritual abuse. According to him, the demonic possession is directly related to the T.D.I.. He argues that individuals with a dissociative identity disorder experience both a split personality and both possession by external entities, but that these two kinds of "takeover" are distinct from each other.

Dr. Haraldur Erlendsson also comes to the same conclusion regarding the simultaneity of possession and T.D.I.. In a 2003 article entitled "Multiple Personality Disorder - Demons and Angels or Archetypal Aspects of the Inner Self", he writes: "If the different personalities claim to have a different history from that of the main personality, should we take this into account after asking a series of questions such as: "Is there anyone?", "Who are you?", "How long have you been there?", "Where were you before?", "What effect do you have on the person?", "Why have you not evolved?". When the answers clearly give the conviction that the entity comes from outside the person, should we take these answers at face value? Should the answers given be used to differentiate between possession and multiple personality? Perhaps the diagnosis of T.D.I. should include possession trance. The problem here is that many clinicians are not comfortable with the notion of life after death or entities that can live in different worlds. Dr. Colin Ross, who wrote the most comprehensive work on T.D.I. (Dissociative Identity Disorder, Diagnosis, Clinical Features, and Treatment of Multiple Personality Disorder, 1997), has himself sometimes used techniques related to the spirit world, as have many others in this field. However, he prefers to treat alter pretending to come from outside in the same way as all other parts of the fra.ctioned personality. It helps them cope with the traumatic content of memories and seeks to achieve complete integration with the rest of the person. My view is that possession and multiple personality do not happen separately but rather occur together. "

We have seen that the causal link between severe trauma and dissociative disorders leading to a multiple personality is now established. Do demonic possessions also have as their origin a trauma? It would seem that this is indeed one of the many points in common between T.D.I. and Possession. Father Jeffrey Steffon in his book Satanism: Is It
Real ?" (Satanism: is this a reality?) describes a number of causes that can lead to possession by one or more entities: "First of all, a demonic spirit can attach itself to someone through injury or trauma (...) A demonic spirit can also attach itself to a person through his involvement in the occult.'

Satanic ritual abuse particularly attracts demonic entities because of the practices of black magic, but also because of the extreme traumas that occur during ceremonies. Demons are attracted by the suffering, pain and terror that causes the helplessness of the victim totally submissive to the executioners. but also to the spirits. This type of extreme emotions is a force of attraction and food for fallen spirits, especially if the blood flows. The deeply dissociated victims then become real receptacles for these entities attracted by the magic protocols and incantations that accompany the ritual. In addition, these ceremonies are often practiced in sites with particular terrestrial energies facilitating interactions between different dimensions. Just like a cracked vase that lets light through, the split will let certain entities pass that will mingle with the breaks of the personality that are the fragments of soul, a notion that will be developed later...

In 2010, the Reverend Thomas J. Euteneuer identified "seven levels of demonic persecution", According to him, satanic ritual abuse is the most critical level: "Children born in a family line of witches or in a satanic cult are initiated through rituals and consecrations. They are the most difficult to cure. The emotional and physical trauma of the rituals, inflicted since childhood, or even in the womb, is so extreme that it fractures the personality of the child and makes him totally subject to possession, it is deliberately put in the hands of the demons of worship. Such wounded and bruised individuals need compassionate help from the Church, but they cannot be healed by exorcism alone. In fact, they need several elements combined together for a real healing to take place. Firstly, they must make a total break with all the occult activities and all the people involved in their abuses. Second, they need a qualified therapist with good knowledge to treat their dissociative identity disorder. Third, they need a qualified exorcist and a good support team to regularly pray and mobilize all the spiritual resources of the ward for this particular case. Finally, they need a support group to rehabilitate them into a true Christian fraternity based on strong relationships of love and truth. They have a long healing journey ahead of them and therefore they need maximum support and help. As in all demonic afflictions, healing is possible only with the grace of Deu and the a.ctive cooperation of the individual. A full cure can take years of hard work by everyone involved, but it is really possible! 379! ."

In the book "Healing the Unima,ginable", the survivor of ritual abuse Stella Katz, who herself practiced mind control on young children within a Satanist cult, testifies: "According to some ancient writings, it is clear that the splitting of children is something that has *been practiced for many generations in some of these religions, with the aim of linking demons to children. When an alter emerges, it is his behavior that will determine what type of demon it is, so the group will call this alter by a particular name of demon. Subsequently, the group can use the name of the demon to call him and bring him out so that he takes possession of the body. However, when a demon comes out without permission, which he usually ends up doing, the child will have to be subjected to an exorcism. Children who cannot be exorcised may end up in a psychiatric hospital. These occult groups eventually gained a great understanding of the process and consequences of splitting a child, their activities and the protocols they created became increasingly sophisticated*l380].." Again, there is this ambiguity between internal alter personality and external demonic entity, but the notion of splitting (spiritual unlocking) of the child is always present.

Author Fritz Springmeier makes a distinction between demonic possession and T.D.I., but he acknowledges that there are many common characteristics and that these two things are intrinsically linked in trauma-based mind control protocols: "If we take MK programming from the programmer's point of view, he believes in both personality splitting and demonic possession. For an MK programmer, it is necessary to create alter personalities and at the same time "demonize" them, i.e. link them to demons. Several former programmers have confided to Springmeier that if someone really wants to understand Monarch mind control, they have to realize that it is something fundamentally demonic (...) Programming and mind control cannot be separated from demonology and occultrituals! 381! ."

Demonic entities could therefore bind to dissociated alters. This is also what the Reverend Tom Ball claims for whom demons are real entities that have been "attached" to alter personalities through "curses", i.e. protocols of blackmagic! 382! .

As Dr. Haraldur Erlendsson wrote: "My view is that possession and multiple personality do not happen separately but rather occur together."

According to the various data we have, it is more than likely that these two phenomena are indeed intimately linked. Unlike alter personalities who have a basic protective role (even if some are very hostile and even violent), demonic entities from outside are not there to help the split person, their goal is to steal, destroy, deceive and kill: they lead to madness and self-destruction. In a Monarch-type MK programming framework, these demonic entities have the role of cooperating with the programmer to maintain control of the slave (a topic that will be developed in the next chapter). Alter personalities, on the other hand, have the role of supporting and helping the person to survive the trauma as well as possible. They have a function that is not destructive but rather protective. Alter personalities usually take great care of the original personality. The heavy traumatic memories and the pain they contain are "encapsulated" in the different alters, which has the function of preserving the victim so that he can continue to live. It is for this reason that alter personalities must be understood, accepted and loved; in contrast to destructive outer entities that can also torment these alter as they torment the host personality. In the reference book on the phenomenon of possessions, "Possession Demoniacal and Other", Oesterreich speaks of evil spirits but he also speaks of "good" possessions. He cites a case reported by a certain van Müller in the work "Gründliche Nachncht" where possession alternated between an unhealthy evil spirit and a good spirit[383]. It may be that the "good spirit" did not come from outside but was in fact a fraction of the person's personality, an alter whose role was to help and protect him. If the other "consciousness" is considered to be a part of the fractional personality, the treatment will consist in integrating it (fusion or integration) into the main personality, on the other hand, if the other "consciousness" is considered to be an external spirit or demon, the treatment will consist in expelling it (expulsion by the prayer of exorcism).

Psychiatrist Ralph B. Allison was sometimes confronted occasionally during his work with patients with T.D.I. with entities that behaved in unusual ways. Their "birth" could not be localized in time, they visibly served no purpose and generally they presented themselves as "spirits[384]". With an alter personality, it is usually possible to know the moment when the split (dissociation) occurred, i.e. the moment of its "birth". In addition, each alter normally has a well-defined function within the internal system: observer, protector, child, etc.

In his book entitled "Uncovering the mystery of MPD", Dr. James G. Friesen made a distinction in order to be able to determine what belongs to an alter personality or an external entity (demon):

Alter Personalities	Demons
Most alters, and even alter executioners, can become powerful allies in therapy. It is possible to establish a positive relationship with them (even if it may turn out to be negative at first)	Demons are arrogant and there is no way to establish a relationship with them
Over time, alter become ego- syntone, i.e. they can merge and harmonize with the original personality	Demons remain as "ego-alien", external entities impossible to merge and "integrate"
Confusion and fear subside when it comes only to altering	Confusion, fear and dislocation persist despite therapy when demons are present
Alter tend to conform with their environment	Demons force unwanted behaviors and then blame a personality
Alter have their own personalities with specific voices	Demons have a negative voice without any corresponding personality
Irritations, discontents and rivalries between alter are very common	Hatred and bitterness are the most common feelings among demons
Alter imaging represents a human form and remains consistent	Demon imaging varies between human and non-human forms, with many variations

Dr. James Friesen cautions about the practice of exorcism: the fight against demons. It is indeed necessary to have a strong spiritual foundation and never engage in this kind of thing out of simple curiosity or for a financial interest. The risk being to "fight demons" that are not demons, or worse yet, fight demons demons without having the real capacity.

According to Father Gabriele Amorth, chief exorcist of the Vatican, in a possession there may be the presence of demons, but also the presence of damned souls, that is to say a soul of a deceased person who is slavishly attached to Satan. In his book "Confessions", Father Amorth reports the case of a possessed woman. During the first prayers exorcism, she went into a trance and became very violent, she spoke several languages with different voices. After each session, the woman was coming out of her trance state and she asked what she had done and what that she had said. Being totally amnesiac, she had no memory of what had happened, she was only tired and sore. after several exorcisms, obeying the orders of the priest, a first demon revealed his name: "Zago". He claimed to be the leader of a cult practiced in a nearby village, near a ruined church, he said also that there was a legion of minor demons in this possession. the other demon presented himself as "Astarot", that one was concerned with destroying the couple's love and affection between the parents and Kids. A third demon named "Serpent" was on a mission to push the woman to suicide. Much to the surprise of the exorcist priest Gabriele Amorth, among these demonic entities there were three damned souls: ''Michelle'', a woman who had worked at the Moulin Rouge and had been killed by drugs at the age of 39.

It was Michelle who often made the Italian woman who possessed the sentences in French that she repeated to solicit customers. During these moments, the woman's face became soft and persuasive. There was also "Belzébuth", a Moroccan who had beheaded three missionaries in 1872, then committed suicide, overwhelmed by remorse. the third damned soul was ''Jordan'', a Scot who had murdered his mother. He often intervened by speaking in English during trances of possession. Later, during an exorcism, Amorth heard a new female voice, he then asked her forcefully: "Who are you?", to which the voice replied: "I am Vanessa, I am twenty-three years old. I was a university student. I met a young man who took me to black masses near the ruined church. That's when I started serving the demon. One night when I had drunk blood and was drunk from the ceremony, I had crossed the street and I died, run over by a car.'' There are therefore had the presence of a fourth damned soul. During the last prayers of exorcism, a cross of a discolored red appeared on the forehead of the Wife. The husband, when he touched this cross, discovered that it was blood.

The exorcist then questioned the entity to find out the cause, the response of the demon was: "It is the blood of a child of four days which were offered to me by his mother, one of my followers of old[385].

Another case of what appears to be possession by a human soul was described in the study conducted in Uganda mentioned above in this chapter[386]. This is a 33-year-old woman who had been suffering from spiritual attacks for years, according to her sister she had strange and aggressive behaviors during which she spoke with different voices. These attacks happened when the family was about to go to church or recite some prayers. to the clinic, the patient went into a trance, she began to shake her hands as if she had claws while growling like a wild animal. after what she was starting to speak in a strange language with an equally voice strange. His sister explained that it was the voice of an uncle who was died several years ago. This uncle had kept the values and the died several years ago. This uncle had kept the values and the beliefs of traditional pagan culture, while their father had turned towards Christianity. There was then an unresolved conflict between their father and this uncle because the father refused to practice the rituals for the ancestors. Was this woman possessed by her uncle's soul?

A study conducted in 2000 in a psychiatric hospital in Singapore reported the case of a Malaysian man who when possessed by spirits of the ancestors, began to speak the "Sundak", a Javanese dialect that was no longer used by its people and that it did not have he himself never learned[387].

For Father François Brune, there is a distinction between demonic possession and multiple personality, for him the phenomenon of multiple personality is explained solely by the incorporation of a soul disembodied and wandering human. Soul that would take over the body of the individual to express himself through him.

This question of the possession by souls of the deceased is perhaps to be put in relation with a form of "ancestor worship" practiced by Satanists and Luciferians. Some families who practice ritual abuse and systematic personality splitting on his offspring would thus offer an open door to their ancestors to that they can "relive" in the flesh through possession punctual or permanent of their descendants (split and therefore open to the mediumship). If the ancestor was already split during his incarnation, fragments of his mind may also remain related to his progeny incarnate. They would thus obtain a kind of "immortality", so much sought after by some occultists.

The book ''Possession Demoniacal and Other'' is a study on the phenomenon of possession that has been recognized worldwide and which remains today a reference in the field. Oesterreich makes a clear differentiation between voluntary and involuntary possession and also a distinction between lucid and sleepwalking possession. In lucid possession, the individual is conscious and later remembers it. A contemporary example of voluntary possession is that of the "channels", the mediums of the New Age who voluntarily allow themselves to be possessed by an entity. Some of these mediums are lucid, others are not. Sleepwalking possession happens when the individual is unable to remember his or her behaviour and what he or she is passed around him during the trance state; while in the Lucid possession, he is the passive spectator of what is happening in him and of his actions directed by another force. People with an I.D.T. describe dissociative episodes in the same way that Oesterrich described the states of possession, they can be lucid, we then speak of common consciousness between the main personality and the alter, or separated by a wall amnesic.

It would therefore seem that a severe trauma resulting in a deep dissociation can cause both a fragmentation of the "Me" into different alter personalities, or fragments of soul as we will see; and in parallel a phenomenon of possession by external entities that can be of a demonic nature, or human nature, or fragments of human souls disembodied. The T.D.I. is therefore intimately linked to the phenomenon of mediumship and of possession by the "spiritual breach" that was caused during the trauma. Cases that can be taken for a demonic possession may so turn out to be a T.D.I with alternations of alter personalities which may suggest that they are external entities, all such as external entities can actually parasitize and infest a person

''fractured'', having a fragmented and multiple personality.

In her autobiography entitled "Thanks For The Memories", Brice Taylor (survivor of the MK Monarch) writes: "I met some people with multiple personality disorders who thought that they were mediums and that they channeled entities, when in fact they contacted part of their own personality structure. A day,a woman 'channel' (editor's note: channels = the mediums of the newâge) named Shirley graciously offered me a private 'channeling' session (...) I told her that I would be happy to ask any questions she had. asked about herself when she was in a trance, which she accepted. To the question of whether Shirley had been involved in type ritual abuse, the answer was that ''Shirley was not yet ready to to face this reality''. Making channeling may be a way clever to cover the reality of a multiple personality disorder when personality fragments go back to consciousness, explaining that it is an external ''entity''[388].

In an article entitled "Multiple Personality and Channeling" (Jefferson Journal of Psychiatry), Dr. Rayna L. Rogers makes the parallel between the channels of the new age and people suffering from T.D.I.. She concludes that the trances of these mediums (whenthey are genuine and not fraud) are very similar in many ways to people suffering from personality iractionation. As we will see below, the iractionated people are also more open to the "spirit world", to other dimensions, therefore more likely to access medium faculties (a session of "channeling" is nothing but a punctual possession, it may be unconscious or conscious, evaporating then everything like the memory of a dream). From an external point of view, for example for a audience attending a session, it is difficult to determine if the channel channels an external entity, or if it is an inner alter that communicates outwards (we will return to the channeling of spirits in Chapter 9).

3 - Dissociation and exit from the body: the door open to possession?

Dans le livre “Diagnosis and Treatment of Multiple Personality Disorder”, le Dr. Frank Putnam dit qu’il y a deux camps on the issue of going out of the body, a group he describes as "separationists", those who believe that there is a "soul", an "astral body", which can truly leave the physical body to move to other places, and then there are psychologists for whom these experiences of body exits are simply a modified state of consciousness and that it is a simple hallucination. The numerous testimonies tend to prove that indeed, there is an astral body that can move out of the body physical.

People describe a feeling of floating in weightlessness, outside their body. Some people who have experienced a N.D.E (Near Death Experience), a near-death experience or experience at the borders of the death, were able to accurately describe the surgical operation that was performed on them following an accident, while they were in a coma... They were also able to report the number of people present in the operating room and what they were saying to each other. Their energetic body was above the stage and could thus observe everything in the smallest details while their physical body was unconscious, lying down on the table of operation. These near-death experiences studied by Dr. Raymond

Moody, but also the work of Robert Monroe or Dr. Jean Jacques

Charbonier, show that an energetic body, said etheric body or body astral,with a consciousness, can leave the physical body and then reintegrate it.

Some people master this phenomenon and can provoke it at will, something that is obviously not advisable. According to a Gallup poll from

In 1982, 25 to 30% of people would have had this kind of experience following hospitalization or severe trauma.

Occultists are well aware of this technique of the "Astral Journey", called the astral projection of the "body of light" out of the physical body. It is a discipline studied by secret societies such as the Golden Dawn or the

Freemasonry, but it is a practice above all mastered by shamans pre-industrial cultures, which travel through the different dimensions thanks to this technique.

The phenomenon of dissociation described in the previous chapter is sometimes accompanied by a feeling of separation of mind and body.

Some victims of sexual abuse clearly describe a concrete exit from of the physical body during their dissociation triggered by extreme violence, pain and terror. Psychotraumatologist Muriel Salmona, specialist in dissociation, speaks in these cases of a "decorporation". Marie-Ange Le

Boulaire, the author of the book "Le viol", describes well how she ended up outside her body, observing her rape and analyzing in a very lucid way the situation in which she found herself.

She described this phenomenon during her appearance on the tv show "Allô Docteur'' on France 5 in January 2014: "I felt a meter away, like in a movie. I was a meter behind and I was watching the scene that I analyzed very clearly in wondering what I could do to get out of it... That was very clear.''

in the documentary entitled "A life after the sect" (Planet +, 2014), Flora Jessop, born in a family of Mormon fundamentalists, testifies about her childhood martyred: "It started with caresses, he told me that I should not talk about it, that it was our secret. At first, I was proud, but at the same time time I felt dirty and I didn't understand why. This was very weird, I shared a secret with my father and it made me want to vomit. I was terrified every time he wanted to talk to me. I became very good at detaching myself from myself. I was floating above me and I'm watched touch me feeling like it was happening to someone other. That way, I could still love my father. Every child considers his father as his hero, he is the first hero of a child. What I have learned very early is that monsters do not hide under our bed, the monsters pass through the doors and have familiar faces. My hero was a monster..."

the

"Wife Rape" book reports a number of testimonies of dissociation with a out of the body during a rape: ''One of the most common survival strategies is described by Debbie as an ''exit in orbit," she recalls: "He was lying entirely on top of me, and so I just went out with my mind, I just wasn't there anymore. I had transported myself somewhere else and later realized that I had often done, even growing up, when something hurt me, I out of it... I was getting totally numb.'' (...) Karen also describes having had an out-of-body exit: "It's like I'm watching the scene from the corner of the room and I couldn't feel anything anymore.'' This happened only during the abuses sexual but not during physical violence. Annabel also described having had an out-of-body experience during her rape, she says: "I'm focused on my arm while being somewhere above it, my arm was twisted under my body, like a rag doll. I didn't see the rape as if it happened to me, but as if it happened to someone else with a twisted arm[389].

In the book ''Reach for the Rainbow'', Lynn Finney recounts the story of a survivor who describes her psychic dissociation and then the exit out of his body:

"I can't stand this for another minute. I feel like I'm going to die. I want to die. Oh, please, let me die. What is is it happening? I don't feel the pain anymore. Why I don't feel any more pain? I don't feel anything anymore... I feel so peaceful. I fleet, I float up to the ceiling. What is going on? I can see the my father's naked body on the bed below me. I see his back and back of his legs. It is about a little girl, a girl with long hair black like me. But that's me! I am so confused. I do not don't understand. How can I be down and here at the ceiling at the same time time? I can see my father and daughter (me) moving on the bed, but my emotions and pain have totally disappeared. I do not feel nothing more but I can hear his crying. I'm glad I'm not downstairs anymore, I

Dr. David Gersten reported a testimony regarding this process of extreme dissociation. In his book entitled "Are You Getting Enlightened or Losing Your Mind?" (Are you achieving enlightenment or losing your mind?) he writes: "Amanda has been the victim of physical and psychological abuse and also sexual abuse. His father, an alcoholic, had began to rape her when she was eight years old, and this continued for six years years. An older brother was also abusing her (...) Amanda learned to cope with agony by "leaving her body".

In traditional psychiatry, we could say that it is "dissociated". The question that psychiatry does not answer is "where goes away the consciousness when it dissociates itself?". I believe that what we call dissociation should often be an out-of-the-way experience of the body. Amanda's consciousness dissociated, or separated from her body physics His mind and consciousness were leaving temporarily

the limits of his physical body. Thus, Amanda no longer personally experienced the emotional and physical havoc. In fact, she learned to ''leave her body'' at will and she often found herself in states of bliss ecstatic while she was out of her body. I have since interviewed dozens of others who have been victims of extreme abuse, and more than half of them reported that they had left their bodies during violence[391].''

Extreme traumatic rituals serve to provoke this "enlightenment": the transcendence of the physical body through the dissociative phenomenon. The Heart of Satanic Perversion is to "tear off the soul" of the victim to vampirize his energy and control his mind. These are not the rituals in theythemselves who really do, but rather, their effects at levels which exceed the material world..........

some energy specialists explain that a shock or trauma, especially at the beginning of life, will unlock the astral body which will therefore be able to detach itself from the physical body.

Eileen Nauman describes this phenomenon as follows: "People who have suffered shock and trauma, especially in their early childhood, have their own astral body that comes out above their heads. The unlocked astral body looks like a colorful balloon floating around the head. A clairvoyant can see and know that you are "uprooted" (disconnected) because of this event. The reason why the astral body wants to "escape" is that it is our "motherboard" for all our emotions and feelings. When of the attack, when a person is deeply injured and traumatized, the Astral body will come out through the upper part of our head (Chakra of the Crown), he simply does not want to experience this pain and this suffering,he flees anguish, sorrow or agony. If it unlocks and detaches to go out, then you will feel less these traumatic emotions.

People who experience this also report a feeling of numbness and paralysis. This is another sign that the astral body is unlocked and out. Under extreme violence, the astral body unlocks and escapes.

Is it that simple? What happens when it happens product? We feel disconnected from violence and trauma, there are no more or many fewer emotions. Many people say have "floated" above the scene of violence, with total detachment and without any emotion. They describe it as if they were watching a movie in color, but without there being any emotional connection with the scene. Over the years from time, the astral body learns how to escape instead of remaining in the physical body and to feel the powerful emotions related to violence, trauma and post-traumatic stress. This allows it to remain unlocked as a result of an event or series of events. Anyone who has had a traumatic or very disturbed childhood may have had his astral body unlocked in order to escape the continual emotional pain[392].

It would seem that the neurochemical phenomenon that causes dissociation with physical as well as emotional anesthesia is therefore related with this detachment from the astral body where the victim sees the scene from the outside and no longer feels any emotion. Thus, "energy" parts of our body can detach itself from it to evolve on other levels. Like us let's see it later, it can be simple fragments of soul that are "tear" during trauma. In the case of T.D.I., we speak of fractionation of personality, but it is in reality the "energetic" bursting of a all unified that the human forms at birth.

is interesting to note that the Quechua Indians of Peru use the word "Susto", which means "fear", to talk about this phenomenon of exit from the body that they call the "loss of the soul" (or fragments of soul). For them, this "loss of the soul" is called Susto's disease: the disease of fear... In his book "El mito del Jani o Susto de la medecina indigena del Peru'', Dr. Frederico Sal y Rosas reports that the Quechua Indians believe that the soul (or perhaps a part of it) can leave the body, spontaneously or by being forced to do so. The disease of 'Susto'' can arrive in two ways: either by a great fright, as for example thunder, the sight of a charging bull or a snake, etc., either of a malicious way that does not require fear[393].

What to think of the examples given above such as the fear of thunder, a bull or a snake that can trigger a split of the soul, in comparison with satanic ritual abuses? Rituals including scenes that could not be more terrifying and painful, rapes, torture and sacrifices (real or even simulated). During ritual abuse, the terror of the child is voluntarily pushed to its climax to succeed to extreme dissociation. In this deeply dissociated state, the mind is detaches from the body. The energetic and spiritual doors of the child are then find wide open, allowing the intrusion of demonic entities attracted by rituals, terror, blood, black magic and incantations. Nature abhorring emptiness, when a part of the soul is splits and "escapes", this creates a "space" that can be invaded by an external entity. This phenomenon of possession by a spirit during a soul splitting is something found in traditions shamanic. As a result of the trauma, the child is therefore disconnected from his "Me", it is no longer anchored. Just like its personality is fragmented, his soul (his spiritual body) is also split. In addition, the child may find himself parasitized by one or more demonic entities that will attach themselves to him and interact with his world interior, this particular dimension to which it was connected during the traumatic rituals.

Here is now the disturbing testimony of a former member of the "illuminati" Luciferian order. The woman who is coming out of this cult as well as possible converted to Jesus Christ and decided to reveal what she had experienced since her very early childhood, having been born in a family practicing these horrors. 'Svali' (his pseudonym) was victim of ritual abuse and mental programming but she has herself practiced mind control on children from the San Diego group to United States, on which it depended. The following testimonial was posted online in 2001, it concerns a ritual going so far as to cause imminent death in the victim. That is to say, it will be decorporated due to trauma extremes that voluntarily push his physical body to the borders of the death. This type of practice is one of the most extreme MK programming and the most complex. We will therefore anticipate a little on the next chapter devoted to monarch-type mind control.

Trauma is the basis of Lutheran mind control and the most extreme method is certainly what Svali calls the "resurrection ceremony". According to her it is one of the oldest methods of the Illuminati Order. THE ceremony or ritual, is usually done for a child of 2 or 3 years. The latter will be severely traumatized by various means: physical violence and sexual, electroshock, asphyxia, drugs, with the aim of making it happen dissociate as much as possible and bring it into a state close to death. It is a mental programming method that voluntarily pushes a child to the borders of death. The little victim then feels at that moment presences around it, they are entities observing this small body unconscious between life and death... In these rituals of "resurrection", there will always be the presence of competent medical staff with adequate equipment to monitor the child's condition and to be able to "resusciter" him when the time comes... When he regains consciousness in extreme suffering, he will be confronted with a choice: face a certain death or choose to live by integrating into it a demonic power. The child obviously chooses to live and an entity parasite then clings to him. Later, the child will wake up in clean clothes, in a cozy bed, coated with healing ointments, but in a state of shock and extreme weakness. This is when a person will come to tell him in a soft and reassuring voice that he was dead but that the demon Ta brought back to life'', that he must therefore in be accountable just as to the people who saved him by relaunching the heartbeat. The child is also told that if he or she asks the entity demonic to leave, he will be brought back into this state close to death in which he was when she entered.

This type of near-death programming is used to terrify, split, disassemble and finally fully control a very young child at the mental and spiritual physical level That

obliges it to accept a totally satanic / Luciferian spirituality in the worst possible traumatic and coercive circumstances. The ritual will mark deeply the child's beliefs and this traumatic experience above all, it will change its most fundamental reality. The purpose of this programming is to remove free will and will in young people subjects to make them slaves of higher forces not incarnated.

Another mind control technique based on N.D.E., or imminent death, has been described by Svali as being practiced in a government setting, of the MK-Ultra type. The subject is attached by the waist and neck, it is wrapped in an insulation box sensory (removing all sensations from its limbs). In this state of sensory deprivation, he is fed intravenously and is bombarded on brain by extremely violent sound noises. The total darkness of the room will be interspersed with dazzling white lights and the subject goes fast lose the notion of day and night. When the victim approaches the breaking point and is about to break, he or she receives electroshocks and drugs.

The level of pain and terror is at its peak and she is told that she is dying, which is the case... if necessary, it can be put on an artificial respirator. It is then that the subject experiences this state of imminent death and he finds himself floating out of his body, finally freed from physical and psychological torture. That's when a programmer comes to pose as a "savior" by telling him that he deserves to live and that he does not will not let die... In the end, the victim will owe him his life... Messages pre-recorded are also broadcast in loop (the psychic driving method of the MK-Ultra program). Messages that contain the programming and future destiny of the subject in the "Family". Hyper traumatized, the victim is then very receptive to these messages that will be deeply integrated into his subconscious. Finally, the victim is slowly brought back to a state of correct consciousness, always accompanied by the constant message repeating to her that she is "born again" for the "Family".

Again, one or more people will come to kindly comfort the victim and she will feel extremely grateful to be still alive, to have been freed from all these horrors. It will even be like a young child clinging to the people around her...

This type of MK programming based on imminent death and exit from the body will take root in the victim at the deepest level, for touching the very heart of the being: His life. Subsequently, the person who has undergone this kind of protocol will have the certainty (programming) that he will die if she tries to break mental control, and she will find herself again in a state close to death with the risk that his heart will stop definitely. It doesn't matter what lies and horrors are uttered and implanted in these states of near unconsciousness, they will be deeply integrated into the subconscious level. The child in such a situation has a desperate need for believe the adults who hold his life in their hands. The child, totally broken and programmed, will integrate all the data received as a deep truth[394].

In her autobiography, Cathy O'Brien writes: "Whether I wanted it or not, I surprised a conversation between Aquino (editor's note: founder from the Temple of Set) and a lab assistant' about death and the brain while I was lying, deeply hypnotized, on a metal table icy. Aquino said that I had often come close to death, which "increased my ability, being dying, to penetrate other dimensions (of the spirit)." I had listened to Aquino talk endlessly about this kind of concepts, as if he were trying to convince himself of the existence of a theory of interdimensional travels in time. "Whether it is a principle or a theory, it does not change anything to the results, he claimed - the concept of time is in itself abstract." Mesmerizing myself with past-present-future verbiage gave me an impulse that, combined with Alice's concepts in wonderland/the mirrored world of NASA, gave birth in me the illusion of timeless dimensions (...) After making me pass from the one-container table with a complex appearance (editor's note: insulation box sensory),Aquino then tipped my mind to another area of my brain, claiming to have taken me to another dimension by means of the ''gate of death''. He did it while I was suffering a deprivation of all my senses, combined with a reprogramming using hypnosis and harmonics. THE structure in question, which was reminiscent of a coffin, was transformed into my mind in a crematorium, where I was subjected to a feeling of warmth growing while "I burned slowly" as it was to me hypnotically suggested. Aquino, then, "made me cross the threshold of death" to enter another dimension ''empty time[395]''.''

4 - In pursuit of lost soul fragments

As we have just seen, the human soul can detach itself from the physical body during extreme trauma. The victim remains alive, which indicates that his soul has not completely detached itself from the body but rather that it has fragmented. Although life resumes as well as it can after this extreme experience, "soul fragments" can remain separated from the ''Me'', lost fragments, loaded with a traumatic memory and navigating in other dimensions... In his book 'Wife Rape', Raquel K. Bergen re-reports Sonya's words: ''I have lost a part of myself. I think a deep part in me is dead[396].

In the book "The Discovery of the Unconscious", Henri F. Ellenberger explains that in the old traditions, diseases and mental disorders can occur when the soul leaves the body (spontaneously or by accident) or if it is stolen by a spirit or by a sorcerer. The healer, or shaman, will then go in search of this lost arrre year to bring it back and restore it thus the body and the psyche of the patient. This is known as the "recovery of the soul''. This practice is widespread but it is not universal, it is present among the Negritos of the Malaysian peninsula, among the natives the Philippines and Australia among others. This belief is also present in other cultures such as Siberia, Northwest Africa, Indonesia or New Guinea. The nature of the soul, the causes of the loss of thesoul, the destination of the lost soul and the way to heal the sick can vary according to each local culture.

These traditional cultures teach us that during sleep or fainting, the soul can separate from the physical body. This is the theory according to which a "ghost-spirit" is present in the body during life normal, but that he is able to leave this physical body temporarily, in particular during sleep. The travelling spirit can then be lose,be attacked, captured and held prisoner by a bad guy spirit or a sorcerer. The mind can also abruptly leave the body when a state of awakening, especially during a shock causing great fear. It can also be forced to leave the body by ghosts, demons or even wizards. The treatment of the traditional healer therefore consists in go on astral hunt to find the fragment ofsoul, bring it back and thus restore the sick. In Siberia, this healing does not perhaps practiced only by a shaman who has been brought into contact with the world spirits during his initiation. It therefore has the capacity to play the role of mediator between this other dimension and that of the living. The Russian Ethnologist Ksenofontov reports: "When a human being loses his soul'', the shaman puts himself in a state of trance by a special technique during from which his soul goes on a journey to the spirit world. Shamans are able to go and hunt down the lost soul in the other world of the ^ê^e way that a hunter tracks down an animal in the physical world. They often have to make a deal with the spirits who have captured the soul, reconcile with them and make them presents. Sometimes they also have to fight the spirits, of preferably with the help of other spirits who are their allies. Even if they are victorious in their quest, they must always anticipate the revenge of the evil spirits. Once they have recovered the lost soul, they bring it back to reintegrate it into the body, which results in the cure of the patient[397].

The ethnologist Guy Moréchand describes the role of the shaman thus: "The exercise of shamanism translates materially into trance. When it enters into a trance, the shaman is supposed to undertake a journey. He leaves his body that will, on the spot, as the session progresses, mimic and tell the stories of efforts and episodes of adventures that take place in worlds different from the terrestrial world. Representations of these shamanic journeys culminate in a cosmogony with three worlds, with a sky and a hell, symmetrical with respect to the earth, located above and below ofher, hell being sometimes underground, sometimes underwater. The Three Worlds (or series of worlds) are crossed by a vertical axis which is their way access. One reaches the sky by rising with the help of a winged animal genius. THE horse is, in several populations, the mount that leads to the underworld. In these worlds, concretely unknown to ordinary humans and which are their inaccessible,the shaman goes in search of a soul on the run that has provoked by its absence the disease. The term of peregrinations or abduction of this soul by an evil spirit, is sometimes the kingdom of a deity, celestial or infernal, from whom the shaman is obliged to go and claim it and buy it[398]."

In his book entitled ''Animism and shamanism for all'', Igor Shamanovich describes the trances of "men-medicines" as follows:

''The ''medecine-man' is an ecstatic par excellence. However, at the level of religions primitives, ecstasy means the flight of the soul into the sky, or its wandering through the earth, or finally its descent to the underground regions among the dead. The 'medicine man' undertakes such ecstatic journeys to meet face to face the god of heaven and present him with an offering from the community, to seek the soul of a patient supposedly lost away from his body or delighted by the demons (...) The abandonment of the body by the soul, during ecstasy, is equivalent to a temporary death. The 'medicine man' is therefore the man capable of

"die" and "resurrect" a considerable number of times[399].

Ecstasy (ekstasis = exit from the body) corresponds here to a deep dissociative state controlled during which the shaman travel to other dimensions. As we saw in Chapter 2, when of his initiation, the shaman himself probably passed through traumatic rituals that created in him a resulting fractionation the opening of a breach to the spirit world. He is a healer who self-cured and who controls his dissociative states.

In other traditions, the shaman does not work in a trance state and he does not venture as far into the spirit world. his technique simply consists of making conjurations, a kind of exorcism, as in the Quechua Indians who as we have seen call this fracturing of the soul: the disease of fear (Susto).

In the Kahuna tradition we also find this notion of splitting the soul. For this people of Hawaii, the spirit of a man can be divide into different parts during an accident or illness. In its livre “The Secret Science Behind Miracles” (La secret science behind miracles), Max Freedom Long reports the four types of human "ghosts" or "spirits" that the Kahunas tradition has listed. These descriptions may be compared with the different alter personalities and traumatic amnesias that characterize a T.D.I.:

- 1/ The spirit in a normal state of a deceased man: This entity is composed of a subconscious mind and a conscious mind, all as in physical life. He thinks and remembers like any ordinary incarnate man (...)

- 2/ The subconscious mind of man separated from his consciousness by an accident or illness, before or after death. This spirit remembers very much

Well, but it is illogical, it has the reasoning ability of an animal. It responds to hypnotic suggestions. It is like a child and often causes

"poltergeists" to have fun (...)

- 3/ The conscious mind of man separated from his subconscious before or after death. This spirit does not remember anything, it is a spectrum almost totally helpless, wandering aimlessly (...) he will behave like a true "lost soul" as long as it is not rescued and reconnected to his subconscious spirit that will then provide him with the memories to restore his power (...)

- 4/ The spirit of super-consciousness, including what is called "spirits of nature" or "group souls" after terminology theosophical. The information about this category of spirits is waves, although we can conclude that they often take over the above, unihipili to two categories of lower spirits cited (subconscious) do things from and uhane (consciousness), sometimes helping them nature spectacular[400].

The "loss of the soul", which would rather be a loss of "fragments of soul", is therefore a widespread belief in traditional shamanic cultures. It is characterized by a loss of vital energy, personal power and a part of the identity. These soul fragments can get lost in another World, another dimension, especially when there has been abuse, suffering and trauma in childhood. Just as for some South American shamans who associate the loss of the soul with the fear,for some shamans of Southeast Asia the "fall of the fold" usually results from a material accident, for example a blow, a fall or fear, deep worry or overwork.

A body with a fragmented soul is like a tree without roots, it is weakened. This ties in with what some clairvoyants report concerning the "unlocking" of the astral body that splits from the body physical during extreme traumas, thus leaving the victim in a kind of state ''disconnected''. It is no longer physically anchored in matter and this weakens it considerably.

Shamans systematically do anchoring work before embarking on a journey to another dimension, it is important and even necessary for them to keep their "feet on the ground" during an astral outing. In his book "The Way of the Shaman'' (The Shaman's Way), Michael Harner notes that in all the pre-industrial traditions, when a person was physically ill or that she had an abnormal behavior, it is that generally she had lost a part of herself that had uprooted. This problem could sometimes be aggravated by external entities because the trauma, the trigger of the loss of a part of the soul, risked allowing the intrusion of spirits demonics in the psychic space of the person and cause damage important.

In all these traditions, it is clearly recognized that the loss of the soul takes place due to psychic, physical or spiritual trauma.

As we have already seen, the shaman's mission is to find the pieces of soul lost to return them to the fractional person, but he will perform sometimes an exorcism to drive out the entities that can parasitize the patient.

Some anthropologists who have studied the healing techniques of shamans traditional have described ceremonies aimed at first restoring the soul fractional and then exorcise it from parasitic entities.

So here we have the diagram: Trauma - Splitting of the soul/personality - Possession.

A pattern that seems to be the common point of survivors of satanic ritual abuses who have developed a T.D.I.. Just like the degree of severity of trauma will influence the level of dissociation, it is also this degree of the severity of the trauma that will influence the possibility of possession by of entities. The splitting of the personality is related to this "loss of the soul".

The phenomenon that psychology calls dissociation therefore has both a neurochemical aspect and a metaphysical aspect, however psychiatry is unable to explain to us where the different pieces of personality with their dissociative amnesia... and let alone explain to us where the fragments are going of souls that shamans seek in their astral vires for curing the sick...

Some psychotraumatologists explain schematically that a forgotten traumatic memory is lost and kept in a "black box" stuck in the hippocampus in the depths of the brain... But do we already know how to define what exactly a memory is? Memory is not a thing but a process. It is neither solid nor static, nor is it literally "stored" in a tangible form. It is not found somewhere in a wardrobe and she has no manifest physical form in the meaning in which it cannot be touched, seen or heard[401].

Our memories are not made up of neurons but rather of a "subatomic" energy exceeding our physical dimension, the neurons being only a biological interface for the expression of information. TO from there, several questions can be asked:

- Is an alter child personality in a dissociated adult a fragment of the soul (more than of "personality") that has remained stuck in the past, in an alternative dimension, keeping the age and memory that it had at the time she separated from the physical body during the trauma? Are these alter traumatized children explained by this theory of fragments of souls lost in another dimension outside our space-time?

- Is the T.D.I. linked to another space-time in which "alter personalities" can be contacted, processed, delivered and reintegrated in the present moment with all the memories that accompany them?

In his book "The Lost Secret of Death", Peter Novak gives us the beginnings of an answer: "When shamans travel into these other realities to find the lost soul fragments other people, they report that these fragments are not at all sleeping. On the contrary, they seem to be autonomous, they are entities conscious of themselves, engaged in their parallel reality. However, as long as they are separated from the person's consciousness, these fragments do not seem to progress at all. They remain frozen in the the same state of emotional and intellectual development they had when they have split from the person's mind. The soul fragment who split when the child was 4 years old will continue to include and a

think as if he were 4 years old. He will believe himself to be 4 years old, even if the rest of the person grew up to even be an old man. These alienated fragments do not seem to grow and mature until healing happens, and that the missing part is not restored. These fragments will usually have their own personal qualities, their abilities, their feelings, as well as that a consciousness of themselves leading their own lives in this world of fantasy. The part of the soul that was lost in early childhood goes stay to play in the schoolyard, or maybe to tremble under the staircase, hiding to avoid a punishment that has already taken place 40 years earlier.

It is the shaman's job to try to make this fragment of soul understand the reality of his difficult situation in order to convince him to come back and join the rest of the mind of the person living in "the present moment".' Very often, the fragment of soul will have no idea what the shaman is talking about, thinking to be a real autonomous person (...) some days or a few weeks after the reintegration of the lost soul fragment, the memories associated with this fragment will begin to emerge to the consciousness of the person. When the soul fragment returns, the memories related to it come back with him. These memories are lost and forgotten when the soul is splits, the person then no longer has access to this fragment of memory. Once back, these memories usually require a lot of attention because they contain emotions and traumatic sensations that need to be integrated. This is usually what caused the splitting of the mind[402]."

Here we find exactly the same symptoms and the same characteristics as the functioning of the T.D.I., with amnesic walls traumatic ones that disappear when alter personalities emerge and merge, while the dissociated memories related to it small aware and integrated. The alter personalities of a T.D.I.

Therapist Alison Miller wrote: "Patients (T.D.I.) told me that it was impossible to keep the alters separated from each other once the traumatic memories that had them fractional had been fully processed[403]. This means that the integration and fusion of alter personalities takes place automatically when the dissociative amnesia disappears and memories become conscious.

in 2006, ritual abuse and mind control survivor Lynn Schirmer are small a described

during a conference the process of fusion with its alter personalities "frozen" in another space time: "They integrate into the present, in fact they... I do not know how to explain everything this: they go through a kind of process. There is a certain integration,but when I reclaim memory, usually the process consists in taking this alter out of its "frozen" state, dissociated. I have to drive the alter who holds this memory in the present, I familiarize him with the present moment and I transfer this isolated memory into a chronology consistent. Then, my alters only have to adapt to this new world, i.e. the present. They must therefore evolve and get used to it[404].

When Lynn Schirmer recovers a memory, she must therefore lead the alter that is associated with it in the present moment when it must evolve to adapt... here she speaks very clearly of blocked soul fragments,

"frozen" as she says, in what seems to be another space-time.

An obscure past in which the alters continue to live "in a loop" with this traumatic memory.

survivor Jen Callow describes the reluctance that soul fragments can have to merge with their main personality: "I have children (alter) parts who are eager to "grow" by merging with another party. However, there are to merge with their main personality: "I have children (alter) parts who are eager to "grow" by merging with another party. However, there are has many parties that remain frightened by integration. Some see then the inner world will shrink, with the loss of their

their friends... when these different parts merge, it may result in a great sense of loss for others. This reduction in the number of alter can also be interpreted as real people who "disappear" and some parts may be afraid of disappearing also (...) For many of my alter, integration is something terrifying, because it means giving up to their own identity and become someone new and unknown[405]."

The existence of these fragments of soul lost in another space time has been validated by the astral travel experiences of Robert Monroe, the founder of the Monroe Institute created in 1974 in Virginia in the United States. It was a wealthy businessman who owned many media outlets and had himself lived many experiences of out-of-body outs. Monroe became a global specialists in astral travel. The original purpose of this institute was to do research on remote viewing, it is today one of the largest research centers on out-of-body exit, relaxation, meditation and Hemi-sync techniques (synchronization of the cerebral hemispheres by sound frequencies). According to some authors, the Monroe Institute is also involved (probably by the recovery of this institute by the CIA) in trauma-based mind control, hemi-sync techniques can be used to work on the cerebral hemispheres in Delta and Theta type MK programs (we will return to this in the chapter next).

According to researcher Tom Porter, Robert Monroe is the son of James Monroe who worked for years for the CIA but who also was the director of a front company called Human Ecology Society". As noted in Chapter 3, this front company was used to the CIA for the financing of the MK-Ultra program. James Monroe would have personally supervised people like Dr. Ewen Cameron. It is therefore it is possible that Robert Monroe, the world champion of astral travel, was himself subjected to mk-ultra mind control programs. According to Robert Monroe himself stimulated his abilities for astral travel for which he seemed to have a certain predisposition, perhaps because of the traumas experienced in his childhood? A common point for people experiencing spontaneous astral outflows are traumas.

Monroe has written extensively about his experiences of out-of-body out-of-body trips that began in 1958. In 1994, he published the book "Ultimate Journey" in which he describes deep journeys out of his body during which he sometimes met souls of deceased people. Monroe describes these entities as confused,disoriented, seemingly trapped in a space of time, an emotion and a particular memory. He describes them as entities semi-conscious unable to realize that they are dead. As noted more high, the Kahuna tradition describes this type of entities as being the spirit conscious separated from his subconscious mind which then finds itself as a soul i exilLt; aiiiiicoiquc cxycai L uicoum vat; i cuumicu ULI a OCX pcxi Lit;

missing for access restorer memories. Monroe also tells how these entities,these lost souls, could sometimes even be his own. It was not so not only souls of deceased people, they were also fragments souls of living people, including his own... He reports in his book that he sometimes encountered what appeared to be another part of his own mind, lost fragments that seemed to be prisoners of the past and incapable to evolve. When he met and delivered his fragments of souls lost,they were reincorporated into his mind at a particular level that he name the "Me-Here"! 405!.

Just as Lynn Schirmer describes it for his alters, he brought back his fragments of soul lost in the present moment, in our space time. those Monroe's experiences in other dimensions could therefore validate the Shamanic tradition which consists in "going on the hunt for lost souls" during an astral journey to recover the fragments of the broken soul of a person to heal. However, it would rather be the tradition ancestral shamanic that should validate the testimony of Monroe because what he had just discovered was precisely what shamans had been practicing since

in his book "The Ultimate Journey", Monroe tells us about his students who go hunting for fragments of souls

"What surprises many candidates is that when they engage in this mission,they discover that at the same time they recover lost parts ofthemselves... Others may appear as fragments of personality of everyday life, who had fled or been torn from the personality basic. For example, children who had fled trauma and pain of the physical and psychological violence they were experiencing in their families and which were now seeking to be reunited with the other fragments (...) Clusters of light, fires of human energy forming an endless multidimensional carpet... how could I don't see them before that? Now I understand the input streams and exit... my flow is there and I have to stay on track... the flow of out of those who come to help and find the lost parts of their cluster... the input stream that brings them back... thousands and thousands... of insertions of groups of personality units into human individuals of the Earth's life system! [407]]."

Yes

Robert Monroe went through an MK-Ultra type program in his childhood, did he himself havea T.D.I. and particular psychic faculties caused by a violent early spiritual "unlocking"? Ron's Book

Russell "Journey of Robert Monroe" reports a quote from Lesley Frans showing that he obviously had a complex and multiple personality: "Among the things we often talked about about Bob (Robert) were the different aspects of his personality that were expressed at times. Uncle Bob or Dad, Bob Business man, Bob the Director, Bob the Old Guy, Cosmic Bob, Bob Parano, etc. It was the main Bob I knew, but it was far from being the only ones. Once you could finally figure out which Bob was present in front of you to try to communicate with him: hop! It changed in no time. There was a Bob Jongleur who talked a lot of frustration. Bob Business-man had left his ethic in the closet, he was hard and without emotions (...) Some other Bob refuted the harm he had done, and Bob Parano tried to find and follow a certain ethic! [408]]."

In the case of satanic ritual abuse and mind control, do the sorcerers-executioners capture the soul fragments of the victims? some Can soul fragments be captives of external entities, which could thus influencing and manipulating thoughts, behavior and creating emotional and physical problems to the victim? This is what seems to be affirm certain shamanic traditions for whom the soul lost may be held prisoner by evil spirits or by wizards. This is also what some survivors of ritual abuse say.

Is this just a superstitious belief or is it really about operative occult techniques?

In Satanism, sexual violence is used to access the mind of the victim, child prostitution and the production of childpornography has only a financial purpose. Sexual abuse is used to hurt and dominate the mind of the victim, "tear him away thesoul". Victims describe how Satanists can capture a part of their mind to keep it with them permanently.

Conversely, executioners can also introduce part of their soul, a fragment of their mind, inside the victim when he is in states of modified consciousness (spiritual openness). For this they

substances to implant inside the victim during a rape for example. The soul fragments of the sorcerers-executioners will then remain attached to the victim to continuously strengthen the commands for control and obedience. All this is pure witchcraft, which also combines orgasm and pain to soothe fertility deities.

the theory of fragments of mind created by trauma and which can be attached to a person is something known in the field of the paranormal and the possession. As we have seen, satanists who practice abuse rituals are usually themselves dissociated and fractionated, so it is it is conceivable that they may deliberately link some of their fragments to the victims. This type of manipulation combined with the T.D.I. creates slavery in both spiritual, psychological and physical. The American Pastor

Tom Hawkins wrote: "Most survivors of ritual abuse have been forced to participate in rituals including vows, oaths, sacrifices or covenants made with the spiritual realm of evil. These "transactions" legal"give evil spirits, or demons, the right to bind certain alter specific who have been involved in these practices and to exercise on them influence and control to varying degrees. They will be able to play a role, by example by strengthening programming, blocking memories, or

Re-traumatizing alters who failed in their functions, who disclosed secrets or asked for help from outside. These demonized alters have generally been enslaved to Satan and his plan (...) These connections can also be made with entities of a higher echelon than the daemons (...) Dissociated personalities can be tortured and pushed into deep trance states that will connect them to what we

is the reigning prince (Eph. 2:2). There, the alter can be "captive" by evil entities and used for the global plan of Satan, transmitted directly from the spiritual realm. In the system internal of these people, these alter usually seem out of the body physical and are considered absent or even dead by the other alteri[409]!."

This other dimension where the fragments of soul evolve is noticeable by the distortions of time and reality which are very frequent and sometimes intense in patients with T.D.I. It can even happen complete losses of the notion of time. The rises of traumatic memories in which the person truly relives the scene with the images, the sounds,smells, as well as physical pain and psychological terror do not aren't they a journey back in time? It is an access to another space time in which a precise scene is beautiful and well recorded "somewhere" in every detail, with all the sensory and emotional system related to this memory capsule. THE psycnotraumatoiogues will explain this pnenomene by the neurological process and chemical dissociative memories not treated by the hippocampus, but they do not take into account this notion of "soul fragments" misplaced"... How do they explain shamanic journeys in another dimension to seek and bring back these fragments of soul... with their pieces of dissociated memories?

In his book "Being and Time", Martin Heidegger refers to the past, present and future like the ecstasy of temporality, the word ecstasy meaning "to be outside". In his analysis of temporality Heidegger writes that the past, present and future can be found transcended and indissolubly unified. He calls this the unit ecstatic temporality. "Dissociative enlightenment" is sometimes described as an exit from our space-time or present, past and future are found on the same timeline. The experience of trauma becomes somehow frozen and prisoner of an eternal present.

Pierre Janet had noticed that when a traumatic memory was reactivated, the person generally lost the notion of time and time present,his "present" was then the traumatic experience that occurred again. In an article entitled "Functional disorders of memory", it is noted that the immersion in automatic memory is sometimes so intense that the temporal orientation is lost and the trauma is relived as if it were was happening in the present moment, rather than as a mere memory! [410]]."

in the article "Time Distortions in Dissociative Identity Disorder", Dr. Onno van der Hart and the psychotherapist

Kathy Steele report the testimony of an alter personality undergoing disorders of the notion of time during flashbacks of traumatic memories:

"This continues to be the storm in my head. There is a lot of noise with all kinds of flashes all the time, sometimes movies. I'm scared

I can't look at them and they are hard to stop (...) It's scary because it happens so suddenly, but also because it makes me totally confused. A confusion with respect to time mainly, it is difficult to know if these things are part of the present moment or the past. It also becomes more and more difficult to keep a grip on the present time.

It seems to me that I can no longer trust the clock. It's suddenly an hour later, then five minutes appear to have lasted more than three days! [411]]."

This testimony shows us that this disorder is a phenomenon that goes beyond our "matrix" and that we must therefore take into account its appearance multidimensional if we want to start studying it seriously... THE clinicians, with their "classical" scientific training, are not generally not intellectually equipped to deal with this face of the problem.

Children's alter personalities are often unable to give themselves a sense of time, to mark hours or days. They are in an endless space, without limits, enclosed in a timeless or "frozen in the eternal present" of their traumatic experience.

of time seems to be something specific to our existence in this physical world in three dimensions, but this notion of time seems to disappear for these alter, which would prove that they evolve (or stagnate should we say) in another dimension. In a way, we can say that the traumas can create "holes" or "breaches" in our space-time. Hence the connections with certain entities and the powers paranormal psychics that can develop in some victims such as we will see later.

This notion of soul fragments blocked or even captive in another dimension is an essential point for understanding the nature of the T.D.I. and the operation of MK-Monarch programming. Type mind control Monarch deliberately created these soul fragments in order to control and control them exploit. The "inner world" of the Monarch slave would be nothing else that this dimension where live these fragments of soul, prisoners of structures set up by the programmer and linked to demonic entities that have a function of guardians. Programmers therefore interact with this space-time to imprison and dominate these dissociated fragments. Therapist Patricia Baird Clarke describes this dimension as follows: "Through rituals, Satanists use demons to separate the body spiritual of the physical body. When the soul and the spirit were separated and the spiritual body separated from the physical body, then the person enters in a way fully conscious in a completely different dimension. This is the dimension that I calls the "inner world". This world is also vast and also real for the individual than is the physical world for us. We think of spirits as if they had a "vaporous" state, but the people who went into this dimension have told me that the demons did have a weight and a substance! [412]]."

Here's how therapist Alison Miller describes this inner world, this space-time where alters live: "The inner worlds of patients are not all the same. Some, like the one described Trish Fotheringham, have magical castles and forests; others have prisons, fortresses, torture rooms and various facilities military (editor's note: structures voluntarily introduced into the world interior by programmers). Some describe places that appear to be represent another world or other planets. Persons whose T.D.I. has was created spontaneously (editor's note: without a deliberate will of others to the split to program them), usually have interior houses in which live the alter. These are often internal representations of the house where they lived at the time of the abuse! [413]!."

Callow has undergone ritual abuse and mental programming protocols, here is how she describes this inner world where her fragments are located

"When we (the alters) finally start therapy with a person who has understood what dissociation is, many of us are isolated and live in terror. We are locked into our world interior: in boxes, in cold basements, or in others places related to our memories. We are locked into our programs, often hungry or in pain. Our inner system can inflict torture and abuses similar to what our aggressors have subjected us to! [414]]."

This notion of an inner world where the alters stagnate, a world without limits and totally abstract, arranged with all kinds of things, might seem implausible, absurd and psychotic if we did not take not in account this phenomenon of alternative dimension to ours. We detail the techniques of structuring this inner world in the Next chapter on Monarch programming.

Traditional shamanic beliefs about soul splitting are probably not that far removed from our own conception psychiatric of a lost soul. Even if we don't know the cultural elements and ancestral roots of these things, we have some commonalities with these ancestral concepts: is it not said that a patient is "alienated", "alien" to himself, that his personality has become deteriorated or even destroyed? The therapist who works with a so-called "schizophrenic" patient does not he seek to establish contact with the remaining part of the personality that still has "its feet on the ground"? Does he not seek to rebuild the fractional personality just like the modern successor of those shamans who hunt down souls lost in the spirit world and fight the demons that keep them prisoner, this in order to bring them back in the world of the living! [415]i ?

5 - Trauma and paranormal psychic faculties

"Here are some factors I noted regarding 'haunted people'. They are usually bipolar, they have usually suffered from sexual abuse or trauma in their past

(often during childhood). The majority of cases involve extreme dysfunctions at the family level. These are people who have experienced the paranormal since very early childhood." "Haunted People, Haunted Minds" - Bobbie Atristain, 2006

In 1784, the Marquis de Puységur (Armand Marie Jacques de Chastenet), who worked on animal magnetism and the laying on of hands, reported a special case with one of his employees, a peasant named Victor Breed that showed an obvious change in personality with a separation of consciousness accompanied by amnesia. During a hand-laying session to relieve Victor of a pulmonary congestion, the Marquis was surprised to to see that the young man had quietly fallen asleep... He actually discovered that it was not a normal sleep but a particular state of consciousness in which he was in a trance. Once in this state, Victor xace showed special abilities: he became extremely sensitive to the suggestion and his personality totally changed. While it was usually rather slow-minded, this other personality showed a remarkable intelligence with phenomenal mental agility. In addition, in these modified states of consciousness he was able to read in the thoughts of the marquis and to make accurate medical diagnoses both for him and for other people. It could also predict the progress of a disease and prescribe treatment, often with great success. Victor also showed strange memory disorders. Indeed, when he came out of this state of unusual consciousness, he had absolutely no memory of what he had been past, while in the state of trance he had a full awareness of his two personalities. The Marquis of Puységur decided to name this discovery the state of "magnetic sleep", which it linked to the Artificial sleepwalking states that he also called "magnetic sleepwalking! [415]l ".

34 years later, the Marquis met Victor Race again and plunged him into a state of trance. What was not his surprise to see that his former employee remembered in every detail all his previous states of magnetic sleep. In its livre “The Discovery of Unconscious” Ellenberger tells us that in August 1785, the Marquis de Puységur was ordained in the command of the Artillery Regiment of Strasbourg. It was then that the lodge Local Masonic asked him to teach the principles of animal magnetism to its members, always very interested in acquiring paranormal powers can lead them to the "light" and the raise above the layman. History does not tell us if Victor Race had suffered trauma during her early childhood, but she shows us that a multiple personality can develop psychic powers

Can trauma be the cause of certain paranormal phenomena? Can they pave the way for certain faculties? psychic? Do they create a breach, the opening of a door to others dimensions? As we have seen above, it would seem so. THE emotions open doors to other worlds and those emanating from Traumas are particularly powerful. However, the powers psychics do not necessarily come from a childhood trauma. They can come from certain transgenerational "gifts" more or less sharpened. They can develop through certain energy practices and exercises. But they may also be the result of pacts with entities. THE Satanists and Luciferians seek these paranormal powers for increase their power, but they only get a subservientness to the demons in exchange for these "powers"... The Holy Ghost can also transmit graces of this type, such as clairvoyance for example.

Joseph Mahoney, a Catholic priest from Detroit (USA) who works with patients suffering from T.D.I,, listed a series of Strange phenomena that are observed in these fractional people![417]). Generally, a paranormal faculty will be specific to an alter personality and it will be absent in others. Here is what the priest writes about these paranormal phenomena related to dissociative identity disorder (note: that some phenomena reported in this list, are often also reported in cases of demonic possession):

- A great sensitivity to hypnosis and a rare ability to cause hypnotic states and trance in others.
- Memories of the body that manifest themselves physically. These are traumas from the past that arise on the body in the same way as the classic phenomenon of stigmata. They can appear and disappear without no outside intervention. It can be rashes, marks, cuts, burns, blood loss, blues,

swelling or other important physiological changes.

- Telepathy, clairvoyance and unexplained knowledge, photographic memory, hypersensitivity leading to reading the body language of others extremely developed, prowess unusual mental.

- A physical strength exceeding what is humanly possible.
- Accelerated cures, bleeding control and the ability to self-regulate physiological states in a usually way impossible to do.

- An ability to provoke in the observer a feeling of cold, unhappiness or threat.
- Extreme acts of self-harm, hatred of God and religious objects.
- An ability to spend long periods without food or sleep.
- An ability to anesthetize a specific alter personality or block a nerve transmission of pain.

her book "The Secrets of Psychic Success", the medium Angela Donovan writes that according to her own experience, there are three ways by which can be develop psychic faculties, one of which is directly related to traumatic experiences: "There are those who have experienced severe emotional trauma. I have met many psychics who are who have arrived in this area following the death of a relative, or who have suffered from a physical shock, like a blow to the head. This can literally open the "doors" and create a receptive state. This is something that can be positive if the person is trying to understand what is happening to them, but if it is not the case,it can be very disconcerting! 418]."

The development of paranormal psychic powers has sometimes been reported as a result of accidents causing physical trauma or experiences at the frontiers of death. This is the case of the famous medium Italian Eusapia Paladino who suffered a head injury (bone parietal) during an accident during his early childhood. This is also the case the famous Dutch medium Peter Hurkos who acquired powers three days in falling from a ladder... Hurkos was considered to be one of the most eminent clairvoyants of the world, he has worked to solve many cases of disappearances or unsolved murders. Hurkos said: "I see images in my mind like on a television screen. When I touch something, I can then say what I see in connection with this thing."

In the book "The Psychic World of Peter Hurkos", Norma Lee Browning reports what Hurkos told him about his trauma:

"I remember when I fell and didn't want to die, then it was complete black. When I woke up I no longer had my own mind. It was from there that I got my gift. I was in someone else's mind and I was scared because I didn't didn't know what was going on. My father and mother said I was not more at all the same Peter as before. They said I was dead and I was returned with two spirits. You can ask my father, I swear. It you will say that his real son Peter died and that I came back with two spirits different. There are two spirits here my dear, two spirits, you understand? (...) You know there are people with two personalities? Well, I have two minds. My father was right when he said I was no longer the same Peter. He died and returned in hearing voices and seeing images (...) Was he really a psychic or a psychotic? Was it possible that he was schizophrenic or real multiple personality? Was he "born again" as clairvoyant because of head trauma, just as Bridey Murphy was born in new under hypnosis? Did he really have a sixth sense, or was he a mentally ill? I was intrigued by these questions. If the history of the accident de Peter could be verified, a light would be shed on what is called the "psychic powers". I have always had the idea that these paranormal psychic phenomena were something natural, rather than supernatural.

A physical phenomenon rather than metaphysical, physiological rather than psychological. I am convinced that one day it will be proved that all that the so-called "psychic experiences" has a physical explanation with the different electrochemical components of the most wonderful machine computer science that it is: the human brain! [419]]."

Altered states of consciousness, or dissociative states, are the key to paranormal psychic faculties. As we have seen, extreme trauma causes dissociation, which is a profound altered state of consciousness. THE dissociation creates a certain openness towards an alternative world, towards other dimensions, towards the immaterial and the invisible... Surely that's the reason for which more or less extraordinary phenomena may occur with some individuals. People who have developed a T.D.I. (therefore having suffered trauma and strong dissociation) showed Capabilities outsized physical, exceeding the usual human potential, but they can also show some paranormal psychic powers. Trauma extreme and repetitive seem to modify or create particular synapses (neuralconnections, we'll come back to this in the next chapter) but also activate some parts of the brain usually dormant. This thus causes a kind of "bug in the matrix", knowing that our entire "reality" is based solely on our perceptions, and that these perceptions (our five senses) depend solely on these connections neuronal and the electrical flows that circulate there. If we add to this the fact that we only use on average 10% of our brain, so we can say that our perception of "reality" is in fact very limited and whereas it is therefore possible that it could be greatly modified by a few neural connections that are created or that change during trauma. As we will see it in the next chapter, it is the experience of the child who shapes the synapses and the functioning of his brain. Trauma extremes shape the brain while splitting energy bodies, creating an opening towards other dimensions and the development of some psychic faculties.

Dr. John Smythies explains this phenomenon of "Matrix" on which our brain is connected: "The evidence neurological are numerous enough to show that our sensory data, including somatic, may not be identical to external objects but only at specific brain states. If we took away a child's brain to connect it to a giant computer that would send appropriate stimuli to the sensory nerves, the individual in question would lead a kind of average life perfect; in fact, it would live all life that we would program. The sensory fields of consciousness are constructions of the and not the direct apprehension of external material objects. In others

the

psychic and extrasensory faculties that can cause dissociation and the connection with other dimensions is a fully integrated reality and used in most pre-industrial traditions, but also by the "nameless religion" dominates, for whom the capacity for dissociation is a very important genetic criterion. Anthropologist Ruth Inge- Heinz, who has studied possessions in many cultures writes: "The concept that defines a "healthy mind" differs considerably from a culture at the other (...) It can be very destructive to label an extraordinary state of "mental illness" consciousness. A state of mental dissociation does not necessarily mean that it is an individual who must be put on a straitjacket. dissociative states that occur in Southeast Asia for example are all at fact controlled and integrated into traditional culture! [421]]."

as we saw in chapter 2, the shaman transforms a sudden state into a state dominated, a passive dissociation into an active dissociation: it is a healer who has self-healed. In some cultures, people who behave with mental illness characteristics are traditionally associated with the divine, especially if they receive visions or messages specific. Possession by an external entity is often considered as an aid to become a healer or soothsayer. The DSM-IV Casebook (complement to the DSM providing practical cases and testimonies) reports the case of a woman recognized by her community as being able to communicate with ancestors and predict the future: "Sometimes God enters me, it is very hot when he gives me visions." (...) "This woman has symptoms that would be considered psychotic if found by a person from a society that does not share its culture and beliefs (Guinea). It believes that it has special powers, whereas for some it adjusts hallucinations. In its local culture, these Phenomena are very frequent. His community gives him the role of healer and accept her abnormal experiences and behaviors such as something quite normal for someone who holds this role. Indeed, she is a very successful healer. His community attributes to him therefore the role of healer and her behavior is not considered something to treat and cure."

In the book "The Magic Challenge: Satanism and Witchcraft", Jean Baptiste Martin writes:

"Ernesto De Martino begins by noting that in cultures that are usually the object of ethnological studies, it has very often been observed that some particular psychic states were very common, as if the natives seemed to be naturally predisposed to it. These states settle down as a result of traumas or emotions that precipitate the subject into a special condition, characterized by the loss of the unity of the Self[422]..."

In other words, the ethnologist De Martino describes here a dissociation that can cause a split (loss of the unity of the 'Me') and a separation of the physical body and the creating spiritual body an opening to another dimension and access to possession and paranormal powers. This is a common process in cultures pre-industrial,but also practiced by satanic cults / lucifériens.

In October 2014, TF1's Sept à huit broadcast a report devoted to the "Mah Song" of Thailand, also called the "possessed horses".

These men, revered as gods, enter deep states of trance dissociative claiming to be possessed by gods. In these altered states of conscience,the Mah Song accomplish things quite exu auruiiian es.

The report notably followed Ae, a man of 36 years, who when in a trance, speaks with the voice of a little boy in a Chinese dialect that yet he never learned. Again, it is possible whether it is a T.D.I. but the report does not talk about trauma previous or amnesia following the states of trance of Ae.

According to Ae, the deity who takes possession of him is a "god-child", which is why he has this voice particular when possessed. The journalist tells us that there would exist even "baby gods" taking possession of the Mah Song...

Once in a trance, these men pierce their cheeks, ears and body skin with long metal rods. They do not show no signs of pain and no drops of blood flow. Great surgeons French who have observed the phenomenon do not explain it because the cheeks are normally a highly vascularized area and sectioning them can even cause facial paralysis. During the ceremonies, the Mah Song, in a trance, will also prove their powers by foolish challenges such as climbing on a scale of 18 meters whose bars are finely sharpened blades, without in any way opening the soles of the feet, or even walking on glowing embers without burning. Impossible performance to do without serious physical consequences, dissociative trance (and help demons) is therefore greatly recommended in this kind of practices...

Mircéa Eliade writes that "among the Manchus, the ceremony of public initiation once included the passage of the candidate (shaman) on burning coals: if the apprentice actually had the "spirits" that he claimed to have, he could walk with impunity on the fire[423]."

In 1992, in an article entitled "Paranormal experiences in the general population (Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease), Dr. Colin Ross and Dr. Joshi stated that there is a link between paranormal experiments and dissociative. According to them, paranormal experiences are an aspect of the completely natural dissociation. As with the dissociation, these Psychic faculties can be triggered by physical trauma or psychological, usually during childhood. Several studies show that such paranormal experiences are more common in individuals with a traumatic past.

in his book "The Osiris Complex", Dr. Collin Ross is very clear about the link between trauma, dissociation and psychic faculties: "According to my data, analogically speaking, the genes for dissociation and paranormal are closely related to one another on the same chromosome (...) Any extra-genetic factor activating one will tend to activate the other because they are connected. Trauma severe and repetitive early childhood are one of these factors (...) Highly psychic people tend to be dissociative (...) Another way of looking at this would be to say that trauma opens a door to the paranormal. This door is usually closed in our cultures westerners rather hostile to these things. The dissociative fragmentation of suddenly been banished at the end of the 19th century in conjunction with the Freud's renunciation of his theory of seduction. Freud had decided that the incest revealed to him by his patient with a dissociative disorder had to be fantasies, which led to a problem for him: if the trauma had never existed, why did his patient have these symptoms and pseudo-memories? To solve this problem, he abandoned hypnosis as

to ignore the paranormal, broke with Jung and moved completely away from the theories putting severe trauma and its psychological consequences at the heart psychopathology. To delete an item that he did not understand, he had

In a study on the link between dissociation and paranormal phenomena, Douglas G. Richards notes that: "Psychic experiences closely related to dissociation reveal clairvoyance, precognitions, apparitions, psychokinesis and telepathy (...) Experiences psy are an obvious component of dissociation." Richards is clear that these psychic experiences can also be a natural function in a healthy development process without traumatic past![425!.] In a 2003 article entitled "Multiple Personality Disorder - Demons and Angels or Archetypal aspects of the inner self", Dr. Haraldur Erlendsson writes:

"A particular aspect of T.D.I. is the frequency of headaches (79%) and perceptions extrasensory; such as telepathy, telekinesis, clairvoyance, the vision of "ghosts", the exit out of the body... These are the main non-clinical characteristics of T.D.I."

In the book "The unknown powers of man: the extrasensory", Dr. Gustave Geley writes that the main problems that poses the update of the second personalities are two in number, also ardued:

1° The problem of psychological difference with the normal personality: difference not only of direction, of will; but of general character, trends, faculties, knowledge; differences so radical sometimes, that they imply, between the normal self and the personality second, complete opposition and hostility.

2° The problem of supranormal abilities, which are frequently related to the manifestations of the second personality.

However, while the work on multiple personalities today is innumerable and has highlighted the frequency, importance and polymorphic character of these demonstrations, they did nothing for the solution of the second problem, which remains intact (...) They showed above all i total impotence of the explanations ae ia psycno-pnysioiogie classical vis-à-vis supra-normal faculties! [425!.]

Dr. James Randall Noblitt reports in his book "Cuit and Ritual Abuse" the case of one of his patients who is the victim of ritual abuse. She had developed a T.D.I. with an alter personality who saw the "auras" (the energetic halo that surrounds a person). "For some reason, these patients sometimes report having faculties psychics,such as the belief that they have the ability to see the auras. These people sometimes think that they have received a gift that allows them to see the light around the bodies of others; and that from the color and other aspects of this light, they can interpret it and make a kind of diagnosis about the person (...) As I learned more about this alter personality, she explained to me that she had the ability to see auras due to rituals in which she was forced to participate. His father warned him that these experiments had to remain strictly secret! [427!.]"

Psychiatrist Milton H. Erickson saw the multiple personality as something not necessarily pathological but rather as a phenomenal resource of potentialities to be exploited. It used hypnosis to access alter personalities and to transform a involuntary behavior in voluntary actions. This is a question of reversing a force a priori negative, uncontrollable and sometimes destructive, in a controllable strength to derive a positive and constructive advantage.

Control

MK-Monarch type mentality seeks to develop and exploit all potential that conceals an individual with a T.D.I....

In 2014, a study was conducted in Turkey to determine the possible relationship between experiences of possession, paranormal, traumatic stress and dissociation. The study was conducted on a representative sample of 628 women who were tested at clinical interviews structured around dissociative disorders, post-traumatic stress disorder, borderline personality disorder and childhood abuse and neglect.

Among women with dissociative disorder, paranormal phenomena and possessions were more common than among those with no dissociative disorders. Women who had a history of trauma in childhood, or adulthood, with stress post-traumatic, reported possession phenomena more frequently than those without trauma. Paranormal phenomena were also associated with childhood trauma. The group of women with dissociative disorders trauma-related had the highest score for phenomena possession or contact with demonic entities, communications extrasensory, possession by a human entity and precognitions. This study shows that paranormal and possession phenomena are at relate to the issue of trauma and dissociation. However, doctors who conducted this study consider that it is still preliminary small number of sample! [428]).

In her doctoral thesis, psychologist Margo Chandley found that "many "channels" (editor's note:

mediums) seem to have experienced neglect or abuse."

Dans une étude intitulée “A Study of the corrélations between subjective psychic expérience and dissociative experiments"(study on the correlations between experiments Subjective psychics and dissociative experiences - Journal "Dissociation", 1991) Douglas Richards concluded that dissociation is very often related to the phenomena of clairvoyance, premonitions, psychokinesis and telepathy. He reports that the outputs out of the body, medium trances (channeling) and contact with "guide spirits" imply necessarily a dissociative process....

In his autobiography, "Adventures in the Supernormal", the famous medium Eileen Garrett describes

at the age of four, she [[429]ia felt the presence of what is usually called "an imaginary friend", she began to see the auras and to have visions and premonitions. In adulthood, Garrett sought to understand how she had acquired her medium faculties, she writes: "I think the trance state is part of the explanation of how I have developed my psychic faculties. I began to understand how the pain and suffering in my first days had caused me to withdraw from the material world. I was withdrawing from this world to such an extent that even though I saw my aunt's lips get agitated when she raped me, not a word of this that she could say did not penetrate my ears. I remember that when the pain and fear became unbearable, I could go inside of myself and then I became numb, I no longer felt the pain.

I had unconsciously developed an escape technique in order to avoid the suffering. I can now understand how this process opened up the way for the development of my mediumistic trance statesl[430!.] "

Kenneth Ring, l’auteur de “The Oméga Project” observed that adults who testified of experiences at the borders of death and contact with a UFO phenomenon, also reported frequently abuse and trauma in early childhood. For Ring, these trials in childhood may have developed in these people a sensitivity "After all, a child who is exposed to physical violence, sexual violence or other severe trauma will be strongly pushed to disconnect from one's physical and social world by dissociating oneself. But in doing this, it is more likely to connect with other realities! [431]]."

In the book "Reframing Consciousness", artist Kristine Stiles discusses the relationship between dissociation, hypervigilance and worlds parallels: "I think the ability to dissociate can be related to the psychic faculties through hypervigilance, which is a symptom running in response to trauma. Hypervigilance results in a excessive attention to an external stimulus going beyond what requires the threat level. Hypervigilance plays a vital role in protect the victim from a risky environment (...) Hypervigilance allows also the development of a very great power of concentration. The states hypnotics and dissociatives have long been associated with effects unusual on the body. These are mental functions in which Cognitive resources are fully focused on a specific point, with few or no distractions and with increased control of somatic functions and neurophysiological. In the case of Joseph McMoneagle struggling with his newly acquired psychic faculties after his death experience imminent, he remembers that a psychologist suggested to him that this experience at the frontiers of death had made him more sensitive to other forms of details. He describes this new faculty as "spontaneous knowledge", a "new psychic functioning". Dissociative hypervigilance blocks literally noise, or outdoor pollution, that interferes usually with the focus point, thus allowing consciousness to access a remote vision or other psychic phenomena (...) My hypothesis is that hypervigilance could very well be a feature of primary importance in the connection between trauma and abilities multidimensional. This may also explain why both Oriental meditation forms and concentration techniques Western countries are taking an increasingly important place in processes such as remote visualization (...) In my opinion, traumatic dissociation and hypervigilance can lead to a process filtering "mental noise" and thus allowing the consciousness to function in a multidimensional mode! [432]). "

le livre “The Shattered Self : A Psychoanalytic Study of Trauma” (the Torn Self: A Psychoanalytic Study of Trauma), psychoanalysts Richard Ulman and Doris Brothers report the testimony of a 36-year-old woman, Jean, having been

with his father-in-law and brother-in-law. Trauma seems to have developed some particular psychic faculties in this woman: "Jean's usual reaction to rapes was to "disconnect completely of her body", repeating to herself that "this is not really real". Jean was proud of his ability to keep control during the rapes by showing no visible signs of anguish. She also remembered a ritual before going to bed where she slowed down her breathing as much as possible and thus remained motionless like a dead woman in order to reassure herself about the "control" total"that she could have on her body. Jean said that often during during the day, she "listened to the silence", convinced that she possessed extrasensory powers to detect hazards. She walked between the bungalows with his eyes closed in order to test his paranormal faculties feeling anything that could threaten his safety

Jean also reported having premonitions about his mother's suicide attempt. She described repetitive "visions" of his mother cutting her throat a few months before this happened. It will describe a similar premonition at the age of 17, before his biological father suddenly reappears at his door (...)

Jean also described his relationship with a "psychic" and charismatic man who produced and sold pornographic films sadomasochists (...) John said that she often participated in saaomasocmste scenes, aes lois ceia would have several days and had found herself then in a state of detachment: "I was leaving my body in a way and I was concentrating so as not to be hurt." After these sessions, John says that his recollections of what had happened were extremely vague and that only the pains and marks on his body could remind him of his experience. John was very pleased to be able to separate his emotions of the physical pain of his body. "Body aches and pain reinforce my sense of being a special person. Brands and Bruises are the way I measure the esteem I have of myself." she says.

Several years later, Jean returned to studying for a degree in criminology so that he could pursue a career in the police. however after passing the entrance exam, she decided not to join the public service. She herself had opened a Drivé employment office in connection with the police forces (...) She has helped solve cases criminal thanks to her "psychic powers" she says. It was in good condition trance in which she provided investigators with information such as license plates or the places of hides of criminals (...)

One morning, Jean woke up with a high fever, severe pain and swelling in his joints. The symptoms were so severe that she had to walk on crutches and then with a wheelchair. THE the doctor she consulted was unable to find the cause of the symptoms.

He attempted several medical treatments, but without success. Desperate, Jean put herself in a state of trance in which she relived the sexual abuse of his father-in-law and brother-in-law (...) According to her, after each episode of trance, the inexplicable symptoms disappeared, to reappear from new later, which required the repetition of the process

For a few years, Jean worked in an alternative health store. She then discovered that she had a remarkable success for the cure of various physical disorders through the use of herbs and gems (fine, semi-precious or precious stones). She noted that without no training, she instinctively "knew" how to heal people who presented themselves to her (...) She also reported that she had many symptoms of post-traumatic stress such as hypervigilance, a exacerbated responsiveness and sleep disturbances! [433]."

For Gardner Murphy, the former president of the American Psychological Association, serious illnesses, or more generally the disruptive elements or alert situations, can lead to develop an increased psychic sensitivity. We can take as an example the case of people with a T.D.I. whose meaning of the view has changed, which has resulted in them creating a exceptional photographic memory. This memory photographique is also related to hypervigilance and hypersensitivity developed in response trauma. The brains of survivors of abuse set up a Constant hypervigilance and an ability to read other people very precisely. These people will be able to automatically and unconsciously decipher and analyze behaviors, the body language, facial expressions, tone of voice and others signals from the executioners to try to get a small advance that can possibly to avoid violence, or even death. This

Systematic hypervigilance will remain present for a long time and in all sort of situations. With post-traumatic stress, the brain develops also very strong sensory faculties, multiplying hearing, smell, taste, sight and touch. In a split personality, one of the five senses can be overdeveloped in one alter, while another alter will have other peculiarities.

Therapist and social worker Susan Pease Banitt, the author of "The Trauma Tool Kit" trauma),also explains how certain paranormal faculties can be develop in an individual who has experienced severe trauma. The fact of growing up in a violent environment forces the child to anticipate the moods of aggressors and for this it will become hyper intuitive, a consequence of its hypervigilance. The child can thus develop telepathic abilities as well as increased sensitivity of its mirror neurons and sensitivity to electromagnetic energies emanating from people. Physical violence or Sexual abuse will also disrupt the functioning of the chakras (energy centers) in the victim. The energy company Barbara Brennan who has worked on the circulation of energy in the human body noted that some types of violence, such as sexual abuse can "tear" the chakras, this unlocks them in an energetic way unbalanced. This abnormal breach will make the energy body of the more permeable person and therefore more vulnerable. As we have seen, this can cause a particular connection to other dimensions with uncontrollable paranormal phenomena. Dissociation is an altered state of consciousness, all shamans who dissociate themselves, who enter into a trance, have need to learn to anchor, to "connect to the earth" when they access to other dimensions. A child who experiences a profound dissociation during a trauma does not have this knowledge and ability to anchor, to "keep feet on the ground" in order to preserve its balance. It is then no longer anchored, more centered, this is how it can become subject to attacks demonic entities and uncontrollable paranormal experiments.

In an article published by the "Journal of Spirituality and Paranormal Studies" entitled "Childhood that increase psychic powers), Sylvia Hart Wright cites several studies and several testimonies on the link between trauma and paranormal powers. For years Wright interviewed hundreds of people who have lived experiences at the borders of death, having medium faculties or other extrasensory abilities. It is apparent from these early childhood stress is an important factor in the development of psychic powers in adults. In particular, it has interviewed a remote viewer (a person with remote viewing faculties) internationally known having lived a childhood very difficult, he told her: "All these things with which children should not have to deal, we had there case very often. It's kind of the story of Jekyll and Hyde. You become ultra-sensitive in order to be able to gauge the state of the situation with one or the other of the parents. The more they drank, the more they became Mr. Hyde."

Several other people with particular psychic faculties reported that their alcoholic father himself had some extrasensory abilities. This reinforces the fact that the powers psychics would possibly be transmitted genetically, just as the dissociative faculties. In addition, a parent who has been a victim himself, and who reproduces violence or abuse on its children will trigger and strengthen in the latter this predisposition to dissociation and faculties extrasensory: always this transgenerational vicious circle...

A study that was conducted on 1400 Americans (NORC-Luce Foundation Basic Belief Study, National Opinion Center, University of Chicago) showed that people with psychic faculties had lived more family conflicts in early childhood compared to others.

Eu American sociologist Anarew ureeiey concluded among other things that the experiments Paranormal psychics seem to have partly to cause a childhood with serious family tensions! [434]).

A Canadian study also showed a link between adult creativity and the quality of family relationships during the early childhood. It has been reported that creative adults often come from families with high conflict and that these traumas had an impact significant on the level of creativity of the future adult! [435]!.

Another study from 2011 shows that there could indeed be a connection between creativity and trauma, in particular with post-traumatic stress. At the beginning of their research, Robert Miller and David Johnson believed that post-traumatic stress would have decreased the creative faculties of the person. But the study found that the of individuals who had suffered trauma compared to a group without trauma, had much better ability to make symbolic representations! [435]!.

Mental disorders, particularly personality disorders, also seem to be related to what is commonly known as "genius".

Bipolar disorder has been described by some as a "brilliant madness" because of the psychic expansion it can sometimes cause, as much towards constructive creativity as towards destructive psychosis.

Daniel Smith, professor at the University of Glasgow conducted a study demonstrating that mental disorders, in particular bipolarity, are indeed found more frequently among people with an intelligence quotient and a above average creativity. He told the English newspaper The Gardian: "It is possible that serious behavioural problems, such as bipolarity, are the price of paying for adaptability such as intelligence, creativity and verbal mastery." However, like Daniel Smith explainsit, if a correlation exists, the mechanism is not automatic, the bipolar disorder obviously does not produce chain geniuses...

In the past, mental illness was even considered a gift and it still is today in some cultures. Aristotle said: "No great genius has never existed without a touch of madness". One of the most learned representative is certainly Nikola Tesla, that American- Serbian genius who is the inventor of countless patents such as the electric motor, the electric current alternative, radio, remote control, robotics, laser, bulbs fluorescent,free energy, etc. Tesla mastered no less than twelve languages and his photographic memory associated with his capacity for mental animation was an exceptional asset for his work as an engineer. This extremely man ingenious and hyper-productive suffered from several mental illnesses: a attention deficit disorder (often related to hyperactivity), a obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD) and bipolar disorder. Nikola Tesla also suffered from many phobias or on the contrary from passions would come from the near-death experiences he would have lived in his youth.

When he was a child, he almost drowned and would then have made an outing out of his physical body. Later in his career, Tesla had an accident while working on an electric coil, it came into contact with a load electromagnetic of several million volts. He reported that during this experience at the borders of death, he entered a state where he could see the past, the future and the present on the same plane, in what it called it a "mystical vision". He stated that he had traveled through space and time, something common to the exit testimonies out of the body during near-death experiences. This concept of alternative space-time that is also found with the fragments of soul

Some scientists like Dr. Yehuda Elkana and Dr.

Gerald Holton argued that scientific discoveries and great innovations were associated with creative intuition. "Intuition" is defined as "the ability to immediately feel or know things without any reasoning." Cari Jung defines intuition as "perception by the unconscious". Traumas that cause hypervigilance and hyper-intuitiveness can therefore indirectly develop a certain creativity in the victim. According to a Swedish scientific study: "Creative people

(artistic and scientificfields) would present a higher risk of bipolar disorder and schizophrenia... It should be noted here that it is the configuration of the brain and the psychic state that generate abilities creators above normal, not the creativity that generates risks of mental disorders...

The scientific team at the Karolinska Institute has shown that there are more artists and scientists in the families affected by bipolar disorder and schizophrenia, in comparison with the general population! 437).

If we refer to some studies showing that personality disorders such as bipolar disorder, borderline disorder or schizophrenia most often have a traumatic origin dating back to childhood, the link between trauma and creativity can therefore be established. Artistic or scientific genius could caused by a failure in the organization brain connections, or should we say rather a particular wiring of the brain. Wiring that would develop during the life of the young child, because it is his experience that will shape the organization neuronal of his brain. Here is what the painter Lynn Schirmer, survivor of ritual abuse and mind control, said about it when a 2006 S.M.A.R.T. conference:

- Do you think the abuse has made you more creative?
- That's right. Previously, I thought that artists were born with their talent, but I don't believe in it at all anymore. I think it happens to cause of the effects of early childhood trauma on different parts of the brain.

Actress Meg Ryan stated in 2003 in Los Angeles Times: "I don't think you want to voluntarily grow traumatic or dramatic experiences in your life with the goal of becoming an artist. I think you would be wrong. But you can use it... There is a redemptive power in your life when you move on to through difficulties."

The creative artistic and scientific process has sometimes been described with terms very close to dissociation, trance, see even possession. Indeed, the second state that accompanies the activity of certain creators sometimes leads to phenomena if confusing that they have sometimes been classified in occult phenomena and paranormal. The person fades away and gives way to artistic genius or scientific, it then becomes the medium of something that often the exceeds, something that expresses itself through it. This is a common feature of many great artists of our world, as we will see in chapter 9 on the entertainment industry. There is a close relationship between hypnosis, dissociation, imagination and paranormal experiences such as mediumship, both in artists and in people with a past traumatic, which are often the same...

During the 80s, some psychologists had found that people who had experienced severe trauma during the small childhood very often testified to paranormal psychic experiences. They had then concluded that the traumas of childhood had led them to dissociate and that instead of being in the present moment, they had turned their attention to their imaginary world... which explained their "delusions" paranormal. But subsequently, the British psychologist Tony Lawrence worked on a series of statistical studies showing that the existing link between traumas and paranormal psychic experiences was stronger than the link between traumas and the imaginary world.

"You have a direct link between early childhood trauma and paranormal experiences. You don't necessarily have to have a good imagination to live a paranormal experience. Even people who have a weak imaginary world can experience a paranormal experience, in reason for the fact that they had a trauma during their childhood! [438]."

Dr. Richard Boylan who has written extensively on the subject of aliens and UFOs, met and interviewed many witnesses. he found five commonalities among those who were abducted or had observed aliens or UFOs:

- These individuals possess a high level of psychic abilities.
- Similar phenomena are observed with other family members (multi or transgenerational)
- Children who have suffered severe abuse or trauma.
- Individuals or entire families linked to the government and/ or intelligence agencies or departments.
- They were very often Amerindians, natives.

the

there is also a strong correlation between sites where occult activities are nratimiés, such as ritual abuses, military installations secret and UFO manifestations and testimonies of abductions (kidnappings) by E.T.. We shall not dwell here on the question of aliens which is to be put in connection with the existence of fallen angels, the "demons", the Luciferian army. Here is an excerpt from the book "Satanic Ritual Abuse, Principle of Treatment" in which Dr. Colin Ross explains the strong similarities between abuse explains the strong similarities between abuse satanic rituals and abductions: "There are thousands of people in North America today who have memories that go back concerning an alien abduction in a spacecraft, with experiments carried out on them (...) These "abductees" arrive in therapy with missing periods of time as well as inexplicable post-traumatic symptoms, just like survivors of satanic ritual abuse. Abductees report that they had hypnotic amnesic barriers deliberately implanted by the E.T., the survivors of satanic cults describe exactly the same programming made by their executioners. Survivors of satanic ritual abuse also describe forced pregnancies, medical experiments in laboratories and abortions before the end of pregnancy. The difference is that the

would elevates! [439]]."

In his book entitled "Mind-Control, World Control", Jim Keith writes that abduction cases aliens would be used to cover experiments on control mentals performed by humans in flesh and blood.

Brad Steiger, author of books on the paranormal and ufology, has interviewed many mediums and other people with extrasensory faculties. He reports that most of them have passed through a series of traumas during their early childhood or youth! [440!.] According to him, these individuals with a traumatic past seem to be candidates for first choice for certain military programs, including paranormal psychic experiments such as remote viewing. Lyn Buchanan is a former "remote viewer", he defines these psychic techniques as follows: "It is about structured exploitation and scientific of human natural potential for intelligence purposes. This without having to go through the usual five senses or through equipment such as photography, electronics or other devices! [44]it."

Joseph McMoneagle, another veteran of the U.S. government's remote viewing programs. It was recognized that these techniques are used to identify, i.e. to know the precise details about something that can only be accessed by extrasensory perceptions. People like McMoneagle or David Morehouse were recruited into these programs following events paranormals who have arrived in their lives: an experience of death imminent,contact with a UFO and then spontaneous outings out of the body.

He explains that for remote viewing programs, the U.S. government recruited Vietnam veterans who had lived through extremely traumatic situations during the war. In his book "Mind Trek", McMoneagle argues that trauma is something necessary to be able to develop vision abilities to distance. He states that following his experience at the frontiers of death, the the first consequence was a depressive state. The second consequence was this which he calls "spontaneous knowledge", it is to say he knew what people were thinking when they spoke to him. He knew some private things about people, things that they had never disclosed openly and of which he was not supposed to be aware. The third effect of this N.D.E. Summer of spontaneous outings outside his physical body, he sometimes found himself hovering over unknown ocean coasts! [442]). One of Lyn Buchanan's remote viewing students describes a of his experiences resembling in every way a dissociation of the personality: "I was floating with a base of different personality, I felt a slight but noticeable change of personality that was taking place! [443]!."

As we saw in the chapter on the MK-Ultra, the CIA took a close interest in paranormal psychic phenomena. When it has worked on the dissociation and splitting of the personality, she has opened a door to the other dimensions (which shamans have known since thousands of years). NASA has also done research in the field of the paranormal. On the radio show Coast to Coast, presented by Mike Siegel, astronaut Gordon Cooper confirmed the existence a mind control program involving young children. A project carried out by NASA in the 50s and 60s. During the show, Mike Siegel had asked the astronaut about these "Star Kids" (children of the stars). Cooper stated that these were children with exceptional mental abilities, exploited in a kind of MK program. He described how this NASA program cultivated and exploited telepathy, remote viewing and out-of-body outs. THE "study groups" also included learning protocols allowing subjects to assimilate large amounts of knowledge from a very fast way, as well as develop high-performance memory. THE the programme also consisted of developing in these children foresight and the guided imagination that are the bases to effectively practice remote viewingi[444!.]

Kathleen Sullivan is also a survivor who has suffered ritual abuse and MK programming in a governmental and military framework. It is described in his book "Unshackled" how his multiple personality disorder was exploited to develop in she of the particular psychic faculties: "My alter personalities 'Theta' have received a specialized psychic training. Children like me were chosen for this type of programming because like any victim of traumatic abuse, we were very sensitive to the moods and thoughts of others,especially those of our aggressors. I am convinced that some people who work or are connected to the CIA were aware of this link that exists between trauma and the paranormal, that mental health professionals don't find out. I think the permanent retention of information on these human faculties, as well as their discrediting and systematic disinformation, took place because the CIA and other intelligence agencies that have funded research on the paranormal had every interest in keeping this knowledge out of the field public.

I have recurring memories of my childhood concerning part of my Theta program set up by James Jesus Angleton, head of the CIA counterintelligence. Because of the fact that he may have known that I attended a Christian church every week, he used the content of the New Testament to teach me to expand my consciousness. He started my mental programming by quoting the words Jesus Christ: "You will do bigger works than the ones I made"... with our minds, headded. Angleton then taught me that the biggest wall preventing people to access their natural psychic faculties to use them, was their convinced that they could not or should not do so. It taught me that if I bypassed this mental blockage, then I could do this that I want with my psychic energy. According to him, I could even move a mountain by telepathy as long as I have the belief of power do it (...) He said that the human brain has a potential that we do not have not even started to exploit yet and he encouraged me to use it as much as possible. Other MK programmers have also conditioned my alter Theta to believe that they could read the thoughts of others, to communicate by telepathy and remote vision. Some of these programming has been a success (...) If these capabilities are legitimate, then I does not think that they are anything other than a natural human faculty.

However, I think they can be considered part of the forbidden fruit mentioned in the book of Genesis, for a person using could easily take themselves for a God. I chose not to do it now on near-death experiences. The obvious trauma of a exiting out of the physical body seems to trigger psychological experiences and particular physiological. As if something was unlocking in the energetic/electromagnetic bodies of the person. Phyllis Mary

Atwater, the author of "Dying to Know You: Proof of God in the Near-Death Experience", who herself lived three N.D.E wrote: "About eighty percent of people who experienced a state on the borders of death said that their lives had changed forever.

A closer examination shows, however, the emergence of surprising dimensions. People who had this experience did not come back with only an increased enthusiasm for life and a more spiritual vision.

They showed specific psychological and physiological differences on a scale never experienced before."

Atwater interviewed more than 4,000 people with experienced an N.D.E. to seek to know the consequences that this had had on their life. She found that there was generally a noticeable increase in intuitive and mediumistic abilities, communication with spirits, plants and animals for example. But his research also revealed that many people had undergone a change in the field electromagnetic of their body: "From the beginning of my research on states at the borders of death in 1978, I constantly noticed that a large majority of experimenters (those who did both part of my study and during an outside conversation with they) said they were becoming more sensitive to electric fields, and magnetic - disturbances of equipment, devices, watch strads - after their episode of NDE."

These long-lasting physiological changes, which create a kind of electrosensitivity, lead to interference between the person and the electronic equipment that surrounds it: problems of breakdowns and device deregulations, batteries that discharge faster, bulbs that grill systematically, etc., but also extreme sensitivity to land-based manifestations such as thunderstorms, earthquakes or tornadoes! [447]).

6 - Man medicine and his animals totem...

Here is now an interesting case concerning a "man-medicine" (healer) Amerindian. In 1989, the journal Dissociation published an article entitled "Multiple personality disorder with human and non-human subpersonality components".

of human and non-human sub-personalities). This article describes the case of a 70-year-old Native American patient diagnosed with t.d.i.. This man had healing powers and he was a "Medicine-man" recognized and respected in his community, a Native American tribe having preserved his ancestral traditions. His personality was split into eleven alters, four of which were alter humans and seven alter non-humans. It has been discovered that abuses in early childhood were at the origin of his T.D.I.. In addition, the development of and the manifestation of these alter personalities had been strengthened and maintained by the cultural context in which this Amerindian had grown up. The strong bond that exists with the spirits of nature and totem animals in culture

Traditional Amerindian has strengthened its system of alter personalities.

The man had presented himself for help therapeutic. In effect,the inner battle between alter humans and animals was becoming too much violent and this interfered with his ability to practice the rituals of healing.

The first alter to be formed was that of an eleven-year-old boy, called "Le Petit". It was discovered that all other alter personalities had dissociated themselves from thatone. At the age of three, the patient had been raped by an uncle. During the therapy, the alter described that he was playing with a turtle when the rape occurred. He tells how he then focused on the turtle as if he was crawling away, just like her, getting thus dissociating from traumatic reality. The uncle raped the child more and more more frequently and it is the alter Le Petit that systematically endured abuse through this turtle-related dissociation. One day, at the age of five, Le Petit observed a healer using a turtle shell in his therapeutic rituals. Shortly after that, a man in his family fell ill with cancer and became found bedridden. The alter personality Le Petit a told that when he was dissociated as an alter turtle, he often approached to touch the patient and after a while the man recovered, his cancer was in remission. It was then that Le Petit received a place of honor in his family. His mother said he had a rainbowabove his head on his birthday, which was the sign that he had in him the power to become a great medicine man. TO from then on, his family and neighbors began to come and see him for consultations.

His turtle alter (named Power) possessed faculties related to the spirit world, which could be used to control pain and treat serious diseases. This alter began to get develop when the patient was three years old. The physical characteristics of very slow movements, his head that swung from right to left as well as a language also very very slow and very limited.

Another alter was "The Old Man", a 70-year-old personality. This split occurred when the patient was in training with an old man medicine. He followed an initiation during which he was to remain in the forest for several days following the rites of purification with the prohibition of eating and drinking. In addition, he had to consume hallucinogenic herbs and run long distances. During this period of intense initiation, it was repeated to him that to become a good medical man, he was to become like his teacher. Under the effect traumatic fasting, intense physical exercise, hallucinogenic herbs and constant requests from alter Le Petit for become similar to the teacher, that old medicine man who raped him during the initiation, he dissociated himself into this alter Vieux, representing his teacher. It is this alter Le Vieux that allowed the patient to become a real medicine man. It is at note that violence and beatings are not normally part of rituals learning initiatory among Amerindians, this is a serious drift. The behaviour of this alter was that of an old man, as much in his posture only in his manners and in his voice.

The man also had a male eagle alter named Spirit of the Wind, also appeared during his initiation with the old man medicine. According to him, the eagle feather is a great source of power for the "dissociative medicine" of Native American healers. During the initiation, Le Petit was taught that the eagle is a medium between the earth and the "birds of thunder", powerful spirits in the Amerindian tradition. Always under the effect of fasting, exhaustion physical,blows and hallucinogenic herbs, Le Petit also dissociated himself into this eagle alter: the Spirit of the Wind. In the T.D.I. system of this man medicine, this alter allows communicating with thunderbirds to obtain information to diagnose a patient and gain power for his healing. One of these powers is the ability to induce in the suffering person a feeling of lightness, similar to a bird, which would have an analgesic effect.

This Native American patient also had a wolf alter, a panther alter, a bear alter, an owl alter and a snake alter. His others

Alter human personalities were those of a 28-year-old woman (Moon Walker), created when the uncle began to sexually share Le Petit with his alcoholic friends. There are also had an alter warrior named Thomme-tueur".

During therapy, the fusion/integration of alter personalities was complicated for several reasons. First of all the patient's wife as well as the people he treated thought that with this fusion, man medicine was going to lose its powers and ability to contact the world of spirits. In addition, the group of alter animals and the group of alter humans were in conflict and their merger was very complicated. It was therefore necessary to make fuse animals with each other and humans with each other while preserving spiritual needs of the patient, as well as his abilities as a medicine man for that he can continue to help his community. During this merapie, cnaque alter personality proved to be highly hypnotizing. Acuity tests visual and sensorineural assessments demonstrated differences considerable between each alter personality! 448!.

This case indicates that T.D.I., this dissociative mechanism of defense against trauma, can be found in various cultures and can be found in various cultures and can possibly sometimes explain why some shamans have alter personalities of animals. Alters that are revealed during the states of trance, as we saw in chapter 2 with the Berserk warriors becoming wolves, bears or super-powerful wild boars, capable of incredible feats.

7 - Conclusion

We therefore find that traumas, dissociation, astral outings, paranormal experiences and psychic powers go hand in hand in the hand, one triggering the others, although it is not systematic. This link between trauma/dissociation and connection with other dimensions is a key point in MK-Monarch type mental programming. During abuse rituals, it is a question of "unlocking" the child to initiate him and thus the sacralize in the eyes of the Luciferian cult. The spiritual and metaphysical aspect of programming is just as important, and certainly more important than the purely scientific aspect (neurological and psychiatric). Indeed, the connection connecting the members of this cult/global network to the world of spirits is indispensable to carry out the project of domination here on earth.

In a systematic way, the progeny responsible for completing the Order global must therefore be on one side spiritually connected to the militias

Luciferian while being psychologically and physically attached to the terrestrial network (families and networks of powers, secret societies). A terrestrial network well embodied in the material world and thus accomplishing a plan established from other spheres: the Luciferian rebellion

VV^11U111U. U.11U VJV11 J'/1100V111V11U YES UV1 IV,, tou.no wJ-/X O UV/

fractionation systematic children in these blood lines and more generally in all these Luciferian cults, the connection to the other dimensions and the "root of the violence"could not be transmitted from one generation to the next and the cult of horror could certainly not survive for the centuries. Deep dissociation caused by trauma, which can be described as a violent "spiritual unlocking" (a true spiritual rape), practiced systematically on the ground team therefore produces mediums receiving enlightenment and connection to the light bearer: Lucifer. These individuals totally split and multiple therefore possess certain alter personalities connected and linked to the spiritual kingdom of Satan. This is what Pastor Tom Hawkins describes when he writes that dissociated personalities may be trained during trauma to enter trance states that will connect them to the "second heaven", to the "kingdom of air" of which Satan is the prince. These fragments of personalities are connected and held cantif in this kingdom and are used to apply Satan's world plan on earth.

Satan would therefore have an established plan to rule on earth and he would use certain humans (worshipped him) as catalysts for set up his earthly project, humans passed through the againstinitiation, an inversion of sanctification leading to supernatural powers and connections... It is interesting to note here that Freemasonry also refers to mysterious entities of a another dimension that inspires (not to say dictate) its own actions for the establishment of the World Order. Freemason Charles

Webster Leadbeater (Anglican priest and theosophist, himself accused of paedomania)

clearly wrote that Freemasonry established certain connections with "resplendent beings" of theafterlife: "When one of these luminous spirits

attaches itself to us by a Masonic ceremony, we must not think of him in terms of leader or waiter, but simply as a brother. Our egocentrism is so ingrained that when we hear about a such a wonderful association, our first thought, even unconsciously, is to ask ourselves what we could get from this relationship. What could we learn from this resplendent being? Will he guide us, we advise,protect us? Or, on the contrary, is he a servant whom we can use it for our own will! [449!]?

The Freemason Oswald Wirth also mentions this explicitly when he writes that the Masters - for so they refer to the Initiates - wrap themselves in an impenetrable mystery; they remain invisible behind the thick curtain that separates us from the afterlife... They no longer work that on the drawing board, that is to say intellectually, by conceiving this which must be built. These are the constructive intelligences of the World, effective powers for the Initiates which relate to the

So here is a Freemason who clearly declares that Masters coming from the afterlife, dictate to the Unknown Superiors of the rear lodges Masonic,how to build the world, because they are according to his terms the constructive intelligences of the World...

the belief that humans can come into contact and be used and manipulated by of the so-called "higher" entities for a specific purpose is not some something new. Indeed, humans can serve as a tool for forces that are in another dimension. Author Malidoma Somé writes in his book "The Healing Wisdom of Africa": "Ancestors are disadvantaged because they know how to improve things but they do not have the physical body to act with what they know. We ourselves are at a disadvantage because even if we have physical bodies, we often lack knowledge necessary to do things right. That is why the Spirit loves work through us. A person with a physical body is a vehicle

îaeai pour i esprit ann qu n can mannester aes cnoses aans ce monde."

The physical human body is therefore potentially a tool of expression for entities beyond our earthly dimension. The human can be the tool of Luciferian entities just as it can also serve of tool to the Holy Spirit. In this world of duality, two forces clash, but it could also be said that they complement each other to organize this great theater, this great school in which we evolve. These two forces commonly referred to as "Good" and "Evil" have many similarities, one being obviously the negative layer of the other, one imitating the other in his own way because unable to truly create anything let. We find this duality at all levels, including with this link that humans can establish with other dimensions. Ritual abuse ultra-violent will suddenly force the spiritual doors of the child by torture, rape, baotême of sans and traumas of all kinds; while in the divine tradition, spiritual doors gradually open up through the benevolent love of the parents for the child, by the baptism of water and holy Spirit, by the goodness and help of angels and archangels faithful to God. On the one hand spiritual forces are acquired by the connection to the Luciferian rebel entities, the fallen angels, and on the other hand, these forces are given by the Holy Spirit coming directly from God. On the one hand the black masses with sacrifice and blood consumption and of human flesh, on the other side, the Holy Mass with the sacrifice of Jesus Christ who gives his body and blood in the Eucharist reformation of these ancient Babylonian cults linked to demons and based on sacrifices of blood, practices that the "nameless religion" continues to perpetuate. THE process of traumatic ritual abuse aimed at "initiating", "sacralizing" and "oapuser aes eniants is neither pius nor less than an inversion ae la sanctification, a counter-initiation or counter-revelation, aimed at establishing a luciferian reign of supernatural order. Lucifer being considered by these groups as the civilizing god, bringing knowledge and light to the humans...

"God forgives that," says (Senator) Leahy, referring as much to my role in NAFTA as to his pedophile practices on my daughter.

"Of course, it is not that God that you have to care about. He is a God passive, a God who has died out and who lives only in a Bible. The God which you must care about, it is this omniscient God who sees everything. That big and great Eye in Heaven. It sees everything, records everything and transmits information precisely where it is needed. Let me give you a good advice - do not open it, because nowhere you need to know what it is all of that. Surely your Vice-President (Bush) will know, and he has kept secrets all his life. I don't mean that George Bush is God. Oh no, it's much more than that. He is a demigod, which means that it straddles the earthly and celestial planes, of way to act according to what he sees with his Eye in Heaven eternally vigilant." - "America in the middle of Trance-formation" - Cathy O'Brien

Some of the things reported in this chapter go beyond the commonly accepted laws of physics, but the facts are there. Some will say that it they have to see to believe, what is understandable... But as stated in the introduction to the chapter, you do not see the microbe, but you do not see it with the antibiotic, because science has taught you. The human capacities to interacting with other dimensions as well as with certain entities is a vast field that this modern rationalist science has long neglected. It has not yet explored these areas, so it cannot understand, let alone teach you. However, little by little, in entering deeper and deeper into matter, this science ends up paradoxically join the immaterial and spiritual domain. The study strictly materialistic that resulted in digging the heart of matter with physics that an tique manages today to transcend this matter to enter into the spiritual world... which is none other than the heart of the material world, a kind of infinite fractal. The circle will one day be closed, the physical sciences and biologicals will find their missing link "invisible" for a full understanding the world we live in, a kind of unified field. For the moment, just as with the T.D.I., quantum physics is little discussed in universities... the filtration of information and teaching is obviously a mass control key. It is likely that in some laboratories the most advanced physicists, particularly on the quantum physics begin to realize that there is indeed a Creator with his Creation. Unless these gentlemen take the blow themselves for gods creators of their own reality and that they forget the Main Creator... and their condition as a mere creature...

Monarch Programming

> There may be a reason why the news media is publicly opening the Pandora's box of legend. Would it be plausible from this to consider that a closer examination - by the media and the public - of the leaders of these destructive sects, could reveal very concrete links with research on the control of the mind financed by the government? These are questions that, if addressed truly for what they are, would provide important answers to this social epidemic that includes physical and psychological abuse. The responses that a serious and thorough investigation would provide could be the beginning of a solution to the myriad problems that these destructive sects, serial killers and other child rapists pose to society.

> For an MK programmer, it is necessary to create alter personalities and at the same time to demonize them, i.e. to link them to demons (...) if someone really wants to understand monarch mental control, he must realize that it is something fundamentally demonic (...) Programming and mind control cannot be separated from demonology and occult rituals

1 - Introduction

To begin this chapter on Monarch programming, here are three examples reported by Dr. James Randall Noblitt in his book "Cult and Ritual Abuse" showing cases of sexual abuse with a rather mysterious mind control. The first case is taken from the book ''Criminal History of Mindkind'' in which Colin Wilson tells the story of a woman who travels by train to Heidelberg in Germany. She wants to see a doctor there for persistent stomach pain. According to Wilson, during her trip she met a certain Franz Walter who presented himself to her as a "healer" claiming to be able to treat her... He managed to persuade her to leave the train at a station to go for a coffee.

''She was reluctant, but she allowed herself to be persuaded. As they both walked along the dock, he grabbed her arm and "it seemed to me like I had no will left," she said. He took her to a hotel room in Heidelberg, plunged her into a trance by touching her forehead, and then raped her. She tried to push him away but she was totally unable to move (...) He stroked me and he said, "You sleep soundly, you can't call for help, and you can't do anything else."' Then he stuck my arms and hands behind my back and said, "You can't move at all. When you wake up, you won't remember anything about what just happened."' Later, Walter prostituted this woman to several men, entrusting his clients with the code word used to immobilize her (...) The police began to suspect that she had been hypnotized and a psychiatrist, Dr. Ludwig Mayer, managed to trace the buried memories of these hypnosis sessions. Walter was sentenced to ten years in prison. How could Franz Walter put her under mental control too quickly and as easily[451] ?''

Colin Wilson therefore wonders about such a power of control, but he provides no answer except for possible paranormal faculties that Walter could have developed to induce a deep trance in this woman. The case reported by Wilson is similar to many testimonies of survivors of ritual abuse. Dr. James Randall Noblitt notes that he had several patients who described an identical scenario. They remembered being raped or sexually abused by someone who made them totally unable to react after he had uttered a word, a sentence, or made some kind of sign with his hand or by touching their face in a certain way. During therapy, these patients were initially unable to explain this phenomenon with these signals or trigger codes. After a few therapy sessions, frequently, an alter personality emerged with the ability to explain the process and even giving an explanation of how the programming had been installed. These are alter personalities that serve as sexual objects and that are accessible by certain "triggers". These programs are usually installed during early childhood and can remain in place for a very long time. Anyone with the trigger codes to induce the trance state or bring out the alter personality can then sexually abuse the victim.

In the case reported by Wilson, it is not stated that the rapist Walter already knew the woman she met on the train. For this reason, how can we know whether this is prior programming? According to Dr. Noblitt, it would be possible for an individual to identify and understand the levers underlying a program in order to identify the trigger codes. This is simply by talking with the person and observing their eyelids and other bodily responses in response to potential triggers introduced discreetly during the conversation. There are indeed some basic keywords, or gestures, systematically used in MK programming. We could call these triggers "standards".

Another case reported by Colin Wilson, this time in the book "Beyond The Occult", describes a story dating back to 1865: "After lunch, Castellan made a sign with his fingers, as if he were dropping something on the girl's plate, she then felt all her senses leave her. After which he took her to the next room to rape her. She will then testify that she was conscious but totally unable to move[452].''

These two cases reported by Colin Wilson describe a victim who finds himself totally paralyzed and at the mercy of the perpetrator. This may include dissociative conversion disorder (which may manifest as one-time paralysis).

In his book "Trance: A Natural History of Altered States of Mind", Brian Inglis describes a case that was tried in Wales in 1988, that of hypnotist Michael Gill. He used a light flash device to hypnotize a woman and rape her when she was in an altered state of consciousness. Mind control techniques involving light flashes have been reported by mind control survivors, notably in the MK-Ultra program. These three criminal cases illustrate how women can be sexually abused when they are in trance states induced in a rapid and powerful way by a triggering stimulus. Hypnosis alone is not capable of allowing such abuse of a person[453].

At a S.M.A.R.T. In 2003, survivor Carole Rutz explained that her trauma-based programming could be accessed and triggered with hypnosis: "All the programming that was done on me by the CIA and the 'iüuminatï was based on traumas such as electroshock, sensory deprivation and drugs. Later, traumas were no longer necessary, hypnosis alone, combined with implanted triggers and sometimes updates could be enough! 454]."

In Monarch mind control, programming to sexually enslave a person is the most common. These "Beta" type programs are used to create sex slaves, sometimes called "presidential models" in the case of MK slaves reserved for the elite. But any Monarch subject can have one or more alter personalities programmed for this function, this type of alter is also called "Kitten" or "Sex Kitten" (kitten).

In October 2001, a famous French model made shocking revelations during the recording of a television show. She denounced her alleged sexual exploitation by her family, her entourage and certain high-ranking personalities. She said she had been raped by her father at the age of two, saying she had realized it a few months earlier, as her memories had resurfaced in the form of flashbacks. She also revealed that she was regularly raped by her employers (a famous modeling agency), by people close to her and by members of the gotha (royal families). She will say that the forgetting of her abuse was due to hypnosis or what she thought was hypnosis...

Shortly after these revelations during the recording of a television show with Thierry Ardisson, she gave an interview to the magazine VSD, a dossier entitled "Le cri de détresse d'un grand top model" published in January 2002 in the VSD N°1271. The magazine reveals that this woman was received by the boss of the brigade for the repression of pimping and that she told him about dinners organized between young top models and wealthy old gentlemen. The interview gives several clues that may suggest that she has undergone a Monarch-type mind control.

Here are some excerpts from this interview:

"A person from my family circle (she mentions a name) sexually abused me, I was two years old. He is a psychopath. He had put me under hypnosis. Since then, anyone with authority and knowing my secret can manipulate me. As long as I had not evacuated the terror of my childhood, anyone, by scaring me, could have a grip on me (...) They tried to make me a prostitute: it was so easy, I didn't remember anything, I forgot everything (...) I was a toy that everyone wanted to have. All of them took advantage of me (...) I had no will of my own, so they organized my life: everything, everything, everything (...) I was made hypnotic stuff (...) Yes, it is huge. There's a whole conspiracy around me, for a long time, it's been about people in the government, in the police. Everything in my life has been organized! Everything, everything, everything! I had no will of my own (...) During the 'Restos du Cœur', an artist told me: "A relative has abused you, they are organizing so that you are raped again and so that you know nothing." A famous singer said to me: "One of your relatives (she mentions a name) told me that you were raped, can you forget it? Look at me, you're going to forget it!" And she laughed. And it worked: I forgot (...) I really got into suffering, that's where I got the first flashes. First of all from a relative who raped me. I said to myself: here I am, I found why I was so bad (...) In fact, all the people my family used to associate with are pedophiles. It's a vicious circle, and today I'm breaking it! (...) I was an asset. My image, my kindness, my kindness, served those who wanted to hide things. And here, we are dealing with very, very, very bad people. Those who wanted to speak are dead today (...) It was one of my relatives in New York who had me raped by the president of a large company. One day, she calls me and says, "Do you remember what we did to you when you were a little kid?" I say, "Ah yes, ah yes!" "Well X will come to see you, he will have sex with you and you will have the greatest contract that exists." I didn't want to, but I was like a doll without will (...) I want justice, that's all! Paedophilia is still such a taboo. It's girls like that who want to be a model. So it's easy for the thugs to then have power over them.''

Is this woman under Monarch-type mental control? Is she a "presidential model"? What she describes as memory lapses following the rapes, "I didn't remember anything", could correspond to a severe dissociative disorder with amnesic walls. The fact that she told VSD magazine that she had been raped under hypnosis since the age of two, that her family only associated with paedophiles, that this was a vicious circle that she wanted to break, and that her sexual exploitation seems to have continued throughout her life, strongly suggests that she could have suffered the sad journey of an MK-Monarch slave, a prisoner of a network exploiting her dissociative disorders. During the recording of the television programme in November 2001, she also mentioned several names related to the entertainment industry, saying that these people were either aware of it or themselves rapists or victims. She mentioned the name of another well-known French star when she said that she too was undergoing this kind of treatment.

Despite filing a complaint and opening a judicial investigation, her family quickly had her interned in a psychiatric hospital shortly after her revelations. It did not come out until three months later. Was an update of the MK programming necessary then? Indeed, after a certain age the amnesic walls tend to dissolve hence the rise of some memories in the form of flashbacks. Her family tried to pass off the incident as a paranoid delusional crisis except that no one could prove that it was really a stroke of madness and that what they had said was false. The complaint that this woman filed was very quickly closed without further action, so no investigation was conducted to confirm or deny these very serious accusations... Some time after his forced hospitalization, the supermodel gave an interview to Benjamain Castaldi in the M6 channel show "C'est leur destin" in September 2002. An interview in which there is still doubt that she really tried to disclose her condition as an MK slave, without even knowing herself exactly what she was mired in. Here are some excerpts:

- Benjamin Castaldi: If you had to summarize your destiny in a few words, what would you say?

- Supermodel: On the one hand it's a fairy tale, and on the other hand it's a horror film, a real nightmare. And when everything came up, there were people who tried to stop me from talking. I was put in a clinic to prevent me from talking. I got out of it with the help of a lawyer, it was quite a trick. Oh there, it was quite complicated! (...) The lawyer phoned me directly in my room. She said, "Look, you don't look like a madwoman at all! I'm picking you up within the next two hours." I packed my bags and went out like that. (...) Once I reached my goal in modeling, everything was fine in appearance but deep inside me I felt that something was wrong. So I followed a psychoanalysis for five years, there are things that came back to me, that were so serious that I became somehow paranoid (...) I tried to talk, but they didn't want to believe me. There was a certain part that was paranoia, because it is true that when things are so huge, after that it degenerates a little bit. There is a little bit of delirium. But the more time goes by, the more I realize that in fact, not at all (...) Have you seen the movie True Romance? That's kind of my life. Everything has been organized. Everything was manipulated. I was someone who didn't see anything. In fact, I think I was really crazy, but today I'm not.

Actress Marie Laforêt said of this case: "I don't know what happened to X, it's the same story, she was talking about the same people, except that she was cut off outright... So we made her make a small disc to stamp her ever since. So she knows that if she ever says anything about what she wanted to say at that time, she will have an even more miserable fate than the one she has right now. So it has every interest in crashing. That is all. But she made an attempt! She made an attempt and paid for it what she paid for it. We amused him by making him make a record, a promo. But then everyone is in the mix? You will answer for yourself. Of course!"

The term Monarch comes from the butterfly "Monarch", an insect that begins its life as a caterpillar (the undeveloped potential), which then evolves into a cocoon (the process of splitting and programming) to become a butterfly (the Monarch slave). Is a caterpillar aware that it will become a butterfly? Is the butterfly aware that it was a caterpillar? No, and this image fits perfectly with that of programming based on dissociation and traumatic amnesia. Twirling butterflies represent scattered soul fragments. The term Monarch also refers to the sensation caused by dissociation, which may be a feeling of flutter, like a butterfly, following an electroshock for example. Electric shocks are commonly used by programmers because it is a very effective method of torture and leaving few traces.

In the autobiography of Brice Taylor (former presidential model), "Thanks For The Memories", monarch programming is defined in this way: "A puppet is a doll that is attached to strings and controlled by a master. Monarch programming is also called "Syndrome of Puppet, the "Imperial Conditioning" is another term used. Some mental health therapists recognize this type of mind control as "conditioning by stimuli-response sequences". The Monarch project can be described as a combination of structured traumatology, dissociation and occultism in order to compartmentalize the mind into several personalities, this in a systematic way. During the process, a satanic ritual, usually including Kabbalistic mysticism, is performed with the aim of linking a demon or group of demons to the corresponding alter. Of course, most people will see this as a simple way to reinforce the traumas within the person, by denying this irrational belief that a demonic possession can actually occur[455]..."

The Monarch Butterfly seems to be the strong symbol returning regularly in the entertainment industry to represent this process of personality splitting. This well-known butterfly has the particularity of migrating from south to north over several generations while the journey from north to south is done in a single generation. These unique and fascinating creatures always return to the same trees as previous generations, even though they have never been there. How is that possible? This means that the Monarch butterfly genetically transmits to its offspring information about where it was born. This insect has been scientifically studied for this amazing genetic peculiarity.

This would be one of the main reasons for the naming of the Monarch project, genetics being an important point in the selection of subjects. Some information related to ancestors crosses time and centuries and is therefore transmitted from generation to generation. It is a kind of transcendent influence joining the studies on psychogenesis, a charge both positive and negative that is transmitted to the offspring. In the book Satanism: Is it real?'' Father Jeffrey Steffon explains: "A third way (of demonic links) is generational inheritance. If parents have been involved in the occult, this generational bond will be passed on to their children." In shamanic cultures, the role of the shaman is often hereditary and is usually passed down from father to son. Just as the lineages of Asian shamans transmit certain paranormal faculties or psychic powers, the Luciferian lineages practicing occultism and ritual abuse transmit to each other an intangible heritage with a heavy baggage of demonic ties. The faculties for dissociation, hypersensitivity, mediumship and other psychic powers are also part of the genetic baggage and will be activated and reinforced by rituals and traumas during early childhood.

It is interesting to note here that a Swiss scientific study dating back to 2012 showed that trauma (especially sexual abuse) during childhood leaves traces in dna up to the 3rd generation. Is this what the Bible is talking about when it specifies that "the father's fault" is passed on to his descendants until the third and fourth generations? (Exodus 20:5–6)

''The team observed that the DNA of a little girl whose grandmother had been raped by her father, had the same epi-genetic modifications as her grandmother and that these modifications were much greater than in the mother and grandmother. The little girl born from the product of incest and who has never been raped has the biggest scar in the genome of all her cells." (UNIGE Research 2012)

It has been discovered that these genetic marks will not mutate DNA, but will have an influence on brain development and will be transmitted to subsequent generations. The research group of Professor Alain Malafosse, of the Department of Psychiatry of the Faculty of Medicine of Geneva, conducted research on adult subjects who had been abused during their childhood (physical, sexual and emotional abuse, emotional deficiencies, neglect) and suffering from borderline personality disorder. By examining their DNA, resulting from a simple blood test, the researchers observed epi-genetic changes, i.e. in the mechanisms of gene regulation: "This is the first time that we have seen such a clear link between an environmental factor and an epigenetic modification. This link is all the stronger because the more severe the maltreatment during childhood, the greater the genetic modification," stresses Ariane Giacobino of the Department of Genetics and Development[456]. In addition, it has been found that trauma experienced in adulthood will not mark genes as profoundly and permanently as trauma experienced in childhood[457].

It would seem that a genetic encoding resulting in totally deviant self-generated behaviors occurs after three generations of child abuse, which would explain why some families are totally stuck in these things. Luciferian families who systematically practice ritual abuse and mental control over their offspring are therefore deeply marked in their genetics. These blood lines are preserved by the almost systematic arrangement of unions and marriages.

In ancient times, humans (especially children) had good dissociative abilities. When exposed to trauma, they had a much greater survival advantage than those who did not have that ability. As we have seen, dissociation has an initial objective aimed at the survival of the individual in the face of a deep trauma, i.e. to preserve him so that he is able to continue to function properly. Nomadic tribal life has gradually been replaced by a sedentary life in villages, thus reducing natural traumatic factors, so this human genetics associated with dissociation has also regressed. Some lineages perpetuate and still maintain today this genetic transmission of the "precious" dissociation, the door communicating with the spirit world. Genetic background plays an important role in Luciferian hierarchies and dissociative abilities are part of these sought-after genetic marks.

Why is dissociation so important for these cults? In a young brain under construction, trauma and the dissociation they cause will shape the neuronal pathways in a particular way and thus create certain intellectual, physical and psychic faculties. As we saw in the previous chapter, extreme trauma and deep dissociation will also open gaps to other dimensions. It is these bridges to the spirit world that will make it possible to establish certain communications and to receive "power". In addition, the splitting of the individual's personality with the amnesic walls allows a control and programming of the offspring to carry out the objectives of these Luciferian bloodlines, which span centuries. All the children of the "nameless religion" systematically pass "to the windmill": the process of splitting them and "veiling" their synapses using extremely traumatic and dissociating techniques.

Mk conditioning and programming will be systematic and very early on the dissociative faculties of the child will be tested and strengthened. The more easily the child will dissociate himself, the faster the programming work will be done. In her book "Ascent From*Gospel",* psychotherapist and survivor Wendy Hoffman explains: "Worship teaches the art of dissociation. The lives of victims will depend on their ability to learn this quickly and from an early age. Dissociation is a subject that is taught, just like mathematics (...) It is easy for cult members to tell by simply looking at someone if they are in a state of dissociation. They can check a member's dissociative skills as easily as they can check if his addition is correct[1458] ***. "

Mysteries religions incorporated elements symbolizing death and resurrection. Initiation sometimes also included amnesia (related to drugs, deprivations and traumas), an erasure of memory for the formation of a new identity: it was then that the initiate received a new name. Survivors of ritual abuse and mind control report exactly the same things. Monarch programming is in a way a form of initiation through trauma, creating in the initiate (child victims) a connection to the spirit world and giving birth to one or more other alter personalities. Alters that will receive different names and that will be programmed for various functions. The child "Monarch" of the Luciferian Hierarchical Order is an elected, he is considered sacred. These are initiatory rituals that aim to sacralize the child through deep dissociative states and rebirth as a Monarch child; make him a killer rather than a victim, a full member of the Lutheran cult linked to higher entities.

In 2009, Dr. Lowell Routley wrote an article in which he described Monarch programming, although he did not use the term. The article entitled "Restoring The Lost Self: Finding Answers to Healing from Traumatic Socialisation and Mind Control in Twenty-first Century Neurocognitive Research" was presented by Routley at a conference in Geneva at the Icsa (International Cultic Studies Association) international annual congress on 4 July 2009. Here is an excerpt from the introduction: "These survivors learned to dissociate themselves at a very young age during certain transgenerational practices transmitted within families. The use of traumatic socialization is intended to compartmentalize the child's mind, maintain secrecy and maintain the status quo. Asphyxia, deprivation, isolation and pain are known as means of dissociating the child, ensuring a certain behavioral conformity, suppressing his autonomy and identity, creating amnesia regarding abnormal activities, as well as unquestionable loyalty (...) terror maintains and reinforces dissociative compartmentalization The degree of dissociation that results in the victim's mind is determined by the age at which this traumatic socialization appeared, its frequency and intensity. Clinical work with the survivors led to a new discovery on programmed modifications of the structure of the "mind", the "self", and consciousness that would have been made by technological or scientific means. While the phenomenology of programming was explored clinically, the patterns of compartmentalization of the mind that appeared indicated that there was a sophisticated manipulation of the child's mind (...) Clinical observations have also indicated that the sophistication of "programming" has evolved in parallel with scientific discoveries. Therapeutic intervention requires first an appropriate diagnosis of traumatic symptoms, and then a means of resolving beliefs maintained by dissociative and amnesic barriers. These factors have led research to determine effective tools for healing. The clinical observations of survivors raised in these transgenerational families as well as the results of neurocognitive research of the 21st century have become bases on which an intervention model has emerged! 459! "

The term "programming" is used in two ways for mind control methods. Most commonly, it refers to coercive persuasion practiced in destructive sects or military groups, mafias, etc. The second use of the term "programming" is much more specific, it is the manipulation or traumatization of alter personalities, fragments, dissociated mental states or entities for the purpose of mental control[460].

It is the latter type of programming that applies in the MK-Monarch protocol. In the book "Healing From The Unimaginable", therapist Alison Miller gives this definition of programming: "Programming is the act of installing internally, predefined reactions in response to external stimuli so that the person reacts automatically and in a predetermined way to things such as auditory, visual, tactile signals, or can perform a series of dictates in connection with a specific date or time."

In one of her books, the German psychotraumatologist Michaela Huber gives her definition of this type of mental programming: "Programming in the traumatic context is a process that can be described as a apprentissa.ge under torture. The metaphor "programming" is certainly of computer origin and represents in this context, what psychologists call a conditioning. This means that the person who has been "programmed" must re-gir in a stereotypical way to certain stimuli. The person's reaction to a stimulus is in this case automatic, so it is neither a natural reflex nor a conscious and voluntary re-ction. To achieve his ends, "the programmer" that I will call the executioner used the fact that his victim is a young child, preferably already dissociated (with a fra,ctionedpersonality)to carry out the learning by torturing him. Torture can include physical, sexual and emotional abuse and often the victim is threatened that he or she will die if he or she is not obedient. Once a victim has been programmed, it is possible to control it with the stimuli that have been "implanted" (these are the "triggers"). An alter personality that has been programmed is usually not a complex identity and for this it is also called "program". Generally, this person has been programmed to serve certain purposes: prostitution to enrich the master, steal, smuggle drugs, etc. Using programming the master can also ensure that the victim is amnesiac regarding abuse and programming, he can also make sure that the victim commits suicide when she is about to report her executioners\461\."

Jeannie Riseman, a member of the American activist group Survivorship, describes high-level MK programming, i.e. using sophisticated technologies, as follows: "What we refer to when we talk about experiments on mind control is a deliberate and skilful manipulation of different parts of a person's mind, which then falls under the control of others. Experimenters, programmers and controllers have a very specific goal in mind and they will select the techniques that will allow them to best accomplish this goal. They are familiar with a number of techniques and when they are not satisfied with the results of one of them, they modify and adapt their methods. They know perfectly well what they are doing. The technology they have at their disposal is much more complex and sophisticated than what is usually available to groups that practice ritual abuse. They use equipment that is state-of-the-art, equipment that can be very expensive. This technology includes electroshocks, implants, equipment to inject information into certain parts of the brain, technology to divide the cerebral hemispheres, etc[462]."

This is what Dr. Lowell Routley talks about above when he writes that clinical observations have also indicated that the sophistication of "programming" has evolved in parallel with scientific discoveries.

As we saw in Chapter 2, Monarch programming is a distant legacy of ancient mysteries cults and traumatic rituals resulting in deep dissociative states. The MK-Monarch is the culmination of centuries of efforts by the various Luciferian sects to gain total control of a human being. Today these mental programming techniques are very sophisticated and generally use electronic equipment, especially related to the use of harmonics (vibrational frequencies). Indeed, everything on this planet vibrates at a certain frequency and this multitude of frequencies can be used to influence the human brain via neuronal pathways (see the subject of psychotronics developed in chapter 1). In the field of MK research, harmonics are used to activate this or that neural network in order to compartmentalize a given memory. In the laboratories that were already developing these electronic techniques of mind control in the 70s and 80s, the application of harmonics was called "brain training[463]". These harmonics aim to penetrate deeply the subconscious of the MK slave to be able to control for example his breathing, his heart rate, etc. This technology can easily replace the cyanide pill to ensure that spies and other agents die with their secrets...

What is presented in this chapter is based on testimonies of survivors and therapists dating back several years. The evolution of any technology is exponential and mk's practices are just as exponential, we may know more when documents are declassified, just as some have been concerning the MK-Ultra of the 50s and 60s.

The MK-Monarch brings together several disciplines, the main ones of which are the following (the first three being closely linked):

- The science of torture and trauma.

- The science of drugs.
- The science of altered states of consciousness (hypnotics, dissociative, trances)
- The science of the psychological and behavioral development of the child.
- Neurological and psycho-traumatological science.
- Psycho-electronic or psychotronic science.
- The science of lying and language manipulation (reverse psychology).

And probably the main one:

- Paranormal science, or how to use spiritual and occult means to control someone. We will also mention in this category demonology.

In the high levels of the Luciferian hierarchy, the result obtained is subjects able to work for the "Network" by being perfectly integrated into key positions of society. ''The Network'' being all organizations applying a Luciferian doctrine and working more or less ardently for the establishment of a New World Order (The ''nameless religion''). These mk methods are therefore reserved for a certain "elite", for insiders. The level of programming of children in these transgenerational families or military and political groups will vary according to several criteria:

- The knowledge and understanding that the group (or family) has about this type of mind control.
- The child's ability to dissociate himself, his intellectual quotient and his level of creativity.
- The region or country in which he grew up.
- Financial resources and equipment available to programmers.

The essential component of Monarch mind control is the deliberate creation of an I.D.T. with a number of identities, personality/soul fragments, separated by amnesic walls. Each alter personality is created to receive a particular training assigning him a specific role inside the cult or outside, in society. The more complex the ritual abuse and mental control that the child has undergone, the more complex his T.D.I. and his inner world will be. Overall, it is a question of setting up a system comprising alternating personalities on the surface or on the façade who will be able to interact with the secular world, i.e. in civil society, while other much deeper alter personalities will have occult roles and activities solely linked with the sect and its network.

On June 25, 1992, the Fourth Annual Eastern Region Convention on Ritual Abuse and Multiple Personalities was held at the Radisson Plaza Hotel in Alexandria, Virginia. Dr. Corydon Hammond held a lecture there initially entitled: "Hypnosis in multiple personality disorder", which was later renamed "The Greenbaum Exposition" because of the content of the conference which was totally different from what the program had initially announced[464].

On June 25, 1992, the Fourth Annual Eastern Region Convention on Ritual Abuse and Multiple Personalities was held at the Radisson Plaza Hotel in Alexandria, Virginia. Dr. Corydon Hammond held a lecture there initially entitled: "Hypnosis in multiple personality disorder", which was later renamed "The Greenbaum Exposition" because of the content of the conference which was totally different from what the program had initially announced[464].

To the astonishment of the public, Corydon Hammond described what he had discovered in some of his patients. He publicly revealed the existence of people who are victims of mind control and programming. People who all suffered from dissociative identity disorder. Among other things, he revealed the different levels of programming: Alpha, Beta, Theta, Delta, Omega and Gamma that had emerged in some of his patients. He described the characteristics of these different types of programming:

- Alpha is the basic programming, these are the first personality fractionations that will establish the foundations to allow mind control over the slave, with a dissociation of the two cerebral hemispheres.

- Beta is the sexual programming aimed at eliminating all morals and stimulating primitive sexual instincts.

- Delta and Theta are programs of killers, special agents, elite soldiers who may have certain psychic faculties.

- Omega is self-destructive programming, including suicidal tendencies and/or self-harm activating when memory recovery begins to be too high.

- Gamma would be the protection programming of the internal system, i.e. a function intended to deceive and misinform.

Fritz Springemeier also cites the epsilon (alter animal) and zeta (alter related to the production of snuff-films).

In 1997, in an interview with Wayne Morris on Ryerson Polytechnic University radio in Toronto, Ontario (CKLN FM 88.1), survivor Kathleen Sullivan described the different levels of programming she herself had: "The Alpha program was the basic program. That is what my father said. This is the program that activated the Alpha waves of the brain. We had to start with that one before moving on to the others. The Beta program, for me, was called "Barbie." A politician who is very closely linked to these MK programmes once told me that it was Klaus Barbie who was behind this programming, which was later called "Beta". It was a program that transformed me into a real robot, especially in the sexual field. I was the sex slave of a number of personalities, from my early childhood to adulthood. In this "Beta" state, I could no longer resist, I didn't even have any angry reactions. I was an absolutely docile sex slave and I did everything these men asked me to do. I would never have done these things if I had been in my normal conscious state. The Delta programme was mainly concerned with the military sector. I was immersed in a Delta state. when I was under the orders of the military. Through this programming, I was absolutely loyal to my superiors. There were several subcodes to a.ctiver different parts of the Delta program, there were three: Delta 1, Delta 2 and Delta 3. They were a.ctivated by coded numbers. When I was in the Delta mental state, if they pronounced these codes I could kill someone in the room. I did it without discussion because I obeyed in an absolute way the person who controlled me. In this state, I didn't think anymore, I didn't think anymore. This program uses a lot of amnesia, in the interest of my survival. I knew that, and I was used to it. The Theta program mainly used paranormal faculties. I don't really like this word because it is associated with a lot of negative connotations. But they were using my mental energy to do a number of things that are considered paranormal... Some films or novels present these scenarios... We were taught that these *techniques could be used to harm people. We were filled with extreme ra.ge and we used this very violent energy to attack people by*thought[465].

The internal system of people who have undergone ritual abuse and mind control is different from that of people with an I.D.D. resulting from less severe and less systematic violence, not having a direct purpose of MK programming. The victims of these criminal organizations that deliberately create a T.D.I. to carry out complex programming will therefore show certain identifiable peculiarities in their dissociative disorders. Canadian therapist Alison Miller has noted[466] several of these characteristics common to mind control survivors:

- Presence of a complex inner world and interlocking internal structures in which dissociated personalities (soul fragments) are imprisoned.
- Use of age-appropriate games and activities to facilitate programming.
- Alter personalities are programmed to have a very specific function.
- Presence of a "discharge" for alter that have not been exploitable, so they are not used by programmers but they remain present in the system.
- Presence of a hierarchy in the alter.

- Assigning alters to particular colors.
- Presence of alter observers and rapporteurs who know everything that has happened to the person, all his actions and gestures and who can report it to the masters or programmers.
- Presence of a security system that includes punishments for disobedience.
- Presence of alter having a guard function.
- Presence of a filing system for memories, especially for programming sessions.
- Presence of alter who believe to be animals, demons or aliens.
- Blocking alter at a certain age so that they can not discern reality from fantasy.
- Creation of internal copies of aggressors (alter executioners, identical to aggressors)
- Presence of an internal calendar with roles to be held on certain dates.
- Presence of alter having the function of sending certain feelings or certain impulses.
- Presence of "triggers" deliberately placed to cause certain behaviors or symptoms.
- Presence of "traps" causing despair or triggering suicidal behavior when memories rise and abuses are reported.
- Use of technological equipment for programming.

MK techniques are aimed at breaking the victim, reaching the breaking point from which deep dissociative states arise. It is then a question of manipulating these dissociated states of consciousness in order to program the fragments. Here is a list of barbaric techniques aimed at creating the dissociative states necessary for programming. These are methods that are systematically found in the testimonies of survivors and the reports of therapists. These are practices that could not be more violent and traumatic because the worst traumas will be the most effective for dissociation and spiritual "unlocking":

- Sensory, food and sleep deprivation, but also sensory saturation (smells, sounds, light flashes).
- Confinement and imprisonment in boxes, cages, coffins, etc.
- Systematic behavioral modification and use of hypnosis.
- Restraint with ropes, chains, handcuffs.
- Hanging in painful positions or upside down.
- Suffocation, near-drowning.
- Experiences at the frontiers of death.
- Extreme rotation on pivot, "like a spinning top".'
- Blinding light or bright flashes.
- Electric shocks.
- Rape and sexual torture.
- Drugs (ingestion or intravenous).
- Guilt, shame, humiliation and belittling.
- Threats with firearms.
- Confinement with insects, spiders, rats, snakes, etc.
- Forced ingestion of blood, feces, urine or flesh.
- Torture and/or forced rape of animals or humans (children, babies).
- Double constraint making a situation a priori insoluble.
- Desecration of Christian beliefs and commitment to Satan.
- Use of lullabies, fairy tales, books, films and music for programming.
- Theatricality, deception, verbal manipulation, inversions, illusions and lies.
- Actors, accessories, costumes and make-up during rituals.

Fritz Springmeier explains that MK-Monarch subjects are created for different objectives, hierarchical or non-hierarchical objectives. Some topics will be intended to work within powerful circles of power, under excellent coverage. These are the ones who are part of the hierarchy, the blood lines. They will usually receive complex and multi-functional programming and will be used to help with the programming of other slaves. On them, the abuses will not be visible physically, unlike those who are not destined to be part of the elite such as sacrifiable subjects such as sex slaves, drug smugglers, breeders, etc. The mk-monarch sacrifiable children are those who do not descend from elitist blood lines, they will be programmed for certain functions and will generally be "thrown out of the train of freedom" (sacrificed, murdered, "suicides") when they reach thirty years. That is why a presidential model will usually end up being sacrificed. A great distinction must therefore be made between monarch slaves of the high hierarchy, the Luciférien Order, and those who are not part of it. As we have seen, blood lines are extremely important in these groups, for whom blood allows to acquire power (through rituals). For these cults, the power is stored in the blood so the most effective way to transmit it is by the transgenerational lineage.

The child of a Luciferian lineage is conceived according to certain rituals. All the steps that this child will go through for his programming are well thought out and follow a detailed protocol, unlike dissociated children from homes or incestuous families who will not undergo the same diet. The MK subjects of the hierarchy will in turn be used to program and train other children of the elite, while second-class slaves will be abandoned from a certain age. The women and men of the Luciferian hierarchy will continue to work for the group throughout their lives with a regular update of their programming.

A person's preparation for programming also concerns their potential for demonic possession, a point that is closely related to their potential for dissociation. Luciferian transgenerational families are all sold and related to Satan, and their children belong to him. Because of the genetically engraved transgenerational occult links and the link with these demonic forces, these children are prime candidates for Monarch programming. While a child who does not belong to the hierarchy can be programmed to become, for example, a baseball player or a drug smuggler, the most complex programming leading the child to the highest positions will be attributed to subjects who already have an exceptional generational demonic power. Indeed, the demonic entities linked to these Luciferian families are a major criterion that will certify the success of a program.

Part of the MK-Monarch process involves participating in blood rituals in order to summon the most powerful demons. Moon Child rituals are dedicated to linking the fetus to demonic entities. The creation of these Moon Child within Project Monarch therefore involves high black magic and powerful demons[467].

Aleister Crowley is the author of the book "Moonchild" which was first published in 1917. The rituals to be applied to capture a soul and create a Moon child are more or less described in three of his works. The magic protocol begins long before the birth of the chosen child, who will obviously have biological parents of a certain lineage. Its conception will be ritualized in a well-defined way, it is no more and no less than to consecrate a child to demons by sexual magic during its conception. Traumas to split the child will begin in the womb, a fetus may be abused in different ways: electroshocks, needle blows, various traumas of the mother affecting the child. The goal is to make him a Magical Child who will serve as a host to a higher entity. The Moonborn would therefore be a kind of avatar raised according to monarch programming to lead his incarnation here on earth by serving a higher order plan. In his book "Blood on the Altar", Craig Heimbichner states that in a secret instruction of the ninth degree of the O.T.O. (Ordo Templi Orientis), it is mentioned the creation of a "Child of the Moon" by the demonic possession of a fetus during a ritualized copulation... This is the legacy of the Assyro-Babylonian tradition, maintained by Satanists like Aleister Crowley.

The film ''Rosemary's Baby'', directed by Roman Polanski in 1968, represents the birth of this demonic Moon child, whose conception was made during a specific ritual. This film depicts an obscure Satanist network whose members are socially unsuspected. Note here that the young singer Kerli, whose very popular video "Walking On Air" (Walking on the air = floating = dissociation) which explicitly represents in its symbolism the programming process Monarch, has named her fans the "Moonchild" (We will return to this young artist in chapter 9 on the entertainment industry).

Childhood is at the centre of all these practices. In Alison Miller's book Healing the Unimaginable, ex-Satanist Stella Katz describes a type of hierarchical organization composed of three Circles illustrating how Satanist/Luciferian networks can work:

- The 'First Circle' of the group in which I was raised includes the members of the group who were born in that First Circle or in the highest echelon of the Second Circle. Children born in this Circle are trained from birth by undergoing programming.

- The 'Second Circle' includes people who were not born into the group but were introduced to it at a very young age, usually before the age of one year. For example, the child of a member of the Third Circle or a child recruited by a babysitter or neighbor. They also receive programming but that will not start as soon as in the First Circle.

- The 'Third Circle' includes people who joined the group in adolescence or adulthood. If these people have children under the age of two, or children of brilliant intelligence under the age of four, then they will join the Second Circle. Older children will remain in the Third Circle. They will be used to "produce" babies, prostitution, or to make "moles" (infiltration, espionage). They are never allowed to attend a ritual closely, they are cloistered in the last rows, their bodies will form the outer circle while turning their backs on the ceremony, or they will be placed further away for the surveillance of the place. People who are introduced into a group in adolescence or adulthood will generally not have dissociative identity disorders because after the age of nine, you can no longer split an individual[468].

Here we find this notion of elitist hierarchy described above, which preserves the blood lines in the First Circle, while the children of the lower levels of the network will be the second-class MK slaves (Third Circle). This example of hierarchical organization shows us the importance that children represent for these cults that can only perpetrate their hyper-violent and murderous practices from one generation to the next through corruption and the programming of a progeny. Mind control based on dissociation is therefore the foundation of this "nameless religion", a systematic programming without which it would probably collapse. In addition, if the "spiritual unlocking" of children stopped, the contact - power and guidance - with the demons would be greatly diminished.

Subjects who go through these systematic MK protocols are also subject to strict rules that constitute the protective cement of the network:

- The law of silence: do not disclose worship activities outside the network.

- Be loyal to past and present abusers.

- Obey all the aggressors of the past and present as well as the alters in charge of the T.D.I. system.

- Do not establish close relationships with people outside the network.

- Maintain a public façade of normality, or madness if there has been banishment of the group.

Loyalty and fidelity to the group as well as the law of silence are therefore the first things that are deeply engraved in the child. But all its programming will be based on three fundamental principles without which the latter could not be maintained over time, it is:

- Terror.

- The rejection of God.

- The link (chaining) to demonic entities.

If the victim is psychologically and physically paralyzed by terror, she will be unable to turn to God for help. In addition, if it is linked/chained to daemons, then the programming will be maintained effectively over time. The sect wants to ensure that all the potential for emancipation and empathy with which the child is naturally born will be totally neutralized, the goal being even to destroy these positive potentials. The victim will also have to feel totally rejected and ignored by God, it is for this reason that the work of spiritual sabotage begins from an early age. Spiritual programming is a very important part of mind control. A traumatized and fractional individual, who is necessarily very unstable and at the mercy of the Luciferian / Satanic doctrines of the programmer, will undergo what may be similar to the alchemical work: "Disolve - Coagula": dissolve to recompose. In the case of the MK-Ultra or the MK-Monarch, this corresponds to the trauma resulting in dissociation, a split (dissolution, tabula rasa), then comes recomposition (programming with a new identity and new functions). The Masonic formula ''ordo ab chao'' (order by chaos) also applies to mind control based on trauma. Indeed, the programmer is the only one who will be able to put order (organization and programming of the internal system) in the psychic chaos that he has voluntarily created in the victim (successive traumas resulting in the bursting of the personality and memories). The MK slave will therefore need the programmer or his master to be able to function again, so that order can return following the chaos... These alchemical formulas are basically neutral, but they can and are used to enslave and control humans. These techniques are all the more effective in a very young child whose subconscious is still a blank page in recording mode.

In MK's elaborate protocols to create a future elite, children are profiled from the age of 18 months. That is, programmers make an assessment of the child's character and personality in order to determine his or her potential. John Gittinger (who joined the MK-Ultra project in 1950) is the designer of the P.A.S. (Personality Assessment System), a personality assessment system for assessing an individual's future behavior. This system makes it possible to distinguish the different types of people and thus to identify the potential of the child in order to adapt his programming for his future role in society. The P.A.S. remained classified as confidential although some of Gittinger's work escaped the secrecy of the intelligence agencies and fell into the public domain[469]. EEG (electro-encephalograms) are also used in parallel with the P.A.S.. These neurological and psychological assessment techniquestherefore provide MK programmers the perfect tool to assess the young child even before he acquires language skills. Thus, they can refine the programming according to each child. This one will therefore follow the script that was established for him from his first years... Later in adolescence and adulthood, he will receive all the necessary support and money from the Network to be strategically injected into society where he will appear with a façade personality[470]. The aim is to place "safe" individuals in key positions, the "weak links" being not possible in such a system. Programming MK makes it possible to optimise the initial potential of individuals and to make them the best in different fields of activity, from politics to high-level sport, scientific and artistic fields.

The child will usually have the same programmer for several years. He will live alternately with his family and with his programmer, his parents will receive specific instructions in order to maintain and strengthen the work in progress. Cathy O'Brien's testimony shows how her father received information about mind control techniques in order to apply them to his children: "Shortly after that, my father flew to Boston for two weeks of classes at Harvard on how to raise me in relation to this branch of the "Monarch" project related to "MK-Ultra". When he returned from Boston, my father was smiling and delighted with his new knowledge of what he called 'reverse psychology'. This is like "satanic inversions", and involves puns such as puns and other phrases that were lubricated in my mind such as: "You earn something to be hosted, and I will host what you ga,gnes." To me, he offered me a babiole, a commemorative bracelet made of small dogs, and to my mother the news that they "would have other children" to raise them in *the project board (I now have two sisters and four brothers whose ages range from 16 to 37 years and who are still subject to the control of the mind). My mother followed my father's suggestions, gradually mastering the art of manipulating langa.ge. For example, when I couldn't close the snaps on my own pajamas up and down, in a childish attempt to deny my father access to them, I would ask my mother, "Please close them to me. " She would execute by pressing her index fingers on my skin as if they were stings. The pain I felt at the time was psychological, as it proved to me once again that she had no intention of protecting me from my father's sexual assaults. While complying with the instructions given to him by the government, my father also began to make me work like the Cinderella of storytelling. I emptied the chimney of its ashes, brought the logs for fire and piled them up, raked the fallen leaves, pounded the ice and swept away - "because, my father said, your little hands are really made for the handle of the rake, the sweeper, the ash shovel and the broom. " At that time, his sexual exploitation of me included prostitution to his friends, mobsters and freemasons from the area, family people, Satanists, strangers and police officers. When I was not made to work to the point of being exhausted, did not film me pa,s in a pornographic way, did not prostitute me or did not embark me in incestuous relationships, I dissociated myself from myself in the books. I had learned to read at the early age of four because of my photographic memory, a natural consequence of my T.D.1*1471]."

The already heavily dissociated state of the child was the open door to initiate a Monarch programming process. Earl O'Brien sold his daughter to a lawless elite who covered up her illegal child pornography in exchange.

A large part of the doctors who practice MK programming are also active in the sects, if they do not participate in the rituals they are at least aware of these occult activities and use the alter created by the traumas in various programs. This is one of the reasons why children born into incestuous, Luciferian/Satanic environments are ideal prey for MK's government projects. It must also be understood that a programmer is himself in a dissociated state when he violently and splits the child to program him. It is usually one of his alter personalities totally devoid of empathy that is in control during these sessions. Most current programmers therefore suffer themselves from a split personality. According to Fritz Springmeier, we are currently in the second or third generation of MK-Monarch slaves, who sometimes became programmers themselves. According to him, it is programmed humans who currently do most of the work in trauma-based mind control.

3 - Break the heart and rewire the brain

a/ the heart

The child will preferably be born prematurely. According to Fritz Springmeier, a premature birth is important because the care deployed for such a baby are "naturally" traumatic: catheter in the bladder, intravenous, oxygen mask, etc.

The Network will ensure that the first thing the child sees at birth is one of the individuals who will program it. Over the months following, the programmer will regularly talk to the baby in a very very gentle, loving and hypnotic so that the latter binds naturally to his future trainer. An infant is in a state of total dependence on parents or guardians and it is growing up that it will have to gradually acquire autonomy and independence. but on the relational level, it will remain for a long time very dependent on the protection and the benevolence of his parents or guardians. This obviously requires a good availability of these to offer the child a presence encouraging, loving and reassuring.

When the parents or guardians are hostile or even sadistic and violent, the child is then faced with a dilemma for which he has no solution; for whatever happens it is obliged to do confidence and to rely totally on his parents, even if he feels a strong negativity emanating from them. He has no choice and faced with this mission impossible, the infant will lose a lot of psychic energy, he will split into a "double thinking", a premise unbundling. The child cannot flee outside, so he will flee to the interior of himself by detachment, passivity, ''absence[472]''.

In the Monarch programming protocol described by Fritz Springmeier, the child will be flooded with love (the "Love bombing", classic sectarian technique) during the first months of his life in preparation for the abrupt withdrawal of care and tenderness from about 1 year and a half. According to Stella Katz, other MK protocols do not wait until the child is 18 months old to split his personality and the (the first basic splits) is done between the age of 6 and 10 months, the Dissociative process that can even begin on a fetus.

This first step described by Springmeier is therefore to brutally deprive the child of all that is tender and pleasant in this world. Through trauma and sensory saturation, it will deeply se dissociate from the harsh reality: caged, electric shocks, nudity, food deprivation, contact and forced consumption of excrement... It's as help arrives: the programmer who previously played a role of "chicken daddy" enters into scene to subject the child to his most sadistic and violent side.

The individual who loved and brooded it for 18 months does not only do that the reject but it even makes it voluntarily suffer. This extreme situation and inextricable created in the child a split in addition to the trauma of premature birth.

During the first few months, a fusion of love between the child and the programmer must necessarily be established in order to create a net fracture during the first major trauma imposed on the child. one "net" fracking of the child occurs when this one is confronted with the extreme duality of a person counting a lot for him. The child cannot reconcile the two totally opposite aspects of the same individual, one being a loving and protective being, and the other the worst executioners. The person in whom the child had the most confidence becomes the one that the child will fear the most. Springmeier names this violence initial which is the first great fraction of a young child: "Break the Heart".

Paradoxically, following this violent rupture will settle an unhealthy attachment between the victim and his executioner. The ambiguity between love and hatred as well as the mixture between pleasure and suffering will be cultivated and maintained permanently in the dissociated child. Stockholm syndrome is a reality and those networks that practice ritual abuse and mind control deliberately exploit it: the victims attach themselves to their executioners.

Dans son livre “Dialogues with Forgotten Voices : Relational Perspectives on Child Abuse Trauma and the Treatment of Severe Dissociative Disorders'' (Dialogues with forgotten voices: the relations between the child trauma related to abuse and treatment of dissociative disorders serious), Harvey Schwartz explains that the shocking absence of any anger against the aggressors is anchored and will remain intact. As if this immersion prolonged in sadistic abuse and extreme trauma had almost completely reversed the system of self-protection of the victim.

Judith Herman describes a process she calls "traumatic bonding" between the victim and the executioner. In her book entitled "Trauma and Recovery", she describes this process as follows: "It is the traumatic link that occurs with the hostages or with the victims of abuse, who see their kidnappers like saviours... The repetition of terror and threats, in in an isolated context, may result in a intense sentiment of dependence, almost of adoration of a certain all-powerful authority almost divine. Some victims reported that they were entering into a kind of of exclusive world, almost delirious, totally embracing the system of grandiloquent belief of the executioner and voluntarily suppressing their own critical thinking, this as a proof of loyalty and submission. Such behaviours are regularly reported by people who have been subjected to totalitarian religious cults[473].

Stockholm syndrome phenomenon is frequently found in hostages.

Brian Keenan was held prisoner for a year in Beirut, Lebanon.

In his autobiography ''An Evil Cradling'' (An Unhealthy Rocking), he describes how he attached himself to his imprisonment: "My days were spent in a slow and gentle delirium, as well as the comfort and security that the child must feel when his mother gave him a lullaby. In my cell, I looked wildly at an insect dead hanged in his cocoon and I then felt a strange contentment. I don't felt no desire to leave this place. I even surprised myself to have a beginning of panic rising in me at the idea of leaving here, I did not want to leave. I then began to fear my freedom if it were to come[474].

The process of attachment to a situation of imprisonment or enslavement is also found in satanic / Luciferian cults practicing MK. The victim grows up in an environment where he or she seems impossible to escape, where it seems impossible to break the attachment ambiguous psychological linking it to its executioners, the latter reinforcing voluntarily this Stockholm syndrome. The programming channels will meticulously weaving a kind of cocoon... the cradle of the slave butterfly Monarch.

This attachment process is reinforced when the individual is feels in danger and that he is in great need of help. This is why ritual abuse sometimes depict a situation where the victim (usually a child) actually believes that she will die, or as we have seen, even go up to cause an N.D.E.. These techniques will create a strong psychological attachment between the "saviour" and the victim totally terrorized and dissociated. It's enforcement the ''firefighter-arsonist'' method, which consists of voluntarily create a disorder to bring "order"...... Always the the same satanic manipulations, whether at the individual level or global.

The programmer therefore works on the attachment between victim and executioner, on trauma addiction, which the German psychoanalyst Karl Abraham called "traumatophilia" (probably related to neurochemistry), but also on the mixture of notions of pleasure and pain, this in order to manipulate the victims and their alter personalities. that "Traumatic attachment" phenomenon or Stockholm is an important point in MK programming because the programmer becomes the only one who may bring order to the inner chaos it has caused in the slave who inevitably relies on him.

the testimony of a victim of mental control having been programmed by Dr.

Joseph Mengele in Kansas City in the early sixties. This testimony is reported by Carol Rutz in her book "A Nation Betrayed": "In basic programming (Alpha), i.e. the traumas aimed at multiplying the number of alters that will then be programmed and used for specific functions in the internal structure; I have a memory of Mengele creating a link specific traumatic. He broke the alter with on one side a fraction that remembered him with great affection (but including much abuse the other faction was totally terrorized by its cruelty. With the first splitting of the alter, he programmed the belief that he was inside it and that he fed and taught it so much so that this fraction of personality attached itself to it and did not want to no longer part with it. Then later, he abruptly rejected it, making it feeling that she no longer had any value, and he abandoned her[475].

Rutz also reports the testimony of a female survivor, repeatedly scheduled by Dr. Joseph Mengele in Florida in 1954 and in Tennessee in 1955 and 1956:

"As he had aged and become greying, he (Mengele) called himself "grandfather". He used the movie "Heidi" with me and he took on the role of Heidi's grandfather. I think the insidious part of his work on me was "love". He loved me and tortured me. he must also have trained my father because he was doing exactly the same thing. One of Mengele's favorite phrases was "Pain is a pleasure and pleasure is a pain my dear. I'm here to give you back very happy. You will love me forever[476]!"

the
most mind control survivors report that programmers induce this unhealthy bond of attachment with their little victims as soon as first years of their lives. Carol Rutz remembers that her programmer, Sydney Gottlieb, repeated to one of her new alters: "I am your mom and dad, you only love me and I am the only one who loves you. I you feed and I carry you, you belong only to me." ... Our "baby part"

(alter) grew up to depend on "Papa Sid" and to love him because he was its only source of love and food. Since then, a deep bond had been workbench. No matter what experiences he had on me, I loved him and I remained faithful to the man that my alter baby considered his only provider of the most basic things to life: love and food[477]."

b/ The brain

American biologist Bruce Harold Lipton has discovered that children build the foundations of their subconscious between birth and the age of 6 years. During this period, we can say that the brain of the child is in save mode. The subconscious shaped during these early years will be the foundation of the psychology of the future adult. Bruce Lipton says all children up to the age of 2 have brain waves in delta frequency, a ultra-slow wave frequency. Then from 2 years to 6 years, the children are most of the time in a theta wave state. those low brain frequencies delta and theta will make the child in a particularly programmable state, a state called "hypnagogic trance". These are: of the same cerebral state that hypnotherapists use to induce new behaviors in the subconscious of their patients. In others Terms, during his first six years, the child spends his life in a kind state of permanent hypnotic trance. That is why at that age they are able to store large of information... and that they keep asking questions. on the other hand the child is unable to critically differentiate the multitude of information that he receives by his five senses, he will record everything as a blank hard drive, incorporating everything as a truth. It is this construction of the subconscious, in a way the programming of the computer, that will lead the future life of the child. Each child is therefore programmed by the way he is brought up and by his life experiences. It's a white slate, a blank hard drive, a piece of clay on a potter's lathe, the question being what will be the nature of the "sculptor"...

Even without dissociative states, it is very easy to program and indoctrinate a child before the age of 6. As we have seen, children from luciferian cults are systematically programmed in first place to remain faithful and loyal to the group. This is the first thing that is deeply inculcated in them, a basis for being able to carry out long-term projects with safe and loyal individuals.

During the 90s, neurobiologists began to understand that the child's brain contained a gigantic number of undefined connections between neurons, waiting to set up according to life experiences. These neurons bind to each other by synapses (or neural connections) that will therefore develop in response to the experience of the child and his or her needs. During the development and learning of the child, these connections will be refined and refined under the effect of the data Incoming. Early childhood experiences therefore have a crucial impact on how the brain will organize its foundations. Experiences traumatic during the first years of life will obviously have a major impact on the deepest basic structures of the brain.

Faced with trauma, the brain must respond to this stress in a way, first of all by a chemical modification with the release of certain hormones, but also by modifying or creating neural connections. The ordinary stimulations of life will enrich in a way neural networks, on the other hand, the high overload what early trauma represents will also have a major impact on synapses. Genes contain information for the organization the structure of the brain but it is the experiences of life that determine which genes will be active, how and when. The expression of these genes is linked to the production of proteins that will allow growth neuronal and the formation of new synapses. It is therefore the experience of the child, both positive and negative, which will act directly on the activation of channels synaptics specific and that will globally shape the neuronal substrate of his brain. Dr. Daniel Siegel calls this ''communicative neurobiology'', which is how the development of the human brain is made according to the child's life experiences. Recent studies in neurosciences have shown that the brain modifies and adapts synapses in the environment and the environment, adult experiences, but it is clear that this process of adaptation neuronal is particularly active during the growth phase of the brain[478].

In an article entitled ''Retraining the Brain: Harnessing our Neuralplasticity'', psychotherapist Janina Fisher writes: ''Since the neuroscience revolution in the early 1970s (with advances radicals in the technology of scanners that have made it possible to study the real-time brain function) we now know that all areas of the brain are "plastic". They are capable of reorganising themselves, of grow new cells and neural networks while making other areas obsolete, this in response to life experiences. the psychiatrist and researcher Norman Doidge, the author of "The Brain That Changes Itself'' (the brain that transforms itself), calls this neuroplasticity: the "plastic paradox".

A child experiencing repetitive and extreme trauma in early childhood (causing dissociation and chemical modification of his brain) will therefore develop a neural network with connections it would not normally develop. So it will use parts of his brain that are not usually used to deal with extreme life experiences. The chemical deregulation of the Traumatized brain will also result in a dissociative addiction that will participate in the enslavement of the slave Monarch. All this work of neuronal construction taking place mainly in early childhood, early trauma will influence both the intelligence quotient and the child's creativity: hyperactivity, hypersensitivity, hypervigilance, hypermnesia, all this leading to potentially on extrasensory perceptions and faculties Paranormal. In a process of MK, a training program and stimulation will work to strengthen certain areas of the brain usually not active. The traumatized child will split into several personalities alter whose physical, intellectual and psychic faculties may therefore be cultivated and exploited during their programming. Severe dissociation resulting from extreme trauma in a young brain under construction therefore leads to a profound modification of the synapses and will develop all three main criteria of monarch-type mind control:

- A multiple personality with amnesic walls.
- Extraordinary physical, intellectual and psychic abilities.
- A 'spiritual unlock" causing the opening of a breach towards other dimensions and a connection with certain entities. This tearing of the soul gives access to the vast inner world of the victim that we talked about in the previous chapter, a dimension where the dissociated soul fragments are located, a dimension which will be arranged and structured by the programmer as we will see later.

The genetics of the child are of great importance because it contains his potential for intelligence and creativity, but it also contains the potential for dissociation and extrasensory faculties. the programming will work to strengthen this or that capacity based on the future role that will be determined and assigned to the child. A weak mind can hardly be programmed with these extreme methods based on traumas.

Individuals who go through this kind of programming based on the T.D.I.

are formatted to exceed the usual 10% of our brain capacity.

Good intelligence and strong creativity of the subject is something extremely important for a programmer. In the MK programming, the stimulation of the right hemisphere (analog and intuitive) or left (logical and analytical) of the brain will be used to make the two sides of the brain independently of the other. These techniques aim to develop and strengthen this or that ability, but also to block certain functions to promote others. Neuros scientist Roger Wolcott

Sperry demonstrated that separate cerebral hemispheres (by callosotomy, "split-brain") could function independently and lead to distinct reasoning from information to which each of these hemispheres had access. Sperry even issued a much debated hypothesis that there are personalities or distinct forms of consciousness within each hemisphere. Just as there are has a personality split during the Monarch process, there is also work done on the fractionation of the brain at the level of

two hemispheres in order to dissociate them, so that they can loncuonnci independently i de i aune.

An alter personality may for example be programmed to work with the left hemisphere while another will lonction with the right hemisphere. The left and right sides of the body, related to the Opposite cerebral hemispheres - the phenomenon of contralaterality - can contain on one side (left) the alters related to occult activities and on the other side (right) the alter of daily and public life. This work of separation of the cerebral hemispheres will also make it possible to integrate programs or memories that will affect only half of the body of the victim (see the testimony of the Australian Kristin Constance in the second part of this chapter, it clearly describes programming techniques aimed at dissociating the left and right parts of the body and therefore from the brain). The process involves disconnecting, or unplugging, one of the hemispheres to be able to work fully with the other and thus be able to feed them with different information. Techniques to stimulate this or that hemisphere may consist in sending for example messages clear and audible in the right ear while the left ear will be saturated by a confused noise. Or to broadcast certain images or certain movies to one eye while the other eye will receive visuals totally different. Part of the brain can watch a bloody horror movie while the other will watch joyful family scenes. This creates obviously a split of the brain and both hemispheres will then work differently, one trying to dissociate himself from the horror scene, while the other will experience something totally different. A alternating personality of façade, of everyday life, will view the scenes joyful by the left hemisphere, by the right eye, thinking of living in a perfect world, while the satanic alters related to the hemisphere r\r*/M fdl Oit, will view the horror scenes through the left eye. These methods of programming may seem grotesque and fall under the control of a bad movie sciencefiction, but reality goes beyond fiction... Especially with the current technology.

To create hyper-intuitive alters and capable of accessing other dimensions of the being, it is necessary to block the hemisphere of the logical, i.e. the left side of the brain. When this hemisphere is ''off'', or put on hold, then the right hemisphere (which controls the side left body) can function fully without being in "competition" with the other hemisphere. When this right hemisphere is working at full capacity diet,the intuitive, subjective and spontaneous side then also works at full throttle. The Monarch subject must thus be able to develop 100% of his intuitive faculties to access certain dimensions. Personalities alter the deepest (related to the darkest occultism) will have this particular programming of the right brain in order to strengthen as much as possible this hyper-intuitiveness creating extrasensory faculties. This mastery of two cerebral hemispheres as well as full access to brain functions right are part of the objectives to be achieved in occultism, the right brain allowing access to timelessness, other spaces-time. THE journalist Pierre Manoury writes about the right brain: "This right hemisphere is too "magical", its truths even when they are obvious are rejected as belonging to the domain of the irrational. The right brain is able to make "bridges", to consider totally new solutions, to receive and integrate feelings, impressions from the collective unconscious, to perceive non-influxes ordinarily admissible by the five senses. It is a source of inspiration. It is he who should be awakened to learn it for acquire magical consciousness[479].''

In contrast, an alter working with the left brain will have great faculties for languages, calculus, mathematics, thought rational and analytical. These are essential capacities to train scientists or computer geniuses who will work for the Network. Cathy O'Brien, whose almost all siblings have been subjected to the Monarch mind control, reports that his brother Tom O'Brien was formatted for be a "Compu-Kid" (literally a Kid-Ordi). That is to say, a computer engineer who has undergone MK programming. In protocols that consist of creating super-slaves, brainstem manipulation is used to create child prodigies who will be able to work in particular on programs overpowered computers. According to Fritz Sprinmeier, this consists of surgery on the brainstem so that the brain faces overcompensation at the level of the scar, resulting in certain faculties such as a photographic memory exceptional. Mental programming work with torture, drugs, hypnosis and T.D.I. improves the memory storage capacity in victims (conscious or unconscious memories).

''Federal researchers involved in the ''Monarch'' project related to "MK-Ultra" knew of course this aspect of photographic memory of the T.D.I., as well as the other "superhuman" characteristics that en resulted. The visual acuity associated with T.D.I. is 44 times higher than that of the average of individuals. My acquisition of a pain tolerance threshold abnormally high, added to the compartmentalization of my memory, were ''necessary'' for applications related to military and other activities covert operations. My sexuality had also been distorted from childhood.

The appeal and usefulness of such programming (editor's note: mannequin) were addressing perverse politicians who thought they could hide their actions in the depths of my compartmentalized memory, to which clinicians refer to as so many personalities.''

Just like dissociation, the creativity of the child is an important point for the success of MK-Monarch programming. It is for this reason that the programmer will stimulate it to the maximum. The child is naturally creative and it is very easily built an imaginary world. His programmer can tell him stories, scripts or programming scenarios in a very pictorial and very lively way so that it is deeply impregnated in the child's mind: the goal being that the child can "touch", ''taste'' and ''feel'' truly the scenario staged in its mind. Terror and drugs improve the focus of the little victim so that it can integrate a world as well as possible and as deep as possible into itself imaginary and fantastic. As we saw in the previous chapter, the Creativity is strengthened at the neurological level by the traumas of the early childhood; if everything has been in order and harmony in a person's life, his truly creative energy will not work or very little.

For creativity to be optimized, it must be channeled. According to Fritz Springmeier, the programmer will therefore carefully guide the the child's creativity and defining its limits, the spark of creativity is producing when there is an alternation between concentration (focusing) intense and relaxing (relaxation). The programmer will therefore work at once the suffering side with torture (focus) and the goodness side with a safe and benevolent attention (relaxation). A light trance will allow creative ideas to surface, a process that artists know well. In the context of Monarch programming, creativity as dissociation must be taught and encouraged because if the child does not does not develop these abilities, it may end up losing reason and eventually life. The richness of his creativity will feed his world imaginary that plays the role of a lifeline just as dissociation is a circuit breaker of relief. Dissociation and creativity work together to preserve in a way the life of the child in the face of traumatic horrors[480].

Monarch programming also works with what is called Biofeedback, or biofeedback. Blood pressure, pulse rate, heart rate, body temperature or body part, etc., can be controlled consciously and voluntarily by the brain. These are capabilities psychophysiological that Indian yogis have mastered for centuries.

control of blood pressure, among other things, as well as capacity to reach deep states of trances in a controlled manner, are faculties that are programmed in an MK subject. According to Fritz Springmeier, in the framework of a Monarch programming, it is about controlling the physical body of the victim in order to reinforce this phenomenon of "doll" totally submissive and controlled by an external master. If a programmer has the power, by a hypnotic trigger, to modify for example the heart rate, the blood pressure or body temperature of the subject, he will feel neither more and no less like a doll or a toy that is activated biological function at will. The body, as much as the spirit of the slave is the property of the master and the slave is not allowed to control his own body,it is the alter personalities that are subjected to these feedbacks biologicals caused by external triggers[481].

4 - The multiplication of alter personalities

The methods and protocols for deliberately creating an I.D.T.

in a victim in order to program it certainly vary from one group to another but the basics remain the same.

Alpha programming consists of establishing the first personality fragments that will serve as the basis/root to create all the other alters which will be compartmentalized in different groups and levels of the system internal.

Survivor Stella Katz described the protocol of the satanic cult, to which she belonged, for splitting the children's personality: the first split of the child, the alter primitive, is called the "firstborn" (Firstborn) and he will have a caretaker role for the child. All other alter personalities will be created from this ''firstborn'' (It is interesting to note here that in some shamanic cultures, there are different techniques for that the very young child obtains a "guardian-spirit", in particular by the use of hallucinogenic drugs. The "guardian spirits" of shamans arethey dissociated alter personalities? Some authors think so but one thing is certain, it is that the occultism that lies behind the Satanic/Lutheran mind control is in direct connection with a ancestral knowledge present in the four corners of the planet. A knowledge whose central point is the dissociation of the human psyche).

Then Stella Katz describes the second personality split that she names the Gatekeeper. A alter who will always be present when creating a new personality alter. The "gatekeeper" will not suffer any more trauma (division) following his birth, his role is to observe everything that happens and save all new alters created. According to Stella Katz, these two first alter to the role of "guardians" will be the same age as the body physical, they will grow at the same time because they no longer receive trauma after birth. Katz claims that the alter who will be in charge of the system, the one to which all others will have to submit, is designated during a traumatic rebirth ceremony in an animal carcass. It is then he who will control all the other alter related to the practices occults: ''If an already existing alter emerges during rebirth, he will become the new leader, because if this alter is strong enough to support the rebirth ceremony without leave the body, it will be strong enough to direct the entire system, therefore he deserves this position[482].

she also explains that the process of personality splitting must do themselves meticulously in order to be able to obtain alter controllables and exploitable: "We (by this I mean the group with which I worked) voluntarily split the child because when he splits by himself, without being guided, the alters who are then created are unable to become productive members for the group, they can not be controlled. We are aware that a child who has to endure all the pain and torture we inflict on him would die if he did not have parts in him to absorb the trauma. It is also important that the child we are training has a "normal" personality that is acceptable to the outside world. A personality that can go to school and play with it children outside without showing or disclosing anything[483].

The years following the first major splits forming the basic alters will see successive sessions of unimaginable trauma in order to create a multitude of fragments separated from one another by amnesic walls. The dissociative process is the keystone for the programming and so everything will be done to cause these modified states of consciousness: a violent psychic and spiritual opening. During sessions,a strong pressure is put on the child to encourage him to escape from the pain by dissociating himself, by crossing the mirror, it thus escapes u an unbearable siiuanun by accessing others dimensions of being. Dissociation in the face of extreme trauma and obvious death threat, paradoxically manifests itself in a sudden calme and surprising with an absence of fear and pain, regardless of the severity violence. It is the neurochemical result of the dissociative process that we have described in Chapter 5. In this state, the victim then becomes mental speed and a kind of expansion of the notion of time[484].

In such a dissociated and hypnotic state, the child then becomes hyper-receptive to learning and programming. That's why that during the trauma programming sessions, the child is verbally encouraged to dissociate, pass through the mirror or go beyond the rainbow to escape pain = the breaking point.

Many survivors describe this state as profound dissociation as a basic and neutral state, without any identity. Ellen P. Lacter reports the case of a survivor who compares this to some kind of key USB for a computer: a simple object on which we will write some thing. We find in this comparison the principle of "tabula rasa", the virgin slate described by the fathers of social engineering of the Tavistock Institute.

According to some MK survivors, an experienced programmer can easily recognize the "breaking point", it is to say the moment when a new alter is created. This is the time when the child no longer reacts to terror and pain. Each new fragment, or alter, will be immediately named with a code, a first name, etc.

Extreme dissociation will unlock the subconscious, it somehow lays bare the mind and allows to record information without that the latter is able to question or criticize anything for there are no longer any emotional barriers or self-awareness. This door towards the subconscious would be accessible before the victim creates a new aiter (which repatriates-ie has a protective ionction), this is a window deeply dissociated psychic where no aiter is yet in control of the physical body. It is in these states of deep dissociation, or the subconscious is totally unlocked, that are installed the structures of the inner world, deep dissocitative states also leaving the door open to entities that will play a role in maintaining the programming. Entities that are not perceived by victims as doing part of their personality splitting, they are "foreign bodies" in the internal system of the T.D.I.. They are "installed" (demonization) by the programmer when the child is totally dissociated and unlocked. THE information,structures, programming stored in the subconscious

when opening this window will never be consciously integrated by the different alters, these are data that are much deeper but that will greatly influence and control the slave MK- Monarch.

During MK sessions, the victim's brain can be monitored to detect the right time when brain waves will make it possible to integrate programming as well as possible.

the

German psychologist Hans Ulrich Gresch, himself a survivor of MK, describes it as follows:

this programming process when the "breaking point" is reached: "To obtain this "blank slate", the torture must continue until the victim ceases to resist, up to the point of total submission when it abandons any personal will. Then the programmers push the process again further, until you get this state of "virgin slate"... It was then that the victim becomes calm and receptive. This process is a physiological reaction torture when applied "correctly" (...) The victim reaches a state in which he becomes extremely impressionable, a state deeply hypnotic in which she is ready to accept everything. Thanks to this state of hyper-receptivity, programmers can then implement a "personality", a personality script (...) This new state (alter) will not consciously record the torture that was used to create it. But this terror and this Unconscious pain will continually fuel his receptivity and his hypervigilance. Although the dissociative state isolates the way (memory) of which this experience has occurred, it remains inscribed to some extent in his mind. The programmed information will be kept in such a way that intact,with very little deterioration over time, largely thanks to

to a network of neurons that will connect this information with pain and the terror that preceded their implantation[485].

Programmers therefore focus mainly on the creation of a dissociation in the victim. Through the use of torture and drugs, they manage to disconnect from consciousness experiences that will remain siloed in the dissociated identities they have created. It is no more and no less than to exploit the functions of natural neurological defenses that we have described in Chapter 5. The book ''Ritual Abuse and Mind Control: The Manipulation of Attachment Needs'' contains the testimony of a survivor of MK which describes this process of creating alter: "What the programmer was doing, for example, was starving you, making you spin

(rotatingchair) for hours, you undergo certain frequencies sound,attach yourself to inflict electric shocks on you until that it detects the moment when your mind has "broken" (the breaking point) and that it sees that you have left your body (dissociation). That's where he's going to give you another name, he's going to name this new alter and he's going to give you another name, he's going to name this new alter and he's going to give him another name.

say for example: "You are an Egyptian goddess and your life is dedicated to the death and destruction." There will be a ritual where people are dressed with dresses, singing and burning things. At first, for my conditioning and my programming, I was taught how to kill animals and how torture other children, and subsequently many other things[486]..."

Stella Katz describes the process according to the practices of the group to which she belonged: "The programmer observes carefully the child. It is believed that a split occurs when the child's cries become peculiar (...) when his eyes disgust, that he relaxes suddenly and suddenly becomes silent. At that time, the programmer has a window ranging from fifteen seconds to one minute in which he will name the child's new alter and assign him a color and a magic symbol. The programmer wears this color with a black symbol on the shoulder or chest. Then he takes the child and wraps him in a cover of the same color. The child then receives a lot of attention and of affection lasting approximately one hour. It is fed, washed, changed and pampered. He is continually spoken in his own language, which perhaps that or not of his mother, using his new name which has just been to him saddened. Then ennn it is rocked to wander asleep (...) this process can take a few hours or days depending on the children[487].

Survivor Trish Fotheringham describes the dissociation and programming as follows: "Their abuses were carefully scheduled. My trainers (programmers) used enough trauma to accomplish their goals. ''Smoke and mirrors'' (deceptions and illusions, accompanied by drugs) made each specific aspect of the training (programming) was related to a particular alter personality, and this in a very studied way. For maximum efficiency and potential, the science of the child's mental development was taken into account in order to adapt programming levels. These trainings, which my alter understood as "life lessons", gradually became more frequent and more traumatic as I grew up (...)

''I'', the person ati managed the daily life at home and at

theexterior, was not aware that alternative personalities held others pieces of my life. It seemed natural to me that my life was broken in pieces,so the "holes" in my schedule went unnoticed. THE chronological continuity was something unknown to me, I could not so not realize that there was a discontinuity. I wasn't at the current that a dissociated way of life had been established and that in order to be able to do in the face of difficulties, my brain would break down to just create another

Alpha programming will form the basis of the system by creating a some number of alter primaries forming a kind of foundation. Then these alter will in turn be split into a multitude of fragments potentially programmable. These fragments of soul, or personality, are sorts of neutral and empty files waiting for programming. A basic alter, or primary, can therefore itself be split into a multitude others "sub-alter" by repetitive traumas, and so on...

just like Russian dolls attached to the same large doll. It is a a real programming chain that is set up. Survivor Kathleen Sullivan describes how his father split his alters on the chain

Primary: "Although non-traumatic hypnosis could have been effective in controlling my mind, Dad clearly preferred programming based on traumas to create a new system (group) of alter. It triggered (called) first a primary alter that he had previously created, and when this alter emerged he tortured him (with electricity for example) until what this fragment can no longer withstand the pain. By dissociating itself, this alter gave way to another part of my mind (a new fragment) to endure the next trauma. Dad called it the j and · and assembly line programming technique. He traumatized the alters one after the other, verbally assigning everyone a code name, until I could not no longer at all and that this process stops on its own. At this stage, it knew he had gone as far as he could. He will then start a another day in another session, again bringing out a primary alter to traumatize him and thus create a new series of personalities linked to this primary alter (...) He often repeated that I was his prototype and he explained to me that if a technique worked well with me, he would then use it on others children[489]."

The internal system, which is nothing more than the creation and deliberate exploitation of an I.D.T., can therefore become a kind of complex family tree composed of a multitude of dissociated and amnesic alters. It is then indispensable to programmers and to the masters to have a kind of mind map (map cognitive) or structural scheme with access codes to be able to manage the multiple Monarch slave. The "masters" being the people who will have to their loads the MK (second-class) slave after programming is complete.

In altered states of consciousness and profound dissociation, the programmer will be able to integrate the "software", or programs, in the different personality fragments to give them various functions. There are therefore has several stages of development of alter. Some may be ''collateral damage'', i.e. fragments created involuntarily during trauma and unexploited, some may have been left voluntarily side because inoperable (this is the reason why we sometimes finds a "discharge" in the inner world, containing the alter untapped), some may be fragments trained to obey simple and basic controls, in a robotic way. But the alter can also be trained and perfected by following a longer and more complex packaging process in order to program functions much more elaborate and specific. Most alters a Monarch topic will only take control of the body when they are called (with trigger codes) by programmers or masters.

The alters will be organized, or "housed", in different levels, or layers, of the subject's internal system. Like folders in a computer, the data must be easily accessible and especially not mix, hence the importance of "amnesic walls" to partition the fragments of personality and all the memories they contain. The many alter will be grouped into "blocks" or groups bringing them together according to the different categories of activities to be assigned and programmed. The programmer organizes and assembles these multiple fragments and groups as he wants With structural schemes, symbols, subsystems, access codes, scripts, etc. It is really a question of creating a hyper-structured internal world to house all the different alter personalities and to obviously be able to navigate and navigate easily. All data of a child's programming are recorded in a notebook or a laptop that the programmer keeps up to date regularly. This data include what was done on the child, the time it took to create a splitting and what worked best to achieve this splitting. The names of alter personalities are archived with their order the sex of the alter, the language he speaks, as well as the colours,symbols and associated words or phrases (the triggers). It is also specified the function of each alter and what is the type of "physical body" that has been programmed to him: human, animal, robot, etc. All this information will be transmitted to the different masters successive who will be in charge of the exploitation of the slave Mnnarch

This multitude of alters will be organized into a very strict hierarchy where each fragment will have a very specific function. Satanic cults / Luciferians are themselves organized in a very hierarchical way, they therefore reproduce this pyramid scheme inside the victim for strengthen loyalty to the organization of worship. The highest alters in this inner hierarchy will be those who have received the worst abuses and who will have been forced to carry out the worst atrocities themselves. These are the alter the darkest and deepest of the system, those related to the darkest occultism. The executioners take pleasure in making believe in the child that he is so bad that no one would want him, except the group in which he lives. The child is programmed to believe that he is he himself an executioner, an aggressor and a criminal rather than a victim and if he never begins to remember some memories this programming will overwhelm him. As we saw in the chapter on ritual abuse, it is about creating children of rage. These alter personalities will have the function of reminding the victim that she is just a killer or rapist who will go to hell when she dies. THE the natural human function of choosing good over evil, and to feel empathy towards others is a target to be destroyed in the child undergoing MK programming. Monarch-type programming withdraws free will from the victim, forced abuse of animals and other children take away this opportunity to make the right choices. THE taste of dissociation, adrenaline and endorphins that relieve its own traumatic memories, ends up prevailing over natural empathy. This systematic programming on violence allows these groups to continue their existence through the generations. It is necessary to recall once again that such a hyper-violent culture cannot continue without there being has a systematic implementation of the corrupting ''Initial Violence'' the innocence of childhood from the first years of life. Generally, a alters of the system will identify with its aggressor. Most patients with a T.D.I. have a fraction of their personality that represents the executioner, with the same type of sadistic and violent behavior. In a study published in 1997, Dr. Colin Ross found that out of 236 patients with a T.D.I., 84% said they had an alter persecutor / executioner: "At the first meeting, they were terrible, detestable, just like demons totally focused on abuse and harassment mischievous patient."

In the case of Monarch programming, the alter executioner is voluntarily created and programmed with the characteristics of the programmer, often it will even bear the name or pseudonym of it. The victim will then have to carry out his orders even when he is not present, it is as well as it goes so far as to implant itself in the victim's mind. This alter 'executioner' will have for role of permanently maintaining the presence of the programmer in the victim in order to control it by supervising all the alter. It goes much further that a simple obedience is here the internal injection of the predator. The sect thus cultivates the predatory side of his offspring by voluntarily creating executioners fed by an inner rage. It is these ultra-violent alters who have tower will become aggressors and sometimes programmers on other small victims. Survivor Svali explains that many trainers (programmers) will get into the victim, in order to supervise internal programs... The survivor can be horrified to discover a representation of his own executioner in himself, but this is a survival mechanism... The survivor (the alter executioner) will be able to reproduce the mimics, the accent, the manners and even tell the life of the programmer as his own

Kathleen Sullivan also writes: "Because I have had a lot of conflicts and struggles myself to accept the side "bad" or "demonic" of my personality, I understand why some strongly dissociated survivors do not want to believe that their Alter malevolent or "obscure" personalities are pieces of their own original personality. My personality has been polarized with on one side the "too good" and on the other the "too bad". This prevented me from merge the two and be able to integrate it into a single personality balanced. Acceptance of our fully human "dark side" requires a great courage but also a strong will to forgive oneself[490]."

Generally speaking, when a programmer implants something in the victim, it will be at some level a reflection of himself, all as writing and art reflect the person who produced them. Although the comparison between artistic creation and mental programming may seem moved,it is not for programmers.

Military or political groups program their killers using indoctrination and training for the child to split become an elite soldier. These children will usually be tortured for produce alter personalities who can commit acts of extreme extreme cruelty without having to face the psychological consequences. In Uganda, the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) practices this kind of training based on trauma and mind control, the victims are the "child soldiers".

A Canadian documentary entitled "Uganda Rising" (2006) was devoted to these children forcibly integrated into the ranks of the LRA. These children who were forcibly abducted from their families (often decimated) say that they have been subjected to torture, mutilations, rapes, that they were sometimes forced to commit murders before being parked in camps and used as soldiers. The documentary does not talk about ritual abuse or mind control but the strategy seems to be the same.

In Monarch programming, a large part of alter personalities will be dehumanized and conditioned to believe that they are other something that a human being. The dehumanization of an alter will be done by making him live for example the extreme conditions of an animal in a cage. All as for the magical surgery that we will describe later, all kinds of mind manipulations can be done to implant in alter the belief that he is a cat, a goddess, a robot, a puppet, etc...

One or more alters will be programmed to make the rapporteurs. That is to say that they will be conditioned to record everything and to report disobedience or disclosure of secrets to the executioners by the slave. These alter "rapporteurs" are also programmed to inform the cult on all the movements that the victim makes. Which is paradoxical, it is that this type of alter is conditioned by pain and terror for believe that the executioners "know (already) everything" and that he himself will be punished if it does not report what the victim is doing.

So that the Monarch slave can function properly in society without being detected, it needs an alter personality of façade, a a kind of shell masking the multiple state of the individual. This is the "host" personality, or "public figure", is the personality the main one which behaves "normally" and which is totally amnesic of the abuse and the existence of the internal system with multiple alter. The therapist

Alison Miller calls this type of alter the "personality" apparently normal". Most of the alter personalities will be dehumanized,while this one will be allowed to be human, to have a the host personality is generally well oriented in space and time, i.e. it is evolves according to our schedule, while many others will be stuck in the space-time where the traumas happened. To understand how does the interface between this host personality and others work alter, let's take the example of a known case of a hypnotic experience of Peter Janet: Janet hypnotizes Lucie to make her execute suggestions post-hypnotics. Lucie executes the orders but she forgets everything immediately afterwards. On the other hand, another of Lucie's alter named Adrienne recalls everything that happened when Lucie was hypnotized and she states that it was even she who executed the posthypnotic suggestions without that Lucy be aware of it. This is an amnesia going only in a only sense. The amnesic wall isolates the host personality but some alter that do not undergo this wall are fully aware of the existence of this host personality and keep the memory of all his actions. In the Monarch programming, so the host personality is totally ignorant of the programming but the deepest alters of the T.D.I. system, the most Theyare perfectly aware of its existence and they can therefore control. According to therapist Elle P. Lacter, it is usually put in place a fundamental structure that separates the system of alter personalities in two parts. The "host" side that will not be aware of the existence of the T.D.I. system, then on the other side the group of deeper alters, linked to occultism,which they will be aware of the existence of these personalities of surface and who will even be able to control them.

The internal system of an MK slave therefore includes one or more compartmentalized and totally amnesic host personalities, various personalities alter with different functions installed more or less deeply in the system, and finally it always remains the core, the essence of the "Me", the original personality that Satan (or the programmer) can not touch or destroy. He can just isolate it as best he can, but that seed divine will always be present in the victim for his restructuring and eventual healing. Alter personality detected as the youngest is probably the original personality from which the others split.

Some alter will also have a denial programming. Their purpose is to deny the ritual abuse and all the occult activities of the network. If Leaks occur, their purpose is to put forward explanations like "false memories", nightmares that are by no means real, a book or a film that could have influenced the person, etc. These alter personalities thus believe that they preserve the victim and that they even save him from the life. These alter have a direct interest in doing so: they believe that their even existence and their survival depends on it and only if an awareness real on traumatic events occurred, violence and even the death would then occur to punish them for not having done their job. This Denial programming begins in the early years of the child's life.

For example, he will be terribly abused and traumatized, and then the next morning the adults around him act normally, as if nothing had happened. This is how they model in children a lifestyle based on the denial. This is reinforced by phrases like: "It was just a bad dream",

"How can you believe such a thing?", "It's just your imagination,it didn't really happen." Members of the family suffering from dissociative states will also be in some denial concerning hidden night activities. Denial is also reinforced by telling the child that no one will believe him anyway if he talks about it. THE

the end goal is to format the child so that he no longer trusts his own reality, but that he instead turns to adults to know the reality. For example, the adult will show the child an orange and ask him what it is and the child will be abused systematically when he replies that it is an orange and he will be hammered that it's an apple... The process will repeat itself until the child, terrorized and fearing the pain, replies that it is an apple and even ends up y believe![491]!...

Another method to prove to the child that his memories are unreliable is to stage the simulation of the murder of a person in which the child is forced to participate. The next day, the child will see this a living person in front of him, when she is supposed to have been murdered before his eyes the day before, resulting in a form of cognitive dissonance. If the child asks questions, he will be told that this atrocious event was surely only a bad dream and a product of his imagination. Due to the fact that victims often experience traumatic amnesia with a Chronological bursting of memories, it is very easy for people who have the power over their lives to convince them that nothing has happened to them.

When parents tell the little victim that his nightmares or his flashbacks are pure imagination and that kind of thing doesn't happen

Monarch trauma-based mind control is practiced on children before the age of 6. After this age, it becomes more complicated to practice this kind of programming working with a T.D.I., but this does not mean that people are not programmed after the age of 6. personality fragments induced by trauma and dissociation remain better isolated in the mind than personality fragments induced by simple hypnosis, but most people can be hypnotized to elicit alter personalities. Some survivors of satanic ritual abuse have been programmed but they do not have an internal system with alter personalities, they have only a few dissociative states, such as a nocturnal self, and a diurnal self! 492).

5 - The "magic surgery" and the structuring of the "inner world"

To understand what we are talking about here, it must be understood that the monarch slave went through a traumatic process of psychic and spiritual splitting that opens the doors to others dimensions of being. He thus has access to an inner world (going far beyond his head) very vast and also real than is the physical world for us, a world composed of its different fragments of soul (alter), demonic entities and material set up as part of the programming. This inner world, or "internal system", will be arranged by the programmer with different structures,architectures, objects, landscapes, etc., representations material or symbolics serving as a support for working in this special dimension. It is sometimes possible to identify the type of sect having perpetuated programming by the type of structures and symbols that form the inner world. The hierarchical organization of alter personalities also often the type of group that has programd the victim, it can be a military, satanic, druidic, Kabbalist, neo-Nazi, etc. group.

"Magic surgery" is a tool used to feed and organize this internal system. It consists in hypnotizing and / or drugizing the child by telling him that we are going to operate on him to insert an object or an animal into him.

The surgical operation will only be a staging as a result of which the child will believe that he actually has this object inside him (this programming is supposed to remain implemented throughout its life). Pain extreme may be caused at the place of surgery and blood may be spread out on him to reinforce his belief that he has truly undergone a surgical intervention. The child knows from which object or animal he it is and what is its function. It is programmed to believe that this "thing" placed in him will attack it, explode or denounce it, if ever it speaks,that from now on she scrutinizes his thoughts and that she will influence him to become nasty and to have bad behaviors. The child is programmed to believe that these foreign bodies will torment and harass him if he does not does not conform to the doctrines of worship. Ritually abused children often report somatizations such as abdominal pain in relationship with this phenomenon of "magic surgery".

in the file of the minutes and depositions of the Dutroux case, page 261 contains a letter from one Van Aller dated December 13, 1996 referring to what amounts to magical surgery. This is a testimony about ritual abuses that would be practiced in villas by Dutch notables: "We cause for example these disorders (T.D.I.) by making small children believe that we introduce into them a cat that will grow up and that will become a panther who will watch them if they want to talk or leave the clan, this allows continuous control, even in adults, it makes all the perpetrators, victims. TDI are maintained by psychotherapists![493]). "

A British psychiatrist has reported an example of mind control based on the same principle: the child is forced to eat a spider and he is told that it will multiply and that all these spiders will then the monitor from the inside. By being forced to eat maggots, the child will believe that they can turn into flies that will go and denounce it to his aggressors if he speaks. Fritz Springemier says that the "Penis of Osiris Gold" is placed inside the Monarch slaves. It can also be the "Eye of Lucifer" or "the Eye of Horus" which is placed in the child's womb to observe and monitor him permanently. This

Abstract monitoring process of the inner world seems to be some something essential and systematic in MK programming. It may also be told to the child that his heart of flesh has been replaced by a black stone and cold, thus reinforcing its dehumanization in the face of horror. This and cold, thus reinforcing its dehumanization in the face of horror. This

"magic surgery" has as its only limit the imagination of the executioners programmers. The possibilities are endless, because everything in this pnysic monae can be transferred to the inner world. But as we will see by the rest, this very malleable inner world can also be used to help the survivor during therapy.

In the human brain, the right hemisphere and the left hemisphere are connected together by the corpus callosum, it is the mediator and it is thanks to to him that rational analyses are possible. But this structure does not reach maturity until around the age of 10. The experiences of the right brain (who perceives the world in raw data) of a child are therefore not transmitted to the left brain for rational analysis. The left hemisphere translates perceptions into semantic and phonetic data, in other words into word, in concepts and language. Before its tenth year, many things will so remain unconscious for the child because the informative network of his brain is not yet fully built. As long as the corpus callosum is not fully developed, the child may, for example, perfectly believe that the Father

Christmas will bring him his gifts on December 25 in his living room, while knowing that it is too big to go through the fireplace! [494]). The process of "magic surgery" therefore exploits this lack of maturity cerebral. Children under the age of 10 may believe that they have been inserted into them a doll's house, a castle, a merry-go-round or an animal because it has not yet the possibility of rationalizing something so fanciful. It is not a question of no naivety or "imaginary reverie" on his part, but on the part of a cerebral limitation which in the context of MK programming allows a manipulation for formidable mind control. These "surgeries" the child receives them in states of trance, extreme dissociation and under the influence of drugs.

Before the age of 5 or 6, the young child is absolutely not endowed with all the brain abilities to defend himself against "Invasive" mind control. The cerebral cortex that makes it possible to reason, ae

to make deductions, to think in order to analyse situations logically, to make decisions, manage emotions or show morality and to organize, is absolutely not mature before the age of 6, age from which it begins to become so only very gradually. So we understand why some sources claim that MK programming must be implanted before the age of 6.

The supports, or structures, used to organize the inner world can be introduced or "programmed" in other ways than "magic surgery". Here are some examples of media that can be used to to structure and organize the internal system of a T.D.I. These things have been reported by survivors and therapists:

The double helix (symbol of infinity), letters or symbols, 2D geometries such as the pentagram, triangle or circle, geometric volumes elaborated in 3D, dolls, cobwebs, mirrors or shards of glass, chessboards (duality of the black checkerboard and white with arrangement of the parts according to the programming), masks, castles, labyrinths, temples, pyramids, walls to strengthen amnesia, alien monster demons, robots, shells, hourglasses, clocks, butterflies, snakes, suns representing the god Ra, ribbons, flowers, diagrams of controls, computer circuits that can serve as an organization chart for complex programming. A two-dimensional grid can contain a category of alter housed and operating on the same level. A third dimension can be created to form a cube whose each face will correspond to a particular level of the internal system with a particular category d'alter. A cube that can rotate according to the alter group that must be accessible. This cubic structure is placed in an elevator shaft spiral such as DNA: by this system, the alter can "go up"

(emerge) or "descend" (sink) as needed.

The complexity of the structures will vary according to the child's abilities to memorize them and to represent them in his inner world.

The Tree of Cabalistic Life (Sephiroth tree) is a structure that has also been reported by survivors of MK and that seems to be an essential element for the inner organization of the slave. The alter "Key" of the fractional painter, Kim Noble, represented the cabalistic tree in several of his works, notably in his painting entitled "Seven Level" (seven levels) appearing to describe point by point the programming process (a painting that is analyzed later in this chapter and visible in Annex No. 4). The Sephiroth tree represents the structure of man and the universe. It contains and sets to provision a coherent and ready-to-use "system" of correspondence:

each Sephiroth (world, dimension, field of consciousness) is associated with a number, a planet, a note, a quality, a

It isa perfect structure for organizing and classifying the multiple alter personalities, the fragments of souls. This tree cabalistics basically represents the structure of man and different worlds, the parallel dimensions we talked about in the chapter preceding.

According to Fritz Springmeier, some geometric shapes incorporated into the slave's inner world serve as focal points for entities demonics, these are doors through which demons can enter the human body. Indeed, geometries giving off a certain wave of shape are used in magic rituals in order to interact with others dimensions.

one another structure that we find is the carousel, a classic merry-go-round with wooden horses that go up and down while turning in circles. THE carousel is also part of the systems for structuring the inner world and accessing its different levels. It will be used to "go up" or down" the alter personalities during trance states and of dissociation. In his autobiography "Thanks For The Memories", the former "presidential model" Brice Taylor describes this inner carousel as follows: "That day, the carousel was created in my mind, I was standing in the middle of this carousel while programming was done slowly as you went along that he was turning. Then he stopped at Henry's request in a place of my mind, just like the "Wheel of Fortune". He then said to me:

"There is a whole other world in the files of your mind. The carousel allows the files contained in your head to rotate easily and without effort" (...) I was not able to recover the entirety of this memory, because it turned like a merry-go-round , swirling and rotating like a spinning top, so I could not the seize to remind me of it. This programming is called "programming of rotation", it is intended to disorient and induce confusion! [495]]."

When the victim undergoes an extreme rotation on a swivel chair, it makes him sick and terrified, he goes through all kinds of physical and emotional sensations. These sensations will be transferred in alter personalities who have control of the body at that time and who therefore undergo this treatment. Later, these sensations of spin programmed will be triggered by these alters whenever the individual himself will recall anything about the abuses, this memory will go back with the sensation of whirlwind that will cause mental confusion and unhappiness physical.

here is how survivor Svali describes the protocol her group used to insert a structure into the child's inner world, in order to accommodate there one or more alter:"The structures will be integrated into the inner world of the victim when she is drugged, under hypnosis, and undergoing electroshocks. The person is totally traumatized and in a that we will force you to open your eyes and look at the projection of an image of the structure. This can be a 3D model of it, a holographic image or by using a virtual reality headset. The image will be "injected and printed" using successive shocks and bringing it closer more and more in the field of vision of the subject. He may be ordered to enter the interior of the structure if it is a temple or a pyramid. Under the effect of deep hypnosis, they (alter personalities concerned) will now live "within" this structure. This one will also be used to enhance amnesia and programming of of internal isolation, this structure will strengthen the partitioning walls between the fragment of personality that is enclosed in it and the others alter the system."

Alter personalities can be imprisoned within these structures, or they can be connected to them or connected to them by various manners. Alters define themselves by the reality that the programmer implanted them. Objects, structures and symbols are therefore used to organize and control the internal system but it is also structured with scenarios or scripts serving as pictorial supports and the symbolic ones on which the programmers will rely to shape the alter. Generally speaking, everything that usually makes a child dream will be used to program it. A book, film or video game can in theory be used as a support for MK programming, especially effectively on young children. It's about encrypting your mind with themes of fairy tales or other fantasy scenarios in order to sow the confusion between imaginary and reality, i.e. being straddled by two worlds. "Alice in Wonderland" is a classic programming script, just like "The Wizard of Oz" or some Disney productions like "Pinocchio" the carved wooden puppet and "Cinderella", the filthy little slave who turns into a magnificent princess. THE Monarch slaves, or rather their alter personalities, are conditioned to be placed in scenarios of this kind in order to reinforce the effect of the programming. So they live in a totally imaginary world. Some Script sentences will serve as an encrypted language implanted to control the slaves. In Alice in Wonderland, the little girl must follow the white rabbit that allows her to access places mysterious and normally inaccessible. As part of an MK programming, this white rabbit is an important figure, it represents the master or the programmer who hypnotizes his victim or incites him to dissociate himself from reality to access an alternative world during torture. The famous move to through the mirror represents access to a dissociative state, a change of reality. The programmer encourages the child to cross the mirror like Alice, he urges her to pass the door to another dimension of his being, the mirror being the door that will facilitate the programming... In the movie "Matrix", when Neo comes out of the matrix for the first time, it touches a mirror that becomes liquid and that ends up completely covering it to engulf it and lead it in another world... where it will be deprogrammed. To get there, Neo had followed the white rabbit tattooed on the shoulder of a woman... These are very strong symbols, rooted in this occult culture. In The Wizard of Oz, the subject dissociates itself from reality by going beyond the rainbow ("Somewhere over the Rainbow", "somewhere beyond the rainbow" which is the theme song of the film), i.e. by going beyond terror and pain through dissociation. Horror then becomes a dream, reality becomes fiction and the imaginary world becomes reality. The dissociated victim will register the trauma as a illusion, a reality that she has lived for a while, but which is nevertheless recorded by the mind as a kind of dream. This is a crypto-amnesia that sabotages the usual process of memorization by trauma and hypnosis. The inner world of the slave becomes his "reality" and the outside world becomes for example the land of Oz. Note that in some Shamanic cultures, the celestial ascent is done by the overlap of therainbow. A considerable number of cultures see the rainbow as a bridge connecting earth and heaven, a bridge between gods and men. It is often by the rainbow that mythical heroes reach the sky, its climbing used to reach the spirit world. The "men- medicine" ascend to the celestial spheres using, among many other means, therainbow. It would seem that the MK-Monarch programming techniques take up this symbolism of the rainbow which represents no more and no less than than a dissociative process opening the door to other dimensions. As as we have already seen, mind control techniques based on Traumas are intimately linked to certain ancestral cultures and psycho-spiritual practices, particularly the exploitation of states dissociatifs.

Another important symbolism in the Wizard of Oz is the yellow brick road. The slave must follow the yellow brick route by which the alter emerge from the inner world to take control of the body. "Follow the yellow brick road" are keywords used to trigger a special programming in a slave. Another example regarding the kind of empty metal carcass. This character will be used to create a well-oiled machine perfectly performing the commands, it is the programming of the tin man that will receive some alter.

The author of The Wizard of Oz, L. Frank Baum, occultist and member of the Theosophical Society, was according to him inspired by a spirit that gave him the "magic key" to write this children's tale.

In other words, Baum was a medium and wrote this story by channeling an entity. In the book "The Annotated Wizard of Oz", Baum a writes: "It was pure inspiration... This came to me in an inexplicable way. I think that sometimes the "Great Author" has a message to convey and that he must use the instrument he has at your fingertips. It turns out that I have been this medium, and I believe that a key magic was given to me to open the doors of sympathy, of the understanding,joy and peace! [495!.]" The Wizard of Oz in 14 volumes was released in 1900, this tale that can be described as "theosophical" incorporates the "ancient wisdom" of the religions with Mysteries, which others will call satanic or Luciferian... sound initiatory content has been taken up and used as a support for control trauma-based mentality. The entities that inspired this story were probably aware of its potential and use occult that would be made of it.

told Lynn Hirschberg about her obsession with the Wizard of Oz when she was little:

"I remember the Wizard of Oz very well because it was my favorite movie for a long time. I was obsessed with this film and watched it again and again in a loop. For years I wanted to be Dorothy!

Until I was 6 years old, I wore duvets and I think my grandmother had made me Dorothy's costume, I also had the little slippers ruby color. My mother called me Dorothy, I didn't answer her and didn't didn't listen to her if she called me Megan, because that wasn't my name."

the

Survivor Svali described the methods used to have a film script can be implanted in a young fractional child: "The programmer projects the film to the child by telling him that he will then be questioned about what he has seen, which automatically triggers in the child the use of his photographic memory. The programmer will be able to show to the child the full movie or just a few scenes, see even a single scene.

After watching the whole movie or only a few passages, the child is drugged to relax, then asked what he remembers. It will be abused if he does not remember what the programmer considers important and he will be forced to watch these scenes in a loop. When the child has finally memorized the totality of what is deemed good to be, the programmer will tell him that he is one of the characters in the film. The child will be severely traumatized for create a virgin alter personality who will become the character in question. THE first thing that will see this new blank slate (the new alter) will be the entire film or a scene from the film, so this will be his first memory. THE programmer will then link the scene of the film to the ideology iiiuminau (Luciferian), he will teach the child the "hidden meaning" of the film and the congratulate for being one of the few "enlightened" who can understand his real meaning. The programming of scripts will generally be linked to others programming already present in the child. For example, the programming of military type perhaps related to the star wars movie, the programming of the internal labyrinth can be connected to the movie "Labyrinth", etc... THE possibilities are very varied. The music of the film, or a particular scene, can be used as a trigger to access programming, or bring out the corresponding alter personality."

According to Fritz Springmeier, the American popular culture of the second part of the twentieth century was transformed into a large catalog serving support for MK programming. Series such as Star Trek or Star Wars have been exploited by programmers, as have walt disney productions, Alice in Wonderland or the Wizard of Oz. Nowadays, it is likely that the programming uses recent productions, although the classics are most certainly effective and important supports. For example in the Star Trek culture, a whole series of highly technical manuals has been published describing in detail the whole universe of this series, ie the equipment, the ships, planets, etc. According to Springmeier, when you look at these ultra-detailed manuals, the best way to explain the time and money spent on develop such complex descriptions for a simple fiction is that they are used for MK programming purposes. These manuals contain, for example, maps of the Star Trek universe and such a map can be used as a support to organize a T.D.I. system. When you split the personality of a victim, then you need this type of scheme / supports to restructure it, as if it were a matter of recreating or reorganize their souls broken into a thousand pieces. A star cluster or a planet can be used to isolate or group alter, not being able to leave this place only by entering into a dissociation and traveling in space-time when an electroshock, flash or other trigger is induced. As for magic surgery, the number of scripts will depend on the imagination of programmers, having at their disposal a whole catalogue of usable structures to organize the inner world of the split subject.

Brice Taylor relates how his inner world could be a true cosmos: "Henry worked with me rather towards the beginning, so to set up all my systems. He even marked on my forehead a cross to delimit what he called the "stellar map" of my system. Then it put me in front of the mirror so that I could see this little face of 5 or 6 years old, with short hair, with this black cross on me. He said that there were planets within my inner universe and that they slept while waiting for the day they would be occupied. Later, there were added other areas in saying that they were small worlds for the different planets. the system made it possible to keep the information completely separate and isolated because the planets had no way of communicating with each other. All data and information therefore remained compartmentalized, autonomous and held in orbit in the great blue immensity of the stars. All these stars were used as files for movie stars or politicians who used to use me. Larger stars contained larger alter personality files and they were related to people I met regularly, while the little ones stars were reserved for people I only saw on occasion. The most big stars were reserved for the elites. The whole group of men powerful who secretly orchestrated this horror, had a set up a sophisticated satellite system that can travel anywhere inside my mind, constantly monitoring my "inner worlds". They could thus access each of the planets, any place of the system, and therefore to all the information they wanted on any of these people the alters met,... Henry told me that the files of my spirits are unlimited because the universe is limitless and of an immensity healso told me that there will always be new areas to cartographierl[497]]. ”

the objects can be transferred to the inner world with surgery magic but they can also serve as an external support for the programming. Some objects can be used as tools to manipulate the child dissociated. In his autobiography, Brice Taylor explains that his father had specially created for her a doll cabinet. This cabinet was filled dolls that came from all over the world, toys that were always offered to him with "love". His father used them as a support to manipulate and programming the alter personalities of her daughter split by abuse repetitive,night after night: "Often when my father tortured me, he gave me a new doll in order to create a another part in me with a new identity, I was then taking care of it and my young spirit (dissociated) then identified with this doll that I held. He was telling me that this doll in my hand was a part of myself while being separated by the two, then he gave it a name. There were the little doll with red hair and freckles, the doll Baby, Cindy the bride, Rebecca, Sally, Barbie, Mrs. Alexander... for in name a few. I was literally surrounded by dolls (...) my father said that I could not play with these dolls until he had given me permission, so much so that that he hadn't told me it was time for them to get out of At night, when he woke me up to abuse me, he would take out the bound doll to the alter personality that was to emerge from my internal system. When it took out a doll, he said: "It is no longer in the cupboard, now she can go out and play", and at that tender age, I was switching everything immediately in the personality that my father called. Then he said:

"You Susie, you will withdraw when Doll is completely entered into your body. Every time I snap my fingers three times, Doll will enter in the body and Susie will retreat to the side." And he made his slam fingers three times and I followed perfectly the commandment of my father[498]."

MK programming also uses colors to organize internal systems and easily manipulate alters. With a split of personality in a multitude of alter, the colors are going to be a way organize a group and access it easily. In addition, young children recognize the colors before they know how to read, they are very sensitive to them.

This programming can therefore be done very early, from the age of two.

The child will be programmed in a painted or illuminated room of a certain color. If it is the color blue, theprogrammer will raiseone of the alter the child to tell him that he will learn to become blue and learn what this color means. The room will be bathed of blue, the programmer will be dressed in blue with possibly a mask

blue. All objects will also be blue. An alter personality will be called to emerge then she will be drugged, hypnotized and traumatized on a table or stretcher. When she is in a trance state, she will be told that the blue is something good and that it is itself blue in color. We owe him will say that the blue will protect him from danger, that the blue people do not get hurt not, that she will wear beautiful blue clothes, etc ... If the child resists and that he does not want to become blue, he will be tortured until he submits. Following these programming sessions, the child will bathe in blue for a while, he will be put glasses or blue-tinted lenses and he will wear clothes of the same color.

Then, in progressive stages, the alter concerned is taught the meaning of the of this color as well as the function that is related to it and that it must integrate.

The sessions of trauma will multiply while this color will be printed deeper and deeper into his subconscious. The color becomes thus a trigger by which the programmer or master can access a alter group or to a particular alter of the victim. The color code is a basic method to organize internal systems! [4]"].

here is an excerpt from a lecture by Australian survivor Kristin Constance who describes a process of programming MK by colors (the full of his testimony is found below in this chapter) "The programming by the colors that I underwent took place in rooms underground. Each piece had a different color, corresponding to different programming. The colors seemed to match those of The Eastern Star: blue, yellow, white, green, red and black for the center. The red room had a red light, a stretcher, a full table instruments of torture and equipment for electroshocks. The right side of my body was covered while the left side was tortured electric. Electrodes were placed on my left joints, this which caused paralyzing pain... that I still feel today. On whispered things in my left ear and electric shocks were applied to my temples. This is how "Red" was created, and reinforced... A woman asked me questions for programming, and few

no matter what I answered, I was systematically wrong. I dissociated myself many times... "Red" and its alters seem to be programmed so that when sexually abuse, there is no reaction to pain, in all circumstance. Red has undergone a lot of blood rituals and rapes, and it is she (editor's note: a group of alters) who cashed in most of my pains."

in therapist Alison Miller's book "Healing the Unimaginable", the living su Trish Fotheringham also describes how colors were used to organize and structure his alter personalities: "My alter created in a deliberate way were all associated with particular colors, each color representing a "channel" or type of programming. An alter that will have been trained to follow a red path will wear only clothes of this color, we will talk to him in a certain way and he will experience specific situations with a particular type of people. There is little chance that even the [illegible] part of its programming (...) The programming will then consist of including more and more connections with the colors, gradually connecting each color to sounds, words, shapes, symbols, etc (...) very small, when I was placed on the lap of a man, my first alter of the red way (sexual) had to systematically have a sexualized behavior, for example, he had to squirm and laugh explicitly. From the age of 6 months to 2 years, my programming focused on the installation of basic commands and triggers in alter primaries. Some programs like "Obeyed", "Ne speak Not", "Be Loyal", as well as internal security and alarms, have been put in place from the beginning and strengthened as I grewup. Later, my masters called these alter using the sentences containing the trigger codes or inducing the emotional state in which I was at the time of the initial split (...) Lights, clothing and accessories, words, phrases, specific physical contacts, smells, drugs, as well as several color codes specific were all used methodically. This allowed my masters and to my programmers to create and develop in each alter a system of individual and autonomous belief formed with modeling values systematically its design and understanding of how the world, on "the rules of life", and on almost everything he thinks, feels, says or does™."

Fortheringham also described the methods used to arrange his inner world during his dissociated states: "I had to have two years when my programmers first used a chair special with straps and a helmet. She could rotate, turn, tip and send electroshocks. My programmers always told me that this chair was a "magic door" that allowed me to "ride through therainbow" to distant and strange realms. At first, vibration and electrical stimulation of the chair, combined with drugs and wind of a fan pointed at me, made me feel as if I was floating and that I was actually moving in space. They gave to the chair different purposes and different "destinations" depending on the wereemerging. Through the use of specific lighting, sounds or music, they created special atmospheres, alternative realities. The chair which tilted and rotated on itself, combined with electrical impulses, could create a real tornado with lightning in the inner world (...) When I "rode the rainbow" on this chair, the lights and the special effects made me travel. Afterwards, I was violently "repaired" and punished on this chair (...) The inner world was easily arranged, sometimes it was done outside, sometimes with a staging.

The "weather phenomena" were injected into the inner world in the same way as everything else, simply by suggestions, claiming that they were there, accompanied by some special effects. Like all children of at that age, I naturally believed everything I was told. Tornadoes of dust and vortices were produced with pointed fans on me when I was in the "magic chair". At first, I was told to "control" these phenomena, and then become these phenomena myself.

Rainbows were created around me in this chair, apparently thanks to projectors and water vaporization. I was told that these rainbowswere multicolored magical paths leading to others worlds and that it was the chair that fixed the final destination. These other worlds were first staged externally, then they were integrated and became a part of my inner world. Rainbows contain all the colors, so they can be used to call simultaneously all the alters related to the colors (...) After tests have confirmed that programming is well integrated satisfactorily, the inner world is sealed, thus trapping the alter personalities inside with each their pre-programmed reality. These alter trapped in interior structures are stuck at a certain age and at a certain level of development where they still believe in fairy tales and magic. They are unable to discern reality from fiction. They are also totally unable to make a distinction between the inner world and the outer world (...) They are isolated with only their personal belief system, their personality traits and their skills, everything that has been programmed for them! [501]]."

Dans son livre “Restoring Survivors of Satanic Ritual Abuse : Equipping and Releasing God’s People for Spirit-Empowered Ministry", therapist Patricia Baird Clarke wrote a chapter on the structures of the inner world and magical surgery. Based on the Holy Scriptures, she also explains that satanic ritual abuses (by the trauma and extreme dissociation) will split the physical body and the spiritual body opening a breach on other dimensions, as we have seen in the previous chapter. Here is the entire chapter that we explains what this "inner world" is from the point of view of a therapist:

We will look at what we can encounter in a person who has undergone satanic ritual abuse, causing a state psychic of great complexity. These people are usually born in families practicing Satanism and generational ritual abuse in generation. Anyone who has suffered this kind of abuse will not necessarily have the Complex internal structures which we shall now discuss and detail; however, it is to be expected that such structures will be found and such fragmentations of personality because these people are not uncommon of the all. Those called to work spiritually on this subject of abuse rituals will need the practical knowledge given in this chapter.

The satanic ritual abuse and the T.D.I. it provokes create an inner state of incredible complexity. The following concepts may appear bizarre or surreal for those who discover the subject. However, we must keep in mind that these things that we are going to describe, that seem extraordinary,represent the perception that have of life and reality victims. Everything they say must be treated with respect and with a great attention, no matter if it may seem whimsical to you.

demons are invoked and "placed" in the person in order to maintain the separation between the alter, inaccessible to the victim. Negative emotions and specmque sectarian activities are attnoue at each alter. These alters work so that the victim is totally under the control of the sect. She then becomes a kind of 'zombie', she is a real hell. The fractional individual is forced to form a world dark interior due to the incessant violence and programming demonics. The Hebrew word for darkness is "cho- shek", which means misery, destruction, death, ignorance, sadness and wickedness. The objective of the occultist executioners is to imprison their victim in a web of misery, destruction, zombification where there is no of possible escape. The soul of the person is broken and every piece (fraction, alter) is entangled in a maze of dungeons, prisons, traps, etc... It is their inner world.

The victims find themselves extremely traumatized and broken, they are in great confusion. Most of them do not do not understand what happened to them. All they know is that they are suffering and that they need help. The only understanding we have when it is these occult practices, what they do and why they do it, we let's learn it from these precious people, victims in a great unhappiness and totally lost. It is difficult to reconstruct an exact image of their inner world, how it works and why it has been created. By combining my experience with victims of ritual abuse with my knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, I developed my own theory for explain what we are dealing with. We know from the scriptures that we have a mind, a soul and a body.

1 Thess 5:23: "Let the gods of peace sanctify you whole, and let all your being, mind, soul and body, be preserved irreprehensible,during the advent of our Lord Jesus Christ!

In Genesis 2:7 we are shown how we were created in three parts. "The Lord God trained man from the dust of the soil,he breathed into his nostrils a vital breath and man became a being living. "

The breath of God has become the spirit of man. When the breath of God came into contact with the body of man, the soul was then formed and these three elements are assembled in us. In Hebrews 4:12, we read that Jesus (Himself being the Word of God) separated at one time given the soul of the spirit. "For the Word of God is alive and effective, more sharp that no double-edged sword, she penetrates to division, soul and spirit, of joints and marrows; it is the judge of feelings and of the thoughts of the heart".

I believe that as long as our mind is connected to our soul and body, we are not able to "see" in the spiritual realm.

This is what God has intended for us since Satan and demons can

-riAnd you'req cataninnpc on |j a nnp e^-rna-ratir^n annarpmmprit cm 1 r| ain f* appear as "angels of light" and deceive us. God wants us let us be innocent about evil.

Romans 16:19b: "I desire that you be wise when good and simple concerning evil." This concept of separation between the mind and the soul is difficult to explain because there is a separation from the soul and of the spirit performed by Jesus, which is good. When we have matured our Christian faith and makes our selfish motives die, we become aware of the separation of soul and spirit. This means that our good works that come from our soul are not related to the carnal motives of our mind. This separation is not complete, because there is always a link that maintains our soul in our body. We become more aware of the Holy Spirit and we then have more spiritual discernment, but nevertheless we remain still "connected/connected" to the physical body. However, by the abuses

the soul and mind, which then allows the person to see and hear demons.

In Cor 15:44 we read: "He is sown animal body, he resurrects spiritual body, there is an animal body and there is a spiritual body". We thus know that we have a physical body and a spiritual body. It is through this biological body that we have contact physical with the material world around us. We are not aware to have a spiritual body until the death of our physical body. This is what at what God has destined for us. Through rituals, Satanists use the demons to separate the spiritual body from the physical body. When the soul and the spirit have been separated and the spiritual body has been separated from the physical body, then the person enters in a fully conscious way into a completely different way dimension. This is the dimension that I call the inner world. This world is as vast and as real to the individual as is the physical world for we. We think of spirits as if they had a Vaporous state', but the people who went into this dimension told me that the demons did have a weight and a substance.

This inner world is a world made up of demonic spirits and alter personalities, it is accessible by the mind, by the thought, more specifically by imagination. People who practice meditation transcendental or seeking spiritual guides (not incarnate) by example, use their imagination to communicate with the field of evil spirits. God has given us an imagination, it is not a bad thing in itself because we can use it for fabulous inventions of great use to humanity. We can use our imagination to the image of Jesus when he teaches his disciples and tells them to throw away their nets on the right side of the boat. Imagination can be used well as it can be used for evil.

When spiritual work is done on alter personalities, when memories go back up, there comes a time when the person is taking great distress stating that his "right side seems to be separated on his left side". At this point, a demon must be expelled out of the person. This will be useful for her, but it will not deliver her from the connection to this particular spiritual dimension that it undergoes. This feeling of division can occur through the memory of the ritual that provoked splitting. A woman described a ceremony where Satanists use the scriptures of 'Hebrews 4:12', but in a completely twisted way. In this ritual, a real sword is held above the victim and the demons are invoked to split and divide it.

The "magic surgery" makes it possible to accompany this spiritual world with different structures and objects (...) Because of the spiritual dimension where is this person, he is able to see and experience these objects as if it were a real thing identical to our world three-dimensional. Satanists use this for control purposes. The child can for example be taken on a trip to Germany and there we will make him visit a castle in every detail, both inside and the outside. The child will live a few very trying days in this castle, he will go through different rituals in the various rooms. The child is forced to memorize the plan of the castle. A miniature replica of this castle at the way of a house of dolls will be built, a model in three dimensions with which the child will be able to integrate deeply his structure. Once the castle has been memorized, the child is subjected to "magic surgery", that is to say that he is told that the miniature model of the castle will be placed inside it just as it is itself placed inside

According to Fritz Springmeier, inverses, mirror images, illusions and other trompe l'oeil contained in Escher's paintings are excellent supports for mental programming of split topics).

The castle is now "inside" the child and it becomes a structure usable for the internal world. In this inner world, it is now possible to walk in the different rooms of the castle, that of a way as real as in the physical world. In the rituals that go follow this "surgery", the child will dissociate himself many times and alter personalities that will be born will then be programmed to establish themselves in different rooms of the castle. These parts will be guarded by entities exteriors, demons, and traps will be strategically placed so that there is no escape for the compartmentalized alternates. These castles are cold and dark, they are filled with rats and snakes as well as rooms of torture, it is a powerful control structure. If an alter does not does not submit, that it does not execute exactly the commands, it will be delivered to the demons in a torture chamber of the castle. This is extremely painful for the victim because the spiritual senses are exacerbated. According to some testimonies, the spiritual senses are stronger than the physical senses. THE pain suffered in this inner world spreads even in the physical body.

When a Christian is willing to dedicate his life to Christ, a exceptional authority is granted to him by the Lord on this subject.

Jesus Christ knows how to protect alters when they begin to speak. he gives us the power to lock up all the demons and He shelters the alters where they cannot be found and suffer reprisals.

With this magical surgery, occultists place traps all over the person's inner world. Of course, these things are not not actually inside, but due to the fact that the child believes that they are there, the demons can use them to control it. THE Satanists know well that an alter will one day have the possibility of begin to speak and testify outside of worship. In order to maintain them silent, or to punish them if they speak, traps are placed strategically and they will trigger with some "triggers" (triggers) whenever the system is threatened. These traps can be as perverse as a demon can imagine. A very common trap is the bomb. One afternoon, I realized that a woman who had just gained access to some memories concerning abuses had not been drinking anything all day.

After consulting the Lord, he revealed to me that there was a bomb to the inside of her ready to explode if she drank anything.
She was absolutely terrified. I asked the Lord to take it away from him, which he did.
She was then able to drink two large glasses of water. In this inner world, this are his beliefs that bind and hold the victim. A daemon can simulate the internal explosion of a bomb and the person will have the sound and pain of this "explosion". Many of these tools are aimed at destroying life or the mental health of the person who starts talking. This is just one example that shows us the reason why this type of processing does not perhaps done only successfully by a Christian who will rely on Jesus Christ to let him do the work. If an atheist had tried to remove this bomb,it would have exploded and the woman would have needed medication and even possibly hospitalization. A lady once described to me what he had happened in it when well-meaning believers had tried to drive the demons out of it. A bomb then exploded and she literally felt shrapnel pierce every part of her body. THE shards were in fact demonic entities propelled into his arms, his legs,his head... in every part of the body... re-bombing of the bomb was accompanied by an implanted command telling him to kill those who try to helphim, and then run outside to throw himself under a car. It knew what was going on, but it was totally out of control. Two men were present to check it but two other people had to intervene to help them maintain it.

Through magical surgery, everything in the physical world can be placed in a person's inner world. Here are some of the things that is commonly found in this other dimension of being. These objects, the purpose of controlling the victim, may be withdrawn only by the Grace of the Lord. Most of them are linked to painful memories of abuse and they will be deleted by the time the memory is processed and integrated, but this is not always the case. That is why it is important to leave the reins to the Lord.

- Computers: The computer can be used by daemons and/or an alter to control an object or an alter personality of the system.
- Telephones: The person can really hear the voice of the executioner who gives him instructions, the voice is obviously that of a daemon. If the perpetrator wants the person to go to a specific location at such a moment, it calls on a daemon that will activate the phone to transmit the instructions to the victim. A demon has the ability to reproduce perfectly the voice of a human but also his physical appearance.
- Tape recorders: These can broadcast things humiliating,nasty and hurtful remarks. They can broadcast looping statements to get certain behaviors. For example, if the no one receives an external compliment, a "recorded" voice will contradict in saying humiliating things. Again, this is demonic cunning.
- Video/DVD tapes: With these tools, horrific scenes of human or other torture can be projected into the mind of the person.
- Alarm clocks: These can be set to ring at different times of the night or day so that the person cannot never have a restful sleep, (editor's note: Cathy O'Brien reports in his autobiography how automatic "mental awakenings" were implanted in her, just as in her daughter, so that they never have again two consecutive hours of sleep.)

- Oven: An oven can be used to suck up all the person's energy or energetically empty an alter for its destruction.

The oven can keep the person overheating to perpetuate traumatization.

- Mazes: Alters are often trapped in mazes. Jesus will be able to get them out of it and destroy this labyrinth.

These are just a few examples of things that are commonly found in the inner world of victims.
satanic ritual abuse. The possibilities are endless, because with this magical surgery, everything in this physical world can be transferred to the inner world.

For people born into transgenerational Satanist families, abuse can begin as early as gestation, in the uterus. A fetus may be traumatized in various ways, by electroshock, blows of needles, shocks on the mother's womb, rape of the mother, etc.

It is likely that they use a device to measure the baby's heart rate. When the heart rate accelerates and then it suddenly descends significantly, this is a sign that the baby enters into a state of dissociation in the uterus. Occultists try to get 6, 13 or even 18 fragmentations from gestation, these are numbers satanic power. However, they do not always succeed in obtaining these desired numbers. Each fragmentation of the fetus in the womb then becomes a "seed" which will subsequently be re-split for feed in personalities alternate the different levels of the person's internal structure.

The organization of the internal world is not random. It is a structure in which each personality alters and each object will be placed meticulously and strategically.

This structure will have as many levels, as there have been fragmentations in the uterus. If the victim was fragmented 13 times in the belly of his mother, its internal structure will have 13 levels. In some cases, the number of divisions in the uterus will not be as much as desired, the newborn will be then immediately split to complete the number of levels. These different levels, which can also be called strata or layers, must have a geometric shape that will often be the same for each level. By example,if it is a square that was used, each level will be of shape square. They can also be formed by combinations of figures geometric, for example squares combined with triangles or circles.

Each level is divided into sections, or rooms, in which the alter are "under house arrest". Guardians (demons) are stationed at the strategic locations at each level. Below all these strata there are usually a kind of pit that sometimes will have as many levels as the basic structure itself. The different levels are linked together by stairs (often circular, spiral) with a partitioning door each level. This system is similar to a building composed of apartments but the design may be more sophisticated. The levels are not necessarily of the same size and they may have different angles the one of the others. Often, levels are designed to rotate or spiral (editor's note: carousel system). So this whole complex structure is "injected" at a very young age into the inner world of the child. A model ae ia structure can be built so that reniant can well visualize and memorize it. He will therefore end up memorizing it perfectly, y includes the location of the custodial entities of each level and the location seeds-alter of each level. Then, using magic surgery, the structure is placed in him and he is told that he will have to grow with it.

During the "surgery", the child believes that he has been opened from the throat until its lower abdomen and that this structure now completely fills the trunk of his body.

Each alter created in the uterus by a dissociative fractionation will be assigned to a particular level of the structure. This alter becomes the "founding seed" that will fill this level of structure with multiple other alter, all splits of this alter-kernel. That is to say that this alter-nucleus will undergo a whole series of splits during successive traumas.

The top level of the structure is called "the public level". This is where the alter performing the tasks of everyday life (hostpersonalities) are accommodated. They are the ones who will manage the life of family,etc., these are the ones communicating with the outside world... These alter are generally unaware of the existence of other deeper alters until these will one day be revealed by external aid. These "public" alters do not know nothing about the alter of the lower levels, or even a structure complex multilevels can exist. The upper level alters have were programmed in the victim's home so that he can cope with life daily, these alter groups are sometimes called the "home system" or the "public level". This level usually has a small number of personalities: 7 or 8. The area of this upper level will be the most small of all levels (the tip of the iceberg). As we progress in the structure to its depths, we will find levels more and more larger and increasingly densely populated. It is common to find hundreds of alter in the lower levels. The deeper the level is anchored in the inner world, the darker the alter will be because engaged in the "dark side", i.e. the occult activities of the group. THE alter who reside in the deepest lower levels know absolutely all of the higher levels and they are able to take the control of the entire higher system. The most powerful and most powerful alter obscure are at the lowest level, in the most programming layer deep. When these alter deep layers want to take control from the body, they go up through the doors, give a password to the demons guardians and thus access the higher levels, the public levels. THE host personalities of this public level are not entitled to resist the alter occultists of the depths. An alter of the depths can punish and torture an alter of the "public level" if he has ever spoken or committed any other violation of the rules. After some time of ministry, it may be helpful to pray and ask the Lord to seal the doors so that the alters of the lowest levels and demons can no longer go up to the "public level" for cause disorder. However, this is not a thing to do systematically... God led me to do it for some people, but with others, He taught me differently. We must be open to guidance of the Lord.

An alter can be programmed to be anyone or anything, it is according to the will of the programmer or according to the needs of the victim.

Someone who has been tortured in such a complex way knows only one adaptation mechanism: dissociation. By this means, the cult creates deliberately alters serving his unhealthy purpose, and the victim creates his side of the alter to face the life she must continue to lead. By therefore,some alter personalities will be designated to work for the cooked, while others will have a role to help and support the person abused. There are also neutral alters, which do not fit into either of these two categories. Alter working for worship are created by rituals individuals, they have various functions such as intelligence, storage information,the practice of specific rituals, ensure that the victim follows a certain schedule when going to ceremonies, attracting demons on it, store satanic energy, block all advice emanating

This complex system will make it into a situation in which the member states are able to cope with the need to ensure that the so that there will be many alters who will be in charge of killing the victim

(editor's note: Omega programming of self-destruction) if it enters into a relationship with Christian advisors who could begin to release her. Programmers give a complete identity to worship alters with sometimes even their own physical characteristics. For example, the victim may be overweight and elderly, but for the alter at the control, his body is that of a slender young teenager. These alters of worship may go against the well-being of iiiuiviuu to the punished even to try the luei, walls that n e if necessary to remember that they inhabit the same body... yet they often deny this reality vehemently saying degrading things about appearance physical or personality of the person. At that time, it is useful to make one look in a mirror to show how the cult has deceived them.

It is also not uncommon for them to declare that mirrors are objects against which the sect warned them. I then tell them to keep quiet for that they look in the mirror, it will often convince them that they have been totally deceived. Many of them will gladly give up their self-destructive assassin programming when they realize they are getting would in fact be committed suicide. Satanists access alters through the use of 'triggers', such as names, flashes of light, tones, numbers, etc. Through abuse and programming, the victim becomes effectively a bit like a human computer accessible to anyone holding the program and access codes. These alter can also be activated by other means. Some of them are activated by daemons that worship invokes during rituals. Other alters have been created and programmed to emerge and become active on a specific date. For example, if the cult decided that a person should die at the age of 50, an alter with a program of self-destruction will be activated at its 50th anniversary. Astrologers of the cult have known for eons the moment when certain celestial phenomena are will produce. For example, a full moon falling on the same day as an eclipse at the date of a Friday the 13th (which took place in March 1998). These things are anticipated years in advance by Satanists. Some alter can so have been programmed to emerge that day to lead the person to a ritual where it will have a special function. Every alter of worship must be delivered from demons and converted to Jesus Christ. This is usually done in 15 to 30 minutes. Jesus gives them a new function so that they can work in a way constructive and participate in the well-being of the person. These worship alters have a lot of information that will be very useful for reach other alter. For example, I encountered a case where an alter named

Bobby had attempted in my presence to kill the host personality. Jesus gave him assigned the mission to reveal to me where all the pitfalls of the system were.

Bobby had been programmed to memorize the traps of the first 7 levels on a total of 13 levels that make up the internal structure. Once it is past "on our side", this alter had become a valuable asset for the healing of the victim. Other alter de culte are perfectly aware that they live in the body of the host personality, but they work everything the same against it. Some of these alter, which I call "alter suicidebombers" are so attached to the dark side that they will enjoy themselves to sacrifice their own lives to kill the victim. Some will be won by jesus-unrist, others not, even sus can see and hear it. In this in such cases, Jesus simply deletes them. A woman with a T.D.I. of great complexity will have many male alters. They may appear early in healing ministry or manifest only after several months, but they are present. It is common to also meet an alter who believes he is a dog. He will not be able to speak but just to bark. It is then necessary to ask another alter observer to speak for he, he will be of great help. One question that can be asked is how can someone come to believe that he is a dog? THE Satanists like to dehumanize their victims. The less they will feel human,the better they will come into contact with the demons by adopting their behaviors (Demons are beastly). This type of programming is really very brutal. For example, they will place the naked child in a pen with dogs for a period of up to one week. The child is not allowed to behave like a human. He is forbidden to standing, talking, eating and drinking with his hands and he will sleep on the soil. He must therefore move on all fours to eat and drink in a bowl in the manner of a dog. He will be raped several times by the male dogs. Some alter can be a kitten. I met one of these alter by listening to the victim talk about his techniques/attempts to do in the face of violence. A little girl alter then told me that she had noticed that the kittens of his family's farm were neglected. It has thought that maybe if she became a kitten herself, her attackers the would leave alone. Some of these alter animals will not be able to take the word other than by a simple "meow", but others will require that a alter mediator speaks on their behalf. Still others, due to various programming, may believe that they are aliens or robots.

A woman remembered being submissive for a week has a dog program, followed by a week of E.T. programming and a third of robot programming. At the end of these 3 weeks, she had no idea who she was, all she knew was that she wasn't human being. One of the most memorable alters I met was "Rubber Man" rubber). It was part of the "public level", it had been created by the victim to accomplish incredible things that his horrible mother-in-law forced him to do. "Being made of rubber", he could stretch his arms and legs to reach inaccessible places and perform seemingly tasks impossible. He was particularly good at washing windows or for clean gutters. But the "rubber man" never spoke... it sang in rhymes in a loud voice and he liked to cheer up the host personality when she felt sad, (editor's note: Cathy O'Brien reports that one of her sisters, Kelly Jo, has an alter with programming for prostitution with which it becomes as flexible as "Gumby".) Many alter, especially alter babies or children, will not have a special function. They can be locked up in dark dungeons, wells, prisons, etc., they are terrified and miserable. These alters are often "residues", or "damages" collaterals", created when the person is subjected to increasing degrees of pain and terror during rituals and programming.

In order to produce the desired alter of worship, Satanists subject the person to pain unbearable that will cause several dissociations, each alter created successively being stronger and more connected to the darkness than the previous one.

For example, if the person dissociates himself five times before the alter the first four alters are not taken into account by the cult which will not give any interest in it. These will therefore be considered as useless and they are locked up in sorts of prisons or dungeons, they are "put in thecloset". Sometimes an alter with very little insight can manifest itself but without answering questions. There is then a chance that it is a pre-verbal alter (infant or baby).

You have to ask if another alter can then come and speak on his behalf. I met the case of a 53-year-old woman recently. With its hair covering her face, she stared at me while sucking her thumb and rubbing the top of his nose with his index finger. She was obviously very frightened but also curious. While she did not answer any of the questions as I asked her, I asked if anyone could speak for her. It is at that moment I met Lisa, 11, who told me about the abuses that had suffered "Rini". Rini then came back and I asked Jesus to deliver her, and as he often does, he sent a little lamb to her. I saw how she was stroking the lamb, how she laughed when he huddled in his neck. After a short time spent with the lamb, she looked up at Jesus with total admiration, then she raised her arms so that he would come look for it. She then seemed to relax and then she rested her head on Her shoulder as he took her to a safe place![502!.]

6 - Trance state and "triggers"

The state of trance can be defined by three criteria: - An alteration of consciousness.

- Partial or total amnesia following trance.
- Presence of at least one alternative personality during trance.

Extreme physical and emotional conditions during ritual abuse have a heavy impact on the child, especially with the combination of these states of trance. It is important to look at the role of these states altered consciousness in the process of mental control of children. When they are in a state of trance, they are more open to indoctrination and techniques aimed at controlling their minds and their behaviors. For example, a child in a trance who hears an adult repeating to him that it is Satan who has the power, will deeply integrate this belief, much more than if he were in a normal waking state. There are many means to put the child in these altered states of consciousness during abuse rituals. The ritual itself contains several elements inducing a trance: singing, isolation, sensory deprivation and pain by all forms of extreme torture. Trance states are also induced by hypnosis and drugs. These experiences have a profound and sustainable on the beliefs, feelings and behaviours of victims, in despite the fact that they cannot always consciously remember it. It's only later in life, usually with the help of a therapist qualified, that some ritually abused victims will be able to laboriously reconstruct what happened when they were in a state of trance or dissociation! [503]!.

The programs work with triggers, they are access codes such as names, sentences, light flashes, a tone, a voice with a particular tone, which allow the programmers, masters or hierarchical superiors of the sect to have access to the alter personalities of the victims. This allows also to the programmer to have access to the internal structures in order to be able to modify them or retrieve information if necessary. The internal system can indeed be used to store information which will be held by an alter hypermnesic, data that can only be accessed with certain codes access. The information can also be stored in the subconscious, then used as a real secure hard drive. All these manipulations are done without the victim's awareness.

Previously programmed functions are performed unconsciously, or with some awareness of obligation to do or not not do anything. The alter trapped in the internal structures will obey to orders implemented until they are released. These types of programming can control the person's thoughts and actions for decades, usually without any intake of conscienceBorn

survivors of ritual abuse and MK begin to recover memories between the ages of 30 and 50. It takes more years for the victim to become aware of the programming and its ongoing effects on it. THE discovery of these internal structures often requires external help to allow the survivor to securely access this information in reason for[504] self-destructionprogramming!.

Naming alter personalities is a central point in mind control. The programmer will always name the alter created for the latter will automatically perceive itself as belonging to the person who has it identified by giving it a name. Alter names, access codes, various stimuli triggers, will allow to trigger the mechanisms of the mind control and access to programming.

Trauma-based mind control relies on the ability to unconsciously induce in the victim the fear of reliving abuse and torture, so that it complies with directives and orders implemented during programming. The American psychologist Joseph LeDoux who studied emotional memory focused his research on the link between memory and emotion, particularly on the mechanisms of fear. His work shed light on how MK programming works. In its livre “The Emotional Brain : The Mysterious Underpinnings of Emotional Life", it shows that it exists in humans two long-term memory systems: an explicit memory system, conscious,cognitive and verbal and an implicit, unconscious memory system, emotional and not verbal (this is what we have already seen in Chapter 5). Its Research reveals that the unconscious memory system of fear and pain can "represent an indelible form learning". In post-traumatic responses, he writes that a "stimulus associated with the danger of trauma can become an integrated trigger that can cause emotional reactions in us." LeDoux calls this form of conditioning "the conditioning of fear". It is this conditioning of fear which appears to be a fundamental element for the operation of the MK programming. LeDoux's research shows that information emotional is relayed by the amygdala during automatic mechanisms and unconscious survival during traumas, and that this conditioning by fear works independently of consciousness, that is what that he calls the emotional unconscious. This system emotional, largely unconscious, affects the system more strongly cognitive aware that the reverse. Thus, according to him "the people usually do all sorts of things for reasons they don't are not conscious, because these behaviors are produced by brain mechanisms that function unconsciously." Survivors report that programmers intentionally use torture and drugs to try to block cognitive-conscious processing ability of victims. This conditioning by the fear of trauma will therefore control the alter personalities. Conditioned responses by fear will be automatically executed without being aware of it, without cognitive awareness. Conditioned and programmed triggers, such as the voice of the executioner, a signal from the hand, a word or a series of words, etc., can then induce fear and uncontrolled pain in memory unconscious emotional. So this will push the person to have a behavior conditioned and programmed to avoid actually feeling this pain and that terror that she already perceives unconsciously in this memory traumatic emotional! [505]].

The fact that certain events are not consciously retained does not therefore mean that they have no significant impact on the life of the individual. Until the memories come back and can be worked and integrated into a secure environment, the victim of such abuse will be always controlled, to some extent, by his past experiences. THE survivor will therefore be able to react strongly when an element or event will be able to react strongly to him will recall this heavy past (consciously or unconsciously). For example, if the survivor was subjected to ritual abuse in childhood during each full moon, in adulthood, he may feel compelled to join the sect for participate in ceremonies during full moons. Or he or she may being "pressured" to do an act of physical or sexual violence on a date in particular or in reaction to a trigger in its environment. This can also manifest as self-destructive compulsions to cope with the anxiety associated with this dissociative memory related to the traumatic event.

Therapist Ellen P. Lacter observed several programming indicators in her patients. For example, it will suddenly change of state in response to a detail that triggers in him a kind of robotic state with a rigid posture, eyes in a vacuum and an inability to hear or to answer anything. Then he will start to want to surrender some leave or to go call... Four of his patients reported a code identical trigger related to the same kind of programming. The code had a ten characters with the same prefixes or suffixes and with only some spelling variants. Yet this code is not referenced in books or on the internet and these people lived in remote areas! [505]].

Dr. James Randall Noblitt reports that some of his patients have stated that phone calls or knocks on their door in a way particular made emerge an alter-programmed personality to submit to any person using this trigger signal. Many therapists have reported similar information that overlaps from one patient to another, Dr. Cory Hammond, at his lecture entitled "The Greenbaum Paper", said: "When you start collecting the same information, of a highly esoteric nature, in various states ranging from Florida to California, as well as in different countries, we come to think that something is happening... That it is a large-scale phenomenon, very well coordinated, systematic and highly organized (...) We obviously proceeded with caution, and we took the time to cross the information. This is how we discovered the same phenomenon in lots of different places (...) It's time to share more information among therapists."

in his book "Cuit and Ritual Abuse", Dr. James Randall Noblitt reports that some of his patients describe the same types of child abuse involving rituals and sadistic acts.

However, these patients had no interaction with one another, they came from different geographical localities, different religions and socio-economic situations. Despite these notable differences, these individuals shared similar memories about traumatic rituals but they also presented internal T.D.I. systems structured by the same way. Some patients' alter personalities even seemed recognizing other patients, Dr. Noblitt writes: "I was saying goodbye to a male patient diagnosed with t.d.i. and I invited another patient, "Alice", to enter my office. Once in the room, Alice switched to another alter, she now had the behavior of a frightened child, "Why Does Robert James come to you see ? Don't you know it's very dangerous?" Because of secrecy medical, I could not say anything about this patient who had just leave my office. I couldn't even say he was one of my patients. His real name was "Robert Dale". "Robert James" was one of his secret names ae cuite, uomment se iait-ii that Alice i recognized, ae more in the identifier with his cult name? To my knowledge, he had not spoken from this name to no one, at least outside the sect, just as to my acquaintance he had never met Alice before. He didn't even have the air of recognizing her when they crossed paths in the waiting room.

Alice had also identified three other of my patients, including two of them by their cult name which, according to her, were related to the rituals she underwent in early childhood (...) Alice was also recognized by alter personalities of two other patients who, in consultation, revealed that they each knew each other through cult of the past! 507]."

Noblitt also writes that the power that exists within satanic/Luciferian cults is reflected in a hierarchical organization very strict pyramidal. Some high-ranking positions are occupied in permanence by the same individuals, however in some traditions Gnostic, relatively important positions (priestess, priest) can rotating beings. These hierarchical levels vary in the number of an organization to the other and will also have different names such as "Knight", "Prince" (or Princess), "Priest" (or Priestess), "High Priest" (or High Priestess), "King" (or Queen), etc.

When one of the members moves up to the hierarchical rank, it is then revealed to him more information concerning the programming and the trigger codes used at ceremonies on other members of the cult. Some of these triggers are generic, they are access codes basics that can be used to control a relatively number important people. That's why therapist Ellen Lacter reported that four of his patients had triggers identical related to the same programming. According to Dr. Noblitt, the "Deep" or "Deeper" trigger seems to be a common keyword. When used in such a way as to repopulated or discreetly placed in a conversation, a lot of survivors of these cults will generally enter into a state of trance where will show well-known signs of a change in state of consciousness, such as a change in the look and in posture.

Noblitt explains that cult members who rise in the hierarchy will not only have access to a variety of trigger codes that they can use to control people at lower levels, but they will also undergo an "update" so that these triggers generics no longer have as much control and control over themselves. Thus, survivors who have risen to the highest ranks of these sectarian groups were conditioned and programmed with much more triggers specific and complex so that the majority of the other members cannot not control them by having access to their programming. Such control is reserved for the elite of the higher hierarchical spheres, they have a more advanced knowledge about triggers and access codes to their own more sophisticated programming. While the members of the cult of the stockings levels are used by leaders for all kinds of things they can in some cases move up the hierarchy and receive the lessons on protocols for accessing other members' schedules, and for so in turn hold an incredible power of control! [508]).

Mental control with its codes of access to programming is therefore an essential point in the Luciferian occultism, in the "religion without name". It is the major tool of domination because a priori undetectable. In Greenbaum's presentation, Dr. Cory Hammond reports that some survivors may also have identification codes. This code includes their date of birth, it may also include the places where they underwent the programming, as well as other information about his family or worship. As it was

Note pius naut, the suoconscient and the aiter can be used ae hard drive for store all kinds of information. When Mark Phillips started deprogramming Cathy O'Brien, he discovered for example account numbers banking. According to him, deprogramming is just like hacking computing. Just as one can hack a computer, one can hack the "hard drive" of an MK slave...

Very early, once the aiter personalities are created, the children of these groups will be programmed with simple and basic triggers using tactile and visual senses. These triggers by touch are very important to control a child. For the outside world, most of these innocuous gestures just look like affectionate contacts. These Triggers will usually be learned by the combination of games and pain,punishments and rewards. These programmings are done by the repetition when the child is in altered states of consciousness.

The alter personalities of Grand Master, High Priest or Great Priestess, are considered the most important and the most hierarchically elevated. A child destined for such functions will possess alter who will receive different trainings on esoteric languages secret,the high forms of black magic and demonology.

According to Fritz

Springmeier, in the Luciferian hierarchies, these alternating personalities deeper, i.e. related to the world of occultism, will have names of goddess or god, names of king or queen. These are the names that the programmer or sect will use to identify them, but these are not trigger codes per se. Access codes follow patterns, this perhaps a standard and unique code. Passages from the Bible are very often used to encode triggers, but also extracts from popular books ae lierions, born access codes for coucnes of the deepest programming will have esoteric content, for example in Enochian language, often foreign languages to the country of origin will be employees. The nature of the codes will also be related to the branch of worship, for example a druidic group will use druidic symbols, a group

Kabbalist will use cabalistic codes. An internal system may have easily six different languages used as programming codes, but imaginary words can also be implanted as well as codes in sign language. Guématrie (the cabalistic teachings on numbers)also plays an important role in the creation of access codes to deepest and darkest alter personalities, related to occultism and witchcraft. That said most alter personalities have all more or less been indoctrinated into occultism. It there are several reasons why Monarch slaves have a lot of codes and internal structures linked to esotericism and witchcraft. First of all, this is because programmers usually practice the top themselves occultism and their worldview is based on these things, so they transcribe this into MK programming. Second, slaves are plunged back into their connection to Satan and his worship as soon as they are triggered by these codes of occult nature. Thirdly, the use of 'magic' words such as Triggers will also reinforce the belief that programming is a real magic! [509!.] In a global way, everything related to abuse rituals that the victim has undergone can potentially be a trigger of the traumatic memory: colors, jewelry, clothes, books, movies, food, drinks, childbirth or birthday...

Survivor Jay Parker claims that the MK-Monarch system also uses nature and its symbology to reinforce and perpetuate the programming. The repetition of ritual abuses according to a certain timetable occult based on lunar and planetary cycles will impregnate each cell small victims, especially when they are spiritually "unlocked" during rituals, as we saw in the chapter preceding. Subsequently, these are the gravitational fields specific to certain dates that will be triggered. During full moons by example, when traumatic memory is particularly busy due to important rituals that take place there systematically, as well as at the summer (June 20-21) or winter (December 21-22) solstices. When the planets are in certain positions, whether the victim is 15 years old or 50 years old, the field gravitational perceived unconsciously at the cellular level, will participate in aeciencner cnez eue ae new traumatic memory to put in "phase" with the ceremonies that are to take place. For programming to be effective, it must be activated, reinforced and updated regularly by visual or auditory stimuli. These "reminders" or "triggers" must be omnipresent in everyday life to touch MK subjects. THE Survivor Trish Fotheringham wrote about this: " lullabies, songs, tales, tv productions and movies well known; whenever I hear these things in my daily life, apart from formal programming, the beliefs of my personalities alter are solidified subconsciously! [510]]."

According to some authors, this is one of the reasons why we see more and more occult symbolism flourishing in the mass media, particularly in the entertainment industry (music and fashion);

The most recurrent "trigger" sign being the single eye usually represented by an individual who has somehow a hidden eye (generic trigger). These different signs serve on the one hand to stimulate the controls implanted in MK subjects, on the other hand are implanted in secular popular culture, in the collective unconscious.

MK-type programming is also coordinated with propaganda general media to which the general public is subject. This creates a kind of of mental programming continuum which consists in controlling the mass but also leaders of the company. Many politicians in positions

Keys are individuals under mental control who have been programmed with implemented commands. The coordination (concordance) of a sentence implemented in a victim with a propaganda sentence repeated in a loop in a media of large magnitude prevents the discordance of the mind of the programmed victim. THE politician who has been brainwashed will believe that he is perfectly aligned with the company because its programming is constantly reflected in it at through the mass media: the matrix. Modern society is based on the individual and global mind control as well as on the massive propaganda that maintains all these programs. As we will see in the chapter 9 on the entertainment industry, the luciferian occultism se popularizes to create a kind of hegemonic MK culture imprinting itself little by small in the collective unconscious. This means that these hidden practices are applied on a large scale, with very large means, and that they directly affect the ruling classes.

7 - Some testimonies:

a/ Jay Parker

Jay Parker was born into a family practicing satanic ritual abuse and MK-Monarch programming from generation to generation. In April 2011, Parker gave a lecture in Philadelphia (Free Your Mind: A Conference On Consciousness, Mind-Control & The Occult) of which here are some excerpts:

Satanic ritual abuse is an occult system of mind control. This occult system is the opposite of Truth, of life, it in total opposition to natural laws. This is essentially the antithesis of nature... a huge lie. It is a system that is compartmentalised and controlled by a minority, whereas nature and our reality are in fact a system based on openness where we have to share everything equally. The religious system of satanic ritual abuse and occultism is found in a certain mysticism. Their mysticism is a religious practice in which an outside power will control your life and destiny. You are then just a cog in a machine. This mysticism is an integral lie because we were born with spiritual, mental and emotional faculties giving us the opportunity to live a creative and fully positive life. The Illuminati have a caste system and this system is based on blood lines. It is a very strict hierarchy, so if you were born for example in the Rockefeller family, you are already "in the bath", you will be one of the great controllers. In this system, if the cult detects that you have particular mental or medium faculties, you will be able to access specific positions. Today, it is these Illuminati lineages originating from ancient Babylon that fully control the system. There is absolutely no sharing with this group, all this happens between them, they work with each other. with this very particular ancient vibration.

Ritual abuse is a system of physical and emotional trauma, the purpose of which is to create a slave under mental control who will obey and serve the worst occultists throughout his life. At your birth, you are in alignment and harmony with the natural energies of this planet. Your synaptic connections, during the first six years, are in full development, you are in "recording" mode, you can not critically differentiate the information that arrives to you. You store them and build your subconscious with it, which will eventually direct 99% of your adult life. So imagine the result if during your first six years of life, you were programmed with negativity, lies and mysticism, instead of Truth... When synaptic, or neuronal, pathways are disrupted for example by electroshocks, your mental body and your emotional body find themselves in such a state of terror that your physical body will produce and release certain hormones. These hormones will become a chemistry that your body will feed on daily. Just like Pavlov's dogs, who salivated when they heard the sound of the bell, thinking they were hungry. The Monarch mind control system has the same effect as with Pavlov's conditioned dogs.

It takes years to program an individual. It is something systematic and it has been going on for hundreds of years. 10% of the world's population practices this ancient religion that goes back to the old Satanist lineages. Anyone going through this system, whether you are a simple mechanic born into a Satanist family, or you are a banker named Rockefeller: all go through this system to "veil" neural connections! The energy they diffuse and the energy they receive is the very antithesis of nature, it is totally negative. That is why we are in such a situation on this earth. When the neural pathways are veiled, it ends up causing a particular chemistry in the body, so little by little you are programmed as a Monarch slave. For example, you will suffer from depression at certain times in the lunar cycle when particular rituals are practiced, and this continuously during your first six years of life. This is related to lunar cycles... So when the Moon is at certain points, whether you're 15, 20 or 40 years old, the gravitational field will trigger the experience of trauma again, on a subconscious level. It is a very sophisticated system that uses everything in nature, be it gravitational fields or symbology, in order to continuously trigger and perpetrate programming. This is how you remain in a state of permanent obedience (...) At the political level, it is both Republicans and Democrats who are involved in these mind control cases. It's not just a few people, it's a global control system (•••)

I'm going to tell you a little bit about my family. My father came from an Illuminati lineage. His family from Northern Ireland had joined the Order around 1720. When it is said that the Order of the Illuminati was founded in Bavaria in 1776, it was in fact only a reorganization of the sect to announce their project of global revolution aimed at the establishment of a New World Order. We saw it with the French revolution and the American revolution, they act internationally,in a globalized and coordinated manner. So this date of 1776 in Bavaria, is not the date of foundation of the Illuminati Order, it was just a starting point to actively begin the takeover of the nations of the world.

In public life, my father was not an important person, he was a teacher. But in the occult world, by his family lineage, his knowledge and his occult power, he obviously had a certain charisma. My mother claimed that she was descended from a 5,000-year-old lineage, a legacy of witchcraft passed down from mother to daughter and coming directly from an ancient civilization. My paternal grandfather was a modest businessman from a small town in New Jersey. But one interesting thing to note is that when he died, 300 people from five neighboring states, whom my family and the local population had never seen before, came to attend his funeral... Today I am 54 years old, so I attended some funeral, it is usually people from the city where you live who are present... and my grandfather was a modest merchant in this city. And there were 300 people to attend his funeral, some of whom came from Ohio! What triggered such a gathering? The answer is that he was a true Illuminati leader. He was not very important behind his desk. But in the realm of the covert manipulation of society, he was an important person.

At the age of 5, during a visit to my maternal grandparents in Pennsylvania, they offered me a small statue of liberty. I exclaimed, "Cool! A statue of liberty." They then told me that it was not what I thought but that it was Semiramis, the queen of Babylon. I remember perfectly insisting for at least ten minutes repeating that it was indeed the Statue of Liberty and not a stupid queen of Babylon! One thing I would like to say about my family is that even though they are all Satanists, practice mind control and work for the power in place; there will be some point when the true consciousness will emerge, their true humanity. You can program a person to make him a real psychopath, but you cannot destroy his consciousness. I saw my parents completely break up by their programming. They killed with jubilation because they were under control, influenced by a certain "power". There should come a day when they want to know who they were, know why they were born in order to realize that all this has gone much too far, so that they can finally say "No" to this cult... But they don't.

b/ Balcony

The anonymous author known under the pseudonym 'Svali' is a former occultist, born into a family of Luciferian lineage and who was a trainer (programmer) in the Illuminati group of San Diego. After struggling to get out of worship and programming, she converted to Jesus Christ. While remaining anonymous, she decided to reveal everything she knew about this network and the dangers of this global Luciferian sect.

She has written two books, ''Breaking the chain'' and ''Svali speaks'', which have not been published but which are freely available in PDF format on the internet. In 2006, she also gave an exclusive radio interview to journalist Greg Szymanski (The Investigative Journal). Svali mysteriously disappeared from traffic shortly after this interview, its website was closed and its telephone line cut off.

In this interview, she reveals what she knows at her level about the structure and hierarchical organization of the Illuminati Order. It describes their way of systematically programming their children, the programming of obedience, loyalty and fidelity to the group being the first to be installed because it is the most important. She explains that on the one hand you can have a child trained for prostitution and on the other end, a child trained to become an important government figure, which requires much more complex programming. Adults receive updates to their programming throughout their lives, this is an ongoing process.

Svali explains that this cult works on six main branches of learning: science, military, politics, leadership (high-level leaders), education and spirituality. Children must be trained in each branch. They will be tested and profiled from an early age in order to know their skills, then they will be directed to specialize in one or two particular branches according to their potentials and future activities planned by the sect. The training of children also includes twelve life disciplines which are:

1 / No need.

2/ No desire.

3/ No wishes.

4/ No scruples.

5/ Be as fit for survival as possible.

6/ Law of silence.

7 / Values of treason.

8/ Travels in space-time (the child will learn the principles of "travel", both inside in consciousness and outside in spirit. The goal is also to achieve "enlightenment", an ecstatic state of dissociation.

9,10,11/ Sexual trauma, learning dissociation, erasing feelings, these three steps varying according to the future role of the child in the network.

12/ Be faithful to ceremonies/rituals. One of the objectives is also to create in the child a complete separation between the activities of the day and the activities of the night.

Svali testifies that she was programmed and at the same time trained at the age of five by a doctor at the University of G. Washington to become a programmer herself. She says that these people are convinced that their methods are beneficial and useful to children and their worship, she herself sincerely believed in helping others to develop their potential. Svali divides the programming into five main "specialties":

1/ silence training:

This first training begins at an early age, even before the child knows how to speak. This programming will be done in different ways: the child is questioned following a ceremony about what he has seen and heard, if he speaks of the "bad things", he will be punished, that is to say severely violated. This will be repeated until the child has integrated that he absolutely must hide the rituals. Generally, these extreme punishments will create an alter who will be a "guardian/protector" whose role will be to ensure that the child does not remember what he sees during ritual abuse. This alter is conditioned to fear violence if the child remembers. The child can also undergo hypnotic trances in order to pass off the worst atrocities as a "bad dream".

2 / strength training:

This type of training also begins at a very young age, often even as a baby. The child is subjected to a series of conditioning exercises aimed at:

- Increase resistance to pain.
- Increase fitness.
- Increase the ability to unlink.
- Create a photographic memory.
- Create fear and submission through the desire to please.

3 / loyalty training:

Programming with loyalty to worship is the most important. Loyalty is a total rallying to the beliefs and doctrines of the group. Desertions or questioning of these doctrines are rare and reprisals are obviously very severe. A person who questions the doctrine or who refuses to do his job will return to "re-train", i.e. his programming will be updated and strengthened. For this she will suffer shocks and torture until she submits. Generally adults are conditioned enough to believe that the group's practices and goals are truly positive and constructive things. They are convinced that they are truly helping children. The latter hear about hierarchical evolution within the network and are put in mind that they can in turn become leaders. Positions of power in the hierarchy are carrots at the end of a stick so that members work hard for their success. Because a higher position in the hierarchy means less abuse and more control over others, which is important in a life that has so little control over itself.

4/ training for one or more functions within the group:

This training is oriented towards the work done within the cult itself. Each member has a specific role that will be assigned to him from early childhood. The following is a non-exhaustive list of functions:

- Priests and priestesses.
- Cleaners (after rituals).
- Messengers/carriers.
- Executioners charged with punishing recalcitrant or mistake-making members.
- Teachers (history of worship, dead languages, etc.).
- Prostitutes (Beta Kitten).
- Assassins (Theta, Delta).
- Trainers (MK programmers).
- Scientists (behavioural science).
- Doctors, nurses, medical staff, psychologists, psychiatrists.
- Military commanders (for military-type exercises).

These roles are interchangeable, and a member can have multiple functions at the same time. The length of training that a child will need will depend on the complexity of the future role assigned to him.

These trainings are based on the reproduction of a "model" of behavior, these are neuro-linguistic programming (NLP). The child is shown how the adult or adolescent performs his or her function, and once the behaviour model is visualized and integrated, the child is told that he or she will be taught this by giving him or her clear instructions on what is expected of him or her. The work is divided into several chronological stages. The child can be abused to provoke a "tabula rasa", a "virgin" personality who will do whatever he is asked to do. Programming makes extensive use of the gratification versus punishment scheme. If the child performs the orders correctly, he is congratulated and even cajoled, otherwise he is severely abused. Once the conditioning is integrated, the programmer congratulates the child by telling him that he is gifted and that they both do a wonderful job for the "Family" (the Illuminati global sect). The child's alter personalities absolutely want to execute the orders in the most perfect way possible because they are constantly looking for approval from the executioner(s): the programmer and the parents. This unhealthy bond based on trauma and emotional attachment will last his entire adult life, alter personalities are often looking for approval and remain at the stage of maturity where they were formatted but in an adult body.

Occultism and demonology play an important role in the group, so children are subjected to intense spiritual programming. The child is dedicated to a "heavenly mother" or a deity, even before his birth. Very quickly he will bathe in a religious setting where his participation in the ceremonies will force him to repeat these occult activities. The child will go through a baptism of blood, he will undergo many consecrations and other rituals creating an attachment to the spirits of members of his family, such as that of his mother or grandfather. Any MK programming session requires summoning daemons to guide the programmer or to inject energy into the current programming. Spiritualism, mediumship/channeling of spirits, predictions, psychic wars for power, magic of all kinds, all these practices are common and necessary in these Luciferian groups.

c/ Kristin Constance

Kristin Constance was born in Australia into a family practicing ritual abuse from generation to generation, so she herself endured the horrors and went through therapy for twenty years. She is now a social worker and counsellor. She works with people with disabilities, some of whom have suffered serious abuse.

In August 2011, Kristin Constance gave a lecture at the annual S.M.A.R.T. meetings on ritual abuse, secret societies and mind control (Connecticut, USA). The lecture was entitled ''Presumption of ritual abuse by Freemasons of the Order of the Eastern Star in Australia.'' Here is the full transcript of his testimony:

My name is Kristin Constance, I am 43 years old. I was born in Australia. I was ritually abused and mentally programmed between the ages of 3 and 9, in eastern Australia. Ritual abuse is something present in Australia and is at the heart of a criminal network producing child pornography. Some people belonging to these criminal groups have indeed been arrested, but the groups themselves and the networks are never disturbed. Survivors of ritual abuse in Australia face a number of barriers that prevent them from ensuring their safety. A former New South Wales police officer, who has investigated cases of ritual abuse, said: "As soon as you meet someone who is determined to testify, they can quickly find themselves at the bottom of the harbour." In Australia, there are few organizations assisting victims and this is a subject that is little recognized by law and government. Although Australia has recognized ritual abuse as a legitimate reason for obtaining refugee status, it has only a handful of lawsuits proving the link between child rape and satan's worship. Ritual abuse includes sadistic acts, but it's not just about that.

In 1998, the Australian Refugee Court agreed to take in a German victim of ritual abuse. The court said, and I quote: ''The German government has been ineffective in stopping these illegal activities.''

... Perhaps ritual abuse only takes place abroad. In Melbourne, Australia, an investigation identified 153 cases of ritual violence between 1985 and 1995. 98 social workers, psychologists and counsellors contributed to this survey (ASCA - Advocates for Survivors of Child Abuse - 2006). 38 Australian citizens responded to the Extreme Abuse Survey (EAS - 2007), more than half of them (55%) reported ritual abuse and mind control. I was one of those people who answered the questionnaire. Michael Salter, who wrote a chapter on ritual abuse in the book: ''Ritual Abuse in the Twenty-First Century'', has just completed a PhD entitled: ''Adult Testimonies on Organized Child Sexual Abuse in Australia.'' In his study, he interviewed 15 survivors of ritual abuse and I was one of those people. In my interview with him, under a pseudonym, I described the details of a mental programming by colors. I also interviewed a renowned Australian psychologist who has worked with survivors of ritual abuse for over 20 years. She had about twenty patients who had been victims of ritual violence and mental control and of these 20 patients, two of them had been abused by Freemasons. My grandfather was a Freemason of the 33rd degree, he was attached to several lodges. He and my grandmother had founded a lodge of the Order of the Eastern Star in the suburbs of Sydney.

I was in therapy for 20 years... 16 years with my current therapist. The hardest part of my recovery has been healing from a mental programming based on colors and on the exploitation of the left or right part of my body. This programming regularly caused me to dissociate. At the age of 18, in my second year of nursing school, I started having memory problems and that's what prevented me from taking my exams. I began to remember incest at the age of 24, and then ritual abuse and mind control shortly after. I have been hospitalized three times. During my first stay in a large psychiatric hospital on the west coast of Australia, I was diagnosed with a "brief reactive psychosis", Hashimoto's thyroiditis, in addition an abnormal electroencephalogram indicated temporal lobe epilepsy. That day I had forgotten and eat and drink and I couldn't stop crying. So I went to the hospital myself. My first psychiatrist diagnosed me with a borderline personality disorder. But she quickly corrected the diagnosis of dissociative identity disorder (ID) when alter personalities began to emerge. Shortly after that, I attempted suicide in a park, in front of a Masonic building. I then survived a rather full-bodied cocktail of drugs, I had swallowed a vial of anxiolytics, a box of antidepressants plus anti-psychotics. I didn't even fall asleep.

I consider myself lucky because my family migrated from the east coast to the west coast when I was 9 years old. From that moment on, the ritual abuses by the members of the sect stopped. Other types of abuse continued, but being taken away in the middle of the night for rituals, that was over. My sister, who is 7 years older than me, also remembers being subjected to ritual abuse. One day, when I was 26, she asked me if I remembered the underground rooms, I told her that yes... She then asked me if I remembered the children screaming, I said no but I knew they were there next door, in other rooms. My sister doesn't have as many memories, but I'm sure she has a lot more after-effects than I do because she didn't leave the East Coast until she was 16. She thinks she went through a process that Scientologists call P.D.H. ''Pain, Drug, Hypnosis'' (pain, drug, hypnosis). Some organizations use this technique using pain combined with drugs and hypnotic suggestions. These suggestions or ''commands'' are also known as ''implants''. Scientologists described this protocol as early as the 50s (Science of Survival, 1951). When my sister did a session with a "Galvanic Skin Response Monitor" or "E-meter", which Scientologists use, the device indicated that she had indeed undergone hypnosis in the past. The E-meter is a biofeedback device that instantly gives the nervous state and emotional reactions of the patient. Just before coming to this weekend of conferences, my sister told me that the E-meter had given a positive response to some memories about rapes on an altar, electric shocks, men in black robes, the obligation to drink blood and eat human excrement.

I also consider myself lucky because 17 years ago, when I confronted my mother and father on the subject of ritual abuse, my mother replied that she was not involved in it but she handed me the suitcase with all the Masonic paraphernalia of my grandfather. She apologized for not being a good mother to me. I think that will be the only answer I would have from her regarding ritual abuse. This suitcase confirmed many things to me. There were papers with passwords, hand signs and information for Masonic rituals. There were also the aprons, jewelry and medals that my grandfather and grandmother wore at meetings. I then remembered the colors of the Star and my alter personalities imprisoned in the tips of this Star. I then felt as if I had finally found the key... On the emblem of the Order of the Oriental Star (editor's note: an inverted pentagram with branches of different colors), the color red is in the branch at the top left and the color blue in the branch at the top right. In my mind, the Red has control of the left part of my body, and the Blue controls the right part of my body. This Masonic emblem was on paraphernalia everywhere at my grandfather's house.

I have integrated a total of 26 personalities during my years in therapy. Today I have only 2 that remain tenacious and that require more depth and questions before being able to integrate them definitively. I had alter personalities of animals, which for the most part were cats and tigers. My animal alters helped me survive in situations on the borders of death, my tigers supported me during deprivations and confinements. My Red/Left split (editor's note: alter group related to the red color and the left side of the body) has cashed all the pain, while my Blue/Right split (editor's note: alter group related to the blue color and the right side of the body) has been strong and it continues to strengthen. I still have a lot of unanswered questions about my abuse, so I need to travel to find more information. I have never been able to work in a stable way, but today I work full-time with patients.

I remember being caged, I remember electroshocks, scarifications, rapes, photo taking, drugs, hypnosis, light oxygen/sleep food deprivations. I was also locked in a coffin with spiders. I participated in rituals indoors but also in the middle of nature. I was tied up on altars. I participated in mocks of death and birth. I remember underground trapdoors in the rooms but also being woken up countless times in the middle of the night to be taken to the rituals. I was slashed, pierced, stung so that my blood could be used in rituals. I have been subjected to genital mutilation, which is the most traumatic abuse that can be inflicted on a human being, according to the World Health Organization.

The programming by the colors that I underwent took place in underground chambers. Each piece had a different color, corresponding to different programming. The colors seemed to match those of the Eastern Star: blue, yellow, white, green, red and black for the center. The red room had a red light, a stretcher, a table full of torture instruments and equipment for electroshocks. In this room, the right side of my body was covered while the left side was subjected to electrical torture. Electrodes were placed on my joints, which caused a paralyzing pain that I still feel today. Things were whispered in my left ear and electric shocks were applied to my temples. This is how "Red" was created and strengthened... A woman would ask me questions for programming, and no matter what I said to her, I was always wrong. I have dissociated myself many times. ''Rouge'' and its various alters seem to be designed so that during sexual abuse, there is a passive reaction to pain, in all circumstances. ''Rouge'' underwent a lot of blood rituals and rapes, and it was he who cashed in most of my pain.

In the blue room there was a blue light, a stretcher, equipment for electroshocks, seals and a sink. The left side of my body was covered, and it was the right side that was getting electric shocks. Here, discharges were applied to my muscles, and often I felt strengthened after these sessions. ''Blue'' seems to be a personality created to obey orders and feel no pain. She can be very angry and very aggressive and she will do everything to survive. I feel mostly programmed with these two colors. My sister when to her would be more programmed with the White. I still do not quite understand the purpose behind this split Left/Red and Right/Blue. But I hope to find more answers one day... I became aware of this Red/Blue division at the beginning of my therapy, 20 years ago. As I became aware of them, I came to understand how they could control each side of my body independently of each other. I found five sources of testimony concerning programming by color and there are strong similarities. The Blue is described as a protector, he does not feel pain, he does not hurt himself, he is strong, he is sometimes of military type. The Red is about sexual slavery and blood rituals. I do not know if every person programmed by Freemasons receives this type of color-based protocol. I suspect that depending on the type of personality, some colors will be accented and worked more than others. Perhaps the dates of birth influence the colors chosen. I don't understand what they're trying to do or create. I really do wonder what the guideline is behind all this.

"Rouge" experienced pain in my left ankle, left knee, left hip, left elbow, left ear and left temple. When I was "triggered", I found myself curled up on my left side in front of a radiator, in pain. I feel my Right/Blue side as unaffected by abuse. I don't have as many nightmares as I used to, but I still have sleep problems. I have never been able to maintain relationships but I am proud to have a growing circle of friends today. I never wanted to have children. I've always wondered why people want to give up children... certainly because I must unconsciously think that all children would automatically suffer what I suffered, and so I chose not to have any.

The methods that have helped me the most in my healing are "Gestalt-Therapy", massage and physical exercise. I'm doing a lot of walking and cross training right now, it helps in the synchronization of my two cerebral hemispheres. It's a long process for the left and right sides of my brain to relearn how to communicate and synchronize. The left side of my body has suffered a lot of injuries and it's as if my brain has almost sacrificed that whole part for my survival.

So the ritual abuse stopped when my family moved to the other end of Australia. But incest and rape continued until I was 18, when I left for good. My father was an alcoholic and my mother continues to live in denial, even though she answers my questions when she can. My sister continues to struggle with her mental disorders. Today I work with patients and my therapy is coming to an end. I realized that I could never be fully integrated/merged, but the awareness work helped me achieve many goals that I never thought would be achievable. Like giving this lecture. But my greatest achievement is that I stayed alive. and everything that happens now is bonus.

d/ Lynn Moss Sharman

Lynn Moss-Sharman est la fondatrice du journal The Stone
Angels (stone angels) and spokesperson for ACHES-MC Canada

(Advocacy Committee for Human Experimentation Survivors & Mind-Control). She was the victim of ritual abuse and mind control as a child. When she founded The Stone Angels newspaper in 1993, she began to connect with other survivors. This is how she was able to meet about sixty adults from the Thunder Bay area and northwestern Ontario in Canada. They then decided together to publish in this journal writings and drawings of survivors and therapists but also information on modern mind control. The ACHES-MC Canada committee was formed in 1996 when Sharman attended a lecture by Claudia Mullen and Chris Denicola in Texas (the testimony of which is reflected in Chapter 3). At this event, she also met other survivors, including Blanche Shastia. That's when she decided to do everything necessary to form a committee to defend the rights of victims of mind control in Canada. Little by little, a database was set up and the committee was officially set up in October 1996, the aim being to gather enough information to draw up a reliable report. The data collected indicated the geographic areas where the experiments had taken place in the United States and Canada, as well as a list of accused persons.

As contacts with other victims developed, Sharman realized that many of them had been involved in ritual abuses related to Freemasonry. Their father or grandfather were Freemason,including Shriners (AAONMS: Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine), this is something that seemed to be a common denominator in all these testimonies. She also found strong similarities between the testimonies of U.S. citizens who are victims of MK-Ultra-type mind control and those of Canadian victims who recount the same kind of experiences. In addition, the victims had often grown up near a military base. Another common denominator among victims is that often the father was in the armed forces (Canadian or American). According to Sharman, 90% of the victims she met say they have been "offered" to ritual abuse with personality splitting and the resulting mind control. In these cases, it is not a question of child abductions, but it is systematically one of the parents (or both) who are consenting and who even actively participate in the MK programming process on the child.

In 1994, Lynn Moss Sharman organized a series of conferences and meetings in Thunder Bay. The event was entitled ''Making Up for The Lost Time'' and was a series of three conferences that took place between November 1994 and June 1995. The aim was to bring as much information and testimonies from victims and therapists as possible to the public. The aim was to make the information publicly available and thus secure the people who began to talk about it openly, while allowing the victims to be brought into contact with each other. This kind of gathering is important because it gives victims confidence and reassures them about their experience. Indeed, they are no longer alone and this reassures them that they are not crazy. The keynote speaker at the first meeting in November 1994 was Shirley Turcotte, a licensed consultant and clinical therapist based in Vancouver, British Columbia. She became known for the documentary "To a Safer Place" which shows her journey as a victim, herself a survivor of a child pornography network. Among the many other speakers, there was also Dr. Louise Million, psychologist and author of "Breaking The Silence", a study on the mistreatment and torture perpetuated on native Native Americans (First Nations) in homes or schools. Amerindian children in Canada have been particularly targeted by the Paedocriminal Network with experiments on mind control.

Sharman reports that these meetings in Thunder Bay received a lot of media coverage. She says that the Canadian premier at the time, Robert Keith Rae, received complaints from Freemasons across the province to denounce the actions of the Stone Angels... this organization that put its feet in the dish, pointing the finger at the paedocriminality of network and mental control! Indeed, Freemasonry was regularly cited in conferences and testimonies as being related to ritual abuse and mk. Sharman herself received messages from Freemasons on her answering machine. She even claims that the wife of a high-ranking Freemason in Moose Factory who was the editor of a newspaper in Dryden refused to print the announcement of the lectures because her husband was a Freemason. As editor of a regional newspaper, she had deliberately chosen not to let people see such a gathering. These public meetings aimed at denouncing ritual abuse and mind control caused a general outcry among the Freemasons because it had been announced that they were not allowed to attend the conferences (although it was obviously impossible to make such a filtration at the entrance, the announcement effect had a certain impact ...). In addition, conference recordings were strictly reserved for victims, therapists and certain associations.

A majority of the survivors Sharman met were Native American, Ojibway from Thunder Bay or reserves in northwestern Ontario. Soon, similarities were found in the testimonies of former residents of households. For example, there have been reports of an electric chair at the fort albany boarding school near Moose Factory, where skeletons of children have also been found. Former boarders have said that they were raped in the middle of the night by men in white robes, some have also talked about forced abortions, etc. These are the same sectarian practices as those described by survivors of American ritual abuse. Sectarian activities of this type also took place on Manitoulin Island and some victims even reported that wealthy whites were flying from New York or California to participate in ritual abuses on that island. All of this is well known to the Aboriginal community in Canada because they are doing their own investigations on this subject themselves. They are well aware of the existence of such practices and know the places where these activities take place. According to them, this sectarian network involves among other social workers related to children and the family, many Amerindian children have been victims of these people (this connection of the Network with social services related to children is recurrent, whether in America or in Europe). Seniors see what happened to many of their siblings in residential schools and homes, but also in the penitentiary system, many of which were in the vicinity of U.S. or Canadian military bases (NORAD and DEW). Lynn Moss-Sharman's father himself worked in the Canadian army.

Sharman's memoirs began to emerge with the sexual abuse of his father, uncle and a group of army men, also involved in the sexual exploitation of children. Her memoirs concerned this group of men, but she had difficulty determining the connection they might have with her father, or the exact role he played in this group. Sharman has memories of ritual abuse at a very early age (as early as three) when she lived with her parents on Maria Street in Toronto. She remembers a ritual she calls "forgiving by blood", which took place near the slaughterhouse or in churches near Hamilton and Toronto. She also remembers being transported to various locations, including sites affiliated with the army, including the Stone Mountain underground or Uplands Air Force Base in Ottawa. Sharman underwent sessions of sensory deprivation and electroshock, she remembers being told then: "First we break you, then we rebuild you..."' (Ordo Ab Chao). It was subject to MK projects funded by the University of Rochester in the late 40s and early 50s. She quotes a certain Dr. George Estabrooks from the Department of Psychology at Colgate University in Hamilton (USA) and affiliated with Oswego State Teatcher's College. Dr. Estabrooks was directly involved in creating the Manchu candidates, he was in contact with J. Edgar Hoover (FBI) as early as 1937, as well as with José Delgado, Martin Orme, Ewen Cameron and many others. Here we find the whole clique of scientists who were working at the time on brainwashing and trauma-based mind control.

Sharman insists that it is essential for people to realize that these experiments on mind control are mainly carried out on children and that these are large-scale research that has led to the development of increasingly sophisticated techniques. Children are even born in these laboratories to be subjected to experiments without ever seeing the light of day. These small victims are subjected to confinement in cages, they are subjected to electroshocks, drugs, sensory deprivation, etc., all the techniques that will serve to deeply dissociate them and to split their personality. Sharman also reports genetic experiments and irradiations, or chemical treatments to accelerate puberty, to quickly obtain reproductive subjects. Victims literally serve as guinea pigs to test drugs to determine which ones will be the most effective and fastest in the brainwashing process preceding MK programming. Sharman wonders about the extent to which these experiments on mind control may have taken place within the Native American community in Canada. She remembers being taken to a place where there was an Inuit woman with a shaved head with a baby in her arms. She also wondered about the fate of a number of Aboriginal people who had been sent to southern Ontario or to state borders for so-called tuberculosis treatment in the fifties and sixties.

Sharman's healing process was very long and she still has disabled status today. Indeed, such fragmentation is devastating and, in its view, irreversible. She describes how her body kept the memory of each programming level due to the fact that cellular memory records all that the victim has undergone. These traumatic memories usually emerge with a powerful abridgement (emotional discharge, the person relives live traumatic memory). For Sharman, her memories began to emerge when she went through a personal crisis, yet another violent and unhealthy relationship that eventually made her totally sink. The first memories to have broken through were those of rapes, then over time, fragments of more enigmatic memories such as the memory of having been locked up in a cage or of having undergone electroshocks, are also violently reassembled. When these flashbacks emerged, for example, she could glimpse someone's face but intense physical pain seized her whole body and she became totally unable to speak. So she couldn't explain to her therapist what she remembered, or what was going on in her head. She lived a long period when she found herself mute in the face of her traumatic memories. He sometimes had to write or draw them. During these violent flashes of memory, she found herself in situations where she hid for example under the coffee table by wrapping herself in the therapist's mat. Her body and mind literally relived the traumatic experience she had endured years before, with equally severe pain. She says that she found herself in physical postures that she was absolutely unable to take in a normal state. Her body was making unheard-of contortions and she was in spasms when the cellular memory of the electroshocks rose.

Her therapist made her understand that hypnosis would not be a good thing for her because of the intensity of her physical reactions when the memories came back. Indeed, hypnosis could have flooded her with too much memory that would have such an effect on her body that she could not stand it. The therapist therefore preferred to treat things smoothly, step by step, so that Sharman would be able to endure it, both emotionally and physically. It was necessary that at the same time his body, his mind, his mind and his "Me" be able to process traumatic information and to understand how these different memories could be linked together. Another puzzle that had to be reconstructed...

An important point to note is that Lynn Moss Sharman never had to take medication during her therapy and she carefully avoided any intervention in a psychiatric setting. Yet on many occasions, she wanted to end her life and be interned in hospital to receive treatment that could have relieved her. She also managed to avoid systematic addictions and self-destruction.

and/ Dejoly Labrier

Dejoly Labrier grew up in a military environment, both her parents were in the army and practiced ritual abuse. Dejoly developed a multiple personality as a result of severe trauma she suffered in these military groups. She is the author of ''All Together Now: A Multiple Story of Hope '

Healing'' (Today all together: a multiple story of hope and healing). In 1997, she was a guest on fox 13 news on Kathy Fountain's show "Your Turn". Here is the transcript of the program on which this woman testified:

- Kathy Foutain: The drawings you're going to see now were drawn by different personalities with different names, but they all come from one and the same person... A woman with a dissociative identity disorder. A disorder that would be caused by repetitive trauma inflicted during early childhood. This woman says she was abused by her mother and father in a strange ultra-violent cult acting in a military setting (...) So we welcome Dejoly Labrier. It takes a lot of courage to talk about such things and I am delighted to be able to talk about it with you. I would like to help people understand what you have been through. Your parents were both soldiers, "Marines".

- Dejoly Labrier: They were both Marines.

- KF: An iron discipline?

- DL: Yes, very rigid. From early childhood, my mother boasted that her 3-year-olds were as disciplined as a "Marines" to make their beds or respond to the guard to you by shouting: "Yes sir!'' or "No Sir!'' We were continually restricted to doing our daily tasks. Every Saturday we also had to clean the house from top to bottom.

- KF: What about the cult, the sect? Were they both part of it? Was it a satanic cult or something else? What were they doing?

- DL: There were satanic rituals that were practiced. What I understood from what was revealed to me by the memoirs of my alter personalities was that they were both involved. My father was the leader and my mother was his accomplice, I call him his "accomplice" because she never protected us from all this violence (...) There are children who are raped, but who are also cut up. This "fuels the feast" so that the members of the cult receive power and power. There is the consumption of blood, but there is also cannibalism with sacrificed babies.

- KF: Where do they take babies?

- DL: Within the group, some women make babies. There are also young girls of child-growing age. As soon as they are puberty, they are engrossed by rape during rituals. This happens all the time. They also find babies where no one really takes care of them.

- KF: You say in your book in detail that you were sexually used by this cult, so you were raped by your father and other men.

- DL: I've been raped by many people, including women, by a lot of Marines. We moved regularly all over the country. In the army my father was a recruiter and he was also in reserve position at different bases in the country to recruit and train, especially training to master amphibian aircraft.

- KF: And everywhere he was assigned, he would find a new group of people to do this kind of thing?

- DL: Yes, that's it...

- KF: Is the army aware of these things? They are never heard on that.

- DL: There's a lot of anger from some of my alters towards the military. But what I can say is that the upper hierarchy of the army was well aware of what was going on. There are a lot of things going on that they know about but they don't do anything to stop it. They don't stop never those responsible.

- KF: When your father came to a new site, from what you tell us he just had to put a classified ad in the local military newspaper to find people interested in it...

- DL: There is a military network of sexual exploitation at the national level. You access it according to who you are and what your relationships are. From one thread to the next, through meetings and discussions, you end up meeting people related to this kind of thing. They can set up a network very quickly, sometimes it only takes three people but sometimes there are many more people: 20 or 30 people.

- national. You access it according to who you are and what your relationships are. From one thread to the next, through meetings and discussions, you end up meeting people related to this kind of thing. They can set up a network very quickly, sometimes it only takes three people but sometimes there are many more people: 20 or 30 people.

- KF: What are the objectives of these rituals? What are their goals?

You said it was satanic. Is it sacrifice? Why do they do this?

- DL: There is a belief that consuming blood and human flesh during rituals will give you some power. They think they will become very powerful. On the other hand, there is a kind of Satanism where they take Christian beliefs in order to reverse them, it is something essential for them. This gives them a sense of superiority over others: "We are powerful, we can kill without anyone knowing, who will be next?" So they feel very powerful and superior to others.

- KF: I was lucky enough to have your therapist on the phone a short time ago and she confirmed to me that it was indeed a dissociative identity disorder. She also told me that she had seen your different personalities emerge in her office. It's part of the therapy to bring these alters to a place where they will be safe to be able to tell their stories. Sometimes they can behave violently against you or other people. It is a question of knowing why these alter personalities act in this way in order to be able to help you, it is necessary that the alters can express themselves. You drew a map, a kind of diagram that represents about fifty different personalities. It was drawn several years ago, it is the alters that have successively emerged and that have given their names. Who is the big one in the middle, "Competent one"... Is it you or someone else?

- DL: It's an alter, it's not me. I follow all of that. combined into one person.

- KF: You have very destructive personalities.

- DL: Yes. against me, inwardly but they do nothing to others. What I would like to point out is that they each have their own behavior, because they were created to protect another alter or myself. So they may seem to be behaving badly, but they're not really bad at the bottom, they're doing this to protect us.

- KF: On the drawing, this black woman is one of your alters?

- DL: Yes.

- KF: What role does it play?

- DL: She is the guardian of our system. She unconditionally protects and loves each of the alter personalities. When there are conflicts between some, she is the one who takes them apart to talk to them individually.

- KF: And who is "Silent one?"

- DL: "Silent one" is one of the alters who has been abused militarily and satanically. She does not speak, she is mute.

- KF: You say that you have now established a consensus with all the alter personalities. This means that they all agree to agree and to cooperate. Are they here listening to our conversation?

- DL: Yes. Many alters do what they call "boards of directors", meetings between them, this kind of things...

- KF: So you had a kind of meeting before you came to talk on television?

- DL: (laughs) Absolutely.

- KF: They all said it was a good idea because....

- Dj:... Because it needs to be said, people need to know that this kind of abuse exists, and that this kind of psychic disorder (T.D.I.) also occurs. Many victims with split personalities are misdiagnosed in psychiatry. They are sometimes treated with inappropriate medicines that do not solve the problem of multiple personalities.

- KF: Yes, your therapist mentioned that often victims are misdiagnosed and receive heavy chemical treatment that does not help them at all. It is better to let come, bring out the alter personalities during therapy and recognize their different functions to try to have a good cooperation.

- DL: Yes, help them have different functions. I have an alter named "Druggie", its function is to put the system to sleep, as a protective measure. If there is a trigger that occurs and that can cause problems for one of the alters, then Druggie emerges and plunges us all into sleep. It literally makes us sleep.

- KF: Now a question from Lydia calling us from Ruskin.

- Lydia: Did she try to talk to anyone about what was going on at the time? Was there anyone to talk to?

- DL: Unfortunately, there was no one to talk to. My whole family was involved. When you are so violently abused as a child, you quickly learn to keep quiet and not talk to no one because it may be you who will be the next victim sacrificed... So the fear is there...

- KF: You were afraid of being killed?

- DL: I was completely terrified of being killed.

- KF: You know, skeptics about your testimony will say, "How do I know if this cult really exists? Is all this real? Are babies really killed and mutilated? Some may also say that you may have been sexually abused by your family but that it was your mind that would have created the rest of the story.

- DL: I can understand that reaction, because it may indeed seem very strange. However today there are more and more people to reveal the truth about what they have experienced. This is my life. I am not saying that anyone who is sexually assaulted is going to develop a multiple personality, or that they come from a satanic cult, or that the military are all rapists. What I have to say is that this is my truth but you do not have to believe me. There are many people who know that all this is very real and they manifest themselves. At the beginning of my healing process, I met people from all over the world who were drawing the same kind of things, telling the same stories, they had alter personalities with the same names, and they all had this same psychiatric disorder because of their traumatic childhood.

- KF: You have two sisters and a brother, are they safe today?

- DL: No, because it takes a lot of courage and work to get through this and to be able to recover. It's just like an onion that you peel layer by layer to discover another level of pain and to become aware of it. My brother was severely abused in his childhood (...) My father wrote me a letter in which he confesses to having raped me and other children... including my brother. My mother is in total denial and she accuses my father of being the one who betrayed us.

- KF: Your father doesn't want to leave the cult?

- DL: Today I have no idea.

- KF: A few people called asking this question: Is it possible that the therapist could implant these memories in your mind?

- DL: They (editor's note: the Network) have a lot of power, and all over the world they try to put in people's heads that this kind of thing is imaginary, that all these horrors can't really exist. All this came through my own work, if I went to see a therapist, it was so that he would guide me, not so that he could do the work for me, or tell me what to think.

- KF: We have Tammi online, ask your question.

- Tammi: Hi Dejoly, I'd like to know how old were you when you finally got out of this? And how did you get out of it? You said that the sexual abuse stopped in your late teens.

- DL: Yes, actually the sexual abuse stopped on my twentieth birthday. I was coming home for the party and my father was there, all by himself. That day, he raped me. After that, I never saw him again, because I ran away. I ran away after realizing that there would be help outside, people who could really help me (...) When we are dissociated, with a multiple personality, we are also disconnected from human relations. I have been married four times. and today, in my fourth marriage, I can finally say that I love my husband and that I have been able to establish real bonds with him. Before that, I wasn't able to establish a real relationship, now I'm getting there.

- KF: Therapy has helped you a lot...

- DL: Yes.

- KF: Now a question from Barbara.

- Barbara: Hi, what kind of therapy did you go through? Especially with regard to hypnosis and the type of drugs.

- DL: I had a therapist for 5 years, but she died suddenly... For 5 years we worked without drugs, because it is not really effective. But I have an alter, "Ginger", who needed Prozac when she was depressed. So we took Prozac for 2 and a half years.

- KF: Was it the alter or everyone else who took it?

- DL: It's very difficult to explain. I took it for her, but she was the one who had the effects. My therapist at the time also used hypnosis. We also did drawing, I kept a journal in which I wrote questions with answers, then we came back with the therapist. We also did experimental therapy with movement, music, etc.

- KF: But you never "integrated" and merged to be one with all the alters?

- DL: No. I personally think that sometimes the therapist's plan or method is not necessarily in the interest of all alter.

- KF: There is a kind of cooperation and consensus between the alter.

- DL: Yes. (...)

It would seem that in Europe, too, there are such practices in the military. In July 2011, the Italian magistrate Paolo Ferraro publicly denounced at a press conference in his country the existence of a "satanic-military sect". An Italian TV channel broadcast the magistrate's statements. Here is the transcript of the short Italian report on the subject:

"A satanic sect based on sex and drugs, forming a high-level network, would practice obscure maneuvers to ensure that investigations never succeed. After the decision of the Superior Council of the Judiciary to suspend a magistrate for a period of four months for a so-called health problem, the latter decided to make public this case which began in 2008.

Paolo Ferraro: I limited myself to a simple observation: in a house, several people, some of whom were "officials", lived there, with women and children, and participated in activities that were not at all normal... I discovered an underworld, unknown, obscure and ambiguous. There were also sexual activities practiced in a context that was for me until then completely unknown.

The defenders of the Public Prosecutor's Office denounce anomalies in the actions of the Superior Council of the Judiciary and have already provided for an appeal to invalidate this suspension while magistrate Ferraro will appeal.

Paolo Ferraro: The choice they made may have come from the fact that they did not read correctly everything I denounced in my report. But also for not really understanding the root of the problem."

f/ Cisco Wheeler

Cisco Wheeler is a survivor of the Illuminati Lutheran network. She is the co-author with Fritz Springmeier of the books: "The Illuminati Formula to Create an Undetectable Total Mind Control Slave" and "Deeper Insights Into The Illuminati Formula" (Even deeper into the Illuminati Formula)

Wheeler was programmed from an early age by his father who himself came from a transgenerational Luciferian family. According to her, her father was a programmer for the Illuminati Order and for the U.S. government. His family was closely linked to the political milieu. His great-uncle (a direct descendant of General Ulysses Grant) was General Earl Grant Wheeler, a Chief of Staff who commanded U.S. forces in Vietnam. His father was a Freemason of the 33rd degree and Grand Master among the Illuminati, in addition he sat on the Grand Council of the Druids. By this status, he was strongly linked to the American political milieu. According to her, her father was also a "multiple programmed", i.e. he himself had suffered traumas in childhood that had divided his personality. So it's a problem that repeats itself from generation to generation and he himself was a prisoner of dissociative states, just as his daughter Cisco was. He was a genius at all levels, an outstanding musician. Outwardly this Satanist gave an image of himself very bright, loving his family and doing good work in the army. At first glance, he was sociable, he loved people and people loved him too. Wheeler thinks that at some point in his life he became aware of what he was and what he was actually doing in private and in secret, some amnesic barriers broke but it had to completely overcome him... changing direction would have cost him his life because he had gone much too far.

From his birth Wheeler entered a very structured world with systematic protocols. As a child, she was trained to serve as a sex slave to the so-called "elite" of American politics. Cisco Wheeler began to have flashbacks following the death of his father. For a long time, his host, or façade, personality did not have access to the memories of the deeper alter personalities, associated with occult activities, until the day when the traumatic amnesic walls finally broke around the age of forty. Not understanding these flashes of memory and her suicidal tendencies, she sought help and was hospitalized for nine weeks. This was the beginning of her therapy and exploration of her dissociative identity disorder.

His family had planned his life from A to Z. They had structured and conditioned it to become what they had decided in its place. This programming was designed to dehumanize and degrade her to the point that at times she really believed she was a little cat. Looking at herself in a mirror, she saw a porcelain doll with a kitten's head. One of her alters had been programmed to be a sex slave, a docile kitten, it is the "Beta Kitten" programming that we have already talked about at the beginning of the chapter. To dehumanize her and create these alter animals, she describes how they had installed two cages, one filled with pretty kittens in great shape and the other for her... Locked in the cage, she had next to her a bowl connected to an electric wire that gave her discharges as soon as she wanted to drink or eat. In this cage, she was humiliated, spit on her as soon as she behaved like a little girl. In the cage next door, the kittens were always well fed, they did not lack anything, they received a lot of love, they were given caresses, etc. This ordeal and torture, which was none other than an MK programming session, lasted several days and Wheeler tells how her little brain decided at one point that she should no longer be a little girl but that she too was a little cat. The cats were fed and they were not forced to lie down in their feces like the little girl, they were not hit as she was. Her personality dissociated by this deeply traumatic situation was therefore identified with kittens. When her memories came back, her body had kept the memory of all the blows she had received during this program. The pain manifested itself as the memories emerged. She also talks about confinement in a cage with monkeys. When she retrieved her memories to reconstruct her real identity, it was extremely difficult and painful for her to accept that she had been a real little girl. Every time she expressed something human, she was severely tortured until she ended up totally driving out of her head the reality that she was a little human girl, because it was too painful to be a little girl!" she says.

She also says that she underwent "magic surgery" during which her heart was "removed" during a mock operation accompanied by hypnosis and drugs. So she became a little girl who didn't even have a heart anymore... She quickly followed in her father's footsteps by being trained to become a programmer herself. She cites a few locations where MK programming sessions were held: The China Lake Naval Base in California, presidio base north of San Francisco, Letterman Hospital near Presidio Base, Alcatraz Jail, Scotty Castle in Death Valley National Park, Salem Psychiatric Hospital in Oregon, and the large Dorenbecker Masonic Hospital in Portland. All this stretching from the mid-40s to the mid-60s.

Wheeler recounts how with a group of four or five MK survivors from the same social background, they encouraged each other and found the strength, thank God, to fight against the network's ongoing programming, harassment and intimidation. Together, they fought to regain their freedom and health. During her first five years of therapy, Wheeler says that the network was still in contact with her and that they regularly brought her back to torture her again: electroshocks, drugs, repeated rapes, etc. Despite this repeated violence for five years, she says that the force that pushed her to continue her therapy was that for the first time, she was aware that she was truly a human being: "I am not a kitten!, I am a woman!
I was a little girl! These programs were just lies!''. She was ready to die for the truth to come out.

Wheeler describes well the phenomenon of ambiguity that arises in the links between the victim and his executioner. As a little girl, she tells how a child who did not belong to the Luciferian hierarchy was coldly killed in front of her. It is in this way that the executioners display their power and it then creates a morbid emotional bond so that the child will unconditionally attach himself to the murderer... because this one spared him, to kill the other child. Try to understand what can happen at that time in the brain of a child who is only four or five years old. As already noted earlier in this chapter, trauma is an important factor in the emotional bond that will bind the child to his executioner. The victim never knows when she will be "loved" or when she will be "hated". Indeed, executioners change their attitude "like shirt" and can at any time fall into horror because of their own dissociative states. Wheeler's father could be extremely kind during programming just as he could be abominable and without any human feelings. He then became meaner than a wild animal and would have backed away from anything to make his victim understand something. She says that some of her alter personalities still love her father very much and that they will probably love him forever. For her, incest was a proof of love, she considered that the love of a father or mother consisted in raping his children... It is a belief that she had so much that she was immersed in this Lutheran system where incest is a "cultural" practice.

Wheeler had three "mothers" who formed the foundations of his internal system. These "mothers" were her three great basic alters who were placed on a pedestal in her inner world. They are alters deeply linked to occultism whose only purpose is to reign with the Antichrist as queens, when he ascends his throne. Lucifer has a wife who is composed of all the "Mothers of Darkness", i.e. all the alters of High Priestesses.

According to Wheeler, this is the essential aspect of their system, the mental programming and actions of this network really come out of the very heart of Lucifer. He wants to crush God's people, and the world as a whole. The Illuminati consider themselves gods and their only master is Lucifer. They took an oath to their prince, their "father of light". They signed to implement his plans by all means, to achieve what is planned for the end times and finally install the Antichrist on his throne. They have been working in this direction for centuries and the MK programming of the children of the Luciférien Order is an essential point.

These people have no fear of hell. If they reign like gods, if they obey the call of Lucifer and remain faithful to their oaths of blood, they will reign with him in hell, this is their belief... They are convinced that if they respect this, they will be gods in hell, with Satan. It's a huge lie but they believe it. They all want to become gods, this is really the foundation of their doctrine and the only master to whom they obey is Lucifer. Cisco Wheeler says, "They're motivated by power, money, and glory, but it's actually the demons that have motivated them for generations. Lucifer and his demons. They are completely possessed.''

g/ Brice Taylor

Susan Ford's testimony first appeared in 1978 under the pseudonym "Laws" in Walter Bowart's book Operation Mind Control, a reference work on the subject of mind control. In 1999 she published her testimony under the pseudonym Brice Taylor in a book entitled "Thanks for the Memories" in which she described her journey as a Monarch slave since her early childhood. Brice Taylor was one of those "presidential models" completely dissociated and exploited by a certain American elite. She was used as an MK slave at the highest level of society and is one of the few to have testified publicly about these occult practices.

It was in 1985 that Susan Ford began working on her split memories to find the path to healing. As a child, abuse and programming began with his father. Her mother also suffered from dissociative disorders and some form of programming, and she was also involved in the abuse of her daughter. His entire family was involved, both his paternal and maternal grandparents, his aunts, his uncles and even his brothers. So here again we are dealing with transgenerational Satanism. His father dragged him into satanic ceremonies, especially at the home of his grandfather who was a well-to-do politician, himself belonging to a family that had been practicing ritual abuse for generations. Brice Taylor believes that his father was himself a "multiple programmed" having suffered horrors in his childhood, she says she often saw him change his personality. We therefore find here the classic family pattern of the traumatic vicious circle transmitted like a vampire bite from one generation to the next...

From the age of 5, she was regularly taken to military bases in California to undergo MK programming protocols. She also cites the Neuropsychiatric Institute at UCLA University and NASA centers where this kind of thing is done. His family's connection to the military environment passed through his politician grandfather. It was the latter who, when she reached the age of 10, introduced her into a paedocriminal network composed of politicians and various high-ranking personalities from all walks of life.

Taylor testifies that the ritual abuses she suffered included bites with pins and needles, burns, she also says that she was suspended by the feet and sometimes tied in cross. The executioners also made her spin like a spinning top, she suffered rape, deprivation of food and sleep. She was also forced to participate in the orgies during the rituals. At military sites, she was subjected to electric shocks, flashes of lights and sounds as well as torture with all kinds of sophisticated instruments, all combined with the effect of the drugs administered to her. All these barbaric practices had the sole purpose of splitting his personality into a multitude of alters, created to be then programmed. She describes that during these MK programming sessions, she was tied to a special chair, just like those used to train astronauts. According to her, they used the same equipment used by astronauts:
centrifuges, weightlessness simulators, sensory isolation boxes, etc. Some devices used light or sound signals combined with electroshocks. Taylor explains, for example, that she received one sound in her right ear and another completely different sound was sent to her left ear. It was programmed to associate a sound with a specific control, usually in a hypnotic state.

In parallel with these programming sessions in military institutions, his father participated daily in strengthening his mental control. She says that he had a completely unsuspected façade personality. Outwardly, he behaved like a charming man, no one could have suspected what he could do in private, the torture he inflicted on his children, in order to split them and program them. According to Taylor, his mother was also involved in the torture, and when her daughter regained her memories and confronted him with this harsh reality, she was in total denial, she had no recall of hitting him in this way. The mother did not dispute or deny what her daughter was telling her, but she seemed visibly very disturbed by her memory problems. Subsequently, she even helped her daughter publish her autobiographical book.

Let's make a small parenthesis here with Svali who reports exactly the same thing with her mother who also had deep dissociative disorders. Dissociation has the effect of a kind of "glue" that keeps denial in place and participates in perpetuating the darkness over all these practices. In an article published in 2001, Svali wrote about her mother: "You are inventing all this, you know very well that it is not true! I have no idea what things you tell me about!" The person who told me that was my mother two years ago today. She was telling me clearly that she didn't believe me pa,s. Her amnesia is intact and she protects her. I wanted to explain to her that she and I had spent part of our lives in a cult, that I loved her and that I wanted her to come out of it too. On that phone call, the first in a year, I gave him the exact names of the people involved and whom we both knew. "Mom, you're in a state of dissociation, that's why you don't remember," I told her. "No, it's wrong, nothing like that happened," she maintained. I then decided to shake her up a little more in her denial... She knew very well that I had never learned German consciously during the day, however it was in this language that she spoke to me at night from a very young age. She herself did not understand this language at all consciously... "Why am I fluent German today?" I asked him in German and continued: "I never learned this language, you know it well. It's Spanish and Latin that I learned in school." There was then a blank man and she replied: "You may be a medium and you learned it by telepathy"... It was therefore necessary for my mother to maintain her denial at all costs by explaining even the inexplicable... But how did she understand my question, which I had put to her in German?!? (...) I think denial is a serious barrier to healing. When a survivor begins to regain his memory, he will usually confront the members of his family with his memories to try to validate them. The survivor also frequently faces a lack of recognition, rude denial, and even verbal abuse by family members. People who need to remain in denial to protect themselves from painful truths. "You're crazy", "You're sick", "You have an unhealthy imagination", "How can you invent such things?", "You need help", even more cruel phra.ses can be thrown in the face of the one whose amnesia is beginning to dissipate, in front of those who want to keep it! 511! ."

In 1985 and 1987 Brice Taylor had two serious accidents. It was the shocks caused by these accidents that began to bring back memories of his past. a lot of memories. This initially triggered programming that made her believe that she was going completely crazy. She had flashbacks with increasingly accurate visions, accompanied by physical pain in some parts of her body. At that time, she was preparing a master's degree in clinical psychology and she had to interrupt her studies, as her traumatic memories were emerging with violence. In particular, she was in contact with therapist Catherine Gould, who helped her a lot. It is first the sexual abuse in childhood that are reassembled, then the memories of satanic ritual abuse and finally the memories concerning MK programming. Here we find the same process of recovery of traumatic memories as for Lynn Moss Sharman or Kristin Constance: first incest, then ritual abuse and finally MK programming, the most violent memories going back last, although it is difficult to establish a traumatic scale in this kind of thing.

Taylor states that during her therapy, she worked with a secret service person who revealed to her what he knew about MK programming, including keys, or codes, for triggering and manipulating alter personalities. She describes how he made her switch from one personality to another in order to bring to the surface all the split memories held by the many alter. When the alters emerged successively, she took a pencil to write pages and pages about what had happened when this or that alter personality was active. As in most fractional people who have developed a T.D.I., some of the alter personalities possess a photographic memory or hypermnesia that allows to reveal memories in every detail. In addition, the fragments of soul that remain "frozen" in a space-time where the experience of trauma is constantly present can revive a scene as if the person were living it in real time, in the present moment, this is what makes it possible to make a very detailed description. This phenomenon explains how some survivors are able to give ultra-precise information about facts that can be twenty years old, be it dialogues or descriptions of places.

Taylor underwent hypnosis associated with drugs, this was constantly used by her father to deeply anchor the commands in his subconscious and thus be able to program it little by little. She also describes how electricity was used as a tool to fragment her personality. According to her, electroshocks, in addition to creating a deep dissociative state, affect the entire energy field of the human body and thus make it possible to touch the individual at a very deep level. When she was very young, she received electric shocks with simple electric wires, later the executioners used electric prods originally designed for cattle. The electronic equipment of the military bases was even more sophisticated. According to Brice Taylor and Fritz Springmeier, electric prods are used to erase short-term memory, however the memory does not seem to be able to be totally destroyed, the numerous testimonies of survivors attest to this.

Taylor describes well how a single element of his environment could bring back memories in one fell swoop. As soon as one of these memories presented itself to her, she focused as much as possible on it in order to make it as clear as possible in her consciousness. The next step was to put it on paper and validate it as much as possible. She describes very well how her memoirs came back in the form of extremely precise flashes, as if the event had just happened, when it was 10 or 20 years old. These were snippets of information that over time made it possible to assemble a complete puzzle, the puzzle of his life as an MK slave.

Some programming aimed to disrupt her physical and mental functioning when she began to access traumatic memories. She had to fight for several years to stay alive, fighting against those "time bombs" that had been placed in her to drive her crazy or to kill her.

Its MK programming served government interests, its photographic memory was exploited as a communication tool in the Network. She also served as a sex slave for the elite of the same network, she was used for money laundering, pornography and prostitution, as was the survivor Cathy O'Brien, who was also exploited as a "presidential model".

Brice Taylor revealed that an intelligence agent had told him about the case concerning sex slaves reserved for elites, the "presidential models". This officer gave the figure of 3000 women programmed in this way in the United States. But this type of MK programming is not only about sexual slavery, according to her, some Hollywood actors but also heads of state have a totally split and programmed personality, people who would also greatly need to heal their deep traumas...

h/ Kathleen Sullivan

Kathleen Sullivan is the author of the book "Unshackled: A Survivor's Story of Mind Control".

When her memoirs emerged after her father's suicide in 1990, she completely shut herself up and disconnected from her emotions, she then acted like a robot. Traumatic memories have resurfaced, first sexual abuse and then increasingly traumatic rituals...

In 1991, she was hospitalized in Dallas and it was there that she began to cope with her painful memories and gradually understand that she had undergone MK programming. It was during this hospitalization that she realized that she had several personalities and that each of them had a first name, a number, and a code name.

Sullivan recounts that her traumatic memories came back through sounds, through the voices of her father or others, voices that she heard very clearly. She knew deep down that these were voices she had heard in her childhood. A memory could also go back by a smell or by food that suddenly seemed to become infected... when traumatic (and cellular) memory came back, she physically felt the rapes she had suffered. Many visual memories came back through flashbacks or recurring dreams. It was then that she decided to put everything in writing. So she spent hours and hours writing a journal while physically and emotionally live the traumas encapsulated in her memories. Including memoirs that concerned her programming as an assassin, something that drove her crazy, not knowing if it was her imagination or reality. Indeed, she stubbornly refused to accept these things that brought back to her consciousness, but when her other alter personalities began to manifest themselves, she could no longer remain in denial.

During his hospitalization in 1991, a psychiatrist at the University of Dallas asked him to write "the map of his personality". It was then that five levels of programming returned to him: Alpha, Beta, Delta, Theta and Omicron. Obviously no one bothered to reassure her and explain what it meant because no other patient described similar terms. Later, she realized that these were programs that had been implanted in her mind through hypnosis and other techniques. This was MK programming at a government level.

Sullivan's father has been his main programmer since he was an early age. She later learned that he himself had suffered extreme trauma in his childhood and was therefore totally out of control. He was, however, a competent engineer from AT&T (formerly Western Electric), with a very scientific mind. He regularly told his daughter that he was a "god" for her, and naturally little Kathleen believed him... But she was simply a guinea pig and a prototype; the better the father would succeed in splitting his daughter's personality, the better he would be seen by the CIA, for whom he worked. Like all other executioners, the father used electricity as well as sleep and food deprivation to program it. He was an occultist completely immersed in satanic ritual abuse, he led a small group in Reading, Pennsylvania in which many children were involved. As a child, from the age of four, Kathleen Sullivan had to participate in sacrifices, rituals aimed at desensitizing her and conditioning her for her programming as an assassin.

His paternal grandfather was Welsh and attached to a druidic tradition. The people involved in these occult practices of a Luciferian nature do not want to abandon their ancient religion and this is how these traditions are perpetuated today in a "clandestine" way ("nameless religion"). Father Sullivan practiced on his daughter the "chain" personality splitting, systematically giving a new name to each alter that was born. He then implanted in these fragments what he wanted: that is to say, beliefs, feelings and thoughts. According to Sullivan, his father himself had been programmed into his childhood. He was of German origin and had been recruited as an interpreter by the Air Force during the war. Later he spent a lot of time with neo-Nazi groups, it was then that he became interested in satanic doctrines. He was very close to some Templar groups, according to his daughter he was never a Freemason himself but he regularly worked with high-degree initiates.

Kathleen Sullivan estimates that she was exploited as an MK slave for about twenty years. It had a versatile programming and was used for various functions: theft, trafficking of children (supplying small victims to paedocriminal networks), security (bodyguard for political or other personalities), settling accounts (assassinations), interrogations, transmission of information, but also programming on children and participation in ritual sacrifices... It was used by many people she says, mainly by the CIA, then by the Pentagon, the Rangers, the Delta Forces, the special military forces, but also the mafia which according to her is totally connected to the CIA.

When she was not on a special mission, she was used as a bodyguard for politicians. She says that they like to have an MK slave on hand to do the dirty work, such as providing them with drugs or children. A bodyguard usually enters the intimacy of the personalities he protects and an MK subject who will not talk about what he sees and what he hears is therefore preferable to an unprogrammed individual who would be a weak link in this vast network that is currently at the controls of this planet.

All those engaged in both immoral and illegal acts would, of course, like to be able to act publicly with impunity and to completely reverse the moral values of society. For Sullivan, these people are driven by a powerful motivation to establish and lead a world government that will allow them to commit in peace everything that is currently considered immoral and illegal, such as pedophilia. Indeed, incest is a cultural practice specific to this Lutheran milieu, something that they would therefore like to inject into society by legalizing paedomania. They want only one thing: to get rid of the Christian moral code, and for this they advance their pawns step by step to establish the reign of their doctrine: that of the New World Order Luciférien.

i/ Cathy O'Brien

Cathy O'Brien is yet another victim of the MK-Monarch process aimed at reducing her to the status of a sex slave, serving as a diplomatic courier or even a mule to transport cocaine (the fuel of our elites)... His personality split with amnesic walls has been used by the highest echelons of the U.S. government. She and her daughter Kelly (who was also subjected to MK programming) were rescued in 1988 by Mark Phillips who took them to Alaska to shelter them from the Network to which they were bound hand and foot. There, Cathy's memories were able to begin to get back in order by gradually freeing her from the chains represented by the traumatic amnesic walls, so that she finally gained access to her free will. The output was an autobiographical book entitled "America in The Middle of Trance-Formation".

In 1996, whistleblowers Cathy O'Brien and Mark Phillips gave a lecture entitled "Mind-control out of control" in which they describe both their journey and our situation in the face of this New World Order. The full transcript can be found in Appendix N°2 of this book.

j/ The artist with multiple personalities: Kim Noble

Kim Noble is an English painter. From the age of 14 and for about twenty years, she regularly stayed in a psychiatric hospital, until the day she met Dr. Valerie Sinason and Dr. Rob Hale. In 1995 she was finally diagnosed with an I.D.D., a diagnosis that was validated by Professor John Morton of UCL (University College London). In 2004, during art therapy sessions, Kim Noble and her thirteen personalities discovered a great interest in drawing... A dozen alters then begin to express themselves with brushes and painting, each with a completely different name and style. The themes are also totally different, some painting seemingly innocuous landscapes or characters, while other works are much darker and more explicit about the ritual abuse that Noble may have undergone during his childhood. The alter personality named "Ria Pratt"' clearly depicts scenes of rape and torture of children, scenes that Noble has undoubtedly lived and whose traumatic memories have been preserved by some alter. In these paintings depicting ritual abuse, we find a great similarity with the various testimonies from other survivors of MK.

Kim Noble has done numerous painting exhibitions and newspapers such as The Telegraph, The Guardian or The Independent, have relayed his work and also interviewed him. She also appeared on the television show The Oprah Winfrey Show. These media describe her as an "original", an artist with multiple personalities, but rarely they deepen the subject to explain the causes of such a psychic state. Journalists address even less the subject of ritual abuse and mental control, yet symbolically present in some of his paintings. Most of the articles about her mention her great courage and talent, but none dare to touch the essential content of her artistic work and what he describes: traumatic rituals causing dissociative states. People are fascinated by the extremely varied styles of painting, but it is clear that his works also describe his past as a mk-monarch victim.

Here are some excerpts from an article entitled "Kim Noble: a divided woman", published in 2006 by De The Independent:

"Each of Kim's alter personalities is an artist in their own right: Patricia paints lonely desert landscapes, Bonny often draws robotic characters dancing, Suzy has repeatedly painted a kneeling mother, Judy's paintings are very large formats while Ria's works reveal deeply traumatic events involving children. These disturbing representations are at the origin of Kim's psychological state, she suffers from a dissociative identity disorder, a disorder that is a strategy of mental survival or the personality divides at a young age due to severe and repeated traumas. The number of personalities often depends on the repetition of trauma. Kim herself has no recollection of being abused as a child. She has been protected over the years by her alters: "I was told that I was abused, but for me it's still too early, it comes in through one ear and it comes out through the other. It's not good to remember things I don't want to know.''

Kim has good reason to fear the return of memories about her past because it is possible that if she receives too much information, she will not be able to cope with it and she will "disappear". It has happened twice before (...) That's where it gets really weird - For Kim who isn't quite Kim...

Kim has good reason to fear the return of memories about her past because it is possible that if she receives too much information, she will not be able to cope with it and she will "disappear". It has happened twice before (...) That's where it gets really weird - For Kim who isn't quite Kim...

The alter personality I interview is Patricia, she is the one who manages her life and that of Aimée (her daughter), but Patricia was not always the dominant personality. Before Patriciare-emerged, Bonny was the dominant alter and even two years before, it was the Alter Hayley.

Kim looks at me very carefully when she explains to me: "You see, Kim is just the ''house'', the body. There is not really a "Kim", she is completely divided. We answer kim's name but I'm Patricia. When people call us "Kim" we take it as a nickname. But once people know you well, usually they don't use that name anymore.'' (...) Of the twenty (or more) personalities who share "Kim", some were identified already 15 years ago: Judy who is anorexic or bulimic, the mother: Bonny, the nun: Salome, the depressed: Ken, the sensitive: Hayley, Dawn and Patricia, the mute: MJ.

There are also a handful of children "frozen" in time (stuck at a certain age and place). Some of the alters know that they are part of a T.D.I. system, but many are unaware of it or refuse to accept it. "Judy doesn't believe in this reality," Kim explains: "She's just a teenager who insults the therapist when he tries to explain the situation to her. She is so young, she does not even think of Aimée who is nevertheless her daughter. She knows me and for her, I am a bad mother because I always abandon Aimée. For her, it is quite normal to come and go constantly (dissociation). She probably thinks everyone works that way." There are certain triggers that cause dissociation, personality change, but gradually Kim has learned to avoid them. However there can be up to three or four alter changes per day! [512]]."

The paintings of the alter personality Ria Pratt are certainly the most shocking of all his work. We discover children put in cages, rapes in meetings, an abortion scene... The executioners are here often depicted holding in the hand what can be interpreted as electric prods. The common thing about every painting by Ria Pratt is, whether it's the children or the aggressors, each character is painted with his "double" floating above him or next to him. The doubles represent the same silhouette as the character, but in a transparent and ghostly way. This most likely symbolizes the dissociation of body and mind during ritual abuse. Ria Pratt represents systematically children with their double, but executioners are also represented with this duplication, which confirms that they themselves would be in a state of dissociation or possession when they unleash their violence during ritual abuse. A morbid detail is that the executioners are systematically represented in these paintings with a smile on their faces...

The Alter Golden Dawn produces paintings representing mostly disarticulated and amputated mannequins. In his works, alter Judy gives an important place to duality, in particular by painting black and white checkers. The paintings of the alter Key deserve special attention. As the name suggests, this alter exposes in its paintings key elements of encryption, i.e. protocols and methodology for MK programming. His painting "Seven Level" describes in detail seven steps for the design of a Monarch slave (representation of the table in Annex No. 4). The number seven is a magic number that can be found associated with musical notes, the colors of the rainbow, the days of the week, the wonders of the world, the seven levels of consciousness, etc. This production is built in horizontal layers representing different scenes. The described process reading chronologically from the bottom up:

- Phase n°1: Birth in Hell

This scene clearly represents hell, the setting where the child will be born: a family dedicated to Satan / Lucifer. This is the beginning of the MK programming process. We can read several words inscribed:

"Deep", "Satan", "Dark", "No Help", "Blood", "Death", "Ail Around" and "No Life".

In this first scene, there are two representations of the personified devil, with horns and a fork as well as inverted Christian crosses that confirm the satanic character of the place. Crawling bodies are depicted as well as a woman appearing to be giving birth or having an abortion. A snake and a dragon are also depicted in this scene.

- Phase 2: Traumatic shocks

This scene depicts the multiple tortures suffered by the small victims of the MK-Monarch. This step involves inflicting extreme abuse on the subject to create the dissociative states necessary for programming. In this part of the painting, at least 28 children are depicted. On the ground, 13 children are reduced to the status of slaves and walk on all fours in an Indian line. In the center of the scene is a table or bed on which a subject is lying with wires connected to his head and hands, a drawing that certainly depicts the tortures with electricity. Two characters push what appear to be stretchers on which children lie. We can also see in this scene many cages in which children are locked up, still others are hanged by the feet. Sexual violence is not represented in this scene but is explicitly found in paintings by alter Ria Pratt.

- Phase 3: Dissociation and splitting

This scene shows us the different alter personalities created by the traumatic shocks in the previous phase. The alters are represented as little men floating and getting lost in meanders drawn by sinuosities totally devoid of any organization. However, the sinuosities in which the alters evolve eventually converge to join towards the next phase whose central point is the tree of Kabbalistic life. These sinuosities containing the alter personalities form in a way the roots of the tree of life, which will serve as a base, as a foundation, for phase n°4. In this scene, the alters are isolated from each other by these sinuous roots that partition the memories of each of them. This symbolizes the traumatic amnesic walls created in the previous phase.

- Phase 4: Conditioning and structuring of the internal system

Once the alters are created, a structure must be organized to compartmentalize them and make them easily exploitable. This is what this scene n°4 represents: the structuring of the inner world of the MK slave. The drawing seems to represent a kind of labyrinth or technical plan whose different areas correspond to symbols. We see signs of the zodiac as well as eyes that are there to monitor the dissociated fragments in the inner world. The central point of this phase is the tree of life of kabbalah, also called the tree of sephiroth. Several survivors reported having been programmed with such a structure that would serve as a frame to organize and access the different alter groups. It is likely that the alter Key personality who painted this picture represented here the actual scheme of assembling and structuring Kim Noble's fractional personality.

- Phase 5: Integration of access codes

This scene shows a cluster of numbers and letters with a book in the center. On the left side are the numbers and on the right side are the letters. The number 666 is written below the left page of the book. This is the encoding phase of the series of words and numbers that will be used to bring out this or that alter. Codes to access the slave's inner world are also programmed. The book in the center of the scene probably represents the archival material that will contain all the data concerning the programming of the MK slave.

- Phase 6: The passage

Phase 6 represents a kind of highway, a bridge overlooking a sea or a river. The initiatory ritual is accomplished, the Monarch butterfly can come out of the chrysalis... This highway, whose perspective gives the appearance of a triangle or pyramid, also symbolizes the way forward for dissociation, the "yellow brick road" of the Wizard of Oz on which the victim is encouraged to dissociate himself and by which the different alters can emerge according to the needs of the controllers. A road that leads here to the next scene representing the dissociative state as such, where the victim floats through the rainbow.

- Phase 7: Liberation

This scene represents the sky of the previous scene, the dimension where the dissociated mind of the victim evolves. This sky has two suns, a rainbow and a silhouette with wings and an aureole, is it an angel, a butterfly or a dove? This scene symbolizes both the final state of the slave who was split and then recomposed by the Monarch process, he can now be "released" into the secular world to fulfill his function as a slave. But this final scene also represents the dissociative, timeless state that will now be the cornerstone of the slave's life. We also see in this scene an eye... the eye of Lucifer (who sees everything) who will constantly monitor the new slave MK-Monarch.

This painting by alter Key represents the evolution of the slave, passing from the hell of traumas in the basements of the first levels, to the celestial "paradise" (enlightenment) represented by the deep states of dissociation caused by pain and terror. The final phase shows us that the slave has finally reached the rainbow to transcend his reality... in other dimensions. However this psychic escape is not the true freedom, because the Eye watches...

It is important to note in the central position of the painting, the presence of the tree of Sephiroth, it is a primordial symbolic element of Kabbalah, itself at the origin of many magical practices. Dr. Cory Hammond describes in the Greenbaum paper the presence of the Kabbalistic tree as a structural element of the internal system of some of his patients.

Witchcraft and occultism seem to be at the heart of the Monarch-type mind control process. Although Kim Noble refuses to admit that she has undergone ritual abuse, her alter personalities Ria Pratt and Key possess memories that are clearly related to ritual abuse and trauma-based mind control. A therapist would probably have a lot to learn from talking with the alter Key personality... Kim Noble's real source of inner inspiration is the MK-Monarch programming buried in his traumatic memories, but of course this will never be mentioned in the media that are interested in his work...

We can also mention Lynn Schirmer who is another painter suffering from T.D.I. as a result of ritual abuse and mind control. A woman who testified publicly and produced an exhibition called "DIDiva & The Mad Machines", in reference to the barbaric tools used by programmers.

8 - Synthesis

In 1997, Wayne Morris did an in-depth investigation into the problem of trauma-based mind control. For eight months, he interviewed 24 people (survivors and therapists) on CKLN FM 88.1, the radio station of Ryerson Polytechnic University in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. This series of interviews entitled "Mind-Control Sériés" has been fully transcribed. Part of it has been translated into French by the Christian group "Parole de Vie" and put online on the internet under the title "Survivors of the illuminati". At the end of the examination of all these documents and testimonies, "Word of Life" produced an interesting synthesis, which follows:

- 1 / The mental programming of human beings exists. That is an undeniable fact. This is a phenomenon of which the scientific community has only become aware of relatively recently, on a historical scale. A few decades ago, hardly anyone talked about it, and there was almost no serious document published on the subject.

- 2 / On the other hand, the technique of mental programming is extremely old, and seems to date back already to the time of Babylon and ancient Egypt. Men seem to have understood very early on that it was possible for them to transform other human beings into mental slaves, with appropriate conditioning, based on repeated traumas.

- 3 / The Illuminati, or those who make up the "ruling elite" of the planet, also seem to have very quickly understood the advantage they could derive from these techniques to dominate the world. In fact, Christians will have recognized that behind these abominable techniques and tortures lies the hand of Satan, who wants to enslave humanity, and be worshiped as God, in the form of the Antichrist announced by the Bible.

- 4 / Mental programming is based on the phenomenon called "dissociation", or "fragmentation" of the personality into multiple personalities. It is as if an individual's personality could be fragmented into several different personalities, who can take control of the body in turn. Moreover, there are like "walls of amnesia" between these different fragments of personality, so that each fragment does not remember what happened at the level of the other fragments. In fact, they are not multiple personalities in the absolute sense of the word. The individual retains a single unique personality, but it is fragmented into different components seemingly independent of one another.

- 5 / This personality splitting is usually caused by violent and painful trauma. This trauma causes physico-chemical reactions in the brain. The splitting of the personality would be a defensive reaction of our organism against too violent a trauma. The brain creates a "special memory zone", which will record the trauma at a subconscious or unconscious level, to save too much pain in conscious memory. It is therefore created a fragmentation of the personality, which will allow to preserve the memory of the trauma, but at a level that is no longer conscious. This hidden memory will be surrounded by an "amnesic wall", so that the waking personality is not aware of it. It is therefore the victims of these traumas who "naturally" create this fragmentation of their personality, in order to be able to manage and absorb the traumas suffered. This personality splitting can therefore occur naturally in all those who experience violent trauma. But it can also be artificially provoked, by inflicting on victims controlled trauma, associated with hypnosis or various drugs. It is then possible not only to fragment the personality, but also to condition, or program each fragment of the personality. All these programmed fragments remain dormant at the subconscious level. But they can be activated, that is, go up to the conscious level, and take control of the body. They are activated by means of secret codes defined in advance. The reception of this code by the victim plunges her into a hypnotic or second state, and the fragment of her personality that has been activated then takes control of her body, to perform the program coded in advance: spy, murder, seduce, etc... We understand the advantage of this abominable technique for all the secret services. Moreover, it is the CIA or the KGB that have carried out or commissioned the most important research in this field, research funded by the American and Russian governments. They also "benefited" from the research carried out by Nazi doctors in the death camps, under the direction of the infamous Doctor Josef Mengele, who later took refuge in the United States.

- 6 / In recent decades, many doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists and various therapists have seen more and more patients flock to their offices who had similar symptoms. They had all suffered sexual trauma during their childhood, had serious personality disorders, and various characteristic symptoms: depression, alcoholism, drug addiction, eating disorders, sleep disorders, anxiety... All these patients also recounted all kinds of very disturbing personal memories, which spoke of satanic ceremonies, planned assassinations, money laundering, contacts with political, religious and economic circles, world conspiracy, the New World Order... Many therapists have simply considered these patients to be seriously disturbed by mental illness. But others were surprised by the similarity of their testimonies and symptoms, and decided to make serious investigations into this phenomenon, in a scientific and systematic way.

This is how they began to verify the memories of the victims, to learn about satanic sects and their practices, and to have access to ultra-confidential information or documents, proving that the government had funded extensive research on mental programming, and had all kinds of experiments carried out in military bases, hospitals and research centers, NASA centers, etc... They calculated that hundreds of thousands of innocent citizens had been used as involuntary guinea pigs for these very traumatic experiences. The favourite populations were the mentally ill, prisoners, the military, prostitutes, orphans and children in general. As the number of survivors grew, they organized themselves and, with the help of a large number of therapists, demanded that formal investigations be conducted. Presidential Commissions of Inquiry have been appointed, which have recommended that secret files, including those of the CIA, be made public. President Clinton has acknowledged the facts and certain practices, particularly with regard to experiments involving the use of radiation. He issued a public apology to the victims and made funds available to compensate them. But only the tip of the iceberg has been spotted. Most specialists and survivors are convinced that these experiments are still taking place, and that everything is being done to cover up the case and bring the victims or the most active researchers into disrepute. The government often hides behind "defense secrecy" or the requirements of national security. As none of the torturers involved in mental programming have ever been sued for illegal or immoral activities, this has, of course, encouraged the continuation of these practices.

- 7 / The study of the testimonies of survivors and therapists that we have published leads us to make the following remarks:

Although the survivors' testimonies were entrusted to competent therapists who analyzed and verified them, they remain personal testimonies. Given the complexity of the human psyche and mental programming techniques, one must always remain cautious when confronted with a personal testimony. If the survivors are born-again Christians, which is the case for some, it is appropriate to analyze their testimonies as survivors in the light of their Christian witness, and the fruits of their lives.

What may lead us to believe that these testimonies are true as a whole is their large number, as well as the variety of geographical and social origin of the survivors, who, for the most part, do not know each other. The mathematical probability for it to be an invention or a manipulation is practically zero. But this does not mean that we should automatically accept all the details of these testimonies en bloc. It is known that human memory may not be very reliable. Added to this is the problem of certain false memories, deliberately programmed by the torturers, in their desire to blur the tracks.

Since the Illuminati will not fail to discredit, often without reason, the testimony of survivors and even therapists or people who help survivors, the latter must always ensure that they adopt a research conduct and methodology that is as irreproachable as possible, so as not to be open to criticism. , even if one can never avoid calumnies.

We have recently learned, for example, that the Fritz Springmeier, in Oregon, had been raided by the FBI and police, who reportedly discovered "marijuana production equipment" and weapons. It is perfectly possible that these things were intentionally placed in his house by the investigators, when we know the unscrupulousness of the CIA. In any case, the judge placed Fritz Springmeier on probation (with an electronic bracelet), pending the judgment. Springmeier himself claims his total innocence in this case, and claims to be the victim of a set-up, which is very likely, (editor's note: Fritz Springmeier was finally sentenced to 8 years in prison, he was released in 2011 and placed on probation for 5 years.)

Similarly, it is certain that most of the survivors were drugged and subjected to hypnosis. This does not facilitate their desire to be given credibility, and it is relatively easy to reject their testimony en bloc for these reasons. A serious researcher will be aware of these dangers, and will be sure not to have his judgment distorted, to stick to the facts.

It is important that those who help the survivors are therefore well aware of all these dangers, and take all the necessary precautions not to be caught at fault. In this respect, we could reproach Fritz Springmeier for having shown great imprudence, to say the least, in personally dealing with Cisco Wheeler, as she herself claims, '24 hours a day, 365 days a week'. We believe that a committed Christian should never take care of a person of the opposite sex in this way in the long term (unless he is part of a large team, and never finds himself alone with the victim), otherwise he will be open to temptation or criticism. He could easily be accused of adultery or fornication by an outside slanderer who would judge by appearance, even if nothing wrong has been committed.

Christians (like Fritz Springmeier and Cisco Wheeler) place too much emphasis on the psychic or psychological aspects of mental programming, and not enough on the demonic aspects. It is true that they were interviewed in radio programmes aimed at the general public, the majority of whom were not Christian. But they could have talked more about the intervention of demons in these personality disorders. Some "fractions" of the personality may well be demons who take control of the bodies of the victims, and who should have been driven out in the name of Jesus Christ, instead of engaging in ineffective psychotherapy in this area. Cisco Wheeler admits, however, in his interview, that all Illuminati are completely owned. It is very likely that their victims are too, and only their conversion to Jesus Christ can enable them to settle this spiritual problem once and for all.

This allows us to talk about the therapies and care that are being given to the victims. This is probably the weakest point of these testimonies. It is clear that these therapies, which use the skills of psychiatry, psychology and the humanities, are completely insufficient to completely cure the victims of mental programming. Indeed, these therapies are limited to an action at the level of the psyche, that is to say of the soul (thoughts, feelings and will), or of the body (action on the brain waves to control the various states of consciousness). The minds of the victims are not affected by these therapies. Thus, even if these therapies can produce beneficial effects at the level of the psyche and the restructuring of the personality of the victims, they are powerless to solve their deep spiritual problems. True therapy would be to lead them to Jesus Christ, to go through a new spiritual birth, and then to be taught all aspects of the cross, to learn to walk by the spirit. Only the power of the preaching of the cross can allow the survivors to definitively break with such a charged heredity and past, and make them understand that in Christ, all things old have passed, and all things have become new! [513]]!

We can add in this synthesis the importance of the notion of soul fragments during the traumatic process of Monarch programming. As we have seen in the previous chapter, the splitting of the personality would correspond to a fragmentation of the soul, the various lost parts of which remain blocked, as if "frozen" in another time-space. This is a different dimension from ours used by programmers to manage and control alter. It is in this dimension that they set up the partitioning structures to enclose, dominate and condition the fragments of soul.

In this process of dissociation of the personality during traumas, there are therefore on the one hand the purely biological and physical consequences that are neurological and chemical changes, today well understood by psychotraumatologists; and on the other hand the metaphysical consequences that are the separation of physical and energetic bodies, the "tearing off of the soul", creating a breach towards other dimensions of the being. Monarch programming is therefore both a scientific process but also and above all a spiritual and occult process during which external entities can interact.

Everything has a material face and a spiritual face... The spiritual aspect affects the material aspect and vice versa, they are two worlds that interact continuously. The metaphor of alice's mirror in Wonderland explains very well this notion of the spiritual world versus the material world. What do occultists do to see in the future or in the past, or to communicate with demons? They use (among other things) a mirror to transcend our space-time (catopromancy)...

Demonology is a key in Monarch-like programming, demonic entities cooperate and have a guardian role for every programming and memory. It is therefore imperative to take into account this spiritual and energetic field to understand the subject as a whole.

Chapter 8
Deprogramming Protocols

"There is only one way to kill monsters: accept them"'
Julius Cortazar

1 - Introduction

This chapter is not intended to serve as a medical or therapeutic guide. The aim here is to provide additional information to understand as well as possible how the memory, mental programming and internal system of an I.D.T. works. This chapter is the development of the part entitled "T.D.I. and Therapy" of Chapter 5.

The term 'deprogramming' may seem exaggerated or inappropriate in the sense that a human mind is not computer hardware and will never be programmable or deprogrammable at will just as a computer can be; although transhumanism, which advocates the use of science and technology to improve the physical and mental characteristics of human beings, raises fears about this sort of thing. In fact, it is the victim who "deprograms" himself, the therapist only directing him in the process of raising awareness of conditioning based on traumatic memories. A deprogramming consists in discovering the type of structure present in the inner world, determining the trigger codes and delivering the alter (fragments of souls) prisoners of the space-time where they lived the abuses and programming. The deprogramming will also be done by reconstructing the memory puzzle so that a rational and chronological understanding is made of it. Victims usually have programs aimed at fighting against possible therapy, whether by self-destruction or sabotage of therapeutic work, the purpose of these programs is to silence the victim if he begins to remember certain things and talk about them outside of worship.

The issue of deprogramming is obviously very delicate in the sense that there is no protocol or official therapy to defuse and cancel MK programming. As we saw in Chapter 5, modern psychiatry has completely abandoned the study and treatment of dissociative disorders and I.D.T., and more generally psychotraumatology. Nowadays, therefore, it provides no answers to establish effective diagnoses and therapeutic protocols. The few therapists working with survivors look for the best methods on their own to stabilize the patient, defuse programming, unload traumatic memories and finally merge alter personalities. Sometimes prayers of deliverance and even exorcism can be of great help in "cleaning" parasitic entities. The intervention of a shaman competent for the recovery of soul fragments can also bring help to the survivor. Survivor Lynn Moss-Sharman reported how Native American Aboriginal people in Canada practice intensive healing sessions to help victims of ritual abuse and mental control in their community. She herself has attended healing ceremonies in sweat lodges where elders work with victims. According to her, they are the ones who have the most impact on healing and she says she would certainly not be alive if it had not been for their intervention. The spiritual aspect is therefore just as important, if not more so, than the purely psychiatric aspect and prayer for the help of these victims is essential. Many testimonies record a restoration brought about by the grace of God and by conversion to Jesus Christ. Christ is certainly best placed to put in order a soul divided by extreme traumas, programmed and linked to demonic entities.

2 - Restore a healthy spirituality

Programmers know well the power of prayer for both physical and psychic healing, it is for this reason that they will install conditioning very early so that the victim is refractory and even totally allergic to the idea of a loving and saviour God. Conditioned since her earliest childhood, she cannot turn to something she does not believe in, or even that she violently rejects. Cutting off God's victim is an essential point to be able to keep him under spiritual control, so bringing him back to God can also be a crucial point for his healing. Especially since there is usually a certain form of spirituality that is already present in these victims due to the omnipresence of occultism in the environment from which they come: it is therefore necessary to direct them to channel them in the right direction. Survivors emerging from a Satanic/Lutheran network will have strong beliefs since their early childhood, here are some that need to be defused and broken:

- Satan is stronger than God, he has the power, God is not able to do anything to protect me.

- God does not love me, he despises me and rejects me. I am guilty of crimes that God can never forgive me, I have no hope of redemption.

- God wants to punish me, I am deeply afraid of it.

- My life is controlled by Satan, I belong irrevocably to Satan, he has taken my life and I am possessed by a spirit or demon that controls my life. Many survivors will find it difficult to accept that they have a T.D.I. because they may believe that their alter personalities are demons that control them. This keeps the victim isolated and separated from his or her original personality. It is therefore essential to help the person understand that he has been used and maintained in these states of consciousness for the purpose of control and that he is not responsible for anything.

- I am dedicated to Satan, I have vowed to serve him throughout my life in exchange for his protection and gifts. These bonds or pacts require powerful spiritual work, deliverance must pass through the renunciation of Satan, through the prayer of exorcism and if possible through a conversion to Jesus Christ, the only true Savior and Healer. It must also be clearly realized and borne in mind that the religious beliefs in which the alter personalities were involved are based on something real. To try to change them overnight would be to tell a Christian or a Muslim that the foundations of his religion make no sense. The whole "Magic" aspect also plays an important part in the beliefs of a survivor who came out of a Satanist cult. The religious and spiritual side is an important part of the child's conditioning, but it is the physical and psychological traumas (splitting) that remain the focal point for MK programming.

Survivor Svali reports that in some groups, a specific program will guide the child against Christianity. Christianity is the antithesis of Luciferian occult practices, so they want their members to be unable to come into contact with the hope that Jesus Christ could bring. During torture, the child will often ask for help or appeal to God. At that moment, the programmer will say to the child: "God has abandoned you, He could not love you, that's why you are in so much pain. If he were so powerful, He could stop that.'' They will even ask the child to pray and ask God to intervene. The child will then pray to God and then the executioner will further violently the child. This situation will create a deep sense of despair in the little victim, the child will truly believe that he has been abandoned by God, that He has remained deaf to his call. The child will also be systematically abused and tortured when the name of Jesus Christ is pronounced, in order to create a psychological barrier to the mere evocation of His name[514].

Many readers may ask themselves a legitimate question here: "But why doesn't God intervene?" Why does he not intervene in wars either? Why so much misery on this planet, especially all the suffering of children if God existed? These are questions that come up very often. We live in a fallen world under the yoke of Lucifer. Isn't the fallen angel named the prince of this world in the Bible: Now comes the judgment of this world; now the prince of this world will be cast out (John 12:31), My Kingdom is not of this world (John 18:36). This is the reason why these satanic/Luciferian sects all connected to the fallen angels/demons reign for the moment as masters on this planet without being in any way worried. The issue of the suffering of these children in the networks is obviously unacceptable and even inconceivable for many of us. But it is up to us, human creatures, to become aware of the situation, to react and to work to stop these things at our level.

This extreme conditioning combined with occultism and demonology creates a powerful spiritual programming (reverse sanctification) which it is therefore essential to break in order to establish new healthy and constructive spiritual notions. This spiritual programming may be the most damaging part in the system of an MK-Monarch slave as it aims to cut it off from the true Source of Healing. It is an intentional distortion of truth that teaches and reinforces erroneous and inverted concepts of God. Some alter personalities may be very violent towards everything that refers to the Christian world, so it takes a lot of patience and understanding to reconcile the survivor with a positive spirituality based on love, sweetness, hope, grace and mercy. A new source of spirituality will greatly help the patient to dissolve the powerful occult attachments linking him to the sect, to no longer identify with the aggressors and to recover the parts of himself that have been "captured". Any intentional act to control and spiritually enslave a child through terror, who is therefore not able to make a contrary choice, can be reversed during therapy by a simple application of free will, for we all have control over our spirituality. The awareness of trauma and MK programming, as well as the implementation of free will, will allow access to this detachment and autonomy. It is a question of establishing a physical, psychological and spiritual separation with the group of executioners. This separation will take place gradually as:

- The figure(s) of the group's authorities will be discredited
- Contradictions will be highlighted (ideology versus reality), for example "how can they preach love while they rape and exploit victims."
- The patient begins to listen to the therapist, i.e. when reality begins to take over sectarian ideology.
- The patient begins to realize and express some reproaches towards the sectarian group.
- The patient begins to see himself as an opponent of the sect rather than as a member of it[515].

3 - Security and stability

An essential point is that the survivor must be safe before starting a deprogramming. It is a question of providing the victim with both physical and psychological security so that effective therapeutic work can begin, because it would be pointless to start anything if there was a risk that the victim would be severely abused for speaking. If the abuses are still ongoing, the dissociative function of protection will continue to operate and destabilize the person again and again. To try to dismantle and stop this dissociative process would then be to try to stop the only means of survival and protection of the victim. This is why the first step to be taken is to cut off all contact with the executioners in order to start a safe therapy allowing deprogramming. If the question of safety arises, it will slow down the therapy because the energy will be diverted towards this fear rather than towards the work of discharging traumatic memories. Many survivors are still in contact with the cult when they begin therapy, but it will advance much more quickly once this contact is definitively broken[516].

Stabilization consists in reducing risky behaviour and anarchic alternations of personalities. In Cathy O'Brien's autobiography, Mark Phillips sets out point by point the guidelines he had put in place to stabilize O'Brien when they had taken refuge in Alaska in order to protect her from the Network[517]:

1. I maintained constant vigilance to ensure that Cathy would be physically and psychologically protected from any outside influence.

2. No memory could be verbalized by Cathy until she wrote it. The only questions I could ask had to be related to his account and addressed to the personality consulted who relived his memories. These questions were only to concern the "who", the "what", the "when", the "how" and the "where" of the memory. Even if I had been given the answers in advance, I should not have intervened. Our perceptions could have been radically different, which could create additional memory barriers between his personality fragments.

3. I basically explained to Cathy what mind control was and she then realized that what had happened to her was not her fault. However, she also understood that she was becoming responsible here and now for her actions. It was through therapy that she asserted her control over her own mind.

4. We spent a large number of hours on "intellectual discussions" about Cathy's learned religious beliefs, during which they were "logically" dismantled - simply as if I were explaining how the illusion induced by a magician's tricks helped to blur reality.

5. Cathy would not be allowed to express the slightest emotion when the memories were brought up and entered in her diary. I never asked him, ''What does this do to you?'' This is as important as the issue of security for rapid memory restoration.

6. I would provide Cathy with the necessary food, vitamins, water and make her sleep to improve her failing physical health.

7. I taught Cathy to visualize her memories on a "mental cinema screen" rather than reliving them through the "virtual reality" mechanism of the mind.

8. I taught Cathy how to put herself in a trance and control the depth of her trance through a certain technique of self-hypnosis (some consider it a meditation). This was put in place to avoid any possibility of contamination of his memories or confusion between them that could have occurred in case I had used this hypnotic suggestion technique known as 'induced imaging'."

9. Cathy was not allowed to read books, newspapers or magazines, nor could she discuss with Kelly (her daughter) any of the memories she had found. Cathy had lived through information control all her life and therefore had little opportunity to struggle with the contamination of memories. This rule was also understood and respected by Kelly whose memories were beginning to surface.

10. All the ways of behaving and other social conventions adopted by Cathy were re-examined in logical discussions that we had among ourselves. All pre-established ways of behaving, including daily habits, were either reworked or completely eliminated.

11. I demanded that she wear a watch on her wrist day and night to alert me every time she had the feeling of experiencing the slightest "black hole". In the absence of trauma, the missing time is a major sign of the transition from one personality to another. On the other hand, the fact of recovering the notion of time indicates that we are recovering.

''Write this to me,'' mark tells me. I don't want to hear it, I want to be able to read it, so that I can understand it well (...) Putting this in writing will revive the logical part of your brain. When you write down your memories, it turns an incomprehensible emotional into something logical and thus makes it understandable. Once this is understandable, you can manage the reality of your past in a logical way (...) Simply transfer this view of things to a screen of your mind, like to a movie screen. It will allow you to access your memories without abridgement (...) That is to say, he explains to me, without reliving it. As I said, you have already survived it once. There is no point in reliving it. These are just memories, and you already know that. Look at the screen of your mind through the eyes of the one who endured these events. Smell the smells. And then put everything in writing. That's why I said that the pen is stronger than the sword. This technique will give you back control of your memory, and ultimately of your mind[518].

Before beginning the work to raise awareness and overcome programming, therapist Ellen P. Lacter compiled a list of tools that could stabilize and secure the patient[519]:

1 - Obtain a family tree of the family, a school, professional and residential history, so that you can refer to it later.

2 - Create a particular formula or prayer to "protect the space" at the beginning of each session.

3 - Maintain a deep respect for the patient's free will.

4 - Explore the deepest spiritual values and beliefs of the patient, in order to determine the role that this "spiritual source" can play in therapeutic work.

5 - Create an internal "box" (or container) to store pain, fear, toxic states (drug, alcohol ...), all that can be undesirable and harmful to the advancement of therapy. There may be several "storage boxes" in the inner world.

6 - Create an inner place of healing and recovery. A peaceful and serene "rest room" in which alter personalities can be "delivered" from the places where the abuses occurred and receive the help of other alter to heal emotionally and physically.

7 - Create an inner place to work on the awareness of the programming and its resolution. This "work room" or "meeting room" will have the function of working with an overview of the system, but also on trauma and information retrieval. It is the patient who will decide which alters will work in this place and he will arrange this room in his own way.

1 - Create an inner place to work on the awareness of the programming and its resolution. This "work room" or "meeting room" will have the function of working with an overview of the system, but also on trauma and information retrieval. It is the patient who will decide which alters will work in this place and he will arrange this room in his own way.

2 - Establish a procedure to obtain the information in this "work room".

1 - The reappropriation of the "inner world"

The virtual creation of a "storage box" or different "rooms" may seem something strange or fanciful when it comes to therapy. But as indicated in the previous chapter, the inner world of a fractional personality is very vast, it is a dimension that forms a real universe that it is possible to arrange. Just as the programmer arranges and structures the inner world for enslavement, the therapist as well as the patient can also use their creativity to bring elements into this dimension. Elements that will help to secure the inner system with the alter, as well as to structure the therapy. Dr. Ellen Lacter reported, for example, the case of a patient who put his questions in a seal that he then plunged to the bottom of a well (symbolizing his subconscious) to reassemble it to obtain information or images.

At a S.M.A.R.T. dating from 2003, the survivor of ritual abuse and mind control Carol Rutz explains the usefulness of these therapeutic elements injected into this inner world. It can be a memory storage area or a soothing and secure place for alters: "When I left the therapist's office, I had to put aside the things I had just worked on, so that I could live properly during the week without having to be bombarded by the new information that had just come back. So I created a safe inner place to put the memories that we worked on at each session, the goal being that I would not be drowned by all these things between sessions. It was a toy box and I put a teddy bear on it at the end of each session before leaving the office. During the week, we (editor's note: the alters) could also keep a diary, then we let the memories come out of the box during the therapy the following week. This box was different from the secure place that my alter had been able to build to shelter and to heal (...) The same visualization that had been used by the executioners for the programming allowed us to cancel this same programming We created a place of inner healing where any alter the wish, can enter and stay there to receive the help of the other alter. I discovered alters who could not speak because of programming or because they were preverbal alters; it was then another alter personality who volunteered to be used to work on memory recovery! 520! ."

For Svali, the good news is that this "interior landscape" is very malleable. Once the different parts (editor's note: alter) have been "found", the structures holding them prisoner are discovered and they are finally delivered from them, they can be encouraged and helped to settle permanently in the secure places of the inner world. The structures installed in the mind to harm and control the victim can then be removed. The work of healing and deprogramming the survivor thus uses to its advantage what programmers use to enslave:

that is to say, the unlimited malleability of the "inner landscape."

Patients can create many other new soothing places in their inner worlds because there are no limits in this dimension of being. Survivor Jen Callow writes: "The environment of our inner world has also evolved. At the end of each session, our therapist makes sure that any new alter personality that has just been discovered, will find a comfortable place bringing him his basic needs. We build a mansion filled with bedrooms with a large common area, bathrooms with large tubs for bubble baths, a large kitchen with large bins and a large table, play areas, etc. Each room can be arranged and decorated according to the wishes of its resident, it can have a door that can be locked as well as a window (...) We can also create many more constructions if we wish. We now have a healing area filled with medicinal plants, various and varied remedies, with a very pleasant view: gardens and meadows, an ocean with beaches, forests (...) We create spaces for sport, dance, arts... Every thing created us (editor's note: the alters) encourages us to work together, to cooperate, to interact and to have more moments of relaxation and fun[521].."

This inner world has been arranged by programmers with different internal structures; knowing their nature will help the therapist to discover the number of alter personalities present in the system and with whom it is most important to work. The approach is to explore each part of the structure to know its functions and how many alter "live" in it or are connected to it indirectly. When the programming is conscious by the patient and the alter personalities imprisoned in the structures understand that this is an illusion, the structure usually dissolves on its own. When large structures disappear in this way, some patients may feel like a "vacuum", they can then be replaced by something else entirely. Programmers usually secure these structures with traps and guardians (demons), even by an alter programmed to be a good loyal soldier.

2 - The alliance with alter personalities

Mk programming is based on T.D.I., so the stabilization protocols and the fusion of alters apply in deprogramming (see "T.D.I. and Therapy" in Chapter 5). The alliance with the alter will consist in associating and cooperating with them in order to make them participate in the therapeutic work. Every alter personality in a system that has been programmed takes great care to perform the function assigned to them and they are usually terrified at the thought of failing in their mission. It is important to map this system of personalities alternately both horizontally (their number and functions) and vertically (their hierarchical organization). As we have already noted, alter personalities are organized hierarchically, and those who are in the lowest levels of the hierarchy will be punished by those in the higher levels. Alters at higher levels fear being punished or killed by outside executioners. No alter should be overlooked, everyone has their role to play in therapy. According to therapist Alison Miller, it is important to work with the most "charismatic" alters in the system, those who are at the top of the hierarchy, especially those who believed in the lies, false promises and threats of their executioners and who finally became aware of this deception. These are the alter "executioners", the persecutors that have already been mentioned. It is very important to recognize that these alter are no different from all the others in the sense that their job is also to maintain the survival of the victim. We must not banish or try to hide or dismiss some alter by calling some "good" and others "bad". By working with these "leaders", the therapist will be able to obtain the cooperation of other lower alter in the internal hierarchy. In the documentary "When the Devil Knocks", therapist Cheryl Malmo says of these alters: "I immediately knew that I had to befriend 'Tim' because you want to have these hostile and angry alters as assistants. When the devil knocks on the door, invite him to have tea.''

The therapist will thus gradually establish trust with this alter hierarchy. The goal is to gradually show them in a peaceful way what really happened to them, but also their false beliefs. Alter observers and reporters can also help the therapist a lot by participating in the reconstruction of the puzzle as they will help determine which memories are most in need of work. The memories are broken down into a thousand pieces like puzzle pieces and each alter contains certain pieces. It is therefore necessary that the alter cooperate together to reconstitute this memorial puzzle. Some therapists therefore invite all alter personalities affected by a particular experience to meet in an indoor meeting room, in order to work on reconstructing this memory chronologically. As we have seen, many survivors testified that they had parts of themselves that came out of their physical bodies during the abuse. So they saw the scene with the piercing eye of a bird, in a detached and objective way while other alters seemed to hide deep in the body when the violence occurred. These different points of view, both external and internal, will mean that these scenes will be recorded in a much more detailed way than can be done by the alter who was directly raped and tortured. Survivor Trish Fotheringham explains that experiences are often fragmented at the time they occur. This means that an alter could be "out" (editor's note: possibly out of the body) during an event, while one or more other alters turned away from the feelings, the emotional state and the pains related to what was experienced, without really being out of the body. It is for this reason that it is necessary to access and consult each piece of memory of each alter so that the experiences can be considered as recovered and healed[522].

In the book "Ritual Abuse and Mind Control", therapist Ellen P. Lecter quotes an excerpt from the conversation she had with survivor Carol Rutz: "If it were ritual abuse, there could be four or five alters who participated: one for pain, one for ritual, one for transport, etc... I think that's why people with a T.D.I. have a hard time remembering what happened. This is because you usually have different alter personalities that emerge successively during the same event. It is therefore not possible to remember the entire experience unless you access the memories of each alter who was involved. If you manage to make the alter that presents itself exceed his fear and pain, then you will have the opportunity to reach the rest. Several times I remembered much earlier events, which helped me to finally be able to re-glue the whole and understand the ramifications of all this[523].

What Carol Rutz describes here can be illustrated in one of the minutes of the Dutroux case that we have already described in chapter 4 on ritual abuse about a witness X: "When she woke up (from the hypnotic trance), she had the impression that there were several people who attended what she described (ritual of sacrifice and orgy) and that these people (these Nathalies) were fading in front of each other. She thinks she has disappeared a dozen times.''

In "Breaking the Chain", Svali writes that the very first programming on the child, consisting of "breaking the heart", are difficult to undo because they touch on the question of the abandonment and rejection of the original personality, that of the young child. This concerns the child's first life experiences and involves his relationship with his parents and close family members. The work on these memoirs requires an effort from all the internal alter system that must unite to help the personality fragments that have undergone this extreme initial parental rejection, in order to help them recognize the importance of the present moment and the fact that these adults were truly unhealthy. Making them aware of the present moment is essential because they usually live stuck in the space-time where these traumas occurred. These extra child and even baby personalities will often feel depressed and angry. Some alter can then take on a role of "nanny" to comfort them and make them understand that they are adorable children, no matter what these adults may have done to them. External therapeutic help and a good internal system of alter "nannies" can greatly help in the healing process by bringing a new perspective and appeasement for these young injured and abandoned alter.

The first abuses aimed at splitting the personality happen very early in the child's life (0 to 24 months). Some alter who have never forgotten them will be able to share the memories with the other alter totally amnesiac. This has to be done very gradually because these abuses occurred very early in life. For this, the creation of an internal "nursery" (arranged as you like) can help the process. The older and compassionate alter "nanny" will be able to help and take care of the children in this nursery. It is important to believe and validate what these alternate children will say when they begin to advance in therapy and share their experiences. Often, they will be preverbal alters because they are still very young, so they need a way to express themselves. The presence of older alternate children, close to the alternate babies, can help to verbalize their needs and fears. Generally, alter children have no confidence in adults even in the alter adult personalities of the system to which they belong. External therapeutic assistance is also important for healing, in order to train and structure the internal system so that it can provide help and good care to injured children. It is a question of balancing the needs of the alter child between the external care and the need for the internal care provided by the alter system. The alter child can be helped by anchoring sessions, a focus on the present moment and the realization that the physical body is now older and that it leads a life where it is safe[524].

It should be borne in mind that many of the alters who have suffered such horrors have been deliberately kept at the age when the abuses took place. As we have seen, they are fragments of soul stuck in a certain space-time. They are stuck at an age when they still believe everything that has been told to them by their aggressors, regardless of the level of fantasy and unreality. When the patient tries to remember what happened to him, the terror that is still present in his young alter will flood him, regardless of his age. Many alter are therefore stuck in the past, in an eternal present where they are still physically this child in contact with the aggressor (s). They must be informed as much as possible of their current situation so that they realise that they are no longer in danger. It is from there that they can stop punishing other alter and learn to work in a group to find serenity. We must explain to these fragments that they have had to deal with unhealthy and violent people but that today all this is over, that they are no longer in contact with them and that they no longer have to follow the directives and rules of these executioners. They can now come back in the moment to make their own rules. It is also possible to change the programmed function of an alter to give him a new role in which he will use his skills and qualities in the service of therapy. It may be good to explain to alter, with simple words for younger people, what post-traumatic stress, dissociation, amnesia, alter and flashbacks are.

Some alters may also have been programmed not to communicate directly outside (never emerging to speak out loud), so it can take a considerable amount of time before these alters are detected and they begin to establish contact with the therapist. Many of them will not have emerged since childhood, so they know nothing of the present world. These are alters that are not supposed to communicate with the outside world until they are triggered by a controller or programmer. These are fragments that will therefore be very frightened and hostile when they "come out". It is also possible to go through an intermediary alter, a mediator, to dialogue with these reluctant fragments. Even if they have already observed from the inside the outer world, the real world (our dimension), they are rarely "out"to interact directly with, i.e. by taking control of the physical body. They therefore have a very limited life experience, limited to worship activities and "training" (programming); their rewards were sex, drugs, and power. The patient may be very frightened at the idea of disclosing certain information, in relation to his attackers, but also at the fact that some alter will be terrified and humiliated by their own memories. They will therefore be afraid of the rejection of the other if they talk about what they have done. The therapist must accept them, no matter what they may have been forced to do.

During therapy, it is also advisable to develop in the victim a global vision, an overview of his traumatic history and his alter system. One of the ways to access this global vision is to get in touch with the real self (the original personality) or the "inner guide" of the patient, which are sometimes considered the same thing but not systematically. According to some therapists, there is in each internal system a part with the function of helping the patient to a higher level, a part called ISH: "Internal Self Helper", the Inner Self Assistant. This alter (if it is one) can be considered superior to others, related to God. He is a source of wisdom and an inner guide knowing all the other alter personalities, he accesses all the memories and life experiences of the person. ''The 'Inner Self Helper' (ISH) should be identified as soon as possible. The therapist should not be afraid to work closely with the ISH, who will always be a protector of alter personalities and who will ensure that the treatment is respected. He will get the best possible chords with the alter[525].

In her book entitled "Reaching for the Light", the survivor Emilie Rose writes about this Inner Assistant, this particular source of wisdom: "Each survivor of ritual abuse has an inner part that has somehow remained connected to life, even in the midst of torture and death... It can have several names: the strong, the guardian of the spirit, the healer, the mystic, the grandparent, the wise. No matter what we call it, we can act on our healing by seeking that part of ourselves, inviting it to emerge, befriending it, nourishing it and assisting it so that it can become more involved in our lives. This strong part of ourselves has a natural and innate desire for life and healing. She has the knowledge of pain, healing and spirit. It is perhaps the place where our connection with a higher power resides, and it guides us on a true journey of healing if we give it the opportunity[526].

Dr. Sarah Krakauer calls this part: inner wisdom. In her book "Treating Dissociative Identity Disorder: The Power of the Collective Heart", she reports the case of a patient who came into connection with this inner guide: "Seven months after Lynn began her therapy with me, she showed curiosity about the functioning of inner wisdom. While she was in a meditative state, she spontaneously asked her inner wisdom "Why do you know all this when I don't?" The inner wisdom then replied: "Because you are only a small part and there is so much more... You can think of me as the father you never had, someone you can count on and who will always be there, no matter what happens... I know all that the different parts can do and how they can fit into each other, because I can see all of them..." Lynn reported that she saw a beautiful inner yellow light after hearing this wisdom. She described: "This is the first time I've seen a yellow like this. It's so pretty. It's a really ra.ssuranteexperience, that I'm no longer alone. A father is supposed to be the one who takes care of you. I feel a real calm, a feeling of peace. " Before discovering this yellow light, Lynn had already found that after a.see sought guidance in the theater (editor's note: therapeutic technique serving as a support to work with the inner system) she had been able to go to a place where she had seen a purple light that was both soothing and energizing. It was something she had discovered for herself and she went there frequently during her meditations! 527! ."

Perhaps the ISH, appearing to be a higher part of the being, corresponds tothe " spirit ofsuperconsciousness " described in the tradition of* the Kahunas (in chapter 6), being able to take precedence over all other categories of soul fragments. In her article entitled "The inner self helper concepts of inner guidance", therapist Christine Comstock concluded by writing: "As is the case with all psychological hypotheses, the existence of ISH can neither be proven nor refuted. However, there are sufficient historical and clinical facts for it to be reasonable to think that such a structure may exist and be beneficial. In the past, the concept of dissociating the "Me" into an alter that observes and experiments has been seen as something beneficial for the patient. The extension of the notion of "inner guidance" in the form of ISH in patients with I.D.T. seems something logical and corresponds to the experience described by these patients. According to many experienced clinicians, this phenomenon of inner guidance in the form of a separate psychic structure can be a conceptualization clinical useful in the treatment of T.DJ528].

It is obvious that the phenomenon of T.D.I. deserves a very thorough scientific research, because leading to other dimensions of being... but let us remember once again that this is the Pandora's box of "nameless religion": all discoveries concerning the arcana of the human psyche (and far beyond) allowing individual and global control must not be disclosed in the secular world, an essential rule that allows to retain power.

The words that have been used by executioners and programmers during abuse, torture and programming sessions have a profound devastating effect on victims. The work on the memoirs aims to ensure that the survivor can remember exactly what the programmer was telling him with the mental imagery that accompanied these sentences during the sessions. This is an essential point that will greatly contribute to disabling MK programming. It is therefore important to list and work on these words so that they lose their power of control over the victim. These words or phrases will lose all the more of their power when traumatic memories are gradually emptied of their negative charge. The negative charge being this subconscious inner pain that when triggered by stimuli will activate programming. These words or phrases may have been used to define the role or nature of an alter and to name the latter, it may also be threats, insults, agreements (obtained under duress), commands and directives, specific trigger words aimed at bringing out an alter, access codes that may also include numbers, etc... Some of these commands can be replaced, for example by renaming alter personalities with new names and assigning them new roles. Prayers and blessings can also be used to counter verbal attacks (commands during programming) that remain marked in the subconscious.

During the therapeutic process, one of the greatest dangers is the programming of self-destruction and suicide. According to Svali, among the Luciferian elites, this programming is systematic. Since early childhood, the victim has been conditioned to believe that he will die if he leaves "the Family", the Network. This is the basis of suicide programming, which is closely related with fidelity and loyalty programming to the biological family and hierarchical order. If the victim begins to access certain memories and decides to leave the network, or begins therapy, this sabotage or self-destruction programming must be triggered. This will then manifest itself in a feeling of suddenly being overwhelmed with overwhelming guilt and a deeply depressive state. Only the programmer and a few people hold the code to disable this programming, which ensures that the victim will re-contact the group. If the victim breaks this programming, he will need assistance and help, hospitalization may be necessary because breathing or heart rate can be heavily impacted. Alter personalities can be programmed to commit self-harm or even suicide if there is an attempt at external disclosure or deprogramming. These alters are programmed to believe that the only way to escape suicide and self-destruction is to re-contact the programmer who knows the codes to stop the process.

For example, one alter can punish another alter by scarifying him, which is why it is important to make the whole alter system aware that they share the same physical body and that they form a single individual.

The programming of an alter personality that can lead the victim to suicide is done by imprinting on him the belief that it is honorable to die for the cause of the "Family"; that traitors must kill themselves quickly before the group finds them to kill them in a slow and painful way; that their life will be so unbearable that it is better to kill themselves, etc...

According to Ellen Lacter, when the implemented commands "don't call you back" and "don't talk" begin to crumble, the rest of the programming becomes easier to awareness and overcome. Access to the various traumatic memories resulting in the reconstitution of the chronological puzzle will make it possible to release little by little all the unconscious emotional load that cements and allows the triggering of the programs. The more the scattered and repressed traumatic memories are conscious and re-assembled, the more the emotional load they contain will decrease, and the more the programming will lose its effectiveness. This is how little by little, the MK programming is defused.

3 - The treatment of traumatic memories

a/ General

The work on traumatic (dissociative) memories is a therapeutic process during which fragments of both psychological and physical memories (cellular memory) are reassociated. The treatment of a dissociative memory therefore consists in bringing together and raising awareness of all the parts that compose it so that it is definitively integrated, because as we have seen, the memory of a lived experience can be broken into several pieces. Following this integration, the emotions and physical sensations associated with this memory will disappear to give way to a memory of what happened similar to any other conscious memory. That is to say, the repressed traumatic memory then becomes a chronological and autobiographical memory no longer having any negative charge. Once this process is complete, the different alter personalities associated with these memories can then be merged into each other. It would seem that in some cases, this is even done automatically as soon as the memories are processed and made aware.

At the biological level, memories are related to different senses (sight, hearing, smell, touch, taste but also physical pain or sexual pleasure), they are also related to different types of emotions. These memories are managed by the hippocampus which transmits them to the cerebral cortex so that they are well integrated into consciousness. This is how they pass from the unconscious level to the conscious level. Dissociative memories remain disconnected from consciousness, this is what is called traumatic amnesia, a "forgotten" memory that has not been conscious. These memories can arise abruptly and unexpectedly, usually in the form of flashbacks that are eruptions of memories that suddenly go back to consciousness, they can be visual, auditory, emotional and even physical. Indeed, these rises can trigger cellular memories linked to certain areas of the body, this can be manifested by pain, paralysis and even physical marks. When these subconscious memories arise, they are relived as if they were actually happening in the present moment. When a person experiences a traumatic rise in memory resulting in a heavy emotional state, he will absolutely need to anchor himself in the present moment. It is then necessary that she opens her eyes (usually closed during a flashback) and that she focuses on her direct environment: the sounds (the voice of the therapist for example), that she names and touches the objects around her in the room, she can also touch her clothes by naming them one by one, etc. Anchoring techniques are important in the work on traumatic memories, they prevent the patient from being overwhelmed by emotion and pain.

Generally, a patient will not be ready to do this work on traumatic memories until the system of his alter personalities is cooperative. As we have seen before, it is necessary to establish a relationship with the alter so that all those who have been involved in the same experience, the same memory, can take part in the process. According to therapist Alison Miller, a memory cannot be fully integrated (and the programming dissolved) until all the fragments of the person involved in the traumatic memory have aligned to share their own piece of memory, their piece of the puzzle, in order to establish the complete and chronological picture of the experience. In addition, if not all fragments of the patient are cooperative, some alter can punish those who disclose things prematurely.

Groups that practice mind control deliberately create alter personalities who record everything and who know the entire system with all its history. Stella Katz calls this alter the "Gatekeeper", a guard whose function is to observe everything from the inside and record everything without ever intervening. Once accessed, these alter personalities can be of great help in determining both the content of a memory but also the chronological list of the patient's alters who have successively experienced the traumatic experience.

There is also the issue of traumatic memories dating back to preverbal age, when the victim was still a baby. This type of memory cannot be verbalized to express the experience and feelings. Between the ages of 0 and 3 years, the declarative or explicit memory system that requires the maturation of the hippocampus is not yet operational. They will then be implicit memories (emotional, behavioral, somato-sensory, perceptual, non-verbal). These implicit memories are related to the amygdala of the right hemisphere whose maturation is earlier than that of the hippocampus

b/ The process of revivification

The term 'revivification' and its restoration process was described by survivor Brice Taylor. Unlike the Fabian therapy that we are also going to talk about, which only treats non-traumatic conscious memories, this is the treatment of unconscious traumatic memories aimed at fully integrating them into consciousness. The most difficult side of this work is certainly the emotional and sometimes physical pain that is associated with these dissociated memories. Revivification is a tool that can be useful when it is not possible to do a therapy session every time a traumatic memory rises to the surface of consciousness.

Brice Taylor introduces this technique: "As a survivor of extreme trauma from birth, I spent years in therapy. I had abridgements and flashbacks about my incestuous past, ritual abuse and government mind control, until the day I was able to practice this process of revivification. To learn how to use this tool, I was helped by an intelligence member who had some knowledge about MK programming and deprogramming. Revivification is an extremely valuable tool that has helped me manage and archive the huge amount of painful memories. So I was able to regain the memory of my past to finally be able to use my mind in a healthy and constructive way in the present moment. I think it is important to share this technique so that survivors can be helped in a simple way in their memory recovery process.'

Revitalization can begin when the patient is no longer in denial about the traumas of his past and after he has learned to feel and express his emotions. According to Brice Taylor, there is no need to continually re-experiment physically and emotionally with abridgements or flashbacks to dissect memories. According to her, survivors need to re-experiment with cellular memories only when they are still in denial about this reality of their past. Revivification will also allow the patient overwhelmed by intrusive memories, which usually prevent him from functioning on a daily basis, to learn to contain, channel and manage these "puffs" of memories until he can finally treat them properly.

When a patient has flashbacks at home, or when a memory is "triggered" by an element of his environment, in public or in private, he can take a notepad and write one or two words that will later be used to refresh his memory about what triggered this dissociated memory and the content of it. Following these few notes, he can resume his activities without having to be constantly "harassed" by this memory. Within 48 hours of the flashback(s), the patient is advised to resume his notes on the trigger(s) and examine the contents of this memory. The examination of it will be done calmly, by a deep work of introspection, aiming to write in detail the visual and auditory content, but also the fragrant and gustatory aspects that are related to this traumatic memory. One criterion for determining whether they are true dissociated memories is that they are three-dimensional at the visual level and contain well-marked sensory elements, such as noises and smells.

To train for this type of exercise on amnesic memories, the patient can first practice projecting conscious and non-traumatic memories on a "mental screen". This consists in focusing on the details of this memory with the "eyes of the mind", that is to say closing the eyes to imagine the scene in the most realwaypossible. In this scene, the person can thus look, touch, feel and taste what was present, but also listen to the sounds, words, sentences, etc. The work can therefore begin with unsociated memories that have not led to emotional shocks or physical pain.

Once the patient is comfortable with this "mental screen", he can tackle memories that were previously amnesic and that are beginning to emerge.

Here is how Brice Taylor describes the different phases of the process:

- 1/ Take a notebook.

- 2/ The patient must have previously listed potentially triggering elements of traumatic memory.

- 3/ The patient must be in a quiet and secure place, conducive to treating this type of memory (preferably within 48 hours of their emergence). He will start by referring to his list of triggers.

- 4/ It is useful for the patient to have a journal or a computer in which he can archive the dissociated memories that have been returned to him.

- 5/ Then the patient visualizes this memory on an imaginary screen in his mind. He must focus on this memory thanks to his mental eye, he will focus on the sensory system, that is to say taste, smell, hearing, touch and sight. He must be interested in everything that was present at the time of this traumatic experience. It must also focus well on the words and phrases that were spoken at that time. In people who have undergone ritual abuse and mind control, the words spoken during dissociative states are very important because they contain conditioning and programming. Alters who have heard what has been said may not repeat them during such a therapy session, they can for example tell the scene by omitting the "soundtrack". They must then be asked to give the entire contents of the memory, including auditory. The patient should try to see the scene through the eyes of the alter personality(s) who experienced the event. He does not need to relive the scene orre-experience the painful emotions or painful sensations in the body. He just has to look at this memory just like watching a movie on a screen, but taking great care to recover as much information as possible. If the patient has survived once to the traumatic event, he is now able to view it with some hindsight for the recovery of the strict necessary: that is to say, all the details that will help him to raise awareness of what happened and to know which personality (s) alter (s) involved in it(s). During this exercise, the patient does not have to judge what he sees on his mental screen, nor should he try to modify its content. When the patient has dissociated the emotional content of the memory, it is then possible for him to accurately describe what he sees while the therapist takes note of the information. He may therefore ask the patient to slow down or repeat something without fear of traumatizing him again. It's as if the patient has a remote control with which he can zoom, slow down or speed up the scene, pause, rewind or stop the story.

For this work of mental projection of a traumatic memory, the therapist Alison Miller advises to start the story in the "normal life", i.e. in the situation that preceded the traumatic event (for example the trip by vehicle), and then to end it with the situation that followed the trauma. This is intended to broaden the chronology of memory because the alter personalities of the beginning and end of a traumatic experience are usually not the same as those who suffered the traumas at the heart of the story. Thus, it will help the patient to better understand how his traumatic experiences are related to his daily life, his autobiographical conscious memory and in what context they took place.

- 6/ If the patient begins to experience abridgement with bodily sensations during the visualization, he can quickly write on a piece of paper: "My body tries to react to this memory", then thanks to the dissociative process already very developed in him, he will deviate from this memory which causes a physical reaction. By dissociating himself from physical or emotional pain, he can for example compartmentalize them in a box of his inner world. It can also replace images that trigger abridgement with a math problem. This will allow him to detach himself from the painful sensations because he will then make another area of his brain work. In the event that the body continues to react despite these measures, the patient must interrupt his session of mental projection and anchor himself in the present moment with the methods listed above. He can then resume the mental projection session if he is able to maintain the dissociative barrier between the physical and emotional bodies and traumatic memory. The same techniques can be applied when the emotional pain becomes too strong. During this process, the patient can also choose to voluntarily and fully go into the emotional feeling of memory in order to express it and make it burst as much as he can.

- 7/ If the patient feels sad, crying or angry about traumatic memories, he can undertake another activity. A healthy young child who falls and hurts himself will cry for a little while, but very quickly he will fix his attention to something that will get him out of his negative state. Children are thus able to quickly change their emotional states. The patient can do the same by quickly choosing to do an activity that will put him in a positive mental and emotional state. He can do sports, garden, call a friend, walk the dog, paint, sing, take a bath, watch a comedy, all those things that can bring him relaxation and joy. However, this is not about repressing negative emotions such as sadness or anger. The patient must be able to feel and express them for as long as he needs and wishes. The patient's healing process is largely based on the control he must have over himself and his own experiences. This part of the revivification process may be suitable for patients who are constantly stuck in painful old emotions.

When survivors are able to take care of themselves and love each other instead of self-destructing, their attackers (or controllers) have lost. Survivors need to realize that only they can choose self-esteem instead of scarification for example. When they stop behaving as programming has conditionedthem, they become autonomous and free, with only their own mind as limits: they recover their own identity.

Brice Taylor points out that during this process it is easier to write the traumatic memories first than to verbalize them directly. This is also what Mark Phillips advocates, it is one of the rules he established in Cathy O'Brien's recovery and deprogramming protocol. The act of writing the memories causes, thanks to the coordination of the eyes and the hand, certain neuronal connections of the brain that will give the patient better access to his own brain abilities. In addition, writing down the memories means that they will be much richer in detail. Over time, the different "capsules" of traumatic memories will begin to come together to form an overall picture highlighting what really happened in the patient's life. This puzzle more or less well reconstituted will explain many things that have hitherto remained misunderstood, such as undesirable behaviors or unexplained phobias. Brice Taylor explains that it is not necessary to dwell on every detail of memory to know if it is valid or not, because over time and with enough recovery of traumatic memories, the pieces of memories will begin to validate each other by fitting together to form the puzzle of life. It is this overview of his own life, hitherto broken into pieces, that will help bring the patient self-compassion, self-esteem and self-esteem so precious for his healing and his new life.

Here is an excerpt from Cathy O'Brien's book "For National Security" which illustrates the process of recovering traumatic memories:

"The answers only slowly come to the surface, but they bring out years of memories articulated to each other. The whole thing seems to me to be just a never-ending nightmare. When Mark returns that night, there are sheets of paper scattered everywhere, covered with fragments of memories written with so many different writings.

- I remembered a lot of things, but it all makes no sense. I cannot put the events in order.

I show him the pieces of paper and start crying:

- How can I remember when these things happened when I had no idea of time?

- It's simple, says Mark, you have to ask yourself the right questions. Extend your vision beyond the moment. What season are we in? Is there snow? Do you feel the warmth of the summer sun? Do you feel the scent of spring flowers? Are you in school? Who is your teacher? How are you dressed? When did you have these clothes? Are your siblings already born? How old is Kelly? Look around you through the eyes of the person you were and to whom all this happened. Do people really think big to you, like when you were a little girl? What do you see in your eyes?

Their knees? Their eyes? Simply locate the time as precisely as you can and leave the rest to the investigators (...)

You can flip through old magazines and newspapers (...) You should start cutting out images, sentences, headlines - anything that catches your eye. When you have a box filled with these cut-outs, you can make a collage of it. It will be as if you pick up the pieces of your mind (...)

- Dr. Patrick used the term 'polyfragmented' to describe these little pieces that you put together. She also thinks that my idea of doing collage could be beneficial to you.

Suddenly, my scribbles of memories seem to me to have an interest in the end. I note from that moment on all the flashes that appear, whether they seem significant or not. I keep a pen and paper with me all the time. Memories often flash on the screen of my mind, sometimes to the point of deconcentrating me at the least opportune moments. Quickly noting a word or phrase is already enough to stop these cumbersome intrusions, and allows me to get back to what I was doing before. It looks like my brain knows I'm going to put everything in writing later, and the flashes then stop momentarily. Then, when I find myself in a position to concentrate properly, I let myself go to a deeper state, ask myself the questions that Mark taughtme, find the smells and start writing what is waiting to be recovered photographically.

- Keep in mind, Mark advised me, that if a memory seems to have gone wrong, then you have to take a close look at it to see if it's something you've been told or glimpsed in a movie. Start by deprogramming the program. Finds the beginning and the end, what happened before and what happened after. Leave the writing of this memory aside for three weeks. The truth does not disappear. Filling the holes with what could have happened, on the other hand, will disappear (...)

Writing down my memories as Mark taught me allows me to piece them together as they happened, but got rid of their dramatic aspect. I can deepen my trance through relaxation, observe events unfold photographically on the screen of my mind, smell the smells and recognize the physical sensations without having to experience them again. Emotions had no existence of their own in the dissociative state that was then mine, and they still do not have one in this process of recovering my memory. Mark taught me to avoid the question often asked by therapists: "What does it do to you[529]?"

c/ The interior theatre

In a 2006 S.M.A.R.T. lecture, survivor Lynn Schirmer described a tool that helps focus on particular memories and can be combined with the mental screen described earlier. It is a psychological tool that was developed by Dr. Lowell Routley and colleagues, a model of theater, a metaphor of consciousness and mind imagined by neurobiologist Bernard J. Baars.

In "In the Theater of Consciousness The Workspace of the Mind", Bernard J. Baars describes how this "theater" works that can be used to work on memories. In a theater, there is the stage, the actors, the projectors, the stage play, the director and the audience. When you enter a theater before the show, you see the stage, the spectators and a few doors on the side giving access to the boxes. As the lights begin to go out and the audience becomes silent, a single projector pierces in the dark to illuminate the scene. You then know that the screenwriters, the actors, the sound and light engineers are all there, invisible but working together in the same direction and guided by a script that will reveal itself to the audience. While the room turns off, only the focus of consciousness remains, i.e. the projector illuminating the scene, everything else being in the dark. This metaphor of the theater makes it possible to work on the memories:

the play of the actors and the sets represent the content of the memory, traumatic or not, the projectors represent the focus of attention on this memory, the conscious content emerges when the spots head towards the actors on the scene of memory. These projectors have an essential role because as soon as they direct the light to a particular character, it emerges in consciousness. Only these characters illuminated by the spotlight can transmit information to the audience. In return for the audience, the audience can applaud or whistle, ask to hear more or on the contrary evacuate an actor from the stage by throwing tomatoes at him. The audience of this theatre can also interact with the actors by exchanging information with them. But there is only one way to reach the audience as a whole, and that is through a character illuminated by the projector on stage. The audience is the raison d'être of all this experimental theatre.

The theater scene represents the inside of the patient, where he experiences the different perceptions, this place is called the fusion space. A simple exercise allows access to this place: the person must visualize an object of his choice and try to determine where he feels that something is happening inside him. This exercise may seem very simple, but for MK survivors, conditioned to avoid any kind of introspection, it may prove to be something entirely new and an important discovery. The ability to see inside the fusion space can be a powerful tool. With practice, it is here the person will be able to observe the elements of the programming, in this "stage play", and even intervene directly by himself.

The main actor of the scenario is usually the core, the real "Me", the original personality, who can sometimes control the body. The different actors (alter) who are not in the spotlight, who are off the stage, represent subsets, routines, skills, memories, feelings intended to act through particular behaviors or experiences. These different actors can enter the stage at any time to share the star with the main actor causing a mixing process in this fusion space. A trauma survivor may suddenly experience severe physical pain which is actually another part of himself stuck in a traumatic memory, with alters being able to mix with each other. According to Lynn Schirmer, this technique of introspection in the inner theater makes it possible to examine this fusion space. The patient can see objects and decorations that have been set up and used by programmers. It is a tool for coming into contact with and interacting with the inner world.

7 - Fabian therapy

While therapies aimed at tracing dissociative memories using hypnosis or other techniques such as EMDR (desensitization and reprogramming by eye movement) will confront the survivor with his traumatic past, there is a non-frontal therapeutic method that avoids direct "contact" with painful memories. Memories that can trigger certain implemented commands such as self-destruction and suicide programming.

This memory processing technique was leaked by Kerth Barker, an insider himself a survivor of satanic ritual abuse who had been connected to the Network at some level. This therapeutic process was transmitted to him by insiders who used their knowledge of MK programming to develop and establish an effective and safe protocol, aimed at discharging traumatic memories gradually, without having to relive them directly (it would seem that in the "Family" there are divergent opinions regarding the MK issue).

Barker named this technique : the therapy "Fabian", in reference to the Fabian military strategy which consists in avoiding the frontal and direct attack by setting up an indirect and progressive fight. The purpose of this therapeutic protocol is to gradually discharge and cancel the impact of traumatic memories, which has the consequence of disabling the programming that relies precisely on these painful memories repressed to a subconscious level. These dissociative memories are toxic "capsules" that remain stuck in the subconscious, their presence will sabotage the abilities of the individual to think rationally and to act according to his own will. The therapeutic work that aims to unload these unconscious toxic memories is therefore essential to deprogram mk conditioning. This method will act on repressed traumatic memories in an indirect way thanks to a work carried out on conscious memories: that is to say, the sustained stimulation of semantic and episodic memories, two distinct forms of explicit memory.

Semantic memory is the one that contains all the information that has been consciously memorized: telephone numbers, history lessons, etc... This semantic memory consists of words or symbols. Episodic memory when it consists of your life experiences. These are the real events that you have experienced consciously, such as a walk in the forest or a football match. This episodic memory is composed of images, sounds, smells, tastes and emotions. Episodic memories are therefore like films that contain sensory perceptions as well as emotions. There is also the memory of subjective events, such as dreams (depending on the ability of each person to remember them) and imagination, i.e. the ability to imagine a fictitious event with the possibility of remembering it later.

Fabian therapy is designed to avoid inappropriate triggering of implanted programming. This type of therapy deals only with conscious memories, i.e. episodic, semantic and subjective memories (dreams and imagination). There will never be a direct confrontation with dissociated and repressed traumatic memories. A sustained work on conscious memories will be able to act indirectly on repressed memories. Indeed, all strata of memory, down to the deepest, are interconnected with one another in what can be called an "energy mental field" that interacts with the brain and nervous system. According to Fabian therapy, memories are not made up of neurons but of a stable subatomic energy, neurons being only a physical interface for these memory energies (all the processes that facilitate memory operations). In this "energy field", each memory, whether conscious or unconscious, is connected with all the others by a kind of canvas. This means that if you work intensively on a certain area of memory, it will automatically influence all the other areas of the canvas: called the "memory field". By working intensively on episodic memory, you will thus work subtly and indirectly on pain, trauma and amnesia of other repressed memories. These dissociated traumatic memories contain strong emotions that represent a powerful negative emotional charge. Working on conscious memories, in a structured and intense way, will slowly release the negative charge of these repressed memories. When enough negative charge is released, the implemented programs related to these memories will cease to have power, so it will gradually release the MK slave.

The commands implemented during programming consist of words and images, mainly words, and the words are semantic. It will therefore be necessary to work on conscious semantic memory in order to gradually release the negative charge of the commands implanted in the repressed and unconscious memory. The scientists who developed this therapy did experiments with people who had been subjected to mind control. They were connected to a biofeedback device measuring heart rate and breathing. The researchers then slowly and aloud read a vocabulary list mixing neutral words and command words typically used in MK programming. When reading, the subject did not pay any special attention to the command words, however whenever one of these words was spoken, the biofeedback apparatus showed a reaction. Mk victims plugged into this device were not aware that these words were triggers, yet they stimulate the slave unconsciously due to the pain contained in the occulted traumatic memory. The power of these words can be disabled by working on vocabulary in a structured way.

Fabian therapy is divided into four areas:

- Journaling.
- The A.M.E. (Analysis of Episodic Memories), it is the systematic analysis of certain non-traumatic conscious memories.
- The technique of extroversion.
- Vocabulary exercises to influence semantic memory, aimed at freeing the negative charge contained in words related to implanted commands.

a/ The newspaper

In Fabian therapy, the patient will keep three journals:

- The daily journal of episodic memory.
- The daily diary of the memory of dreams.
- The cathartic journal and the memory of the imagination.

The episodic diary: Each evening, the patient will write in this journal his full name (the host personality), the date and an episodic memory of the day (the meeting with an old friend, an outing to the park ...). The memory should preferably be a striking and positive episode, without any negative emotion. This episodic memory must be something that has been experienced in the real world and not something that would have been seen on television or on the Internet. In his diary, the patient will simply describe this memory so that he can easily remember it later. On each weekend, the patient will be required to review all episodic memories of the week. In the same way, at the end of the month, he will examine everything he has written in his newspaper during these few weeks. These rereadings of episodic memories must be done by imagining the scene as precisely as possible in the mind, in order to record it as well as possible. This exercise can also be done at the end of the year.

In a subtle way, this work on episodic memory participates in discharging the negative memories weighing on the subconscious. It is a work that requires a medium-term commitment (a few months) or even a long-term commitment (several years) to hope for tangible results. By detecting memory lapses on certain days, the patient will know that a change of alter occurred that day.

The dream diary: This journal is also to be filled daily if the memory of the dream is present. A number of people have discovered that once they start writing their episodic journals on a daily basis, they also start having vivid nightmares. In addition, once the patient has undertaken an A.M.E. (Episodic Memory Analysis) on a regular basis, this will also indirectly stimulate nightmares during sleep. Nightmares are unpleasant, but it is rather a good sign because it is through them that the subconscious evacuates the negative charge contained in traumatic memories.

The patient does not have to make an analysis of his dreams in his diary, he simply has to note its contents in the most objective way possible, regardless of whether the dream was joyful or terrorizing. The focus on dreams, which consists in remembering them to ask them in writing, will also release the negative charge contained in the memory field. It is a natural healing process of the mind.

The journal of imagination and cathartic: This journal does not have to be kept daily but only when the patient feels the need. Its purpose is to use imagination to release negative emotions. With this journal, the patient will try to purge the negativity, it is not a question of intellectualizing what is written in it because it is a purely cathartic process. The content of the newspaper can be made up of words, drawings, photos, etc., it is a very personal diary. The idea is to express the bad feelings that sometimes rise for no apparent reason, by putting them in pictures and words. It is a purely emotional and non-intellectual process, an additional way to release the negative emotional charge from the memory field.

b/ A.M.E. - Episodic Memory Analysis

A.M.E. is the systematic analysis of non-repressed episodic memories. This analysis requires a therapist. These non-repressed episodic memories are conscious memories that must not contain any pain and negative emotion. These are the memories of ordinary and happy experiences of everyday life. The therapist plays the role of guide, he will ask a series of questions to help the patient to plunge deeply into his memories. In this therapeutic process, negative unconscious memories are indirectly influenced by this intense focus on positive conscious memories.

The memory field is similar to a spider's web in which all memories are connected together by wires. If you stimulate an area of the canvas, it will stir everything else. So if you intensely stimulate an area of the patient's conscious memory, it will more or less influence all the other areas of memory, also dissociated memories. The objective of this type of analysis is to ensure that the patient consciously immerses himself in a memory to remember it as deeply as possible in his "mental screen". The role of the therapist is to use his intuition to guide the process by questioning the patient about this memory in order to encourage him to dive ever deeper into it but without ever intellectualizing anything. This protocol does not require a hypnotic state or any altered state of consciousness, the patient just needs to close his eyes when recalling memories. All memories worked in A.M.E. must be of a happy nature, they must not contain any negative emotions. In addition, it must be recent memories that have not yet been processed, that is, raw memories that the patient has not yet talked about. To help you understand this process, here is an example:

- Therapist: Can you remind yourself of an appropriate memory that we could work on today?

- Patient: I went to a football game the other day.

- T: All right. For a better memory of this memory, what was the date and at what time did this episode begin?

- P: It happened two days ago. I think it was at 16 hours.

- T: Ok, let's start with your olfactory memory, do you remember the smells?

- P (eyes closed): I remember the smell of popcorn in the tail where I was waiting to buy a hot dog. There were smells of cooking, hot dogs.... See... There was also that smell of stale beer on the floor near the bar. When I went to the bathrooms, I remember that it smelled very strongly of urine. In the stands, I was sitting next to a man wearing a sickening aftershave. I also remember someone who smoked a cigar. It was a hot day, I remember the body odors.

- T: Was it your own body odor or someone else's?

- P: There were the smells of several people. There was something else, I'm not sure what it was.. Oh yes, my friend had put sunscreen on his arms, he gave me a little.

- T: What was that smell like?

- P: There was a slight smell of coconut, but above all a smell of chemicals.

- T : Well.Is there another memory of smell?

- P : Non.

- T: Okay, so now let's go over your memories regarding tastes during this episode.

In a methodical and systematic way, each of the sensory perceptions contained in this episodic memory, this scene of life, will be reviewed. The therapist's questions are intended to maintain the patient's attention and focus on the experience and his memory. A session of this type should last from half an hour to forty-five minutes.

The mind of a victim of MK has been altered, therefore, even the recall of ordinary episodic memory may contain distortions. If the therapist hears something that seems totally irrational, he does not have to question or analyze it, he simply has to continue the process without dwelling on it. The therapist should not make any judgments or evaluations, he should simply help the patient maintain a focus on the experience and his memory.

There are a number of perceptions contained in episodic memory, Fabian therapy works with a list of eight perceptions that are as follows:

No. 1: Olfactory (smell)

No. 2: Gustatives (taste)

N°3 : Auditory (sound)

N°4 : Tactile (touch)

N°5 : Vision (view)

N°6 : Kinetics (movements)

N°7 : Emotional (emotions)

N°8 : Linguistics (language)

The therapist will work with each of these perceptions by taking them in the exact order of this list. These eight categories are used sequentially, so the therapist must direct the patient to follow this sequence in the right order. The session ends when the last category has been reviewed. The review of the smell, taste and noises from the beginning of the session will allow the patient to directly re-experiment with memory without personal alteration, he will not evaluate it but re-experiment. The review of emotions and language will be done at the end of the session because these perceptions are likely to be evaluated and modified by the ego. As much as possible, the therapist should avoid mixing the different categories of memory perceptions. For example, when analyzing category 3, which is the memory of sounds, it would not be good to encourage the patient to focus on the content of a conversation he has heard, because this is what is then analyzed in category 8 (language). In category n°3, the therapist directs the patient in the pure perception of auditory memory. He will ask for example if the conversation was strong, sweet with a comparison with other auditory perceptions. By focusing on tactile perceptions (category 4) of episodic memory, the therapist can ask these kinds of questions: "Is this hot or cold?" These perceptions include: temperature, pressure/weight, discomfort/comfort, moisture and dryness on the skin, satiation/hunger...

These perceptions include: temperature, pressure/weight, discomfort/comfort, moisture and dryness on the skin, satiation/hunger...

Category 5 reviews visual memory, it involves colors, shapes, patterns, brightness and darkness. It also refers to the visual perception of movements, such as a ball flying through the air or crowd movements. But this type of visual perception of movements must be distinguished from the movements felt by one's own body which are the movements that concern category n°6 involving the perception of physical movement (kinetics) retained by memory, both the personal movements of the individual and the movements of objects that directly influence the individual. For example, in a car, there will be the sensation of the body following the movements of the automobile in the corners as well as the accelerations and braking. If it is a memory of a walk in the street, it only concerns the movement of the body, unless it comes into contact with something. During a football match, where there is a lot of physical contact, there are the individual's own movements as well as those of the other players who will interfere and influence him. There may be some confusion of perceptions between categories 5 and 6. Personal movements fall under category 6, but a movement such as a bird's flight will fall under category 5. One way to deal with this confusion is to last address the perceptions of movements in category n°5 (on the visual), then to follow in this logic with category n°6. Category 7, that of emotions, is both the perception of the emotions of others and the subjective perception of one's own emotions. The patient may know his own subjective emotional reactions, but he cannot really know the subjective experiences of others. To prevent the patient from speculating about what people were actually feeling, the memory and perception of other people's emotions must be limited to describing their external expression such as that of the face, the tone of the voice and body language. With such physical indicators, the patient may be able to detect basic emotional responses such as anger, disgust, fear, joy, sadness, boredom, indifference and surprise. The patient should not focus on what was happening inside others, but only on their emotions displayed by the face, body and tone of voice. In this category n°7, the patient's perception of the emotions of others must therefore be objective, while the perception of his own emotions is subjective. The patient's own subjective emotional reactions can indeed be more complex. The patient must be allowed to describe his personal emotional reactions regardless of the memory he has chosen. The subjective emotions of the patient can be described with for example melancholy, optimism, perplexity, conflict, euphoria, anger, etc., while the description of the emotions of others is much simpler and more objective: for example, "He looked angry because his face was red", or "His face expressed a feeling of disgust". Category 8, the last, will deal with perceptions related to language and the meaning it takes. This phase is therefore more intellectual, here the patient is guided to focus on all the conversations that have taken place in this episodic memory. The patient will also focus on all the written things he has read in this episode as well as the meaning of visual symbols such as a road sign or a cross on a church bell tower.

Generally speaking, an episodic memory chosen for this type of work must be a positive memory. The patient can therefore choose to voluntarily program in his schedule a "happy" experience to be able to exploit it later in an A session. M.E.. For example, he may plan to go to a football game so that he can review this episodic memory a few days later in therapy. Recent memories, which are easy to remember, are a good choice, but old memories that are also easy to remember will work the same way. It is best to start with sessions dealing with recent memories, once the patient becomes comfortable with the process, then older memories can be exploited.

In one session, you can review a memory from the previous week and in the next session, review an episodic memory from two years ago. The A.M.E. procedure can be applied to any memory that the patient can reasonably remember. The more this process is applied, the more the patient's ability to remember his episodic memories will increase. With practice, the patient may even end up accessing memories from early childhood.

Some imperative rules to respect: it is essential that the patient has not consumed drugs or alcohol during the weeks or months preceding the A.M.E. sessions. It is also important that they avoid consuming caffeine-containing drinks before a session. He must have had a good night's sleep in order to have his full abilities. All treated memories should be positive, containing no loss of consciousness, pain and negative emotion.

Thus, the Fabian process will make it possible to indirectly evacuate the negative charge of hidden or repressed memories. A.M.E. acts as a catalyst, the feelings contained in repressed traumatic memories will rise to the surface in different ways, through dreams, drawings, flashbacks of traumatic memories, etc. This type of therapy does not dwell on the negative memories that arise, it simply allows it to emerge. It is the focus on the present life that makes it possible not to dwell on it.

c/ Extraversion exercises

Extraversion exercises will help the patient to get out of the painful memories of the past that may arise. The rise of traumatic memories can make the patient totally collapse, these exercises consist in bringing him back into the present moment to stabilize him. When practicing A. M.E., the therapist should always lead the patient to focus on positive memories, but if a negative memory goes back up or the patient gets angry for no apparent reason, he should use extraversion techniques to bring him back into the present moment. The basic principle is that any inappropriate negative emotion comes from a dislocation of time, that is, an event in the patient's past has made him angry, and today this anger can go back inappropriately to the therapist. In such a case, both the patient and the therapist must focus on the present moment and the present environment. The therapist may ask the patient to tell him the date of the day, write on a paper the place where he is at the present moment and describe the room by completely reviewing it. Then the patient can move around the room to touch things, name them, feel textures, etc. This can also be done outside during a walk. As already described above, these techniques of anchoring in the present moment use different perceptions such as sight, hearing, touch, etc. Walks, sports, gardening, etc., are activities that will help the patient to focus his attention "here and now". This is an attitude and lifestyle to adopt, meaning that the patient must aim to be socially extroverted: he must develop a sense of security in his social relationships, which will help him not to remain focused "alone in his corner" on his past in a negative way. Extroversion is more than a therapeutic technique, it is a global attitude that will facilitate access to a balanced life.

During the sessions of A. M.E., through a review of episodic memories, the therapist leads the patient to reach a deep state of introversion (plunge into the past), but when this process is completed, it is important that the therapist brings the patient back into a state of extroversion: back to the present moment.

The patient undergoing Fabian therapy should not get stuck on the traumatic memories that may emerge during the process. Even if this is a sign that dissociated memories rise, when this happens, the patient must understand that throughout the therapy it is best to stay away from these memories. If there is a need for emotional release, he can use his cathartic diary to release these types of negative emotions. After this cathartic romp, the patient must return to the present moment.

According to Kerth Barker, Fabian therapy will heal the entire field of memory through all these therapeutic exercises aimed at working and intensely stimulating conscious memories. There are two aspects to this "field of memory": conscious or unconscious memories and the mental mechanisms that allow access to them. Fabian therapy restores, through an indirect process, the ability of the mind to access these traumatic memories while discharging it from negative "capsules".

d/ Semantic destimulation technique

Here the term "semantics" refers to the meaning of words and symbols used in MK programming. Words and symbols (graphic or gesture) that unconsciously push the victim towards an action or the repression of an action. Therefore the victim is enslaved by the stimulation of command words or symbols. To deprogram it semantically, we must reduce the power of these triggers. All these implemented commands systematically contain a negative emotional charge.

Let's take a woman with AN MK-Monarch type programming who has received an implemented order stating for example: "You are sexually at the service of anyone when your owner orders it to you". The lyrics of this command contain a negative emotional charge that was induced during the trauma and it is the inability to cope with this negative charge that forces the victim to unconsciously obey this programming. The keywords in this command phrase are ''sexually'', ''owner'' and ''orders''. The technique of semantic destimulation aims to unload this negative implantation little by little.

The therapist will create three lists of words, each list containing one of the order keywords, such as for example: angel, boat, coat, owner, porch, tree, waterfall. The therapist will then ask the patient to review the list and define each word with the help of a dictionary.
Then he is asked to invent sentences with each of the words in the list. The therapist will not pay any special attention to the command keywords, they will be treated in the same way as neutral words that do not stimulate any reaction. By doing this, the process will be able to influence memory and subtly discharge negative emotions from traumatic memory containing one of these command words. Semantic memory recall is the ability to understand and use words to communicate. In a sense, the MK programming process hijacks the callback function from semantic memory so that it can be used to control the victim. However, by asking the patient to work on vocabulary, he will gradually regain complete control of his ability to recall semantic memory. The idea here is to strengthen this function in the patient. This will change the way it relates to the language contained in the memory field. A principle of Fabian therapy is that by increasing the memory abilities of the mind, you decrease the power of dissociated memories. By simply working with vocabulary and asking the patient to make sentences with words defined with a dictionary, you thus reduce the power of the implemented commands.

e/ Typical therapy session

In a typical Fabian therapy session, the patient sits in front of his therapist, each with a pencil and notebook in front of him to take notes. No hypnosis or altered state of consciousness is required. The therapist begins by asking the patient if something bothers him, which could possibly affect his concentration during the session. The patient can, if he wishes, bring his journal to share content with the therapist. The first exercise will be that of semantic destimulation described above. When the patient creates sentences with word lists, the therapist does not intervene, he remains attentive. Once this protocol is completed, a ten-minute break can be taken before starting the analysis of episodic memory, the A. M.E., which is the heart of the session and will last from thirty to forty-five minutes. At the end of the session, the therapist must make sure that the patient puts his feet back on the ground in the present moment, his attention must be focused in the here and now. The session may be followed by a walk outside to plan the next session. The frequency of sessions will depend on the emotional state of the patient. Generally, meetings can be done once a week. This can be spaced out up to once a month, but they can also be done daily if the patient deems it necessary. These sessions, while discharging traumatic memories will help to emotionally stabilize the patient and anchor him in the present moment.

f/ Advanced technique of A. M.E.

The A.M.E. technique described above is the classical protocol, relatively easy to understand and practice. But there are more advanced techniques, including a scheme for performing A.S. work. M.E much deeper.

This method uses a circle divided into eight equal sections forming a circular diagram, rays interspersed by eight concentric circles that divide this pie chart into equal sections. The eight rays represent the eight categories mentioned above: olfactory, gustatory, auditory, tactile, visual, kinetic, emotional and linguistic. While each concentric circle represents a period of the patient's life: the central circle represents the unconscious memories of the pre-natal period and birth, the other concentric circles symbolize the evolution from early childhood, adolescence, young adulthood, etc., to the last outer circle that represents the most recent life experiences.

This scheme will be used to help the therapist shift the patient's focus to different areas of his vast field of memory. It must be calm, deeply relaxed and without internal conflict during such a session. It is a question of guiding him in different areas of the circular scheme randomly. For example, the therapist may ask the patient to recall a recent happy memory by asking him to delve into a single perception of memory in one of the eight categories, such as the reminder of a smell for example. Then he will guide him on a memory located in a different time zone by choosing a different category of perception such as sight or language.

A classic session of A.M.E. intensely studies the memory of a single episodic memory with the eight perceptions associated with it. While this advanced technique of A. M.E., instead of intensely analyzing all the perceptions of an episode, will juggle from episode to episode by choosing each time only one category of perception of memory. So the patient will be able to remember the smell of a flower when he was gardening a week ago, then the taste of a corn cob from a picnic from 10 years ago, the feeling of cold rain following a hot day of hiking six months ago, and so on. This protocol should last about twenty minutes. You must have already practiced a lot of classical A.M.E. to be able to do this exercise which can sometimes allow access to memories of early childhood (non-traumatic) totally forgotten, or even to pre-natal memories.

7 - The Inner Castle (Thérèse d'Avila)

To conclude this chapter, here are some extracts from Thérèse d'Avila's masterpiece, "The Inner Castle" or "The Book of Mansions". It is a castle that metaphorically represents the human soul having to go through different successive levels in order to achieve perfection. Just as the programmer executioner incorporates obscure castles and dungeons in the inner world of mk slaves to keep the alter prisoners; here is an inner castle that gradually leads the human to the divine Union with his Creator. Perhaps the survivors can incorporate this castle into their inner world?

"Today, what will be the basis of this writing was offered to me: to consider our soul as a castle made entirely of a single diamond or very clear crystal. Consider that the castle has many mansions, some at the top, others at the bottom, others on the sides; and in the center, in the midst of all, is the main one, where the most secret things between God and the soul happen. You will find, I believe, consolation in reveling in this inner castle. You can enter and walk there at any time. The front door of this castle is the prayer. You should not imagine these mansions one after the other, as a row, but fix your gaze in the center. Let the soul therefore be abandoned in the hands of God, with the slightest possible concern for its progress.

Before I go any further, I would like to ask you to consider what one can feel at the sight of this castle so resplendent and so beautiful. This oriental pearl, this tree of life planted on the white waters of life. This water spreads in all homes and all powers. It is true that you cannot enter all the houses by your own forces, however great they seem to you, unless the Lord of the castle himself installs you there. He loves humility. And humility is walking in the truth. For self-knowledge is so necessary, that you can never do better (than to know yourself).

Although I am only talking about seven houses, they are numerous in each of them, at the bottom, at the top, on the sides with beautiful gardens, fountains, labyrinths... You will want to be drawn into the praise of the great God who created this castle in his image and likeness. I see nothing that can be compared to the great beauty of a soul and its vast capacity. Then he himself says that he created us in his image and likeness (Gen 1:26). However, if that is the case, and this is a fact, we have no reason to tire ourselves of trying to understand the beauty of this castle. Fix your gaze on the Crucified and everything will seem easy to you. He will not fail, one day or another, to call us to invite us to approach Him." Chapter 9

Mind Control in the Entertainment Industry

> "I learned that just below the surface, there's another world, and then still different worlds when you dig even deeper. I knew this when I was a kid, but I couldn't find proof of it. It was just like a feeling. There is kindness in the blue sky and flowers, but another strength, a wild and decadent pain, also accompanies the whole thing."

1 - Introduction

The ancient druids used the sacred branches of holly to make their magic wands through which they channeled and amplified powers... Holly was a symbol of death and resurrection, eternal life and fertility, all dating back to the time of Nimrod and the Great Babylon. The Babylon of Nimrod is associated with slavery and the cult of world government (Nimrod being recognized by the Freemasons as the first "Grand Master").

Each year the Academy Awards (an absolute symbol of Hollywood culture) are held at the Dolby Theater (formerly known as the Kodak Theater before the group's bankruptcy in 2012) located on Hollywood Boulevard in Los Angeles. Adjacent to the theatre is the Hollywood & Highland Center, also known as the Babylon Courtyard. It is a huge shopping center whose décor reproduces exactly the ancient Babylon of a 1916 film entitled "Intolerance". By visiting the place, we can discover four monumental columns surmounted by elephants standing on their hind legs, surrounding a gigantic arch with the representations of two curious mythical characters: Enki, a Sumerian god, and the Assyrian god Nisroch... The stage is set for a temple of consumption dedicated to Hollywood...

If you want to see the ancient Babylonian system at work today, look no further than Hollywood: The Sacred Wood; in reference to the holly wood used by the druids to shape their magic tools. Today, Hollywood is the nerve centre of global film and television propaganda, the magic wand plunging people into illusion, bewitching them even with its charms...

The viewer who watches a film will unconsciously encode in him behaviors that he will reproduce or at least that he will integrate as a possibility of behavior to adopt. Hollywood scenarios inject into the minds of viewers thoughts, behaviors and attitudes that therefore become things that can potentially be reproduced in this or that situation, just as the actor did... but it turns out that an actor is paid to reproduce emotions and behaviors that become human as a result... even if they are totally deviant and inhumane. The scenarios (from Hollywood to reality TV) thus encode in the matrix of potentials, it is a form of global programming.

This analysis may seem to be an aberration as people think that their critical mind systematically watches and that all these productions do not influence them in any way, as they say: "It's only cinema". But as we saw in the first chapter, social engineering is a key to mind control over the masses, and cinema contributes greatly to conditioning them through "cultural psychiatry": the art of propaganda aimed at systematically targeting the subconscious of the masses. Television series and reality television, just like cinema, literally imprint in the minds of young people behaviours to be integrated and reproduced. These are real doctrines indirectly dried up via scenarios in the form of a "simple entertainment", whether humorous or totally horrifying, these two things mixing today in a very unhealthy way (ever more attractive and addictive productions). Lifestyles are therefore programmed in the scripts of the entertainment industry before they really incarnate in everyday life, people unfortunately monkeying what they consume all the time on their screens, big or small. The sorcerers-controllers master this, they thus program the youth and encode their doctrines in brains previously cooked in order to prepare the world of tomorrow...

The entertainment industry seems to be particularly affected by occultism and mind control, this is probably due to the fact that of all the industries, it is this one that exposes itself the most publicly; so inevitably flaws appear in the spotlight and sometimes suggest the symptoms of trauma and programming. In addition, as we will see, the music and fashion industry takes a malignant pleasure in exposing to the public an ever more explicit MK symbolism. This entertainment industry plays an essential role in the mind control of the masses, so it must itself be perfectly controlled and connected to the spirit world to channel and diffuse the "Luciferian light" here on earth. Artists destined for world glory must therefore be perfect mediums and perfect puppets used to infuse this "light" into the mass. Trauma-based mental programming is the ideal tool for this. We are all victims of mental control to varying degrees but the celebrities of show business are surely the ones who are the most. Their opulence and degenerate behaviors are highlighted in the media so that we envy their way of life and consume their productions, not knowing that to obtain such a situation, they are under the yoke of absolute physical, psychic and spiritual servitude. The traumas they endure are often expressed through their globally disseminated art, so everyone may be indirectly traumatized... and they call it entertainment...

2 - Paedocriminality in show business

The little stars who are introduced into the "Hollywood system", often go through all kinds of trauma and abuse. It is now becoming very clear that child sexual abuse is not something anecdotal in Hollywood and that, overall, it is the whole of show business that is seriously affected. It is a very widespread phenomenon, a kind of "epidemic" transmitted like a vampire bite.

In August 2011, during an interview on the show Nightline on the American channel ABCNews, the former child star actor Corey Feldman, the hero of the Goonies, denounced: "Ican tell you that the number one problem in Hollywood hasbeen, is and will always be pedophilia. This is the biggest problem for children in this industry... All this is done discreetly, it is the great secret (...) There are so many people who grew up in this industry and have been immersed in it for so long that they feel above the law. This has to change, it has to stop."

Feldman also reveals this in his autobiography entitled ''Coreyography'' released in 2014. He stated that when he was 14, he was literally surrounded by paedophiles. He then did not realize what these "vultures" really were and this that they wanted until he was older... but the damage was done...

In 2008, he and his friend Corey Haim, had already revealed in the reality series*"Two Corey"* that they had been raped in a meeting. In 2011, Alison Arngrim, the actress who played the "blonde plague" Nellie Oleson in the series "The little house in the meadow", will also confirm that the two Coreys were indeed abused in the 80s. Here's what she told FoxNews: "What he was saying to himself at the time was that they had been drugged to be sexually abused. It's horrible, they were kids who weren't of age yet. There are all kinds of stories about them, for example that they would have been sexually abused and totally corrupted by every conceivable means possible, and this by people who were normally supposed to watch over them (...) There's not just one person to blame, I'm sure there was only one person to rape Corey Haim, and they certainly weren't the only ones to suffer this stuff. I am sure that dozens of people who were aware of the situation had chosen to keep quiet! 530! ."

Alison Arngrim, a member and spokesperson for protect.org, an organization for the protection of children from physical and sexual abuse, also confides that all this Hollywood lust allows sexual predators to flourish there: "No one wants to stop this horror," she explains, "It is almost a voluntary sacrifice of their children that many parents unconsciously make (...) I have heard victims across the country. All of them tell the same kind of stories and they are all threatened... Corey Feldman may have opened a Pandora's box by finally daring to talk about it, but it must not stop therei531! ."

In 2010, Allison Arngrim herself revealed in her autobiography ''Confessions of a Prairie Bitch'' the sexual abuse she herself suffered in his childhood.

Another child star from another era confirms that Hollywood has long had a problem with child abuse and sexual abuse. This is Paul Peterson, the star of Donna Reed's show, a popular sitcom from the 50s and 60s. He told FoxNews: "When I saw this interview (editor's note: of Corey Feldman), a whole series of names and faces about my own story came to mind (...) Some of these people, whom I know very well, are still in the circuit (...) From my point of view, Corey has been very brave. It would be truly wonderful if these allegations could cross the different levels of protection to lead to a real identification of these people. Those who are part of the child pornography network of this world, this network is huge and has no borders, just as it has no age limit for children[532].

Martin Weiss, a Hollywood casting agent, was charged in 2011 with sexually abusing a child under the age of 12. The victim reportedly told authorities that Weiss told him that what he was doing was "a common practice in the entertainmentindustry! 533! .''

Another predator of the Hollywood network is Jason James Murphy, also a casting agent, arrested for kidnapping and raping a child. Murphy had recruited young actors for the productions of "Bad News Bears", "The School of Rock", "Cheaper by the Dozen II" and "Three Stooges".

Fernando Rivas, the award-winning director for the very popular series ''Sesame Street'', has been charged with possession and distribution of paedo-pornographic images as well as sexual coercion of a child...

In 2004, actor Brian Peck, who starred in the films X-Men and Living Dead, was sentenced to 16 months in prison for sexually abusing a child actor. He was the coach of the children's channel Nickelodeon. The documentary entitled ''An Open Secret'' (Amy Berg, 2015) tells the story of five victims who claim to have been raped when they attended major Hollywood film studios as children. The documentary states that Brian Peck was initially charged with the following charges: obscene act on a child, sodomy of a person under the age of 16, attempted sodomy of a person under the age of 16, sexual penetration with an object, oral copulation of a person under the age of 16, oral copulation with anesthesia or substance control.

The shocking documentary ''An Open Secret'' also contains the testimony of Todd Bridges, the Willy from the famous series ''Arnold and Willy'', who was sexually abused from the age of 11. It also includes interviews with Michael Egan who accuses the X-Men film production manager, Bryan Singer, of raping him.

The famous Bill Cosby of the "Cosby Show" is also accused of sexually abusing minors by dozens of women. The scandal erupted in 2014 when former supermodel Janice Dickinson publicly revealed that Bill Cosby had drugged her and then raped her in 1982. Actress Barbara Bowman also accused her of sexual assault as a teenager, as did actress Andrea Constand. A bust of the actor was even unsealed from Disney's Hollywood Studios park in Florida following all these disturbing accusations...

Actress Mia Farrow and her adopted daughter Dylan have publicly stated that Woody Allen raped Dylan when she was 7 years old. Woody Allen who married in 1997 with his adopted daughter Soon-Yi... Actress Susan Sarandon said on The Daily Best: "I think he completely destroyed his family in a filthy way, and washed his hands of it afterwards. He's always had a reputation for loving young girls, I mean really young girls. And then, this woman, Soon-Yi was very vulnerable. I think it was hard for the kids, and especially for Mia. You can't do that kind of thing. You just can't. "

We can also cite the case of the director Roman Polanski accused (but never convicted) of raping a 13-year-old girl, Samantha Geimer. One day in March 1977, she found herself in Jack Nicholson's home in Los Angeles, for a photo shoot with Polanski. He made her drink champagne, gave her a sedative, and then abused her. That evening, on her way home, Samatha wrote in her diary: "Roman Polanski took a picture of me today. He raped me,[534]!"

In 2003 in the show "Tout le monde en parle" by Thierry Ardisson, the obscure singer Marilyn Manson tells how as a child, he discovered sexuality in his grandfather's cellar... He describes that in this cellar were female lingerie, coated with vaseline in his own words, and zoophile photos... Marilyn Manson concluded about her grandfather by saying, "You see, when I was a kid, my grandfather seemed monstrous to me. but growing up, I realized that my grandfather was. bah I'm like him, so he's not that bad.'' Why then did his grandfather seem monstrous to him? Why did he later become like him? Marilyn Manson most likely experienced ritual abuse as a child. In his piece entitled "Disassociative", he describes his dissociated states: "I could never get out of there, I don't just want to float in fear like an astronaut who died in space." The sad reality of monarch slaves.

The situation of the entertainment industry in England is also very worrying. Indeed the testimony of the former child star Ben Fellows is overwhelming. He participated in many series and television shows when he was little, now an adult, he denounces how drugs and partouzes, including with minors, are the norm in this world of show business: "In*fact, in all the productions in which I was involved, whether at the BBC or other television channels, and even in the theater, I was a target in one way or another. Looking back, it would not be an exaggeration to say that the problem is both institutional and systemic in the entertainment industry* (...) After a hearing for a Coca Cola commercial, the police went to my parents' house. They warned my mother that I had unsophisticatedly become a potential target for a known paedophile network never dismantled). Indeed, it appeared that this very well-known casting director had taken pictures of me shirtless, and that these photos had then ended up in what was described as a catalog that was passed on to other pedophiles in society, but also to external pedophiles! 535]."

Ben Fellows has worked extensively for the BBC, the English television channel that found itself at the centre of a huge paedocriminal scandal involving many celebrities following the Jimmy Savile affair. In 2013, during a protest against the Bilderberg group, Ben Fellows publicly stated at a press conference: " When they said that Jimmy Savile was the only pedophile on the BBC... I myself was a child of the BBC... and I can tell you that there are plenty of pedophiles at the BBC!! Bbc children are run by paedophiles!! When I went to the auditions, they asked me to take off my top and pretend to lick an ice cream (...) I was drugged, got drunk, and don't think it was a line of coke in the toilet... It was in milkshake... They would put this drug in it to give you fishing during the shows... I was taken to Esther Rantzen's house and we were given alcohol and drugs when we were kids!! And she also has children! Was she interviewed by the police? Was she questioned?! No... Jimmy Savile must have died before we opened the file..."

Jimmy Savile, the unmissable star of the English small screen, appreciated by the general public, ennobled by the Queen Mother, close to Margaret Thatcher and friend of Prince Charles, has proved to be a real "devil on legs" following the avalanche of revelations that were made after his death in 2011. Savile raped hundreds of children and teenagers, both in his dressing room and in the BBC offices (there are more than 340 charges against him). The BBC has been accused of clearly closing its eyes to the crimes of its star presenter. The actress Julie Fernandez says for example that she was raped at the age of 14 by Savile in "a room full of people", she says[536]...

In 2007, a complaint had already been filed against Savile. A private detective, Mark Williams-Thomas, conducted an investigation for 12 years and he spoke to several of the victims of the man who was for 42 years the star of the show Top of the Pops. His investigation served as the basis for a short documentary denouncing Savile's perverse and criminal actions ("The Other Side of Jimmy Savile'', 2012"). The documentary was bought by the BBC, which had obviously decided not to broadcast it because it involved executives of the channel, and also because the BBC was preparing a Christmas show to the glory of its favorite presenter: Jimmy Savile.

Savile even had free access to schools, orphanages and hospitals as part of his "charities". The Duncroft Boarding School, the Leeds Hospital, the Stoke Mandeville Hospital, were among others part of his hunting grounds. He had even obtained in 1988 a position as team leader in the Broadmoor psychiatric hospital of which he held the keys! He also had his friend Alan Franey appointed to the management.

Savile's nephew, Guy Marsden, also testified. He explains that he was 13 years old in 1967 when Savile took him to London to the villa of a celebrity of the moment "for the first of a series of sordid social gatherings". For 18 months, Marsden and other children were taken to many parties where these boys, the youngest of whom were about ten years old, were raped by menl537! .

The Savile case also contains testimonies of ritual abuse with torture and murder. Dr. Valerie Sinason, president of the Psychotherapy and Disability Institute in London, told the Sunday Express that she had a patient who was ritually abused by Savile and others at Stoke Mandeville Hospital in 1975 while staying there as a patient. The latter says that she was taken to a very uncrowded place in the hospital, ending up in the basements, in a room full of candles. Several adults were present, including Jimmy Savile who, like the others, wore a dress and a mask. She recognized him because of her distinct voice and because of her blond hair protruding from the mask. According to her, he was not the leader of the group. She was assaulted, raped and beaten. Therapist Sinason first had contact with this victim in 1992. In 1993, a second victim contacted him saying that she had been "loaned" for sexual favours at a party in a London villa in 1980. She says that the first part of the evening began with an, but then she was directed to another room to find Savile who played the role of a kind of master of ceremonies in the middle of a group of people wearing dresses and masks and singing, according to her, in Latin. The young victim was then an adult, but she obviously suffered greatly from this sexual abuse[538].

Following the first revelations of satanic ritual abuse at Stoke Mandeville Hospital, another 50-year-old victim, who was only 13 years old at the time of the incident, contacted the Sunday Express to testify: "I was taken to a dark cellar and put in front of three men in a circle, there was in front of me a man sitting in the middle on a throne wearing a shiny dress, with a cigar in his mouth. Two other men stood on either side of him, wearing blue robes and masks (...) I was forced to stand, dressed in a white dress with nothing underneath, facing this throne while this man watched me blowing the smoke of his cigar on my face to make me sick, I was terrified (...) Around this circle, which was slightly raised, were men and women dressed in black dresses and wearing different masks (...) I was then taken by the man with the cigar, whom I recognized as Jimmy Savile, to an altar where my white dress was removed to attach myself to it (...) Savile then climbed onto the altar to rape me. The other participants shouted Satan's name and laughed hysterically, franticallyt539}."

Another young woman testified about the criminal acts of Jimmy Savile and his clique: "I have nothing to prove to anyone, but I would like to participate in exposing the violence and corruption that can flourish at the highest level in Western democracies. (...) I made an official statement that was corroborated by two other witnesses, saying that Savile was involved in rape and ritual murder in the 80s and 90s. I know this because I was a "favorite". I have suffered a lot of rapes, filmed or not. I had dissociated states, personalities and talents that attracted all tastes.' This witness recalls ceremonies that took place all over England, with child rapes, orgies, torture and ritual murders of children. At the age of 4, she would have met Savile when she had already experienced many times the same rituals. She then saw him many, manytimes! 540]...

3 - Some quotes...

a/ Personality disorders

"When I was a child, I didn't have my own "Me". Growing up, I lived through people that I played by losing myself in different parts of my personality. " - Angelina Jolie - "The Story of the World's Most Seductive Star'', Rhona Mercer, 2009, chap.1

"You can never pay enough money to cure this feeling of being broken, of being in confusion." Winona Ryder

- Roseanne Barr :

In 2013, in Abby Martin's show on the Russia Today channel, the actress Roseanne Barr (from the famous American series "Roseanne") did not go out of his way to expose the situation regarding the Hollywood system...

"I think fear is cultivated there, there are no more frightened than these people from Hollywood. They fear for their career, they fear that they will no longer be at the top of the pyramid, even if they may only be in the middle... You know Hollywood is a system that retains its power structures with all its culture of racism and sexism. They feed this continuously and make a lot of money from it. They are at the orders of their masters who direct everything. I am lucky to be able to talk about it, but I feel that I am doing it on behalf of everyone. Sometimes I go to parties in Hollywood, there I meet people, and some of them, great celebrities, take me by the arm to take me to a corner and say, "I just want to thank you for everything you say." It touches me a lot, but we are clearly dealing with a culture of fear. You know, there's also a great culture of mind control, MK-Ultra mind control reigns in Hollywood. Mental programming is the rule in Hollywood.''

We could not be clearer! She said on the same Russia Today show shortly after: "Some time ago, we talked here about mind control, the MK-Ultra. I've touched on this here before, but what I didn't say is that this kind of mind control works so that people never report the real culprits. Rather than pointing the finger at what could help us... They will never denounce the guilty...''

Roseanne Barr is one of the few people in Hollywood brave enough to talk about the most sensitive problem, that of Monarch-type mental programming. In this television interview with Abby Martin, she makes it clear that many stars don't express themselves because they simply can't, their personalities being split and under the control of people who run their lives from A to Z.

Roseanne says she was a victim herself and publicly stated in 1994 that she had a dissociative identity disorder. She revealed the difficulties she faced with the transitions between "someone" and "person", which are the names of two of her alter personalities. Her other alters are Baby, Cindy, Susan, Joey and Heather. The former queen of the sitcom is struggling to keep to herself what has been afflicted to her since childhood. It was in an interview given to Esquire magazine that she confided that it took her ten years of hard therapeutic work to merge her different personalities. ''I did not have a blackout (editor's note: amnesia) for a long time because I used to have them permanently (editor's note: a connection - co-consciousness - between all the alter) (...) There has always been a conflict with the contradictory parties in me, but I have learned to get them to listen to each other. I learned to make sure that they know that they are in the same team and that we live in the same body, something we did not know before (...) It's like living in a maze. but the alters do not get along and some of them have really strange ways to defend themselves[541]...''

This is not the first time that Roseanne Barr has publicly denounced MK programming during an appearance in a major media. On August 16, 2001, in an interview on CNN[542] with journalist Larry King, she said:

- Larry King: Well, some people think that what you've had, or still have, is a serious psychological disorder.

- Roseanne Barr: I like how you go about it...

- LK: Others think it's just a psychological trend...

- RB: A trend?

- LK: They wonder if this disorder was induced intentionally or if it occurred naturally.

- RB: Well, I have a psychologist who says he was intentionally induced. The CIA began working on this after bringing some Nazis back to the United States to take charge of the American Psychiatric Association.

- LK: What do you mean?

- RB: I'm telling you the truth. It's manipulation on their part, it's research to create people with multiple personalities.

- LK: So you were captured by the Nazis?

- RB: By the government, in a way. I think the government has put a kind of chip in my head.

- LK: Let me read you a passage from Esquire magazine that quotes a page from your newspaper. Do you write notes about yourself?

- RB: Of course, I have thousands and thousands.

- LK: Thousands of notebooks?

- RB: Yes.

- LK: Well, here's this excerpt: "This is my life, my real story in Hollywood. It is the story of a woman with many and many facets: a woman, a young poet, a dancer, an actress, a singer, a freedom fighter, a warrior, a messenger, a performer, a mother, a mistress, a woman, an actress, a producer, a pioneer director, an autistic child, a survivor of post-traumatic shock, a borderline bipolar, an overweight woman, a woman with Tourette syndrome and a multiple personality disorder, a victim of psychiatry, an obsessive-compulsive, an implantation of false memories, a heretical witch, an old bique... Choose. There are 300 diagnoses showing that doctors are my only friends."

- RB: It's true that doctors are my dearest friends.

- LK: You never get angry with God who would have afflicted you all this, when your multiple personalities take over?

- RB: No because I believe God. Honestly I believe that God gives you a multiple personality when there is too much stress impossible to bear in your life. It is a gift for a child.

- LK: So something else can take over during extreme stress?

- RB: Yes.

- LK: Are there other people experiencing this?

- RB: Yes. but I mean it's not us who are out of wrapped. It's where we are that's out of control, so we have to adapt to it.

- Joan Baez :

In 1992, the famous singer Joan Baez wrote a song, "Play Me Backwards", in reference to the satanic messages that would be encoded in some records. She herself states that this piece is about satanic ritual abuse. Is it an autobiographical song? Here are some explicit verses:

You don't have to go to hell to feel the curse of the devil...

I saw them light the candles, I heard them beating the drum.

A man with a mask removes my clothes.

Mom, I'm icy and I have nowhere to run away.

I pay for protection, I filter the truth of the lie.

In pursuit of memories, Recovering evidence.

I would stand in front of your altar and say everything I know.

I came to claim my childhood at the chapel of the (sacrificed) baby Rose.

In 2004 at a concert in Charlottesville, Joan Baez told her audience that she had a multiple personality and that one of her alters was a 15-year-old black teenager named Alice. Journalist Ronald Bailey reports how he was stunned to see this rich and famous white folk singer transform into a poor black teenager from Arkansas giving her opinion on the ongoing presidential elections. The journalist reports that his accent, his patois and his attitude were just perfect, all that was missing was the skin colour of Alice's face[543].

- Britney Spears :

In January 2008, TMZ.com reported about Britney Spears: "Some sources depict a very disturbing painting of Britney Spears... We are told that she sometimes has a British accent... but this is much more than just a British accent, Britney would have multiple personalities, besides some people around her call her "the English girl". We have been told that when Britney Spears loses her British personality, she has absolutely no idea what she did during the time she had that personality. Another source tells us that Brit' has a number of other identities like ''the crying girl'', ''the diva'', ''the incoherent'', etc... ''

Britney Spears explains: "This alter takes over when I'm on stage, she's really wild and daring. She's a much more impulsive artist than I am. Its name is ''Britannia''. When she is present, I feel that the world belongs to me whereas usually I am rather shy.'

In 2008, Britney Spears abruptly broke up. She shaved her head with scissors and when asked why she had done this, she said she was tired of people touching her and that she didn't want things inserted into her anymore.

Was it a deterioration in programming? Indeed, when they reach a certain age, amnesic walls tend to dissolve, which can totally unbalance the person.

After this episode, she was interned at the Promises clinic in Malibu where she registered a 666 on her bald skull and shouting that she was the Anti-Christ, this before trying to hang herself with a sheet...

She then found herself under guardianship, which means that her father (and her "fiancé") then take full power over her life, her food, her clothing, her bank account and her medical care. Since her psychiatric internment, Britney and all her property have been entirely under the control of her masters. She is now described by those around her as "a doll who is told everything she has to do". An article from the Sun dated 2011 describes Britney as a robotic zombie who has totally lost control over her career (she probably never had control of it). To be clearer, Britney is under mental control, she is a person completely manipulated by her masters/managers. She is not the only one in this situation but it simply became more obvious and transparent when she reached her thirties, the age when Monarch slaves usually experience violent shots. In the same year, 2011, stars Nickeloedon and Amanda Bynes had the same kind of behavior leading them to a psychiatric hospital.

- Amanda Bynes :

Actress Amanda Bynes, like Britney Spears, was diagnosed with bipolar disorder. Official diagnoses of dissociative identity disorder are rare, especially in V.I.P... Indeed, the T.D.I. on which the MK programming is based is not supposed to be detected or even supposed to exist. If a personality disorder begins to emerge and cause damage, it will instead be diagnosed as borderline disorder, narcissistic disorder, bipolar disorder being the most classic diagnosis among celebrities of which here are some examples: Catherine Zeta-Jones, Jim Carrey, Tim Burton, Chris Brown, Axl Rose, DMX, Francis Ford Coppola, Linda Hamilton, Mel Gibson, Sinead O'Connor, Georges Michael, Brooke Shields, Carrie Fisher, Hugh Laurie, Maurice Benard, Jean Claude Van Damme, Ben Stiller, Owen Wilson, Winona Ryder, Rosie O'Donnell, Patty Duke. and many more...

Amanda Bynes was hospitalized in 2013 (it was not the first time) for severe mental disorders and according to doctors "schizophrenic tendencies", i.e. a severe personality disorder. The psychiatric hospital stated that she was aware that there was a "good Amanda" and a bad Amanda in her home. When she talked about the evil Amanda, she at the same time made exorcism mimics, shooting at her body and hitting herself as if to extricate the demon in her. During this hospitalization, Amanda asked for news of her dog that she had sprayed with gasoline a few days earlier... The staff tried to reassure her that he was safe with her parents; that's when Amanda became hysterical, she screamed for more than an hour: "They're going to kill him! Just as they tried to kill me!'' ... She was so unleashed that she had to be physically subdued[544].

Foxnews reported during this hospitalization that "the drug had nothing to do with it (editor's note: the analyses were negative) and that it was only a mental disorder (...) It was deep anger and severe post-traumatic stress that triggered this psychotic episode[545].

The stressful life of Hollywood will be the official explanation for his post-traumatic stress. and his deep anger...

In October 2014, Amanda Bynes was again hospitalized in psychiatry following a series of tweets she had posted. Her shocking statements she made on the social network Tweeter clearly describe the symptoms of an MK slave: sexual abuse from an early age by her father as well as "brainwashing". His tweets were quickly removed, but screenshots[546] from internet users revealed:

- I need to tell the truth about my father

- My father abused me physically and verbally when I was a child.

- So let me live my own life free from sadness and misery.

- I would no longer be manipulated, there would be no brainwashing by anyone, never again.

- I can no longer hear the sound of his incestuous voice, no more never and I just want to be honest.

- So today I'm going to see a lawyer to file a complaint against my father.

- My mother is aware that my father raped his own daughter and she never called the police, when I could have had him arrested and put in jail for the rest of his perverse life.

Within hours, the tweets were removed and Bynes was again hospitalized in psychiatry... This case reminds us of the attempted denunciation made by a French model that we saw in the introduction to chapter 7, a woman who also found herself committed to a psychiatric hospital. Like Britney Spears, Amanda Bynes was interned under California's 5150-ed law which means that an individual can be forcibly hospitalized with usually strong anti-psychotic medication. Is Bynes following the same path as Britney Spears? One thing is certain, this trend towards "psychotic episodes" and psychiatric internments is very present and is repeated again and again in this entertainment industry.

- Nicki Minaj :

In 2011, Nicki Minaj told V magazine: ''I just always want to act as ''Me'', but ''Me'' changes every day. I would dry out and die if I had to wake up to be the same person every day. I wouldn't leave these voices in silence anymore, I just let them speak.''

Nicki Minaj had a very troubled childhood, especially by the incessant conflicts between her father and mother. She told New York magazine: ''To get out of this violence, I imagined I was another person. ''Cookie'' was my first identity that stayed with me for a while. Then it was ''Harajuku Barbie'', then ''Nicki Minaj.''

She also cites the alter-egos: ''Roman Zolanski'', ''Martha'' and “Nicki Teresa”.

In 2010, in an MTV documentary entitled "My Time Now", the singer talks about the birth of her alter Roman:

- Nicki Minaj: Roman is a crazy boy who lives in me, he says some things that I would never want to say. He was born just a few months ago. I think it was rage that gave birth to it... It was conceived in rage, so it denigrates everyone and it even threatens to hit people. He is violent.

- Reporter: It must be nice to have a big unconscious mouth with which you can blame everything!

- Nicki Minaj: He wants to be blamed but I don't want to blame him. I ask him to leave, but he can't, he's there for a good reason. People made him emerge, people made an incantation for him and so he won't leave.

At the 2012 Grammy Awards, the closing show was a show by Nicki Minaj featuring the exorcism of her alter Roman. At the beginning of the show, Nicki is in a confessional where she seems to be possessed. All her performance is only a representation of a Catholic exorcism aimed at delivering her from her inner demon: Roman. An artistic performance becoming a kind of mainstream black mass, glorifying the demonic entity that is in it. She later said on Ryan Seacrest's radio show: "The people around Roman say he's not good enough, because he can't blend in with the average. His mother and those around him are afraid of it because they have never seen anything like him. He wants to prove that he is an incredible person but also that he has confidence in himself, that he is sure of himself. But he will never change, he will never be exorcised, even when he is sprinkled with holy water, he always recovers from it.'

It is possible that Nicki Minaj invented her different personalities and her inner demon Roman solely for artistic purposes, but it is interesting to observe how this culture of "multiple personalities" is transmitted to the public, to the secular world, during a stage performance affecting millions of people... His alter Roman, whether fictitious, whether it is a fragment of truly dissociated personality or a demonic entity, is therefore represented in the eyes of the public as an independent and autonomous identity that takes possession of the singer's body and that can be driven away by an exorcism. This is a way of making demonic possession and trauma-stricken, glamorous and trendy, in other words of infusing a culture of death into popular culture in the form of entertainment.

- Eminem :

Rapper Eminem also says he has another personality living in him, he calls it Slim Shaddy, on his website he says: "Slim Shaddy is just the demon in my head, I think I shouldn't think about it."

In his song "Low Down Dirty", he writes: "Because my split personality has an identity crisis. I am Dr. Hyde and Mr. Jekyll, disrespectful. Hearing voices in my head with these whispers echoing.'' Or "All these fucking voices in my head, I can't take it anymore" in his song "Elevator".

Without a doubt, a certain milieu of the music industry displays "multiple personalities" as something trendy... Would having a bunch of alter-egos all more crazy than each other become a fashion ?... This is how the sorcerers-controllers infuse their culture of MK and occultism in the secular world: by its popularization and its trivialization. The mass that applauds and asks for more is therefore corrupted with something highly occult serving beyond the spectacle and glitter for a real enslavement of the human. We will come back to this later.

It may also be that an alter of a truly split and programmed subject can himself have fun presenting several personalities in front of his audience, playing on different names and different characters, while his real alternation of personalities does not depend on him, but on the goodwill of his programmer or his masters.

- Christina Aguilera :

In 2002, Christina Aguilera released her album "Stripped" under the name of her hypersexualized alter personality: Xtina. Just like Janet Jackson who will reveal her sulfurous alter Damita Jo in 2004. In 2006, mtv.com published an article entitled: ''Christina's New Split-Personality Album Is Mature And 'Dirrty''. For Christina Aguilera, it is also about post-traumatic stress disorder and borderline personality disorder.

- Rihanna :

''The more naked I am, the more I have confidence in myself'', here is a statement from the famous star on an American TV set. Psychologist Jo Hemmings said of him: ''The Rihanna's unpredictable behavior could indicate that she suffers from a narcissistic personality disorder. The symptoms are an exaggerated sense of the importance of her own existence, and a constant need for admiration, which Rihanna testifies to by posting photos of her on Twitter half naked. If she does indeed suffer from this pathology, with psychological help, she could identify this disorder that destroys her and get better! 547! .''

- Miley Cyrus :

Perhaps the most hypersexualized and disgmated star of the moment, Miley Cyrus, who began her career as a child on Disney Channel in the series Hannah Montana. Cyrus explains in Marie Claire magazine: "You're a pop star! It means you have to be blonde, have long hair and wear tight, glittery stuff. Me during that time, I was a little girl fra.gile who played a 16-year-old a.d.o with a wig and tons of ma.quilla.ges (...) For a long time, every day I was made beautiful, and when I wasn't on set I thought to myself: "fucking, but who am I?" I was formatted to look like someone I am pa,s[548].

According to Nicole Knepper, an influential teen behavior psychologist and blogger in the United States, Miley Cyrus may suffer from a personality disorder, which would explain her very questionable behaviors (hypersexuality, lack of control of her impulses, sudden change in mood and drug use). Nicole Knepper told Ra.darOnline: "These are not normal behaviours. Even for those who are rich and famous! (...) I am not saying that Miley Cyrus is necessarily suffering from a mood disorder, I am simply saying that a person who has this type of behavior and has these symptoms has something to worry about and this necessarily leads to questions about the causes (...) Someone who shows a rapid change in mood, has insomnia, consumes alcohol regularly, talks without any restraint about sex, drugs and alcohol, it is alarming and these are warning signs that announce something much more serious! 549]."

In 2014, Miley Cyrus was interned in a psychiatric hospital. The media then explained that it was the death of his dog some time before that had deeply destabilized him... At the same time that she was hospitalized, he released a particularly crazy psychedelic video clip featuring her as a drug addict with a brainwashed: "Blonde SuperFreak Steals the Magic Brain" (an official production), in which she screams from the first minute: "Where has my fucking brain gone!!"

- Mary J. Blige :

Singer Mary J. Blige will say about her alter "Brook": "I had to separate the two because Mary is kind and intelligent, while Brook is crazy, ignorant, she doesn't care about everything… Mary is calm, the savage is Brook[550].

Mary J. Blige stated publicly on The Oprah Winfrey Show that she was sexually abused as a child and suffered severe mental disorders: *"I have been abused and I have abused myself... I was tired of life... I was suicidal, ready to kill myself. I hated my image, I hated the sound of my voice, I totally hated myself."

- Beyoncé :

Beyonce has publicly displayed another personality whom she names "Sacha Fierce". Here is what she has said about this in several media:

''When I see a video of myself on stage or on television, I think to myself''Who is this girl? It's not me, I would never dare to do that.'' - Beyonce, 2003.

''I wouldn't want Sacha if I met her behind the scenes'' - Beyonce, Parade Magazine 2006.

''I wouldn't want Sacha if I met her behind the scenes'' - Beyonce, Parade Magazine 2006.

''I have someone else who takes over when it's time for me to work and when I'm on stage. This alter ego protects me and what I really am[551].

''Sasha Fierce's account is ruled, I killed him.'' Beyonce, Allure Magazine 2010

- Laurieann Gibson :

Choreographer Laurieann Gibson, known for her work with Lady Gaga, began a singing career in 2014. The presentation to the public of his alter named "Harlee" was done in a very special way. She introduced this alter personality to the media scene with a one-minute mini-video clip showing Harlee injured and sequestered in gloomy and morbid basements, her executioners being two men who rape her and spray her with a jet of water under high pressure… This video in which she does not sing (strange for a singing career promotion) is entitled "Harlee coming soon!" (Harlee arrives) !) ... Maybe that's how alter Harlee was born. in basements and trauma.

- Lady Gaga :

Stefani Joanne Angelina Germanotta, better known as Lady Gaga, names her alter personalities: ''Jo Calderone'', ''Mother Monster'' and ''Gypsy Queen''. When Jo Calderone appears, Gaga is dressed as a man and she behaves exactly like a manly macho. In 2011, at the MTV Video Music Awards, Jo Calderone appeared publicly on stage stating:

''I'm Jo, Joe Calderone, and it seems like I'm a swollen man. gaga? The other one there. She dared to leave me! She says it's always the same with guys, including me. Obviously, I'm a guy, a real one. It seems that we are all tarnished. I admit that I've been, but in the tared genre, she's pretty much the Gaga, isn't she? It's a fucking queen of the tarées! Take the morning for example. She gets up, she puts on heels, she goes to the bathroom, I hear the water flowing, and when she comes out wet from the bathroom, she always has her heels on her feet. And what are these tiffes? At first I thought it was sexy, but now I get lost. She told me that I was no better than the last one. That is not true! . Honestly I think it's great, I think it's great that it's a fucking superstar. A star of the song as they say. But I do how to shine?! At the limit, I wouldn't mind being in the shadows if I felt like she was sincere with me. Maybe it is. Notice. Sometimes I tell myself that she is like that, that this is her true nature. After all, when she goes on stage, she doesn't set any limits... What about the spotlight? All these big spotlights follow her wherever she goes, they even follow her to her home, I assure you. I, too, want my share. When you fuck, she covers her face because she doesn't want me to see her. The nana, she is just unable to be sincere even when no one is looking at her. I would like to see the real Gaga. But Jo, let her tell me. I'm not real, I play a character. But you and I are very real.''

Obviously there is a serious inner conflict between the alter Gaga and the alter Calderone. In the event that all this is just an acting game, again it only propagates a certain fashion of the multiple personality. It's about glorifying the fractional personality in the secular world by making this phenomenon cool and fun. The transmission of Luciferian culture to the general public requires a whole occult symbolism but also the trivialization of multiple personalities. The goal is to contaminate popular culture through the Luciferian subculture so that finally the people cheer and demand anti-Christic and enslaving productions. We'll come back to Lady Gaga later.

- Tila Tequila :

Tila Tequila is an American singer, model and reality tv star. This unstable personality not only has a multi-layer character, she also seems not to be alone in her body. In 2010, she publicly stated that she had a dissociative identity disorder. One of her personalities is named "Jane" and even tried to kill her. She said on the social network Twitter: "Jane was there! She tried to kill me! She slashed my body with a knife! I am terrified, there is blood everywhere! Everything in my room is broken! I woke up with blood everywhere! Jane tried to kill me! I took some pictures, it's really disgusting.sse... I told you that I had a multiple personality guys... I fell asleep and woke up with stab wounds everywhere, and everything is broken around me! For people who have a multiple personality or bipolar disorder, it's fucking stuff like that happens! Jane left, I locked the doors." Later, Tila Tequila dismissed the speculations of some fans who claimed that she had injured herself or that she had made a suicide attempt: "Inever hurt myself! never!! I tell you, it was Janel552! !! ..."

- Mel Gibson :

In a much more discreet way than a Tila Tequila, a Beyonce or a Lady Gaga, Mel Gibson confessed to having another personality named "Bjorn''... The famous actor spoke about it in 2007 in front of the journalist Michael Parkinson on the BBC, in the program "Parkinson":

"I have an alter-ego called Bjorn (...) Bjorn is a guy of the Viking genre (...) It goes back to a dark age, somewhere when the father came to visit me, I know it's something bad (...) Bjorn is a former murderer (...) he's a wild guy. He has so much energy (...) I never want to be Bjorn again."

Mel Gibson, who has also been diagnosed with bipolar disorder, says that he has to push this alter back into the sand, inside his mind, but that sometimes there is still a hand that resurfaces and that he must then push it back. He also says that sometimes he lets Bjorn participate and play roles, which makes sense with the Viking film Braveheart. According to psychiatrist Colin Ross, Mel Gibson also revealed his alter Bjorn to the German investigative newspaper Der Spiegel.

Note here that Mel Gibson was the main actor of the film "Conspiracy" whose theme is the MK-Ultra.

- Joaquin Phoenix :

Joaquin Phoenix grew up in a family of actors and his parents were part of the Children of God sect. He made his television debut and landed his first film role at the age of 10... He will continue his career through many films including 8 millimeters, Fire Trap, Hotel Rwanda, Two Lovers, Gladiator ...

In 2000, he said in an interview with the Australian magazine Juice:

- Reporter: Who are you going to take to the premiere of "Gladiator"?

- Joaquin Phoenix: I'm going to be honest and I know it's going to sound strange to you, but my partner right now is myself. This is what happens when you suffer from a multiple personality disorder and an extraordinary egocentrism.

- Lindsay Lohan :

Lindsay Lohan, a famous American actress and singer who has done several detoxification treatments, said in a reality TV documentary about her: "Everything is fine and then I hear a voice in my head that says: oh oh, it's time to sabotage everything!" ("Lindsay"

OWN). The actress has indeed serious tendencies to self-destruction, whether through scarification, drugs and alcohol. His life is rather chaotic, like many celebrities. Doctors diagnosed him with a Narcissistic Personality Disorder characterized for disproportionate self-centeredness, lack of empathy and an exaggerated sense of his own importance. In an article by Bill Zwecker for the Chicago Sun-Times in 2010, it is noted about Lindsay Lohan that "multiple personalities agitate the actress, who at times turns into "Diane" or "Margot".

A long-time associate of Lindsay Lohan told the press that she thought the actress had a multiple personality disorder and that this may be one of the reasons why she suffers from these recurring addictions: "Some of us wondered if Lindsay was not bipolar because of her recurrent mood swings. But I think it goes much further because Lindsay sometimes called herself Diane or Margot.'

- Iggy Pop :

In the book Iggy Pop: Open Up and Bleed: The Biography, Paul Trynka tells us that in 1975, singer James Newell Osterberg ("Iggy Pop" being an alter-ego) was hospitalized due to his drug addiction. It was then that he underwent psychotherapy with Dr. Murray Zucker; here's what this doctor said: "I always feel like Iggy enjoys playing with his brain so much, to the point that he himself no longer knows what emerges from it or what's into it. Sometimes he seems to have total control over it, playing with different personna.ges (...) But at other times you have the feeling that he no longer controls anything, he only undergoes it. It's just a lack of discipline, it's not necessarily a bipolarity, it's God knows what!"

- Anne Heche :

Actress Anne Heche, american tv star Ally Mac Beal, has written an autobiographical book called "Call Me Crazy" in which she recounts the paternal incest and the unfortunate psychological consequences she endured as a result of these traumas.

In September 2001, she gave an interview to Barbara Walters on ABC News[553], of which here are some excerpts:

"I'm not crazy... but I have a crazy life, I was raised in a crazy family and it took me 31 years to evacuate this madness out of me (...) I had another personality, I had a fantastic world. I called this other personality "Celestia". My other world was called the "Fourth Dimension" and I thought I was from another planet."

Anne Heche played the role of two twins in the series Another World from 1988 to 1992, it was at that time, at the age of 25, that she said that her personality disorders began to manifest and lead to moments of madness. Celestia, her other personality, believed she was the reincarnation of God, she spoke another language and she had special powers...

- Anne Heche: I revealed to my mother after seven years of therapy that I had been sexually abused by my father... and she hung up on me (...) In New York, I heard the voice of god and I thought then that I was totally crazy. I had no idea what I needed to do. I existed in two different people.

- Barbara Walters: So even if you thought you were Jesus or Celestia, you were at the same time aware that it was an aberration?

- AH: Absolutely, that's what drives you crazy, you're absolutely aware of that. On the one hand I was Anne Heche, an actress with lots of friends and I thought people would think I'm totally crazy if I told them about this. And at the same time, I heard God saying to me, "You come from heaven."

- BW: How did that manifest itself? What was your grip on the situation?

- AH: Oh in a lot of different ways! What could I do? When I was Celestia, I spoke another language. I was speaking a language that we had between god and me. I could also see in the future, I could heal people.

- BW: Do you remember what language it was?

- AH: Of course!

- BW: Can you say anything in that language now?

- AH: Well, the word god for example. There are many prayers. The word for god in my language is "kiness". A'kiness, a'ta fortatuna donna...

- BW: And it's a language you never had.

- ah:... I don't know where she came from, but I knew what she meant. I was in my mind, and it was God who taught me.

- BW: You say you've been under the influence of voices and visions almost all the time for almost seven years. You have fought against demons and you have managed, in an unimaginable way, to juggle this with your professional activity.

- AH: Yes, it's amazing to reconcile these two things. I would go to work, and then I would come back to my dressing room because I had to write down the messages I heard from god about love.

- BW: You were going into your dressing room and you were another person. You closed the door and you were then another person, you were Jesus?

- AH: I was Celestia.

- BW: Celestia is also Jesus?

- AH: No, Celestia, as I said before, is the reincarnation of god, here on earth.

- BW: You know Anne, there are doctors and therapists who could diagnose this as a form of mental illness, such as personality duplication, schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. Does this apply to you?

- AH: I don't think so. The most interesting thing is that I went to see a therapist for years. It's amazing what you can hide.

• Megan Fox :

Megan Fox, who had, as we saw in chapter 7, a real obsession for the Wizard of Oz when she was little, told Wonderland magazine in 2009: "I could end up like this (editor's note: referring to Marilyn Monroe) because I constantly fight with Vidée that I have a borderline personality, that I have symptoms of mild schizophrenia. I really think I have mental problems but I didn't manage to find out what it is exactly. "

She also told Rolling Stone magazine in 2009: "I have a lot to be happy about but that doesn't mean I don't struggle, I'm very vulnerable. I can be aggressive, hurtful, authoritarian and selfish, way too much. I'm emotionally unpredictable, anywhere. I am a control maniac. My mood is ridiculously bad. I destroyed the house." As a child she had panic attacks that manifested themselves in violence, tantrums of rage. As if I didn't know how to control myself or what to do." The interview also tells us that she cannot fall asleep with someone who is in contact with her (hypersensitivity); she needs "cocoons" and pillows to feel safe; she cannot sleep in the dark; she does not like to look in the mirror; she admits (just like Angelina Jolie) to shed blood during sexual intercourse without going into detail... She admits to self-injurious practices and also refers to an eating disorder and her bisexuality.

- Both Furler :

The international star, of Australian origin (some of whose clips have caused controversy when it came to content with a paedophile tendency: "Chandelier" and "Elastic Heart") said that she suffered from bipolarity following having smoked too much cannabis as a teenager... In 2014, during a famous American radio show, "The Howard Stern Show", she said: "What I think is that I smoked too many joints when I was a kid, my brain was not yet formed, I screwed up my brain"... But in the same show, she also confided that her father, Phil B. Colson (also a professional musician), had a double personality: Phil and Stan...

- Sia Furler: He had two very different personalities, one called Phil and the other Stan...

- Reporter: He named his personalities Phil and Stan himself?

- SF: Yes... Phil was the best of dads, he was fun but he was also eloquent, present and very attentive. When Stan landed, terrifying things were happening (...) It was nerve-wracking, like a certain energy coming into the room. An intimidating energy... she intimidated everyone.

- J: How many times have you experienced this?

- SF: I don't know, I don't remember.

Sia always assumed that her father had a dissociative identity disorder but had never been diagnosed or treated. She stated that he had never physically abused her. However, when you grow up with a split parent (she does not describe what were the "terrifying things" that Alter Stan was doing), unfortunately the risk of suffering serious trauma is heavy... His bipolar disorder may not be put on the back of THC (active ingredient in cannabis). It is possible that his family is mired in this "transgenerational dissociation" passing from one generation to the next via traumatic experiences, with possibly programming on fractional individuals. Sia did not arrive at the top of the music industry by chance...

- Tyler Perry :

The famous Hollywood producer Tyler Perry had a particularly difficult childhood. In 2010 in The Oprah Winfrey Show, he described with tears in his eyes the dissociative process that allowed him to escape the pain and terror during trauma: "I could go to this park (in my mind) where my mother and aunt used to take me. So I'm there in this park running and playing, it was such beautiful days. So every time someone did something horrible and unbearable to me, I could go to this park, inside my mind, until it was over (...) All I remember is that he (editor's note: his father) violently grabbed me, I was pressed against a grilla.ge so strong that my hands were bleeding, and he was hitting me... I was just trying to preserve my life... and I felt like I was trying to get to this place, to this park, to my mind, where I could put up with this... I was trying to reach this park and I couldn't do it... It made me so angry... I was trying again and again... When I finally got there and saw the grass in my mind... I saw myself running out of me... And I couldn't catch up with this little boy... I couldn't pa.s catch up with this little boy to bring him back to me... I couldn't bring myself back to myself... I then thought I was dying and I didn't understand... It took me so long to figure out what had happened. "

- Barbara Streisand :

The famous singer and actress told the Ladies Home Journal in 1994: "I live with great anguish (...) I'm constantly changing. So I say to the man who interests me that if he likes to have adventures with many women, then I am perfect for him[554]! "

- Anna Nicole Smith :

Anna Nicole Smith ,who died in 2007 at the age of 39, was an American playmate, actress and singer. In August 2006 Nicole Smith was filmed at her home, a private recording that was later publicly revealed as the "video clown". Indeed, this recording showed Anna Nicole Smith neglected and made up as a clown... in a pathetic state.

This video was filmed at her property in a sadistic way by her spouse or supposed "master" Howard K. Stern. The video was delivered to the public shortly after Anna's death. In this video we can see the star completely dissociated, having the behavior and voice of a 4- or 5-year-old child. The mass media claimed that she was under the influence of medicines during this video recording, which is probably the case, but medicines alone cannot explain such a condition. There were obvious symptoms of deep psychic trauma.

When Howard K. Stern asks her, camera in hand, if she has eaten hallucinogenic mushrooms, we can see that she has no idea what a "trip under mushroom" is. because at that time, she is a little girl of 4 years totally ignorant of these things. When Stern tells her that this recording is going to be worth a lot of money, she replies: "Why? What registration?" This woman has been in front of the cameras and lenses all her life, she knows what a video recording is. but not at the age of 4. We see in this video that it is completely unbundled. A personality disorder that Howard K. Stern took great pleasure in exposing in a video recording aimed at ridiculing the poor woman.

Anna Nicole Smith was pregnant with a girl during this "video clown", the little Dannielynn Birkhead who will embody six years later the Spring-Summer 2013 collection of the prestigious brand Guess Kids. A child born in the Network and injected into the world of fashion from the age of 6, following in the footsteps of her mother.

It is obvious that celebrities play with the personalities they publicly expose, they usually make a distinction between private personality and public personality, it is a way to preserve themselves but also to play with their image. It also sometimes happens that they create a new identity when working on an unusual project, as was the case of musician Garth Brooks who created an alter-ego named Chris Gaines to release an album in a totally different style. Another example is Ashlee Simpson who became Vicky Valentine to move from guitar to electronic music. We could also mention David Bowie and his alter-ego Ziggy Stardust and Thin White Duke, but also Prince and his female alter Camille, Laurie Anderson and his alter Fenway Bergamot...

Obviously the artists of the world scene have very complex personalities... and we find that in some cases it seems to go far beyond just playing a role or a character, and then a line is crossed to what appears to be the dissociative identity disorder resulting from severe trauma.

Sometimes even celebrities seem to be possessed and serve as mediums...

b/ The demons of cinema and music

- I know I have demons, I don't quite know if I want to get rid of them but I would like to experience them in a different way. Maybe make a face to face with them. I never really had time to go to therapy, just a little here and there... but not enough for it to help me.

- Of course, I have demons... Sometimes I'm about thirty different people... Johnny Depp - Vanity Fair, 1997 and US Magazine, 1999

- Keanu is a very complex guy with a lot of demons in him, and I'm going to try to use and exploit that. Taylor Hackford about actor Keanu Reeves - Movieline, 2000

- I am a tormented person, I have many demons in me. My pain is as great as my joy. Madonna - Los Angeles Times, 1991

Whitney Houston's vocal coach, Gary Catona, told the Daily Mail that she had demons in her (...) that she was a lot of people in one, and the question was which of them would appear... and when[555]."

In 2002, when the American journalist Diane Sawyer asked Whitney Houston what was the "worst demon" of her life, she did not answer "cocaine", "drugs" or "alcohol" ... no, Witney's answer was, "The worst demon is me. I'm my best friend or my worst enemy." An unsuractive statement for someone who has a deep personality disorder. Whitney Houston has revealed particularly disturbing things about her relationship with Bobby Brown, another celebrity. Here is an excerpt from a 2009 Houston interview with Oprah Winfrey:

- Whitney Houston: There were times when he would put everything on it underneath, he would break glass things in the house. For example, we had a giant portrait of us with my child and he cut my head out of the picture. He was doing stuff like that. There I thought it was really strange. Cutting my head off from a photo, it was a little too much for me, it was a sign. And then there were other things. like when he started painting eyes all over the bedroom. Only eyes. evil eyes that scrutinized all over the room.

- Oprah Winfrey: He painted on the walls?

- WH: Yes! On the walls, on the carpets, on the doors of closets. When I opened a door, there was a drawing, and behind when I closed it, there was another drawing. Eyes and faces. It was really strange...

- OW: What did you do then?

- WH: I was looking at it and saying, "Lord, what's really going on here?" I was starting to get scared because I felt that something was going to explode, that something was going to happen... "

In 2004, his partner Bobby Brown, himself a singer and actor and visibly very disturbed, said in an interview with Jamie Foster for Sister 2 Sister magazine:

"When I was younger, I was diagnosed with attention deficit disorder, I know that this is the same as bipolar disorder (...) When I arrived at Betty Ford, I wondered what was wrong with me. I was trying in vain to understand why I had these extreme mood changes. That is to say, sometimes I could be happy and the next minute I was in a black rage, filled with fire and rage, but I did not know the reason. I went to doctors, they talked to me, they did brain exams and they diagnosed me as bipolar."

Actress Angelina Jolie said she was "very sexualized from the age of 4 in kindergarten (...) I had invented a game where I kissed the boys. Then we would go further and take off our clothes. I was in a lot of trouble then!"

For many early childhood professionals, a hypersexualized attitude in a young child is considered a sign of suspected sexual abuse. Angelina Jolie, who also seems to be psychologically very disturbed, has admitted to having tasted all the drugs, but she seems to have a special taste for it. blood. At her first marriage to Johnny Lee Miller, she had written her husband's name on awhiteT-shirt with her blood. When she was married to Billy Bob Thornton, they both wore a vial around their necks containing each other's blood. Her biography also reveals that as a child, she had a fascination with knives, that she collected them and that in adolescence, her unhappiness manifested itself among other things by scarification. A biography reveals: "Some go shopping, I scarify myself. When I started having sex, sex didn't bring me enough, my emotions weren't strong enough, something wanted to go out... One day, wanting to feel an even more intense fusion, I grabbed a knife and Slashed my boyfriend... then he also slashed me. He was really a good person, a nice guy who wasn't the menacing or violent kind. We had this particular exchange... We were covered in blood and I felt my heart beating."

This biography of Angelina Jolie also tells us that during a session of sado-masochism, Jolie asked her partner to slash her chin, there is still a small scar today. She will say, ''I wanted him to help me out of it and that frustrated me because he couldn't help me.'' Scarification obviously could not help her, in fact it even almost killed her. In particular, there was an accident where Jolie slashed her neck and stomach and then engraved a cross on her arm. She ended up in the emergency room and later said, "I almost cut my jugular[556]."

Angelina Jolie was therefore sexualized from the age of 4, then later "adept" of bloody scarifications... Some therapists here will clearly recognize signs that strongly suggest that Angelina Jolie was sexually abused in her early childhood. Abuses that could have split her personality and the following statement seems to confirm that she suffered dissociative states from her childhood: "When I was a child, I did not have my own "Me". Growing up, I lived through characters that I played losing myself in different parts of my personality.'

There is also actor David Carradine, who was found dead in a hotel room in Bangkok at the age of 72. Lieutenant General Worapong Siewpreecha said the actor was discovered to have a rope tied around his neck and another to his sexual organ, the two being connected together and hanging from the closet. A sadomasochistic practice consisting in depriving the brain of oxygen in order to multiply the effect of orgasm, a 'game'' that was fatal to it...

In the entertainment industry, there is no shortage of examples of totally disoriented and self-destructive behaviour, it is a world where the boundaries between fiction, reality, madness and reason no longer seem to exist. A world where drama and horror are not only written in fictional scenarios but where it also invites itself into the lives of its actors... But is it possible that some of the biggest stars of film and song are possessed or influenced by demonic entities? Do they serve as mediums for certain spiritual forces that would influence them in their creativity or stage performances, consciously or unconsciously? Is the "pact with the devil" just a legend?

The status of man in this material universe is temporary and, as we have seen, it can be influenced by entities related to other dimensions. The Old and New Testaments are filled with examples where angels intervened in human affairs under God's direction. But the Bible also speaks of the undesirable and constant presence of demons or the devil, i.e. fallen spiritual entities negatively influencing humans. The Bible describes the different dimensions in which such beings reside: "The angels who have not kept the dignity of their rank, but who have left their own abode, he has kept them in perpetual chains in the depths of darkness while waiting for the great day of judgment." Jude 1:6

Apart from the biblical aspect, in an objective and rational way, we cannot deny today the fact that the entertainment industry as a whole propagates an image of decadence and immorality based on violence, sex, drugs and exacerbated materialism... Like a mirror, our Western society today reflects the content of these entertainment programmes that are constantly infused into the media.

Where does this spirit of decadence come from? Does it infuse itself into our world via entities using certain humans as mediums to embody a subculture and thus influence humanity as a whole? Are these mediums "agents" of counter-initiation working to defile Creation (consciously or unconsciously)? Chapter 6 has already given us the beginnings of an answer to these questions.

In 2011, singer Ke$ha drank blood from a heart (presumed beef) on stage during sydney's Future Music Festival. Her bloody "performance" during which she raised her heart above her head to let the blood flow in her mouth illustrated her piece entitled Cannibal... Kesha Rose Seber spent more than 45 minutes on stage covered in blood in front of thousands of people cheering her[557]. Note here that the cover of his album "Cannibal" represents his face with a tear dividing it vertically in two, a classic symbolism in the entertainment industry representing the splitting of personality.

In 2014, at the SXSW Festival in Austin, Texas, Lady Gaga will literally and voluntarily vomit on her. During this "shock performance", the artist Millie Brown ingurgitated a greenish liquid and then put her fingers in the back of her throat in order to vomit the contents of her stomach on the half-naked Gaga. All in a sexually explicit position on a mechanical horse

The singer Miley Cyrus multiplies the provocations going ever further in sexual perversity. In November 2015, during a concert in Chicago for the launch of his short story tour,Miley Cyrus arrived on stage almost naked, sporting at the level of hercrotch a gigantic dildo! It was in this outfit that she appeared in front of fans for many minors and even preteens.

The aim is to ensure that all these deviant, perverse and recurrentpractices do notbecome more shocking and that they are gradually integrating into our culture... Remember that Lady Gaga is the most popular pop starinthe world and that her "performances" and her behaviours permeate millions of young people. For example, Gaga has made photo shoots dressed in real raw red meat, or with horns implanted on her forehead, shots that are widely distributed around the world and unfortunately acclaimed.

An employee of London's Chicos Intercontinental Hotel told The Sun newspaper: "Lady Gaga left a large amount of blood in the suite during her stay this summer. The incident was reported to the janitor, who was asked to close his eyes." Another source says: "All the members of the hotel are convinced that Lady Gaga took a bloodbath, or, at the limit, that she used all this blood for a costume or her passage on stage."

For some, all this is simply laughable. and many will see in these extreme acts only a provocation for advertising purposes: to make the buzz in the press people and the internet sphere. But this kind of completely dismembered "artistic performances" are multiplying and becoming more and more extreme, as is a race to reverse moral values and the collapse of a civilization. L'ordo ab chao... Order through chaos or chaos to order. Everything is clear to those who still have eyes to see. The inversion of values is underway.

- But the spirit expressly says that, in the last times, some will abandon the faith, to attach themselves to seductive spirits and doctrines of demons. 1 Timothy 4: 1

- Woe to those who call evil good and good evil; which change darkness into light and light into darkness; which change bitterness smoothly and sweetness into bitterness! Isaiah 5:20

- Know that in the last days difficult times will arise. For men will be selfish, friends of money, blusterers, proud, blasphemers, rebellious to their parents, ungrateful, sacrilegious, insensitive, implacable, slanderous, unresponsive, cruel, enemies of good people, traitors, impulsive, swollen with pride, loving their pleasure more than God. They will keep the outer form of piety, but they will deny its power. Distance yourself from these men. 2 Timothy 3:1-5.

Are some of the big stars of show business the mediums of superior strength? The question is indeed worth asking and some statements by artists seem to enlighten us on this subject, as we will see later...

What is mediumship? The psychologist and medium Jon Klimo defines the medium trance as follows: "The communication of information to a human being made from a source that exists on a level other than the physical dimension that we know, and that does not come from the mind of the medium."

There are two forms of mediumship or channeling: intentional channeling and spontaneous channeling. Intentional channeling occurs when a person voluntarily seeks to come into contact and be possessed by entities, in such cases spirits usually wait for permission before entering the body. In spontaneous channeling, spirits take control of the body whenever they wish, and the individual then finds himself at their mercy.

These two types of pipeline can take several forms. It can be a complete or partial loss of consciousness during trance. It can also be done through sleep where spirits will influence the individual in his dreams and nightmares. Another form of mediumship is automatism, the entity then takes control of a part of the body, usually the hand, to have it written or painted, this is called automatic writing or painting. A medium trance can involve writing, painting, song, dance, musical composition, even going as far as speeches and teachings given in the form of lectures. The medium can also hear words dictated in his mind, it is then the "clairaudience", a faculty of paranormal hearing. "Clairvoyance" concerns images, photos or symbols that are "printed" in the mind of the medium... One thing to remember is that whatever the way in which the channeling is done and the result obtained, it is recognized that without these demonic entities, the medium has absolutely no power[558].

The medium Jon Klimo confirms that mediumistic states are influenced by external entities: "If your mind can act on your own brain, well a similar thing of a non-physical nature can also be able to act on your brain, making you hear voices or have visions. An entity can speak or write by controlling your body in the same way that you usually control it by your mind[559].

''The gods do not communicate directly to mortals, but through intermediate spirits. The mortal needs figures to communicate with the gods, and therefore the demon becomes the necessary figure. a source leading to sacrifices, initiations, incantations, prophecies, divinations, magical spells, and sacred poems.' Plato[560]

''In the same way, the muse inspires men because they are inspired and possessed. It is not through art or knowledge that you say what you say, but through possession." Socrates[561]

"Keep yourself constantly open to the demons whispering in your ear. The term "demon" has an old meaning that is close to "the guiding spirit", the "inspiring muse". Anton Lavey[562]

"There are three main methods for invoking an entity (...) The third is the Theatrical method, perhaps the most attractive of all; it is in any case certain for the temperament of artist, because it addresses his imagination through his sense of aesthetics.'' Aleister Crowley[563]

The Bible teaches us that the channeling of spirits is nothing but demonic possession, although new-age mediums prefer to speak of "mutual cooperation" between the entity and the channel. It would seem that many artists intentionally or unintentionally channel entities in their creative process, whether in the writing of scripts, songs, acting or stage performances.

It should be noted that the interest of the Prince of this world and his army is not to raise the human mass spiritually, but rather to make it fall with him. In our time, this entertainment industry highlighting its many mediums is used against the spiritual health of humans although it can also infuse and disclose some truth about our current situation. The ambiguity is there, on the one hand this industry sinks consciences to divert and degrade them but on the other it can just as well awaken people by its materialistic extremism, decadent and disgusting, thus pushing the individual to question himself and to detach himself from it to return to the divine. In addition, this industry constantly distils a symbolic occult knowledge in its productions, indeed everything is displayed for those who still have eyes to see: "Do not talk about it, showit."

A Law of this great theatre is to let the Truth shine through despite the semblance of darkness and confusion, this to allow free will to be fulfilled. "Who seeks finds", God does not allow to suppress access to the Truth despite this hubbub and this ambient chaos trying to divert and control human consciousnesses. War is spiritual, it consists in diverting consciences from the knowledge of God. The mental control of the masses is the modus operandi of the sorcerers controllers... but they must leave access to the Truth, they have no choice.

Here is now an impressive series of quotes showing how demonic possession is more present than ever in our world, and especially among influential global stars, both in the film industry and in music.

"(In the studies of John Livingstone Nevius :) Wang Yung-ngen of Beijing noted that people who had no ability to song became talented singers when possessed, and others without any natural ability for poetry could easily compose rhymes when they were under the possession of an entity[564].

> Cinema:

- Rudolph Valentino :

In the twenties, actor Rudolph Valentino and his wife Natasha were both followers of occultism and practiced spiritualism: "Every night, Natasha did a session to call for the help of the spirit world for her creativity. Then, pencil and paper in hand, she would go into a trance and start writing. Once typed at the machine, the work was handed over to the director as early as Lende May565}."

- Mae West :

In the thirties, actress Mae West, called the Queen of Sex and even the Statue of Libido, once said: "When I'm good, I'm very good, but when I'm bad, I'm even better."

His work has helped to overturn the biblical values of North America. West's contact with the spirit world allowed him a fruitful production of screenplays. Scenarios that catapulted it onto the film scene. She allowed herself to be possessed by entities and thus pended whole evenings in psychic readings. One of her relatives, Kenny Kingston, said, "When she was angry because no one had been able to bring a script idea, she would take the hundred steps in her room and say, "Forces! forces! come to me and help me write a script. " She began to hear voices and see the images of a story that was revealed to her. Mae would then call a stenographer, and then for hours, while lying on her bed in a trance state, she would dictate things as the spirits conveyedto her."

- Marilyn Monroe :

The famous sex symbol of the twentieth century was known to enter deep trances. Kenny Kingston said that she "attracts the spirit world to ask them foradvice! 567]."

Marilyn Monroe herself said: "Jekyll & Hyde. More than two, I am so many people. They sometimes shock me, I wish there were only me[568]!"

Lloyd Shearer wrote: "Before each take, Marilyn closed her eyes and entered a deep trance[569].

Here's a famous statement by Marilyn Monroe: "Hollywood is a place where you're paid $50,000 for a kiss and 50 cents for your soul."

- James Dean :

James Dean was another known follower of occultism. He publicly acknowledged: "I have a rather good knowledge of satanic forces[570].

His close friend Dennis Hopper said of him: "He was totally transformed when the camera started shooting. He suddenly became the character... Strange things came out of him.''

James Dean's advice to Dennis Hooper to work with the spirit world was simple: "Leave yourself open."

Indeed, James Dean thought that another entity inhabited him when he played, he describes it as follows: "As if there were two people in the same skin. one telescopicing the other from behind. the one inside seems derived on the surface of the skin.''

- Peter Sellers

British actor Peter Sellers, known for his role in the series ''The Pink Panther'', said: ''It's a bit like you're a medium and you open up big saying, I want a character to inhabit my body or take care of me so that I can produce what I want to produce[571].

When Sellers was asked, "Do you hear his voice the same way you hear mine now?" He said, "Yes absolutely, as clear as that. A very clear voice, as if someone was talking but here (showing his head). Sometimes I call to get a hand and sometimes it happens like that. It can happen anytime, really anytime. (...) I play like a medium if you will, I let the character come through me.''

Peter Evans, The Biographer of Peter Sellers, will describe how "the demon began to inhabit his body. Everything began to change in him. It wasn't just his gait and his way of standing, it wasn't just his voice, but also his expressions, his eyes, his gestures. everything was different.''

- Robin Williams :

In 1999, actor Robin Williams himself told US Weekly journalist

James Kaplan that he opened up to possession when he was on stage: "yes! Literally, it's like a possession. All of a sudden you're in it, and while you're directly playing in front of an audience, you receive this energy that's starting to flow into you... But there's also something else, it's possession, at one time you would have been burned for that. But something gives you power in there. I mean, you're all there... It's Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde, you can actually become that other force. Maybe that's why I don't need to play evil people (in movies), on stage you can cross that line and then come back. "

James Kaplan of the US Weekly that he opened up to possession when he was on stage: "yes! Literally, it's like a possession. All of a sudden you're in it, and while you're directly playing in front of an audience, you receive this energy that's starting to flow into you... But there's also something else, it's possession, at one time you would have been burned for that. But something gives you power in there. I mean, you're all there... It's Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde, you can actually become that other force. Maybe that's why I don't need to play evil people (in movies), on stage you can cross that line and then come back. "

In the same article, James Kaplan added: "With a gift for imitation and improvisation that borders on demonic possession, Williams could even approach the art of his idol Jonathan Winters, a man whose genius once or twice led him to cross a line leading him to madness."

Robin Williams was found suicidal in 2014.

- Leonardo DiCaprio :

Total Eclipse director Agnieszka Holland said of actor Leonardo DiCaprio:

"Leo is like a medium. He opens his body and mind to receive messages concerning the life of another person[572].

Leonardo DiCaprio's father will say about his son: "I think Rimbaud was maybe a medium, maybe he was visited by aliens, and I think Leo also has this ability!"

In her book ''Leonardo DI Caprio: The Modern Day Romeo'', Grace Catalano says: ''With Leo, you can see about thirty people emerge from him in a single day.''

- Marion Cotillard :

In 2014, actress Marion Cotillard stated that she felt possessed by the ghost of Édith Piaf. In an interview with the British daily The Guardian, the French actress said she was so involved in her role as Édith Piaf that she heard the singer's voice and felt pursued by her ghost for eight months. She said she tried everything to get rid of it. ''I tried the exorcism with salt and fire. I also travelled to Bora Bora to escape him. I went to Machu Picchu in Peru, I participated in shamanic ceremonies to clean myself. Finally, I realized why I couldn't let her go. She was abandoned by her mother. His greatest fear was to be alone[573].

> Music:

To introduce this part, let's take the example of the composer Giuseppe Tartini, an Italian violinist of the Baroque period who wrote more than 400 works. His most famous piece is entitled ''Devil's Trill Sonata'' (Devil's Trill Sonata). The story behind this musical creation begins in a dream... Tartini is said to have told the French astronomer Jérôme Lalande that the devil had appeared to him in a dream and asked him to be his servant. In his dream, at the end of the lesson, Tartini would have given the devil his violin to test his skill, the devil then began to play with such virtuosity that Tartini had his breath cut off. When the composer woke up, he immediately took a pencil and paper to write down the devil's sonata, desperately trying to recover what he had heard in his dream. Although his composition was ultimately very successful and adored by the public, Tartini lamented that it was still far from what he had heard in his dream. What he had written was, in his own words, "so inferior to what I have heard, that if I could subsist by other means, I would have broken my violin and abandoned music forever[574]."

Cyril Scott, the "father of modern British music" was during his lifetime a prominent composer, poet and writer. He also studied theosophy and was interested in how to use music in the occult. Two of his books "The Influence of Music on History" and "Morals and Music: Its Secret Influence Throughout the Ages" were received through the channeling of one of his theosophical spiritual guides. In the second book, Scott says that as a result of his contacts with this spirit, he took a particular interest in the evolution of Western music. Scott was convinced that the great initiates (of the spirit world) have vast and important plans for the musical future. What is this plan? It consists in using music as an occult means by which modified states of consciousness, certain psychic abilities as well as close contact with the spirit world can develop. Scott explains that "The music of the future must be used to bring people into close contact with the Devas (spirits), so they will be able to receive the beneficial influence of these beings by attending concerts during which an appropriate type of sound has served as an invocation (...) A scientifically calculated music can achieve two objectives: that of invoking the Devas but also of stimulating the psychic faculties of the listener who will then open up to the influence of these spirits."

Cyril Scott concludes his book by quoting the words of his spiritual guide: "Today, as we enter this new era, we seek, mainly through inspired music, to initiate the spirit of unification and fraternity, and thus accelerate the vibration of thisplanet."[575] We bathe here in full new age ...

- Elvis Presley :

In one of Elvis' biographies entitled "If I Can Dream: Elvis' Own Story", Larry Geller writes that the famous singer himself admitted that he was receiving help from the spirit world. According to Geller, who was Elvis Presley's spiritual advisor always carried books with him when he traveled. Among his favorite works were "Isis unveiled" by the theosophist Helena Blavatsky, "Autobiography of a Yogi" by Paramahansa Yogananda, "The Secret Teaching of All Ages" by the Freemason Manly P. Hall, "Esoteric Healing" by Alice Bailey, "Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ" by Levi H. Dowling as well as the six volumes of "Life and Teachings of the Masters of the Far East" by Baird T. Spalding. Elvis Presley was therefore a "new-age" of the first hour, a big fan of the theosophist Blavatsky who published at one time the magazine Lucifer. He loved Blavatsky's book ''The Way of Silence'' so much that sometimes he even read pieces of it on stage and he also drew inspiration from it to name his own gospel group ''Voice[576]''.

Journalist Steve Dunleavy reported some statements made by Elvis' bodyguard, Red West: "Elvis Presley was riding on his microphone in a very suggestive position. he trembled in compulsive movements as if he were possessed by the spirit of an alien.' For Red West, Elvis was possessed: ''He had a kind of special power, he had psychic powers, Elvis proved it to me many times[577]''

His biographer Larry Geller also said: "Elvis believes that he works under the aegis of the masters... and that they help him (...) In Elvis' mind, his life is divinely directed by the masters and enlightened beings, ascended entities that lived from time immemorial. He truly believed that he had been chosen to be a modern Christ.'

Elvis himself admitted: "I've always felt an invisible hand behind me. I hear this same voice thinking that it is that of my (deceased) brother. That is what I think. I hear this guidance that runs my whole life. That's why I'm here and I'm doing this. It's not by chance.'' (...) Elvis stated that "his mission" was to use his "name and influence" to introduce people to the "spiritual world" by which he was used. He said that this "Voice" used it as a "channel" to reach millions of people through the "universal language of music" (...) One day in the future, we will see how God's ministry will react when it sees the "old age" that begins to collapse. I look forward to seeing this New Age[578]...''

According to Gary Herman, the author of ''Rock and Roll Babylon'' (2002), Elvis himself ''acknowledged that there was an evil part to his success.''

- Little Richard :

This famous American singer, pioneer of Rock'n Roll, said: "Rock n'

Roll does not glorify God. You cannot drink from the source of God and the source of the devil at the same time. I am one of the pioneers of this music, one of its builders. I know what it is made of because I built it[579].

Richard also testified: "I was directed and commanded by another power. The power of darkness... A power that many think does not exist. The power of the devil, Satan (...) My real opinion about Rock n' Roll, and I've talked about it a lot in recent years, is this: I think this kind of music is demonic. Many rhythms in today's music come from voodoo, voodoo drums. If you study music and its rhythms, as I did, you will see that it is a reality. I think this style of music takes people away from Christ. It is contagious[580]."

- Jimi Hendrix :

"I can explain things much more easily through music. You hypnotize people in this way... and when you have people at the weakest point, you can preach in their subconscious what you want.' - LIFE, October 1969

"The lord knows it, I am a voodoo child." Jimi Hendrix - Voodoo Chile, 1968

Jimi Hendrix's interest in spiritualism produced the song 'Voodoo Chile'. Kwasi Dzidzornu aka Rocky Dijon, a conga player of Ghanaian origin and whose father was a voodoo priest, who often played alongside Hendrix, said: "One of the first things I asked Jimi was where he got the voodoo rhythm from... Many of the rhythms that Jimi played on the guitar were very often the same rhythms that my father played during voodoo ceremonies. The way Jimi danced to the rhythm of what he played also reminded me of the ceremonial dances on the rhythms my father played for Oxun, the god of thunder and lightning. This ceremony is called "Voodooshi'1581].."

For Hendrix, "Things such as witchcraft and imagination, which are a form of exploration, have been banished by society and called evil. This is because people are afraid to discover the full powers of their minds[582].

Hendrix producer Alan Douglas will say, "One of the greatest things about Jimi was what he believed in... He believed that he was possessed by a spirit, and I believe that too. We had to deal with that all the time (...) he really believed it and he was constantly struggling."

His mistress Fayne Pridgeon said of Hendrix: "He used to repeat that a devil or something like that was in him, you know he didn't know what made him act as he did and what made him say what he said, the songs, etc., it was all just coming out of him (...) He repeated, "I don't know what's going on with me. I really don't understand it." You know he used to grab his hair or stand in front of the mirror and scream. Oh my god! it was so sad when he was screaming... He may have been the first man or maybe the only one I saw crying, it broke my heart when he cried like this... It seemed to me that he was very tormented, totally torn and he was really obsessed with something very bad. He sometimes asked me, "As you are from Georgia, you must surely know someone who exorcises demons[583]."

- The Beatles:

John Lennon said, "When real music comes to me, there's nothing to do because I'm like a channel. This is given to me and I transcribe it (...) I feel like an empty temple fills many spirits, each passing through me, each inhabiting me for a little while and then leaving and being replaced by another[584].

Lennon's wife, Yoko Ono also confided: "They were mediums, they were not aware of everything they said, but it passed through them[585].

Here's how Paul McCartney describes how he received one of his most famous songs: "The music of "Yesterday" came to me in a dream. The melody was complete. You have to believe in magic. I myself cannot even read or write music[586].

John Lennon will say something very similar: "It's incredible, this melody (editor's note: the song "In My Life") arrived in my head during a dream. That is why I do not pretend to know anything. I think music is very mystical[587].

The band's drummer, Ringo Starr, said of the song "Rain": "I felt like it was someone else playing."

The Beatles' press secretary, Derek Taylor, said in an interview with the Saturday Evening Post: "It's amazing, absolutely amazing. These are these four boys from Liverpool, they are tough, they are blasphemous, they are vulgar, but they have conquered the world. It is as if they had founded a new religion. They are completely anti-Christ. I mean I am too, but they are so shocked that they even come to shock me, which is not an easy thing[588].

The San Francisco Chronicle of April 13, 1966 published this statement by John Lennon: "Christianity is destined to disappear, it will decrease until it vanishes. I do not want to discuss that. I am right and the future will prove it. We are more popular than Jesus Christ now. I don't know which of the two will disappear first, Rock'N'Roll or Christianity.''

- David Bowie :

Bowie, who was a great admirer of the Satanist Aleister Crowley, told Rolling Stone magazine in 1976: "Rock has always been the music of the Devil (...) I believe that rock'n roll is dangerous (...) I feel that we are only proclaiming something darker than ourselves.'

In his song "Quicksand", he sings: "I am close to the Golden Dawn (editor's note: secret society), dressed in the outfit of Crowley (...) I am not a prophet or a stone age man, just a mortal with superman potential."'

In the biography of Angie Bowie (his ex-wife), it is reported that in 1976, he stated: "My main interest is Kabbalah and Crowley. This dark and rather scary world on the ugly side of the brain.''

In 1983, in an interview with Musician magazine, David Bowie said: "I had this more than passing interest in Egyptology, mysticism and Kabbalah. At the time it seemed perfectly obvious that it was an answer to life. My whole life was transformed into this bizarre nihilistic fantasy world of impending catastrophe, mythological characters and future totalitarianism."

- Michael Jackson :

Global pop culture icon Michael Jackson said: "I have a secret room, hidden by a wall and filled with mirrors. That's where I talk to Lee... this is where I hear his voice and feel his presence by my side. He is like my guardian angel. He even gave me permission to record his favorite song "I'll be seeing you[589]".

Michael Jackson was nicknamed "Bambi" or "Peter Pan" because of the fact that he did not want to grow up, locking himself in a "magical" world. An imaginary country illustrated in particular in the development of its neverland ranch into a real amusement park. This man was in great pain, probably due to a very traumatic childhood.

Here is another of his very explicit statements about the phenomenon of possession: "When I go on stage, there is like a sudden magic coming from nowhere that takes hold of me, and when the mind seizes you, you lose control ofyourself! 590]."

In a television interview, Oprah Winfrey asked him about his mania for putting his hand on his crotch when he was dancing, jackson replied: "It's a subliminal phenomenon. It's the music that drives me to do this, it's not premeditated, it happens spontaneously. I become the slave of rhythm[591].

Jackson also said, "Many times when I was dancing, I felt touched by something sacred. In those moments, I feel my mind fly away and I become one with the whole[592].

Just like the Beatles, Michael Jackson's mediumship also went through dreams: "I come out of sleep and I say to myself: Wow!, transcribed that on paper. All this is strange, you hear words and everything is there before your eyes. I feel that somewhere, in a certain place, everything has already been done and I'm just a messenger who transmits it to the world." - Rolling Stone, February 1983.

- Jim Morrison :

The co-founder and keyboardist of the famous band The Doors, Ray Manzarek, said: "Jim was authentic... He was not a "showman". He didn't do entertainment, he was a shaman. He was a possessed man."

"In Siberia, when the shaman is ready to enter a trance, all the villagers are with him and play any instrument to help him enter a trance. It's the same with the Doors when we play in concert. I think it's our condition with drugs that makes us go into a trance faster. It's as if Jim is an electric shaman and we are the band that accompanies this electric shaman, hammering the tempo behind him. Sometimes we don't want to put ourselves in these states, but the music hammers again and again, and little by little it ends up taking over[593].

In a poem, Jim Morrison writes that he met the spirit of music after an intense discharge of energy to see an appearance of the devil on a canal in Venice... I saw Satan or Satyr... A carnal shadow of my secret spirit[594].

Morrison admitted that he drank to silence the constant voices of the demons.

The Doors' friend and photographer, Franck Lisciandro said: "Jim drinks to calm the incessant voices of demons, ghosts and other spirits who are calling for their release. He drinks because there are demons and screaming voices in his head and he has found a way to repress them with alcohol[595].

- Carlos Santana :

Santana said that he channeled a spirit to create his music, in an article in Rolling Stone magazine published in March 2000, we can read: "Metatron is an angel. Santana has been in regular contact with him since 1994. Carlos sits there facing the wall, candles lit, a yellow notepad next to him, so ready for the communications that will come (...) It's a bit like receiving faxes (...) You meditate with candles and incense and you sing... and all of a sudden you hear this voice saying, "Write this..." (...) Metatron wants something from me, and I know exactly what it is. People who listen to music are connected to a higher level of themselves. That's why I have a lot of fun with this album, because it's a personal invitation on my part for people: remember your divinity (...) The energy of angels and demons is the same energy, it depends on how you use it. It is a fuel (...) There's an invisible ra,dio station that Jimi Hendrix and Coltrane were capturing, and when you've picked it up, you're channeling that music. "

Santana also said: "Sometimes I do guitar stuff that I didn't even know how to do it. In reality, I don't know how to do it, this stuff passes through me. It's one of the highest states anyone can reach."

- John Mc Laughlin :

John Mc Laughlin of the Mahavishnu Orchestra testified: "One night we were playing, and suddenly the spirit came into me, and I played... but it was no longer me who played." - Circus, April 1972

"When I let the mind possess me, it's an intense pleasure. My role as a musician is to make everyone aware of their own divinity." - Newsweek, March 1972

- The Rolling Stones:

Keith Richards of the Rolling Stones not only said: "We receive our songs by inspiration as at a session (editor's note: of spiritualism)", but he told the Los Angeles Times that his song "Demon" was self-biographical and that he himself was possessed by four demons. In the song "Demon" Richards sings: "It's like a mass. Demon in me, demon in me. It lives in me, the demon in me."

- Led Zeppelin :

The famous Jimmy Page, who was a fervent follower of the Satanist Aleister Crowley, believed to be used as a vehicle by demonic spirits. Other members of the Led Zeppelin group acknowledged that they underwent "automatic writing": "He (editor's note: Robert Plant) often said that he could feel his pen pushed by a higher authority[596].

Robert Plant and Jimmy Page both claim that they don't know who wrote their cult/occult song "Stairway to Heaven". Robert Plant said: "Pagey wrote the chords and he played them for me. So I was holding this sheet of paper with a pencil, and for some reason, I was in a very bad mood... Then all of a sudden my hand started writing words... I then sat looking at these words and almost fell out of my seat[597]. "

- Brian Wilson :

The composer of the Beach Boys' greatest hits once said, "We do witchcraft, we try to make music-witchcraft[598]."

Wilson openly acknowledged that he, too, was tormented by voices in his head. Nick Kent wrote of him: "These voices in his head, they say nothing distinct, it is a dark and ghostly whisper in the deep cavities of his brain[599].

Brian Wilson was a friend of the Satanist criminal Charles Manson, he will even say about him: "The sorcerer is Charley Manson, who is a friend of mine. He thinks he is God and the Devil. He sings, plays and writes poems and may one day be an artist for Brother Records[600].

Warner Brothers Records president Larry Waronker said he had met at least five different personalities who lived in Brian Wilson's body: "There are a lot of people here, I met five different personalities." - Rolling Stone, August 1988

- Fleetwood Mac :

Fleetwood Mac singer Stevie Nicks, who was dubbed "the blonde priestess of the occult" by Rolling Stone magazine, once said: "It's amazing, sometimes when we're on stage, I feel like a presence is moving the pawns... We don't have control over it and it's something magical.'' - Circus, April 1971

- Kurt Cobain :

In his book entitled "Kurt Cobain", Christopher Sandford wrote: "Kurt had many inner demons, many weakness and physical problems (...) He was a shy and at the same time aggressive personality, he fought against the demons that harassed and tormented him.'' In April 1994, Kurt Cobain, a heroin addict, committed suicide with a bullet in the head by leaving a farewell letter addressed to Boddah, his imaginary friend from childhood... Kurt Cobain is referred to as part of the sad "Club of the 27" (Forever 27 Club), designating famous musicians who died at the age of 27, such as Brian Jones, Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin and Jim Morrison.

- Tori Amos :

Singer Tori Amos said: "I think music comes from other dimensions, it would be arrogant to think that you can create music just by yourself, there is a co-creation going on. I do not know with whom, but it is a fact that we all have access to this tap (...) I feel this as something very nice that they come and use my body to convey what they want. It is an energy, a force which comes and comes to visit me[601].

Tori Amos told SPIN magazine in 1996: "I want to marry Lucifer (...) I do not consider Lucifer as a force of evil (...) I feel his presence and his music. I feel like he's coming in and sitting on my piano.'' She even wrote a song called "Father Lucifer" that begins with these words: "Father Lucifer, you've never seemed so sane...".

- D'Angelo In June 2012, singer D'Angelo told GQ magazine: "You know what they say about Lucifer, before he was chased away? Each angel has his specialty that is praised. They say that he can play all the instruments with just one finger and that then the music is just great. He was of exceptional beauty, Lucifer, the angel that he was. But then he went down to hell. Lucifer was formidable. There are forces that are active and I don't think many of those people who make music today are aware of these things. It's deep, I felt it, I felt external forces that influenced me. It is a very powerful medium tool in which we are involved. I learned at a very young age that what we sang in the choirs was just as important as the work of the preacher. Singing is a ministry in itself. The stage is our pulpit, we can use all this energy as well as music, lights, colors and sound. But you have to be careful...''

In 2014, during the Red Bull Music Academy Festival in New York, D'Angelo gave an interview to Nelson Georges in which he says that it is "the spirit" that is infused in him in the artistic process. The singer says that he surrenders himself to a higher force and becomes a medium by which this "spirit" works. It remains to be seen what nature this spirit is...

- Nicki Minaj :

''When I write rap, my brain doesn't think, it doesn't think at all. You just have to let it go without thinking and it happens like this'' ... This statement can indeed give rise to smiles coming from the bimbo

Nicki Minaj...

In 2010, in the documentary "My Time Now" broadcast on MTV, Nicki Minaj said during a stage outing following a concert, when asked how she is doing: "I don't even know! I was like in a trance all the time!''

- Beyoncé :

In 2004, Rolling Stone magazine published an article entitled: "Beyonce: A possessed woman - Beyonce is held by a spirit so powerful that it even has a name: Sasha!". As we have previously seen in this chapter, it is about her alter personality named Sacha Fierce living inside her.

Knowles also talks about her trance states when she is on stage, in an interview given to Marie Claire magazine in 2008, she described what seems to be a dissociative trance during concerts: "I have experiences outside the body. If I injure my leg or fall, I don't feel anything. I'm in a special state, I don't even pay attention to my body or my face anymore.''

In 2013, Knowles told Amy Wallace of GQ magazine: "It's like a blackout(editor's note: amnesia). When I'm on stage, I don't know what's going on: I'm somewhere else.'' The article concludes with a quote from the star: "I am much more powerful than what my mind can assimilate or even understand."

In a 2010 interview on BET TELEVISION, Knowles said: "Sasha is my alter-ego. When people meet me and talk to me, they usually expect to see Sacha, but I'm actually much more reserved than her, it has nothing to do with it. In the dressing rooms, I'm no longer there because it's Sacha who emerges, she can do some things that I would normally be embarrassed to do, even if I try to behave in this way, it doesn't work, by myself it doesn't work. I also remember that just before I went on stage, I raised my hands to heaven and it's like something was coming into me and that's when I knew I was going to win a BET Award.''

- To$ha :

Ke$ha stated that she had several supernatural experiences that influenced her album entitled "Warrior". During an interview with Ryan Seacrest, she revealed that she had "made love with a ghost" (incubated: a male demon who is supposed to take shape to sexually abuse a sleeping woman) by specifying that this sexual relationship had inspired her latest single "Supernatural": "It's a song about supernatural experiences... but erotic. I've had a few experiences with the supernatural. I don't know his name, he was a ghost! I am very open on the subject.''.

- Lady Gaga :

Lady Gaga learned from her mother that strange dreams and other nightmares may have been secret rituals... Gaga revealed that her nightmares inspired her music, music videos and performances. In 2010, she told Rolling Stone magazine about a frightening dream that she repeatedly makes: "This ghost takes me into a room, and there is a blonde girl whose arms and legs are spread by ropes... I never see her being cut out, but I watch her moan. Then the ghost says to me, "If you want me to stop hurting him and if you want your family to be safe and sound, you have to cut off your wrist." I think it must have a sick cutting tool. And there's this honey... He wants me to mix this honey in a cream and then spread it on the wound and bandage. When I come out of this dream, I open my eyes and there is none of that around me... And my mother who said to me then: "Wouldn't this be an Illuminati ritual?"

Gaga said she turned to her friend and spiritual advisor, the famous Deepak Chopra, to help her interpret a dream in which she eats a human heart.

- It's terrifying! The devil is trying to take me. Deepak, I'm a nice girl!

- You are very creative my Gaga. You should stage this in a video clip.

- I guess in his own way, he teaches me to respect and honor my madness. It is part of who I am (...) I have morbid dreams but I put them on show. A lot of my work is an exorcism for the fans, but for me too[602].

The young singer Gaga explained to Vanity Fair magazine that she thinks the spirit of her deceased aunt is inside her. For her, the spirit of her aunt Joanne was "transferred" into her mother's womb, she says: "When I was born, it's almost as if I continued her work ina.chevé. She was a poet and had a pure heart, she was a beautiful person. She died a virgin (...) And one of my guides told me that he could feel that I had two hearts in my chest, and that's what I think *also*603]."

In 2011, Gaga also told Bazaar magazine that it was not she who wrote her song "Born This Way", but that it was the now-deceased British fashion designer Alexander McQueen who transmitted the lyrics to her from the world of the dead. Indeed, Lady Gaga and McQueen, who committed suicide in 2010, were close friends: "Everything is planned, just after her death I wrote "Born This Way". I think he's in heaven pulling the strings of fashion, doing the puppeteer and planning it all." ... Declares the Gaga...

A 2010 Herald Sun article reported that Lady Gaga believed she was haunted by a ghost named "Ryan" and that he followed her all over the world on her tours. She said that this constant presence terrified her. A member of her team reported to the Daily Star newspaper: "She has been telling us for months that there is a ghost called 'Ryan" who travels the world with her (...) He hasn't done anything particularly violent or scary, but she freaks out at his presence. She is very spiritual and she is a person in harmony with the spiritual world, but all this goes a little too far, even for her. "

Gaga even reportedly contacted a psychic and arranged a session to communicate with the entity and tell them to leave. Lady Gaga seems obsessed with the spirit world, at the age of 24 she had already spent tens of thousands of dollars on "ghost hunters", especially in a device measuring electromagnetic fields to detect spirits[604]...

- To conclude:

We see overwhelmingly that many of the world's celebrities are veritable emotional, psychological and spiritual wrecks, leading or having led a life of chaotic, morbid and destructive debauchery. Many of the world's biggest stars end up dying before they are old and in similar circumstances (the official nature of the death being sometimes to be taken in the conditional in this type of case), here are some examples:

- Whitney Houston : “overdose”
- Heath Ledger : “overdose”
- Phillip Seymour Hoffman : “overdose”
- Jim Morrison : “overdose”
- David Carradine: ''asphyxiation''
- Michael Jackson : “overdose”
- Robin Williams : “asphyxie”
- Cory Monteith : “overdose”
- Kurt Cobain: ''bullet in the head''
- Jimi Hendrix : “overdose”
- Janis Joplin : “overdose”
- Marilyn Monroe : “overdose”
- Anna Nicole Smtih : “overdose”
- Amy Winehouse : ''overdose''
- Brittany Murphy : “overdose”
- etc...

Eating disorders, obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD), bipolar and borderline disorders, histrionic (narcissistic) personality disorders, depressions and dissociative identity disorders make up the palette of sad psychological states of celebrities in the entertainment industry. What do they all have in common to suffer so much? What is the source of this evilbeing?

The French psychotherapist and sexologist Patrick Dupuis perhaps enlightens us on this question with what he calls the "Initial Violence", that is to say the source that generates perversity, violence and self-destruction: "Without wind, no storm, without childhood traumas, no depression, no phobias, no perversions. No natural impulse system alone is capable of generating violence without being subjected to violent coercion (abuse, forcing, control, pressure) from around the environment... Homo sapiens has no instinct for destruction or impulse for death, any more than any animal living on earth. It has only a building instinct that is reversible in its opposite under the effect of a traumatic shock. The psychic device that I call instinct of construction (of oneself and of the world) is reversible in its opposite (in instinct of destruction) under the effect of serious environmental disturbances that are called childhood traumas. The term perversion describes well this process of inversion, which is a dynamic process (and not a natural property of perversity), but most of the time we do not link violent or perverse behavior to the violence that generated it, and this for lack of a valid theorization of the process, and also because of the law of silence that still weighs on this type of hiddenviolence! 605]."

This pervasive chaos and unhappiness in the entertainment industry is bound to be rooted in a traumatic past but also by a close relationship with the occult and the spirit world.

Are childhood traumas the price to pay for access to creative genius, to certain psychic powers, to the ability to open up easily to the spirit world through dissociation and possession, to ultimately attain glory? A child who has been consecrated to Satan since birth, having undergone repetitive traumatic ritual abuse, becomes in spite of himself closely linked to the demons... He will navigate between the world of humans and the world of spirits in dissociative states, altered states of consciousness caused by drugs, alcohol, music, but also violence on himself or on others.

His personality splitting and MK programming will only strengthen his ability to channel inspiration from an "Beyond" in order to serve here on earth as a relay medium, thus advancing the agenda for the establishment of the Luciferian reign. A human who has been consecrated to Lucifer/Satan since birth, who is dissociated and divided by traumas, is wide open to demonic possession (which does not necessarily involve walking on the ceiling and spitting nails), he will act as a human slave to transmit Luciferian culture on this earth via the best tool: the industry of the entertainment... This without escaping the inner chaos, self-destruction and final sacrifice of the slave. The Prince of this world needs agents/slaves on the ground to effectively influence humanity as a whole, to transmit the doctrine - Luciferian subculture - and for this the entertainment industry is the propaganda platform par excellence.

c/ The pact with the devil?

Several celebrities have publicly stated that they have literally sold their souls to the devil for glory and fortune... All this can obviously give rise to a smile because the secular world is today totally hermetic to these ideas.

Joseph Niezgoda's book "The Lennon Prophecy, A New Examination of the Death Clues of the Beatles" has put together a puzzle to demonstrate that John Lennon made a pact with Satan in exchange for fame and fortune. Joseph Niezgoda, a fan of the Beatles of the first generation, who read all the books published on the famous rock band, detected a love of music, but also a certain love for Satan.

Niezgoda introduces his book with Lennon's famous quote to his friend Tony Sheridan in the mid-60s: "I sold my soul to the devil." Then he describes how this group of musicians composed of ordinary young English people ended up achieving world fame...

Niezgoda cites the date of 27 December 1960 as the beginning of the pact. That night, the Beatles were playing at the Town Hall Ball Room in Litherland, England. At that time, Lennon was just a twenty-year-old rock singer in a mediocre band comparable to many other bands. But that night, the Beatles provoked an incredible reaction from the audience, a reaction completely different from other times: while they were playing, the crowd jumped unexpectedly on the stage and all the girls began to become hysterical. This has never happened before, but it is a behaviour that will become systematic afterwards.

This is how, overnight, Beatlemania was born. The four young musicians and singers remembered that night as the turning point of their careers. Had the pact been concluded during the winter solstice a few days earlier? Thus preparing the crowd for this totally exaggerated reaction of December 27th? A date chosen as "the anniversary of Beatlemania".

Niezgoda also notes that this concert marks the beginning of John Lennon's openly anti-Christian behavior. Several biographies of Lennon record many desecrations carried out publicly, with no apparent purpose, except to blaspheme Jesus Christ.

Twenty years later, on december nine, 1980, Mark David Chapman fired five shots with a revolver at John Lennon in front of the famous Dakota building in New York, where he and his wife Yoko Ono had an apartment (on the same floor where Roman Polanski's occult film Rosemary's Baby was shot). Lennon died shortly after this attack. Mark Chapman later stated that he had been instructed to kill Lennon by a "voice in his head" that insisted, "Do it, do it, do it...". Five years later, in prison, Chapman asked to receive an exorcism from a priest, and then declared that he had been delivered from five or six demons.

Much of Niezgoda's book investigates the "clues" left by the Beatles themselves on album covers and in their music. Clues that lead to occultism. To support his thesis, Niezgoda documented witchcraft, mysticism, numerology, anagrams, etc. He claims that clues to Lennon's death are revealed in the album covers of Rubber Soul, Yesterday and Today, A Collection of Beatles Oldies, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, Yellow Submarine, Magical Mystery Tour, as well as in Lennon's solo albums such as Imagine and Walls and Bridges.

The cover of the Beatles ' 1966 album "Yesterday and Today", reveals nothing about John Lennon's death, but it explicitly shows that the band was involved in Satanism. This cover, dubbed "The Butcher's Blanket", shows the Beatles posing in a white butcher's blouse with large pieces of raw meat on their lap, as well as a beheaded baby mannequin... This very gloomy photo clearly refers to the sacrifices of children during satanic rituals. This is not an avant-garde artistic work or a bad farce, as some Beatles fans claim.

Niezgoda also reports some song lyrics that reveal the mysterious prediction of John Lennon's death, as well as his connection with Satan. His songs were often transmitted to him in his dreams, especially those that were the most successful. In one of his last songs, ''Help me to help myself'', it seems that he realized that his time had come. The song begins with these lyrics: "Well, I tried so hard to stay alive, but the angel of destruction continues to harass me from everywhere. But I know in my heart that we never really left...''. At the end of the song, Lennon can be heard whispering, "I see, I see. That's how you're going to do it, ok.'' As Niezgoda points out, there is nothing in his book that is not already in the public domain. All he did was to connect the elements together in order to reveal the question of occultism and the high probability that the Beatles received supernatural help in their ascent to glory[606].

In December 2004, the famous Bob Dylan gave an interview to Ed Bradley for the television show 60 Minutes (CBS), here are some excerpts: - Bradley: Why continue? Why are you still here?

- Dylan: It's a matter of destiny, I made a good deal with her. a long time ago and. I'm coming to the end.

- Bradley: What is this?

- Dylan: To get to where I am now.

- Bradley: Could I ask you who did you do this ''good deal'' with?

- Dylan: (laughs) With. You know, commander-in-chief.

- Bradley:... of this land?

- Dylan: Of this land, and of the world that we can't see.

Here, when Bob Dylan talks about the commander-in-chief, he is referring to Lucifer commander-in-chief of the fallen angels (demons), the Prince of this world. An uplifting interview in which he also states:

- Bradley: Do you ever look back on your productions and to tell you: "Wow! It surprises me!"

- Dylan: I used to do it but I don't do it anymore. I don't know how I came to write these songs.
- Bradley: What do you mean by that?
- Dylan: All those early songs were written like magic... "Darkness at the break of noon, shadows even the silver spoon, a handmade blade, the child's balloon"' (editor's note: lyrics introducing Dylan's famous song "It's All Right, Ma") Well try to sit down and write something like that, there's a magic in there... and this is not the type of magic à la Siegfried and Roy (editor's note: two famous magician artists- illusionists), you see? It's another type of penetrating magic. And you know, I did it, I did it for a while.

Famous rapper Kanye West said on stage: "I sold my soul to the devil, I know it's a rotten deal, but it comes with some surprises like in a happy meal.

Katy Perry ironically said in an interview: "I wanted to be the "Amy Grant" of music. But it didn't work, so... I sold my soul to the devil." .... She now has the status of a world-renowned star, including a clip in particular that refers directly to MK programming, we will come back to this later.

recognized, including a clip in particular that refers directly to mk programming, we will come back to it later.

Roger Morneau, the author of "A Trip Into the Supernatural" has been associated for several years with a Canadian sect involved in spiritualism and the worship of demons. In a 1995 video interview with Dan & Karen Houghton of the Hart Research Center, Morneau reported the words of a famous jazz musician with whom he was having dinner at a party:

"If I want power, I go straight to its source. How do you think I became so famous?" I said, "You must be lucky." He then declared: "There is no such thing as luck. Either there's a certain power working for you somewhere, or you don't advance in this world." Then we talked about the veneration of spirits (...) He told me that the so-called spirits of the dead are demons. ''They are fallen angels, beautiful beings (...) We revere spirits. We revere Lucifer and all his angels. They are all as beautiful as when they were driven out of Heaven (...) So we are in a war, good against evil. We are the bad guys, but we are not that bad. I see this case as the forces of good and evil, one person believes in God, the other believes in Lucifer, it's like politics."'

Former porn star Shelley Lubben testified on 700 Club (Out of Pornography and Into the Light - CBN): "As soon as the camera started shooting, it was as if Satan was coming to me... I could almost see the devil saying to me, "You see Shelley, everybody's going to love you now, I'm going to make you famous." The producer was surprised: "Where did you find this girl?" I then immediately went from being an amateur to being a professional filming adult with porn stars. It was destroying me, I had lost my femininity, I lost my whole personality in porn.''

Here's what she reports about her first day of filming in 1992: "As soon as I entered, I had the impression that a dark satanic presence was invading me. It was terrifying, dark, it had nothing to do with prostitution. I knew I was in Satan's territory. It was like Satan's last frontier. I was like, ''Oh my God, I can't believe I'm going to do it.'' Shelley went all the way and his career took off, fame and money quickly became an obsession

4 - Marilyn Monroe: Hollywood's first slave under mental control

Marilyn Monroe is perhaps the most iconic figure in American culture and the most easily identifiable sex symbol of all time. However, behind Marilyn's photogenic smile there was a fragile person who was exploited and subjected to mind control by powerful "masters".

Marilyn Monroe is the ultimate sex symbol, embodying everything Hollywood stands for: glamorous and flashy. Her iconic sensual blonde character has revolutionized the film industry forever, and even today, this icon greatly influences popular culture.

While Marilyn represents all that is glamorous in Hollywood, the disturbing story of her private life also represents the entire dark side of Hollywood... Marilyn was effectively manipulated by high-level "mind doctors" who controlled every aspect of her life and actually stole her soul. His death, at the early age of 36, was one of the first "mysterious death of a celebrity" in popular culture. While many facts point to murder, his death is still classified as "probable suicide".

While many biographers explain that Marilyn's misfortunes originated solely from "psychological problems," the assemblage of the facts of her life combined with the knowledge of the dark side of Hollywood reveals something even darker: Marilyn Monroe was one of the first celebrities subjected to Monarch mind control. Through trauma and a psychological program, Marilyn gradually became a high-level puppet for the American elite, she even became the presidential model of JFK.

When Monroe's programming deteriorated and began to sink, some claim that he was "thrown out of the train of freedom," the term for slaves who are eliminated when they are no longer useful to their masters (and potentially dangerous because of the revelations they might make).

Marilyn, real name Norma Jeane, was declared a ward of the state at the age of 11. She never knew her father and her mother was psychologically very unstable. The little girl went to many foster families, orphanages and other homes. Placements during which she was subjected to ill-treatment but also sexual abuse. This unstable and traumatic youth has made her an ideal candidate for mind control, including Beta programming (sexual slavery). These children who no longer have a family are easy prey, they are at the mercy of unidentifiable adults and are therefore targets for the Network.

Norma Jeane began her career as a stripper in Los Angeles, it was there that she was put in touch with a certain Anton LaVey (who would later found the Church of Satan). According to Fritz Springmeier, LaVey was himself an MK programmer and the young Norma Jeane became one of his sex slaves, as did Jayne Mansfield (actress and singer). Mansfield and Monroe had a lot in common: they were both "luscious blondes", the model of women who are credited with the sexualization of Hollywood; both worked (playmates) for Playboy magazine; both had an "adventure" with the Satanist Anton LaVey; both had an "adventure" with Robert F. Kennedy and JFK (the adventure was actually to play the role of "presidential models"; both died in their thirtieth year.

It was when she joined the blue book modeling agency that Norma Jeane physically transformed herself to become the iconic Marilyn Monroe. She underwent cosmetic surgery, a change of hair color and finally a change of name... A radical transformation that allowed him to access many film roles. It was in 1956 that she officially and legally changed her name, from Norma Jeane to the future world icon: Marilyn Monroe. A strong symbolic act which in terms of mental control represents the suppression of his original personality, with the aim of allowing his alter personality to exist fully. From that point on, Marilyn was only what her controllers wanted her to be.

As her biographers reveal, Marilyn had little or no personal freedom. His masters isolated her in order to better control her and thus prevent people from outside helping her to become aware that she was being manipulated. The only people she was in contact with were her psychiatrists and teachers. The proof that these individuals were the only people in Marilyn's life is that they inherited almost all of her fortune. Monroe consulted psychiatrists almost daily, were they conditioning and programming sessions? One thing is certain, it is that his condition worsened as these sessions increased in frequency.

In 1955, while residing at the Waldford Astoria Hotel in New York, she wrote a poem entitled "The Surgeon Story". She evokes in this text a surgical procedure performed on her person, she describes being drugged and "open" (magic surgery?) by Lee Strasberg (her "mentor") and Margaret Hohenberg (her psychiatrist). This account is generally described as a mere memory of a nightmare reported by Marilyn, but some researchers argue that it is actually a description of a mind control session. She describes that the operation did not bother her, because she was prepared for it, was she in a state of dissociation and trance? She also mentions the fact that she saw "only white", which could allude to sensory isolation (a method used in the MK-Ultra). Once "open", the doctors found in her only a "fine sawdust, like the one coming out of a rag doll". Marilyn sees herself as an empty doll, something typical of an MK slave who has lost touch with her original personality. Here is this text entitled "The history of the surgeon":

Strasberg - she is the best and most competent of the surgeons to open me up, which I do not object to since Dr. H.m prepared for it - she gave me an anesthetic and it was she too who diagnosed my case and who agrees with what needs to be practiced - an operation - to bring me back to life and cure me of this terrible disease or anything (...) Once Dr. H.m an anesthetic to try to relieve me medically, Strasberg opens me - and after all in the room becomes WHITE, in fact I don't see anyone anymore, just white objects - they open me - Strasberg and the nana Hohenberg - and there is absolutely nothing in it - Strasberg is deeply disappointed but even more intellectually surprised that he could have made such a mistake. He thought he would find much more than he had ever hoped to find... and instead, there was absolutely nothing - devoid of any sensitive living human creature - the only thing that came out of it was very fine sawdust - as found inside the dolls with the effigy of Raggedy Ann (rag doll) - and sawdust spreads on the floor and table, Dr. H. is baffled because she suddenly understands that she is faced with a new scenario where the patient... exists from the extreme vacuum. Strasberg sees his dreams and hopes of an operating room fall by the wayside. Dr. H. must give up his dreams and hopes for lasting psychiatric treatment - Arthur is disappointed - Abandoned[607].

Marilyn Monroe reportedly officially had two pregnancies ending in miscarriages. While his biographers state that these are indeed miscarriages, other sources actually speak of induced deliveries. Lena Pepitone, who was Marilyn Monroe's maid, seamstress and confidante, wrote a book in which she reported the star's statement: "Don't take my baby. They took it from me... and I would never see him again." The book reveals that Marilyn had not had any miscarriages but that they took her baby from her, a common practice in MK-Ultra and Satanism.

At the height of his career, Monroe found himself connected with U.S. President John F. Kennedy. Some historians have described this relationship as a mere "adventure", but it probably served as a "presidential dummy" - a slave destined for the "good pleasure" of presidents and other notables.

Adam Gorightly, in his book ''An Interpretation of Kubrick's Eyes Wide Shut'' writes: ''These presidential mannequins would have been used by artists and politicians as sex toys: puppets under the control of the mind programmed to perform various perverse acts on the orders of their manipulative master. It is assumed that Marilyn Monroe was the first Monarch sex slave who rose to celebrity status.

The last months of Marylin Monroe's life were characterized by incoherent behavior and several "intimate" relationships with individuals in power. As a Beta slave, she was also sexually used by people in the industry. In June Dimaggio's book, "Marilyn, Joe & Me", the author describes how she was forced to be in the service of elderly men and that she had to completely dissociate herself from reality (an important aspect of MK programming) in order to perform repugnant acts: "Marilyn could not afford emotions when she had to sleep with wrinkled old people to survive in the profession. She had to protect herself by virtually "unplugging" herself from her emotions during those moments - as if she were playing a role in extricating herself from the horror of the situation. When these wealthy high-ranking tycoons possessed her body and soul, she could not live on her own. At that time, she told me, she was going home exhausted by photo shoots and powerful old "schnocks" were calling her, which gave her goosebumps. After some horrors during these sex sessions, she stayed in the shower for more than an hour. She wanted to wash herself of the terrible experience she had just endured."'

In 1962, Marilyn began filming "Something's Got to Give" but was so psychologically unstable that she was eventually fired and sued by 20th Century Fox who asked her for half a million dollars in compensation. In his book "Goddess: The Secret Lives of Marilyn Monroe", Anthony Summers reports that the film's producer, Henry Weinstein, stated that Marilyn's behavior during filming was horrifying: "Very few people live in terror. We all experience anxiety, sadness and heartache, but there it was a purely animal terror."

It was her psychiatrist Ralph Greenson who found her dead in his room on August 5, 1962. While his death was classified as a "probable suicide" by barbiturate poisoning, this still remains one of the most debated theories of all time, because there are really a large number of facts that lend credence to the thesis of murder. So much evidence has been destroyed that it is hard not to believe in a cover-up. Jack Clemmons, the first Los Angeles police officer to investigate the scene of his death, wrote a report stating that he clearly suspected murder. Three people were present in Marilyn Monroe's house at the time of her death: her governess Eunice Murray, her psychiatrist Dr. Ralph Greenson, and her general practitioner Dr. Hyman Engelberg. The investigation into Monroe's death revealed that Dr. Greenson called the police more than an hour after Dr. Engelberg pronounced him dead. The behaviour of the three people present at the scene was described as "inconsistent". This is very reminiscent of the circumstances of the death of Michael Jackson, whose life can be modeled on many points with that of Marilyn Monroe, especially on the fact that it was their entourage who managed their life from A to Z... like precious dolls of the entertainment industry (it's the same for Britney Spears and for many others...).

Marilyn Monroe quickly became an extraordinary global icon representing the sexy and glamorous side of Hollywood, but she also became, in the infamous world of mk-ultra, the symbol of Beta Programming. Today, more than ever, young stars raised in the entertainment industry, have followed in his footsteps (as if everything was planned for them). These young women, manipulated by "coaches", are led towards notoriety and fortune. Women who were usually subjected to mental control from an early age, later leading to psychotic seizures and sometimes even a mysterious early death. Systematically, these celebrities are staged at some point in their careers to embody the image of Marilyn Monroe, as if it were a sickly need of those who pull the strings to make a point of symbolically revealing MK slavery. Videos or photos featuring big stars who embody the mythical image of Marilyn Monroe are plethora. There are too many for it to be a coincidence, and in some cases the resemblance is not only aesthetic, as the tragic destinies are so similar[608]...

5 - Candy Jones: ''Manchu Candidate''

The case of Candy Jones is one of the most documented cases when it comes to mind control in the fashion world. How did a famous American model come to suffer the CIA's experiments on mind control? In 2001, journalist Colin Bennett wrote an article for Fortean Times magazine[609] exposing this whole affair:

> For everyone she was known as the most famous American model of the 40s. But she led a secret life in the manner of a Manchurian Candidate agent working for the secret services during the Cold War. Colin Bennett analyzed this case of multiple personality and hypnotic mind control.

On December 31, 1972, in a luxurious New York apartment owned by lawyer friends, the famous 61-year-old radio presenter, Long John Nebel married Candy Jones, 47, an internationally renowned model. The guests of this happy event would certainly have a lot to tell.

John Nebel was the Arthur William ''Art'' Bell of the time, and his nightly radio show had an audience of several million listeners, but that night his head was not at Watergate or Vietnam... He had just married a woman whose face had made the cover of the country's eleven largest magazines in the space of a month, in 1943. During the Pacific offensive of World War II, photos of Candy Jones in polka dot swimsuit adorned the interiors of ships, tanks and trenches.

It was a very quick wedding organized following a love at first sight, so Nebel did not know his wife well. During the reception, he noticed for a short time that she had lost all her exuberance and natural charm. Her voice then became that of another woman and her usually fluid posture became rigid. The evening continued in a Chinese restaurant named ''Ho Ho'', this is where Nebel noticed this transformation again; it was as if she was uncomfortable with the Chinese décor, mirrors and candles. As she went to bed, Candy spoke again with that strange voice that Nebel had heard earlier in the evening. What was even more alarming was the fact that candy's strange personality had a completely different attitude towards him. "She" seemed cruel, mocking and cold. When Nebel asked her for an explanation about it, Candy was surprised; indeed, she had not noticed the emergence of another voice or personality. However, a few weeks after their marriage, she eventually confided to Nebel that she had once worked for the FBI for a while, mysteriously adding that she might have to leave the city again without giving any explanation. Nebel then wondered if there was a connection between Candy's other personality and these strange trips she says she made for the FBI.

Candy Jones, real name Jessica Wilcox, was born in 1925 in Atlantic City, New Jersey. She became a delightful young blonde woman of 1.93 meters. Her typical American "ice-queen" face, just like that of Grace Kelly, Jayne Mansfield or Marilyn Monroe, was at that time very fashionable. Although she grew up in a rather affluent environment, her father and mother,manic depressive (bipolar), abused her. For example, his father, who was separated from his mother, once crushed his fingers on a nutmeg grater. Her mother hit her legs to the point that Candy had to wear thick stockings to hide the marks of blows. She was not allowed to rub shoulders with other children and was often locked in a dark room by her mother. It is in this dark room that little Candy, panicked, has developed a series of imaginary characters to keep her company. In the darkness of her prison, she visualized these characters appearing in the few reflections of a large wall mirror. The name of one of her magical friends was Arlene, who would later play a crucial role in Candy's life. Unlike the other characters in this fantasy world, Arlene did not disappear when Candy became an adult. She grew and matured with her, as did a secondary personality. Arlene's personality was a kind of mirror inverted from that Candy. She had character traits of Candy's mother: she was tough, ruthless, sarcastic and cruel, with a squeaky little voice very different from Candy's.

It was this voice that Nebel first heard on her wedding day. When she was herself, Candy was the most loving, charming and sociable of women. But when she was Arlene, she could become dangerously vicious, she even tried one night to strangle her new husband in a military and professional way. Nebel quickly understood and concluded, not without reason, that the spirit of his new wife was very disturbed. Candy seemed to be terrorized by everything chinese, she also had a great fear of doctors, psychiatrists and dentists, as well as medicines in general. Medication was what Candy was most afraid of, every time she heard about them, Candy's "protector", Arlene, repeatedly stated that such things should never get into "her" body.

Nebel discovered that Candy's personality changes had a long history, and her research led her directly to the heart of an organization that many of her listeners had been talking to her about for years: the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) of the United States of America. Nebel then took a big risk, indeed, for many years he had been practicing hypnosis as an amateur and so he decided to put Candy in a light trance to ask him some questions and note the answers. Then begins one of the most amazing stories of our time told in Donald Bain's book: "The Control of Candy Jones".

In 1945, while touring U.S. military bases in the Philippines, Candy fell ill and was admitted to the Leyte Gulf Hospital. It was there that she met a certain Dr. Gilbert Jensen (This is a pseudonym chosen by Donald Bain for legal reasons. Bain said that Nebel had confided to him that he knew very well who this doctor was and that he had thought many times about killing him). This young doctor then prescribed vitamin injections, which probably saved his life, or at least saved his physical appearance. Jensen then left her card and told her that he hoped to stay in touch with her. Several years after this event, she was going to meet Dr. Jensen again, which will have disastrous consequences...

In 1946, she married without much feeling to the king of fashion Harry Conover, who would later be imprisoned for fraud. The marriage ended in divorce in 1959, leaving him custody of his three sons and a modeling agency in New York City. In 1960, an old acquaintance of Candy's, a retired army general, visited him at the agency to ask for a small service. He wanted her to authorize the FBI to use her agency as a post office box. She agreed and even offered to deliver the mail to them during her business trips. At that time, she took this arrangement no more and no less as a mere patriotic activity. She had no idea what was in store for her.

One of the first missions given by this general (with unknown name) was to deliver a letter to a san Francisco man during one of his trips. This man was Dr. Gilbert Jensen, whom she remembered only vaguely. She dined with this man on November 16, 1960, a day that was to forever mark her life. Jensen revealed to him that he now works for the CIA and that he has an office in Oakland. He tells Candy that if she wanted to, she could get more involved in secret intelligence, adding that it could be lucrative for her. With her three sons in private schools, Candy ran out of money and accepted the offer.

The first thing Jensen did was hypnotize Candy. While doing this, he discovered the alter personality "Arlene". He then reinforced this personality through the use of hypnotic techniques and intravenous injections of experimental drugs. He managed to make Arlene a leading personality in Candy's mind in order to be able to send her (with Arlene's voice and behavior) to perform different missions, nationally and internationally. Candy's change to Arlene was radical, in addition to the change in personality, voice and behavior, she wore a specific wig and makeup. Jensen wanted to create the "perfect messenger", the one who could not reveal anything about the message to be transmitted, nor where he came from, nor who sent him, even under torture.

This operation was extensive and very well organized. Candy, as Arlene, the virtual zombie, went to training camps, military bases, and secret medical facilities all over the United States. She has been trained in all areas related to clandestine action, including the handling of explosives, hand-to-hand combat, the manufacture of improvised weapons, camouflage and communication. Arlene learned to kill with her bare hands, she was conditioned to resist pain and trained to resist interrogation techniques. Jensen, who was very proud of his work, highlighted it in the army on several occasions as a "narco- hypnotic" success, the perfect warrior. An important point for Jensen was to demonstrate that the conditioning was so deep that Arlene could go so far as to kill himself to order. To get an idea of the moral values of the people involved in these kinds of programs, it happened that Jensen put a lit candle in Candy's vagina without the slightest reaction of fear or pain on her part. He gave the demonstration in front of 24 doctors in an auditorium at the CIA headquarters in Langley, Virginia.

Candy, as Arlene, was sent to Taiwan at least twice on a test mission to transmit envelopes. There, she was tortured with electric batons to see if she was going to crack, which she did not do. Perverse sexuality seems to have been an important element in this mental programming plan. She was often put naked on a stretcher, hypnotized and tortured on different parts of the body. She was subjected to coercive Gestapo-type interrogations and was sexually abused by women against her will. The sexual abuse was done under hypnosis by Jensen himself.

Of course, none of this was part of the so-called fight against communism. It was more of an example of what Churchill called "perverted science" operating in an intelligence service. The hypnosis and mental programming techniques used on Candy Jones came from American tactical and strategic research done in Vietnam, as did the saturation of unnecessary bombing, the use of defoliants, etc. The Americans would have done better to give Japanese televisions free of charge to the Vietnamese to put them to sleep, this would have been the easy solution. But perhaps we are talking here about something more sinister than a failed Cold War weaponry. An armament that failed against the Communists, but did it fail when it turned against the American state itself? Mark Chapman, Shiran-Shiran, John Hinckley, James Earl Ray and Lee Harvey Oswald are proof that there were other "Dr. Jensen" at work in America.

Jensen knew he was taking huge risks. He could not be sure and certain that Arlène would not emerge unexpectedly at any time in Candy's daily life. Despite his precautions, this is of course what happened, otherwise none of this would have been known to the public. Candy had no idea that she had made trips or done certain things outside of her visits to Jensen and mail deliveries. That was all she knew, everything else was complete amnesia. Once her journey and mission were over, Jensen would pull her out of her trance and return once again to her daily life.

We know this story from the audio tapes containing the hypnosis sessions where Nebel questioned Candy. When Candy was made to listen to these recordings, she could not believe that she had gone through the things that Arlene was describing. From these numerous cassettes recorded over a number of years, Donald Bain (the author of "The Control of Candy Jones") has skillfully articulated the four complex characters that are Arlene, Nebel, Jensen and Candy. Arlene being an abstraction in Candy's head, Nebel a very real character and Jensen a character who remains in the shadows. This tragedy was reinforced by the accumulation of evidence that Jensen had indeed existed and that he was probably engaged in the type of activities that Candy/Arlene had described. In the mid-70s, Nebel had a devastating cancer, upset by Candy's story and the doubt that she had seen Jensen several more times secretly during their marriage, he was thinking strongly about revenge. He told Bain that he was going to kill Jensen, but Bain managed to dissuade him from doing so.

Like cathy O'Brien's unique books "America in A Trance-Formation" and Annie McKenna's "Paperclip Dolls," Bain's book is a brilliant production. Disregarding the usual commercial setting, he spent an enormous amount of time extracting the entire story of Candy Jones from hundreds of audio cassettes. The work was done over several years, but it lacked the voice of Jensen himself, the information about him had to be reconstructed from the recorded dialogues. Although he was only a character in the shadows, Nebel was convinced that there was enough outside evidence to demonstrate that he was much more real than Arlene.

The most difficult problem was to get rid of the many barriers placed like cement layers by Jensen in Candy's mind. Nebel often tried to impersonate Jensen during hypnosis sessions; however, Arlene consistently noticed this tactic and made it known. Arlene liked Jensen, while Candy didn't like him at all. Nebel also pretended to be alter Arlene. Candy was much more comfortable talking about herself in this way, and so she revealed a lot of information about this Dr. Jensen's activities.

Donald Bain suggests that Candy, as Arlene, carried out many even more experimental missions for Jensen, which were never discovered. He also went to the Candy branch to check, with the help of the commercial director, the schedules of the associates during the 60s. Over a period of 10 years, it was found that Candy was often absent under the guise of "business trips" for which no company appeared. Fragments of these journeys emerged under hypnosis, on one occasion she said she had to deliver a gun for Jensen.

(...) But what worried Nebel the most before his death were the attempts of the CIA and Jensen to contact Candy. His adventures apparently took place between 1960 and 1971, but Bain said he couldn't be entirely sure it didn't last. The brave Nebel died of cancer shortly after Bain's book was published. He died without having found all the answers he was looking for about his wife's secret life. He had some consolations for a brief moment as he had begun to tear off the mask of America's hidden controllers. In a manner similar to other glamorous personalities, Candy Jones has unsnowingly entered the mystery of elitist power, which is constantly belied. If Jayne Mansfield has been the prey of the forces of consumerism and Marilyn Monroe has been the victim of high state intrigues, Candy Jones has certainly been one of the victims of both american intelligence services and medical and psychiatric institutions. These two sectors gave birth to the American military-industrial complex reinvigorated in the 50s and 60s[610].

Even in adulthood, these high-statured women like Candy Jones remain fairytale children, as do young models Jon Benet Ramsey and Sylvia Plath. Candy was probably chosen, not only because she was deemed easily hypnotize, but also because she was one of the first media dolls, a kind of prototype. America has always been the world leader in mind control and illusory dreams, from television to the furniture of dolls' houses. Like dolls, individuals become automatons and all sorts of experiments and profound societal changes make this semi-trance of the mind eventually become a natural state.

It may well be that Jensen was involved in the first experiments as part of the MK-Ultra program. Candy Jones' first husband had already made her a "superdoll", a perfect subject for Jensen. Bain's conclusion is that Jensen worked for the intelligence sector, but that he could also have had a much more complex project. If Candy represents the innocent imagination, situated between the worlds of Jules Verne and George Adamski, Jensen represents the dark side of science. It was the world of darkness of Auschwitz which, as we know, was managed by a community of scientists, doctors and industrialists.

Like Marilyn Monroe, Candy Jones may have been a victim of the U.S. military's early research into what are now called "non-lethal weapons." Perhaps the notion of "Big Brother", just like coal miners, eventually became something archaic and obsolete, and perhaps Orwell was wrong and Huxley was right. Unlimited pleasure for cheap, without pain or suffering, this is an ultimate weapon used to break the will of the population without a drop of blood being shed.

(...) John Nebel must have been questioning himself when his life took a certain turn with Candy Jones. For many years, this New York radio host had heard on his airwaves many listeners calling him to talk to him about these things that Candy was now describing when she was in a trance... As soon as Nebel heard Arlene's voice, he entered the world of American trance. A world in which entry wounds become exit wounds and in which Jack Ruby's last hours as a free man remain as enigmatic as Marilyn Monroe's last phone calls... or the mysterious travels of Candy Jones.

6 - Mk-Monarch symbolism in the music industry

"Signs and symbols rule the world, not laws or words" - Confucius

The music industry plays an important role, it is a powerful tool for indoctrinating the masses and there is much more than money at stake. The music proposed/imposed on the people is as powerful a tool of control as the school system or the daily television news. This type of social engineering shapes and shapes the attitudes and values of an entire youth. Hence the interest in spending millions of dollars to constantly promote new global stars idolized by millions of young people. Youth is obviously the main target to format a new order. Just as the children of satanic/Luciferian cults are programmed from an early age, the world's youth also undergoes systematic mind control. Certainly much less direct and coercive than ritual abuses but which remains no less effective in conditioning minds.

Many clips that are viewed millions of times on the YouTube video platform are actually just symbolic representations of the trauma-based Monarch mental programming process. These productions symbolically refer to a psychological process that is the splitting of the personality, the final goal of the MK-Monarch. The same symbols are systematically used by the Luciferian elite to promote among the layman his decadent and fallen culture. For this they infuse the symbolism of mind control in ultra-mediatized productions, whether in the luxury industry, fashion and musical productions with clips containing several reading grids. The notion of multiple personality and "crazy alter-egos" becomes something cool and spreads among glittery idols. The goal is to create a hegemonic and unmissable MK culture including an aesthetic and symbols now omnipresent in the media, all obviously packed in attractive and addictive entertainment. Unconsciously, the younger generation therefore associates this popularized and simplified occultism with something positive, with a fashion, with a model to follow. Luciferian symbols such as the triangle and the single eye appear more and more in the secular world. We cheer, demand and consume these demonic suggestions, and thus we unconsciously validate an entire Luciferian culture as something good for us. We love our music, we love our tv programs, our cartoons and our video games, we love content that very often clearly displays a Luciferian nature. As a result, our free will deliberately chooses to consume the devil's soup, because sweet at will...

In March 2014, a BBC commercial promoting ''Match of The Day'' contained several flashes depicting triangles with one eye in the centre. The flashes lasted a split second during which they could soak up in the minds of viewers. What did such Masonic symbols, appearing randomly, in an advertisement for football matches, do? But what else can we expect from a television channel that has protected an individual like Jimmy Savile for years? A monster that raped hundreds of children...

The MTV channel also likes to systematically insert Masonic occult symbolism in its commercials. The MTV group, which has also set up its Toronto studios in a former Masonic lodge.

The iHeartRadio Ultimate Pool Party festival in Miami Beach is one of those great gatherings used to imregnate the unconscious of youth with a special symbolism. In June 2013, during the Ke$ha concert, the giant screen broadcast for an hour flashes and series of hypnotizing images based on triangles, eyes, pentagrams and other typical Masonic and Luciferian symbols.

Fashion photos and magazine covers are full of this symbolism of Lucifer's unique eye, just as we see it blooming more and more on the clothes of our big brands.

Another example is Justin Bieber's 'Where Are U Now' music video which is built with a multitude of drawings modelled on the image of the young singer, each drawing passing for a fraction of a second on the screen. It turns out that in these hundreds of illustrations flashed on Bieber, we find many inverted crosses in the middle of his forehead, or Masonic pyramids with the single eye, 666, images that come back in a recurring way throughout the clip. This may be an unhealthy irony, but whatever we say, we have here a clip flashing in a subliminal way of Luciferian symbolisms, a clip that is viewed millions of times, directly printing these images in the minds of young people. In short, many people have already understood, all these "winks" are nothing but the impregnation of the world cult of Luciférien in popular and secular culture. Let us specify here that it is not a question of demonizing geometry and the equilateral triangle for example, these people have not invented anything, they are only taking codes and symbols by appropriating them.

Our spirit is the citadel in which the Spirit of God desires to work with us for eternity, but Satan tries to make this citadel his own to make it his throne... A choice must be made in the face of this corrupt and corrupting industry, the perfect platform through which Satan can reach the mass to brew, manipulate and pervert it; let us quote here Alexandre Dumas: "God angling souls, Satan fishing them with nets".

The music industry is perfectly aware of the scheme of feeding an impressionable youth in demand for ever more extreme content. As the audience becomes more and more insensitive to the things that are being put in place, the clips become more and more explicit by openly exposing the subject of mind control based on trauma, and this without any censorship although this is undoubtedly the most despicable practice in the world. The world of Monarch slaves is therefore clearly exposed to us in some clips that feature violence, torture, sexual abuse and humiliation without forgetting drugs, all presented as something cool and trendy. Again, this is about social engineering, global mind control.

What could be more appropriate than the "music video" format and the great artistic freedom it allows to give free rein to the massive dissemination of an occult knowledge barely concealed by symbolism and broadcast in a loop on TV channels and the web, 24 hours a day? The same codes are injected tirelessly in these productions... This is no coincidence, a story is told to us in a veiled way if we still have eyes to see. One of the most hidden things of this low world is therefore a knowledge that is paradoxically the most diffused daily under the nose of millions of people totally unaware of what is transmitted to them in a more or less direct way. This is probably a form of arrogance or black humour, or also a way of having humanity unconsciously validate these despicable practices as something positive. The fact that the Monarch mind control process is symbolically encoded in some of the world's biggest media productions (music, film, fashion), is a serious indication that it is a non-marginal practice, applied systematically in the upper echelons of our society. But it is also a way of massively disclosing occult knowledge in this great theater, where finally everything is displayed in the open. There are Laws above the laws of this world that the "nameless religion" must imperatively respect.

Music videos and even some films are therefore an ideal way to visually and symbolically reveal something much deeper than a simple song of three or four minutes. According to the occult belief of the Luciferian Order, the higher self can only be communicated through myths, symbolism or music, in order to be able to penetrate the unconscious effectively. In other words, don't talk about it, show the. This hermeticism systematically permeates large film and music productions: "Talking without talking, showing without showing and hiding without hiding", a very subtle art to which the entertainment industry zealously tackles. All this MK symbolism is massively diffused in the secular world so that people see without seeing and hear without understanding. The sorcerers-controllers take themselves for gods, they thus transmit their "light" in a more or less coded way with entertainment productions containing a double meaning and explicit symbols conveying an occult doctrine finally exposed to the eyes of millions of laymen. This indirect disclosure allows them to compromise the masses in this way so that we cannot say 'My God, we knew nothing about it''. In a way, they respect the Law of Free Will and the Ability to Make One's Own Choice when they clearly expose the most despicable things.

With regard to institutional paedocriminality, accepting systematic lies and thus abandoning the small victims to their fate, while the evidence is now becoming more and more blatant, means that people become morally complicit in these crimes by not reacting and letting it happen... The constant social engineering and denial of people in the face of corruption and atrocities committed by the ruling elite, although more evident than ever, are two key points on which this precarious balance rests. A balance to ensure that public opinion does not totally change, while at the same time compromising it. for it is clear that today everything is revealed and exposed for those who choose to seek by themselves by emancipating themselves from social engineering programs.

But let's go back to the music industry and its links with the MK-Monarch. In the introduction to the music video "Mary The Night", Lady Gaga makes a monologue defining quite clearly the situation of a victim under mental control. She explains "artistically" the traumas she went through to reach the status of superstar. The video shows Lady Gaga lying on a stretcher pushed by two nurses, she describes how she perceives her sad reality: "When I look back on my life, it's not that I don't want to see things exactly how they happened, it's just that I prefer to remember them in a poetic way. And to be honest, the lie of all this is much more honest, because I was the one who invented it. Psychiatry teaches us that trauma is arguably the ultimate killer. Memories are not recycled like atoms and particles in quantum physics. They can be lost forever. My past is an unfinished painting and just like the painter I have to fill all the awful holes to beautify the canvas. It's not pa.s that I'm dishonest, it's just that I hate reality..."

We systematically find in a number of big budget clips the same symbolic ones such as the artist represented as a broken doll, a model, an automaton or a puppet held by wires and a décor representing the "inner world" of the slave. The process of dissociation and splitting is often represented by passing through a mirror or bursting the mirror meaning that rollback is impossible or programming is broken; the rainbow having the same symbolism as the passage through the mirror. The single Lutheran eye or "the eye that sees everything" comes back very frequently, as well as a graphic representing duality such as the black and white checkerboard... and of course we find the monarch butterfly constantly coming back in these productions, as a signature. Pentagrams and goat heads, masks, pyramids, are also classical symbols permeating this Luciferian subculture. Don't talk about it, show the. and thus permeate secular popular culture to indirectly corrupt it.

Here are some examples of particularly explicit productions and I invite the reader to discover these clips for themselves on the internet, there are also much more detailed analyses on their symbolic content. It is obvious that a symbolic interpretation may seem very subjective, but a certain knowledge of MK processes makes it possible to identify clear indicators, especially when we find the same codes, the same symbolic imagery used systematically in many big budget productions.

- Let's start first with the video of the song "Self Control" by Laura Branigan released in 1984, which is if we can say the ancestor of clips featuring a symbolic of mental control. At first glance, this piece that was an international hit tells the story of a girl loving the nightlife of nightclubs. But it is the video that reveals the important aspect of the song. We see the singer stalked by a masked man, all combined with a whole symbolism to make this production a tribute to the occult elite, the celebration of their most sadistic practice: monarch mind control. In 1984, when this music video was released, the music industry was just beginning to adopt the video format as a promotional tool and the self control music video was a revolution in the entertainment industry. This clip does not represent the nightlife of ordinary revelers, it clearly shows us a woman losing her will and free will at the hands of a faceless master. The chorus sums up the situation perfectly:

You take my "Me"

You take control over me

You make me live only for the night

Before the arrival of the morning, mass is said

You take my "Me"

You take control over me

In this clip, the world of the night is a metaphor for dissociation. The first images show us a doll with brown hair symbolizing Laura Branigan. We then see her preparing for her night outing, with around her

Strange characters that seem to emerge out of nowhere: when she passes her hand in her hair, the image that follows shows us a person next to her who passes her hand in her hair. The clip here represents what is happening in Laura's head featuring her alter personalities. The next scene shows us the young woman who begins her evening, she is in the street standing in front of a window containing two mannequins floating horizontally in the air, an excellent way to represent an MK slave in a state of dissociation. It is then that appears a masked man in the back of a luxury car, his master, the occult elite. The next scene shows Laura dancing in a discotheque as the masked man appears once again, with several clumped masks in the background symbolizing here that programmers and slave masters themselves have a dissociated personality. Strangely, Laura decides to follow the strange and disturbing character. She follows him because she no longer has control over herself, the lyrics of the second verse perfectly describe the state of an MK slave at the mercy of his master when he is in a state of dissociation, here symbolized by the "world at night":

At night, no control

Through the wall, something pierces dressed in white as you walk down the street with my soul

A safe night, I live in the forest of my soul

I know that the night is not as it would seem

I have to believe in something

So I convince myself to believe that this night will never end

Laura can't fight against the will of the masked man who finally takes her into an orgy, a part of the clip that recalls the famous scene from the movie Eye Wide Shut in which masked characters partouz in a castle. In this scene, Laura is symbolically brought into the underground and occult world of the elite where she will be used as a sex slave. Indeed, we see the masked man undressing the young woman, who seems to be in an altered state of consciousness, to be released in the "party". This scene clearly depicts a woman being used as a sex slave in an elitist partouze.

Back home, Laura realizes that she is not safe anywhere, not even in her bedroom where masked people are, abusing her. In this final scene, the "faceless" man is also present in the room and abuses Laura. The clip ends with a very symbolic image: a close-up of the doll that introduced the clip. But here her dress is torn, her hair in battle and one of her eyes is closed, the nod to Lucifer.

This production, released at the very beginning of the age of music videos, already contained all the characteristics and codes of a clip representing the MK. Thirty years later, the same scenarios, the same codes and the same symbols are still present. Today more than ever, we see young starlets singing on the theme of their mind control in clips celebrating the MK system of "religion without a name! [51] it".

- Katy Perry's "Wide Awake" music video begins by showing Katy sitting in her dressing room, staring in a mirror, while removing her wig: a representation of alter change. This first introductory scene thus symbolizes the dissociation that brings her into a world of fantasy, which is none other than her inner world... Because indeed it is from this moment that the clip switches to another reality showing us the star wandering in his inner world represented by an obscure labyrinth filled with dead ends and traps. She doesn't seem to know which path to follow in her own mind and she gets caught in the various traps placed by the programmer. Katy realizes that she will not end up at the exit of the maze without the main element, the one that was taken away from her during her programming, i.e. her true nature, what she really is. It is then that appears a little girl who comes to meet him, which represents the opportunity to reconnect with his original personality, she will then become his guide to find the way to freedom. The next scene shows Katy and the little girl hand in hand in a hallway filled with mirrors, the girl not appearing in those mirrors, meaning that she is not real, but just a part of Katy's psyche. In this scene, we find that Katy's dress is totally covered with butterflies... who will fly away in a cloud when Katy ends up breaking one of the mirrors to escape from this inner world, from this programming.

The next scene is in stark contrast to the whimsical world of the maze, we get out of Katy's head and return to a sad reality: Katy then appears totally devastated in a wheelchair in what appears to be a psychiatric hospital, always with the little girl by her side as well as a last butterfly twirling above her. Two men with a goat's head stand guard in front of the doors of the hospital, it is the little girl who will make them disappear by tapping from the foot to the ground to free Katy from this psychiatric universe.

The end of the clip shows us this same little girl handing over to Katy a butterfly Monarch, we discover then that the girl is named Katheryn (the real name of Katy Perry, her original personality). Back in her dressing room, Katy then realizes by opening her hand that she has been offered a butterfly that she lets escape, this butterfly leading us from the lodge to the stage for a new concert... in other words, the circle is closed and the clip takes us back to the starting point. Katy who seems to have made a quest by having defeated her "demons" finds herself back in her character of "sexy pop star", a pure product of the music industry. "Monarch" clips often represent this notion of an endless loop.

- The clip "Walking On Air" by Kerli is also very explicit, it shows the programming process by the symbolism of the little girl turning into a doll held by threads, like a puppet. The beginning of the video shows us a strange character bringing a gift to Kerli, it is a doll with his effigy. A doll that Kerli carries inside a house that symbolically represents his inner world. We can see that in this house, Kerli and this doll (an alter) are constantly monitored by a large eye that scrutinizes them through a television screen. The fact that they are monitored by a television screen, rather than watching it themselves, is representative of the systematic inversions practiced in mind control. Programmers do everything to make the child feel constantly observed and controlled. In this clip, inversions are everywhere: the snow comes out of an umbrella, the oven freezes the chicken, while the fridge is used to cook it. In another scene, the reversal of the values of pleasure and pain is symbolically represented when Kerli is lying on a bed whose mattress is made up of large pebbles. The confusion between pain and pleasure is part of MK programming. It is on this bed of pebbles that Kerli lets out tears (symbol of his pain) that will transform... in butterflies. We then see that the strange character at the beginning of the clip, probably the programmer, appears on the "other side" of a mirror placed next to the stone bed, ordering him by signs to pass through this mirror to come and join him... The passage through the mirror will be the purpose of the transformation. The next scene shows us the Kerli doll that has reached maturity, she has become a puppet manipulated by a giant doll carrying the Monarch butterfly on her strap. The final scene shows us this giant doll who chisels the threads of the puppet Kerli to enclose it in a box. We then see the young Kerli who wakes up at home wondering about the pieces of string hanging from her wrists... We then discover that Kerli is actually locked in this box held in the hands of the giant doll, always with this notion of endless loop, a kind of mise en abyme or fractal.

- The clip "Fjogur Piano" by Sigur Ros is difficult to understand because it is impossible to extract a coherent narrative, like most of these "Monarch" clips that seem at first glance hermetic and mysterious. It is the symbolic content that gives them real meaning. This clip depicts in a pictorial and symbolic way the endless loop of the life of a Monarch slave, with the amnesia, violence and drugs that accompany it. The beginning of this production shows us a man and a woman on a bed, waking up in a startle in the middle of a strange room, they are very confused and do not seem to know what happened to them the day before. In addition, they are surrounded by Monarch butterflies meticulously arranged on their bed. The room in which they are located shows marks of frames on the walls, we will see later that these marks are those of frames containing collections of butterflies. The couple wakes up with all kinds of marks and bruises on their bodies, they are interrogative, not seeming to know the cause. Obviously they have been abused and abused shortly before... It is then that enter the scene two obscure characters who come to look for the "couple" by first blindfolding them and giving them lollipops containing scorpions, symbolizing psychotropic drugs, the man and the woman eagerly suck these sweets showing that they are addicted to them. Then the two controllers take the couple out of the room by simply blowing on them, without any physical contact, which symbolizes the mind control sufficient on its own to direct the slaves without having to use force. The next scene shows us the couple in the back of a fictional car, "driven" by the controllers and placed in front of a cinema screen that broadcasts images giving the impression that they are actually moving. This scene of the fictional car relates to dissociation, the process being to push the mind of the subject to disconnect from reality, i.e. transport it somewhere but never really, physically. Following this funny getaway, it's back in the room... now filled with frames with collections of butterflies, the woman begins to brandish with irritation one of these frames containing a butterfly under the man's nose, as if to try to make him understand something: "look we are Monarch slaves". Then suddenly, the woman disappears from the room and the man finds himself alone with himself. Here we have another clue that this is probably a duplication of personality and that women and men are in fact one and the same person divided. The man then enters a black rage and punches a mirror, symbolizing the attempt to break the programming, then he ransacks the room until the woman reappears. He then begins to hit her and scarify her, it is actually a self-inflicted scarification. Finally, the couple will fall asleep... and it is there that we see the two obscure controllers entering the room again to clean up and put everything in order. The clip ends with the same image on which it began: the couple wakes up again in confusion, unaware of the cause of all these traces of scarification. A new day in the eternal endless loop that is the life of a Monarch slave.

- The music video "Prison Sex" by the group Tool, whose theme of the song is the repetition of sexual violence by the victims, has a symbolism related to traumatic amnesic walls and the recovery of memories. The video features a small model dismembered and tortured by a disturbing being, a kind of black rubber humanoid. The clip shows us this little one-eyed mannequin enclosed in a large cube composed of a multitude of drawers representing his memories, in which he digs to be able to understand his state as dilapidated. Little by little, he reconnects with the memories allowing him to access the little boy that he once was. In this animated clip, it is not the Monarch butterfly but its caterpillar that comes to sign the production, coming out of one of the drawers ... Here again, the clip ends with the notion of endless loop and fractal: the cube composed of a multitude of drawers in which the small dummy is locked, is only made the inside of the drawer of another much larger cube composed as the first of a multitude of drawers, etc, etc...
- The music video "Shatter Me" by violinist Lindsay Stirling is also 100% MK-Monarch. It represents the process of dissociation and personality splitting by the symbolism of a humano-mechanical ballerina locked in a glass globe and seeking to escape from it. Here again the image of the broken mirror and the splitting of the mechanical woman who literally explodes into a thousand pieces is symbolically very explicit. Especially when monarch butterflies come to twirl throughout the clip. In these clips "Monarch", duplicity is systematic, the song "Shatter Me" (Brise moi) has as its theme the liberation of fear... But its symbolism communicates exactly the opposite: it clearly exposes the process of submitting an MK programming slave.

- The music video "A Study in Duality" by Candy Brooke is also pure mk-monarch implicit propaganda. A clip that sums up what this whole industry really is: a combination of occultism and MK aimed at demeaning and dehumanizing. This clip is built on the concept of duality featuring the "good girl" versus the "bad girl", a theme particularly appropriate for the MK-Monarch. This production shows us a woman with a monarch butterfly on her mouth, a strong symbolic image interspersed with quasi-subliminal flashes showing acts of torture like a face undergoing spacers in the mouth and eyelids; clearly reminiscent of the imagery of the film A Clockwork Orange. Shocking images that allude to the torture inflicted to induce the dissociative states necessary for mind control. Why do these images of torture only appear for a fraction of a second in this clip? Why are such subliminal horrors paralleled with the imagery of a woman with a monarch butterfly on her mouth? Why choose this specific species of butterfly so often? Another scene in this clip shows us a masked executioner dressed in a black dress putting a woman, visibly robotic, in a bathtub with intravenous transfusion equipment, suggesting that something terrifying is about to happen. This is the kind of totally gloomy and dehumanizing occult symbolism that is increasingly imbueding itself with popular culture via the entertainment industry.
- The music videos "Zombie", "Mirrors" or "Wonderland" by Natalia

Kills also spread a decadence linked to the MK-Monarch. They show the artist as a woman abused, humiliated and controlled by invisible forces. In the music video "Mirrors", she is seen being trained by force to cross a mirror. In the clip "Zombie", we see her tied on a table in what seems to be a laboratory where she is tortured by an invisible executioner, all accompanied by an explicit imagery showing heads of models covering her face just as to replace it, dismembered models also come to participate in the dark atmosphere of this production. The clip "Wonderland" when to him highlights the drug to follow the white rabbit in the burrow...

- Paramore's "Brick by Boring Brick" music video tells the story of a little girl looking for her real "Me" behind a wall she has built in her consciousness. The theme of the song tells us that this wall is the belief in "fairy tales" that must be broken. The little girl walks around with monarch butterfly wings hanging on her back in a castle representing her inner world. In this castle, we see it reflected in multiple misleading mirrors. Here again, systematic references to "Alice in Wonderland" are present.
- The music videos "Love Me" by LilWayne, "Work B*tch" by Britney Spears and "Change Your Life" by Iggy Azaela explicitly glorify Beta programming, i.e. sexual slavery.
- The music video "Price Tag" by Jessie J depicts the singer as a ridiculous puppet totally disarticulated and held by wires or an automaton on a music box.
- The music video "21st Century Girl" by Willow Smith is a pure Babylonian propaganda where the Monarch butterfly accompanies the little girl like a relay transmitted from generation to generation.
- Taylor Swift's "Style" music video subtly depicts the dissociative disorder of identity by playing with two characters reflecting each other, always with this notion of splitting and breaking.

This morbid MK subculture is not limited to the Western world alone. In Asia, the very popular K-pop (South Korean pop) scene uses exactly the same codes:

- The clip "Insane" of A-JAX shows us a young man hospitalized in psychiatry and undergoing hypnosis, the symbolism of dissociation and fractionation is very significant and repetitive, especially once again by the passage through the mirror.
- The music video "Haste You" from Ladie's Code is also very explicit. We see two totally dehumanized and robotic girls, portrayed as dolls or puppets held by wires and manipulated by a "trainer".
- The music video for Andamiro (the Korean Lady Gaga) 'Waiting' which, under the guise of a song about a story of heart between a girl and a boy, actually represents the relationship between the master and the slave Monarch, as often it is the symbolism of the clip that reveals something much heavier than the simple lyrics of the song. Here again, the butterfly signs the production.
- The song "The Handler" by Muse, released in 2015, is one of the most explicit productions on monarch mind control that has been produced, both in terms of the text and the symbolism of the clip, with obviously its monarch butterflies. Handler is a term often used to describe the one who manipulates and manages the MK slave, a term that is difficult to translate into French and that would mean: trainer, manipulator or master, the one who "holds on a leash". Here are the lyrics of the song, which at first glance seems a love song, but whose background refers directly to the relationship between a slave MK and his master, all the ambiguity is there, a representation of stockholm syndrome:

You were my oppressorAnd I was programmed to obeyNow you are my manipulatorAnd I will execute all your requests Let-moldY I must dissociate myself from you Admire my trance-trainingAnd you have the power to do what you pleaseMy mind was totally lostAnd my heart a cold and insensitive machine

obeyNow, you are my manipulatorAnd I will execute all your requests Let-moldYip have to dissociate myself from you Admire my trance-trainingAnd you have the power to do what you pleaseMy mind was totally lostAnd my heart a cold and insensitive machine

I won't let you control my feelings anymoreAnd I won't do what I'm told to do I'm no longer afraid to walk aloneThe leave me, let me be

I must free myself from your gripTu will never own me again

It is interesting to report here also the lyrics of the song "I Get Out! " by Lauryn Hill: I go out, I get out of all your boxes,

You can not hold me by these chains, I will go out,

Father freed me from this slavery,

Knowing my condition, that's why I have to change,

Your stinky resolutions have nothing to do with a solution, but take me away from freedom and maintain your pollution,

I will not put up with your lies any longer,

I don't want to try anymore,

If I have to die, oh Lord,

That's why I chose to live,

I don't want to be compromised anymore, I can't be bullied anymore,

I will no longer sympathize,

Because I now understand that you just want to use me

You talk about love and you deceive me

You never thought of freeing me

But so quickly we forget that nothing is certain

You thought I was going to stay there to suffer

Your plan to make me feel guilty doesn't work, it represses me to die

For now I choose Life, I make sacrifices If everything has to go away, then let's go that's how I chose to live More compromise

I see you before you are disguised
Blinding through this mind control
Stealing my eternal soul, endearing me by the material
To keep me as a slave, but I get out of it
What you see is what you're going to become Oh you haven't seen anything yet
I don't care if you're upset
Look and do not distort the truth
And your hurtful feelings are not excused
To keep me in this box, psychological lock Repressing true expression, cementing repression Organizing this massive disappointment
While no one can be treated
I don't respect your system
I don't want to protect your system
When you speak I don't listen
Let my Father do it
Let me get out of these chains,
All these traditions kill freedom I just accepted what you said keeping Me among the dead
The only way to know this is to walk to learn, learn and grow
But faith does not grow fast, and everyone believed you While you had the sole authority
Just followed by the majority
Who is frightened by reality
This system is a farce

You have an interest in being smart to save your soul and escape from this mental control
You spend your life sacrificing yourself for this system of death
Where is the passion in this way of living?
Are you sure that it is God that you are serving?
Engaged in a system
Less and less good, when you deserve it
Who makes these schools? Who makes these rules?
An animal condition, oh keep us as slaves
Oh get out of this social purgatory...

7 - Mk-Monarch symbolism in the film industry

Some film productions also display the symbolism of Monarch mind control. As with music videos, it is a question of detecting the different reading grids contained in all these productions.

Let's first look at the film "Trouble jeu" (Hide & Seek in V.O.) released in 2005. This film has been much criticized negatively due to its strangeness, it has been described as illogical with an ending deemed absurd. It turns out that this film cannot be fully understood without knowing the key element on which it is based, i.e. mental control based on trauma: MK-Monarch. In a symbolic and theatrical way, this film describes this despicable process. The Monarch butterfly again appears regularly in this production to confirm its sad theme.

The film features a little girl named Emily who witnessed her mother's suicide and has severe traumatic symptoms. His father, David (played by Robert De Niro) then decides to help his daughter by leaving his psychiatrist's office and moving to the countryside with her in order to take care of her full time. Emily's behavior then becomes more and more disturbing, she pretends to have a new friend named Charlie with whom she has a lot of fun. David then thinks that he is an imaginary friend created by Emily to deal with her trauma. However, some horrible events that occur in the house, such as the cat found drowned in the bathtub, begin to be very disturbing, especially since Emily states that it is Charlie who is responsible for it. Charlie also kills the father's girlfriend. In a scene where David is seen patrolling around the house in search of a possible murderer, he realizes in a brief flash of lucidity that he is himself the "famous" Charlie. The film reveals that this Charlie is in fact another personality of the father, of David, who is totally unaware of his existence. It is this alter "Charlie" personality who traumatizes and manipulates little Emily and commits horrible crimes.

This production depicts the relationship between a programmer executioner and his slave, in this case a totally dissociated psychiatrist who programs his own daughter. Programmers themselves usually have deep dissociative disorders. The final scene of the film shows us a drawing of little Emily who represents herself with two heads on a single body... a symbolic image revealing that it is dissociated and multiple.

The animated film "Coraline" (2009) is also a production referring to the symbolic level to the MK-Monarch programming. Note that the little girl who makes the voice of Coraline is Dakota Fanning who played the role of the girl in the movie "Trouble Game" that we have just described above.

From the beginning, the credits clearly summarize the whole process: we see disturbing metal hands restaurant an old doll into a new doll. Its old accoutrement is completely cut out, it is literally turned over like a sock, the inner stuffing is removed to be replaced by sand. She receives new hair, new eyes and new clothes are sewn on her. The creation of this new doll symbolizes the creation of an alter personality.

Coraline is a little girl who has just moved with her parents into a new house. She is unhappy and constantly bored because they do not give her the attention she would like. As she explores her new home, she discovers a small door that leads to an alternative version of her reality, a place where her parents are fun and pay a lot of attention to her. Here we find the same theme as in the "Wizard of Oz" or "Alice in Wonderland", that is to say a child main character who is bored in his everyday life and who enters a strange, wonderful and magical world. In Coraline, the little girl goes through a door propelling her into a kind of vortex that gives access to the "wonderful" alternative reality, just as Alice crosses the mirror: the symbolism of the dissociative process, the disconnection of a certain reality. In this alternate reality, her "other parents" nickname Coraline "our little doll" and they tell her that if she accepts that they sew pimples on her eyes, soon "she will see things in their own way" and that she will be able to stay with them forever... Sewing pimples on her eyes means that she will permanently become the puppet of the programmer executioner, who then, as said in the film "devours his soul". But Coraline refuses this proposal and the illusion of the other world breaks... We see the "other mother" getting into a black rage showing her in her true light. Coraline finally sees the true appearance of her "other mother", it is a kind of skeletal monster with metal hands, precisely those who made the doll in the credits of the beginning. The whole film is based on this menacing hand that represents the programmer manipulating the little girl and deceiving her psyche with a world created from scratch thanks to the passage through the back door: the dissociative process.

In 1985, Disney produced the film "Back to Oz". While most viewers expected a logical sequel to the famous "Wizard of Oz" of 1930, this film will create surprise by showing little Dorothy locked in a sordid psychiatric hospital, strapped on a stretcher to receive electroshocks... This Disney production explicitly describes the fate of a little girl subjected to trauma-based mind control.

The beginning of the film shows Dorothy finding a key with the symbol of Oz, a key that represents the key to access her original personality. The next scene shows us this same key handed over to a psychiatrist to whom she was taken to receive electroshock treatment (for sleep problems)... this psychiatrist who now holds the key will be able to become his programmer.

While Dorothy observes the machine that will be used for electroshock, she sees in a window not its reflection but that of another little girl, indeed, this machine is the door for her alter personality named "Ozma". The next scene shows Dorothy strapped on a stretcher about to receive electroshocks, but a power outage occurs just then... However, the rest of the film clearly suggests that Dorothy did indeed suffer a deep trauma that made her dissociate herself from reality, because it is from there that the film switches into an imaginary world. Indeed, Dorothy then returns to the magical world of Oz, a world that represents her psyche dissociated and entirely manipulated by the programmer (the psychiatrist). It is her alter Ozma personality that welcomes her on her stretcher to lead her to the land of Oz...

She then enters into a kind of quest through this alternative world. A particularly disturbing scene is the meeting between Dorothy and the witch Mombi, who is none other than the head nurse of the psychiatric hospital. In this scene, we see the witch bring Dorothy into a room filled with women's heads, arranged in a row behind windows and observing from the corner of the eye the little one... It is then that the witch Mombi removes her own head, just as one unscrews a toy, and replaces it with one of those many other heads present behind the windows. This scene is pure MK-Monarch symbolism, the collection of heads representing the different alter personalities that may emerge.

The ultimate goal of MK programming is to split the basic personality into multiple alters, and that's exactly what the last scenes of this film show us. We see little Dorothy, still in the world of Oz, in her inner world, staring at herself in a large mirror that does not reflect her own image but that of Ozma, this other little girl who represents her alter personality. The scene shows Dorothy getting closer to the mirror, taking the hand of the "Ozma reflection" and making her cross the mirror so that she finds herself in "flesh and blood" in front of her. The mirror that reflects another identity is a strong symbol of the MK-Monarch. Dorothy's alter personality, Ozma, crosses the mirror and thus becomes real. Thus Dorothy's programming ends, her programmed alter is present in her split mind, Ozma is now part of Dorothy...

The last scene shows Dorothy back home, in the real world. She discovers Ozma again while looking at herself in the mirror of her room. This confirms that his personality has been split and that it is now multiple and programmed.

In this production, Disney has introduced a large number of elements that make it a real anthem to the MK, even more explicit than the "Wizard of Oz".

In his film "Boulevard de la mort" (Death Proof en V.O. - 2007), Quentin Tarantino clearly makes a reference to the MK-Monarch, a sad wink... Don't talk about it, but show the...

At first glance, this production seems to be nothing more and nothing less than a tribute to the old B-movies, but it incorporates something very explicit that is not insignificant.

But first of all we must return to a 1977 film entitled "One spy too many" ("Telefon" in V.O.) featuring characters under mental control MK-Ultra who are triggered by a poem recited during a phone call. Following this call to bring out a previously programmed alter personality, these people enter a state of trance to carry out kamikaze missions on different targets.

Here is the poem that is used to trigger the programmed slaves:

The woods are charming, dark and deep,

But I have promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep,

Remember... (name of the alter personality), miles to go before you sleep.

In his film "Death Proof", Quentin Tarantino took care to repeat exactly the same poem. During one scene, we see a man approaching a young woman by offering her a beer while telling her "to your butterfly", then he begins to recite to her word for word this same triggering poem MK...

Tarantino thus takes up the exact poem that triggers the MK slaves in the film "Telefon" of 1977, to adapt it in his own way in 2007. While in "Telefon", the poem is used to trigger suicide bombers under mental control, in "Death Proof", the poem is used to trigger a Beta program, the sexual slavery of a young woman. And to confirm that this is a reference to the MK-Monarch, Tarantino has chosen as an access code to the alter personality the word "butterfly", this poem having the originality of varying according to the alter to which it is addressed...
"Remember "butterfly", miles before you sleep"...

The next scene shows the targeted young woman starting an erotic dance in front of this man sitting on a chair in the middle of a bar. This woman who did not know him a short time before will end up abandoning herself in his arms...

Here is a dialogue excerpt from the 1977 film "Telefon", where Charles Bronson refers directly to the MK-Ultra project to create Manchu Candidates:

- Tell me Borzov, who is the most secretive agent in the world?

- The one who manages to remain eternally secret?

- Of course, but the one who surpasses them all is the ideal agent, he is the one who does not know that he is an agent.

8 - Super-athletes under mental control

The entertainment industry also includes high-level sport and mind control methods are also applied to train super-athletes... The champion is just like an elite soldier whose physical and mental strength must be optimal in a world where "The show must go on" (the show must continue), where the performances must be always more spectacular. Top-level sport is a real show business and the results must excel from year to year to satisfy the public and sponsors. In this context, it is easy to understand that the MK is also used in the field of sport.

In her autobiography, Cathy O'Brien reports how an individual with a multiple personality can have extraordinary physical faculties, especially in terms of sleep and hunger. The changeover from one alter personality to another will somehow "set the record straight", i.e. the biological clock will be different from one alter to another and the sensations of hunger and fatigue will therefore vary according to the alter that is in control of the body. This is a phenomenon that is difficult to understand due to the basic biological needs of the physical body,just as it is difficult to understand how an alter can be the only one to feel the effects of a drug.

MK slaves can function with very few hours of sleep or a very limited diet, this has the consequence that their mind, their brain, remain in an easily controllable, easily hypnotizable state. Cathy O'Brien, who has undergone the MK-Monarch protocol since early childhood, also describes that during her running training, her coach would induce a trance in her so that she no longer had any perception of time and distance. Mind control methods made it easier for her to evacuate pain and fatigue instantly. This phenomenon causes exceptional endurance in MK subjects, whether in the sporting or military field.

Cathy O'Brien claims that some American baseball players are controlled by key codes, and other triggers. According to her, the members of the Dodgers team were under mental control and conditioned to win or lose according to the bets and goodwill of their owners. Brice Taylor says that this same Dodgers team (coached at the time by Tommy Lasorda) received sex slaves (women as well as children) as a reward according to their sporting results...

One thing little known to the general public is that the famous tennis player Serena Williams has several alters including one that is named "Psycho-Serena", it is the alter present on the tennis court, it is the super-athlete. It would seem that the world's no. 1 in women's tennis has developed a dissociative identity disorder. In the biographical documentary "Venus and Serena" (2012), she reveals and lists in front of the camera her different alters: "Yes, I really have different personalities and different attitudes. There's "Psycho-Serena", she's always on the court, she's training, she's in the game, she's amazing, she's a super-athlete. There is "Summer", it helps me a lot, for example when I have a long letter to write or for other things, it is "Summer" who does it. And there's this other girl, "Megan," she's an excited one, you can't follow her. There is also "Taquanda", a tough one, she is not Christian (laughs), she comes from the ghetto. She was at SUV Open in 2009 (editor's note: the report then shows an excerpt of a match where we see "Taquanda" vulgarly insulting and violently threatening a boy with a bullet). In this particular match, I wasn't there, but I got the feedback^[12!] "

This last statement - "I was not there" - means that she does not remember this scene of irritation because it was not "she" who was playing this match of the US-Open, which shows that there are really amnesic walls between her different alters. Serena clearly states in this biographical documentary that she has several personalities independent of each other, so she would have a dissociative identity disorder, something common to MK slaves.

During a match at Wimbledon in July 2014, Serena, considered by many to be the best tennis player of all time, appeared on the court completely disoriented, literally no longer knowing how to play tennis or even catch a ball, a totally implausible scene. The newspapers then headlined: "the incredible unease", "disoriented and unable to hold a ball", "it borders on the ridiculous"... The American tennis federation claimed that the player "suffered from a virus" without giving more details... but then why did she come to the court to make a fool of herself in this way? Or was it rather the alter Psycho-Serena who was not at the rendezvous that day?

Did you know that Tiger Woods, the best golfer of all time has amnesia during competitions and is unable to remember his best shots?

Eldrick Woods is the son of Earl Woods, a former colonel and green beret of the Special Forces in Vietnam. Eldrick was nicknamed "Tiger" in memory of a Vietnamese soldier who fought alongside his father. The "Tiger" began playing golf from the age of 2. He notably made an appearance in 1978 on the show "The Mike Douglas Show" in which we see this little guy demonstrate his already very clean swing. Tiger Woods was from an early age a "child star" adored by the media and destined to become the best, in the same way as the singer Michael Jackson. A former golfer and commentator for the Professional Golfers' Association of America (PGA) said Woods was scheduled by his father.

Indeed, his incredible talent as a golfer defies logic, standards and statistics. But is it only due to the hypnosis used on him? Tiger's father participated in psychological and memory control operations on soldiers when he was in the army, notably in Vietnam. Earl Woods reportedly decided to use these same techniques on his son and commissioned a military psychiatrist, Jay Bunza, to reprogram Tiger like a computer. Bunza has indeed worked on a strange project of hypnotizing Tiger before his golf games. In interviews, Tiger stated that he totally forgot entire sections of some competitions. In the documentary "Tiger's Prowl: His life", he reveals: "I have these moments of black holes, I don't remember. I know I was there, but I don't remember how I played (...) It's like a trance, so I let my subconscious play and I don't know what the result will be. There are a lot of shots where I don't remember anything. I just remember getting ready, taking the club out of the bag, etc. but once the ball was fired, I don't remember seeing it go... It's a very strange thing."

Jay Bunza's techniques have produced extraordinary results, but how is it possible that Tiger does not remember his most wonderful moves?

In 2008, former "multifunctional" athlete Herschel Walker revealed that he had a dissociative identity disorder. He explains this in detail in his book entitled "Breaking Free: My Life with Dissociative Identity Disorder".

The same year, the American channel ABC News devoted a report to him! [513]). We learn that Walker is a true legend of the sport: he played on the Georgia Bulldogs football team in the 80s, he won several world records in athletics and he won the famous Heisman Trophy in 1982. But Walker now claims that it was not he who won this famous trophy at the time. This champion who played fifteen seasons of American football, who was even a dancer in the Fort Worth Ballet, a businessman, a public man, a husband, he is none of these people he says... He says, "These are personalities who can do different things for you. In competition, I'm a totally different person."

Herschel Walker says that his alter named "Warrior" assumed the football matches by cashing in all the pain that could arise during violent physical contact. The alter "Hero" is the public and media figure, while the alter "Sentinel" had the role of preserving his friends and family. In 1983, the athlete married Cindy Grossman, today the couple is separated and Cindy testifies: "At first, it was just a very strange behavior (...) he had the ability to hide that because I think all the alter inside were focused on football. " When her career and the competitions ended, Cindy says that her husband's subconscious inner system began to unravel: "I began to discover the alter (...) I noticed the changes in his voice, he sometimes took a hoarse voice and said strange things, as if he didn't know who I was. He then called me "Miss Lady". It's something hard to explain, even his face was changing. The first thing I thought about was that he had the devil in him." His wife then turned to the Church for help... "I wasn't necessarily asking for an exorcism, I was just trying to get answers (...) I think he has a lot of alter, but I don't know how many, I can't know, but I've met a number of them. "

When his sporting career ended, Walker recounts how his alter personalities began to take control in an anarchic way. It was from there that he began to develop a morbid fascination with weapons and death. He writes in his book: "The visceral enjoyment I feel in seeing the impact and then the spraying of the brain with blood is like a fireworks display." He has been several times about to commit a murder by firearm, especially against his wife: "He put the gun on my temple saying 'I'm going to blow your brains up'. I then had to have the strength of God in me because I answered him in my eyes: Go and pull the trigger, I know where I'm going, but you, do you know where you're going to go? There was someone in front of me who was fundamentally bad."

Walker has never denied that he threatened his wife in this way, but he says he does not remember. During a therapy session with his wife, Dr. Jerry Mungadze, his therapist, said he had seen the emergence of a totally rabid alter personality who literally wanted to kill everyone in the room. Dr. Mungadze reports: "His eyes have changed. The eyes that emerged had absolutely nothing to do with me, and when he said that he was going to kill me, I gladly believed him... It wasn't About Herschel, he was a rabid alter." Finally that day, "Walker" deflected his anger by making a hole in the door of the cabinet with a punch, it was then that another alter emerged, this time it was a young boy: "He had a terrible pain because he had just broken his hand." Herschel does not remember this scene of violence either, but he makes it clear that we must accept all these things and that his illness is not an excuse for violence. After 8 years of therapy, without taking any medication, he has much more control over his alter personalities.

1 - Networks of power

Let's start first by defining the word "network". It is a term that derives from the Latin word ''retis'', in the plural ''retes'', ''rets'', meaning ''net''. The term "rets", most often used in the plural, meant a net to catch birds, fish or game. In a figurative sense, it meant an artifice not which one seizes someone or his mind. In scientific terms, it is a set of points communicating with each other.

The word "network" is currently defined as:

- An organized set whose elements, dependent on a center, are divided into various points.

- A clandestine organization whose members work in liaison with each other.

Networks result in a grouping of entities (individuals, associations, various organizations, etc.) that are connected to each other. The networks are deployed in many areas: politics, the judiciary, the media, religion,scientific and medical field, associative, sports, etc... The purpose of these networks is to bring together as many people as possible and to create bridges from one network to another. These networks can be more or less apparent and even totally occult. This operating system is not in itself something negative, and is generally very effective. However, we live in a time when elitist networks simply serve to enslave a mass of humans at the bottom of a large pyramidal hierarchy. The connections between these different networks such as Freemasonry (the different Luciferian lodges), mafia organizations and certain sectarian and religious communities are at the head of what can be called a "meta-network" that seems to structure our current society. A meta-network organized to control and manipulate society at all levels, in a global way, in order to establish a New World Order, the reign of the "civilizing and liberating god": Lucifer.

Freemasonry is one of the organizations that has built the most powerful and extensive network. Indeed, its members are present on all continents and in all fields, including the most influential circles: politics, justice, humanitarian, intelligence, media, education, health, police... Freemasonry currently forms a kind of structure of our society, a network that passes as much through banks, public administration (taxes, social security, etc.) to national education and the courts (two essential points). It functions as a transmission belt that takes care of transmitting information from one section to another when necessary. It is therefore a network that crisscrosses the whole of society, with multiple ramifications and pawns that can be moved according to the stakes.

One of the characteristics of these secret societies, but also of the intelligence services and classified government projects, is to maintain a compartmentalization of information within the network, the pyramidal hierarchical organization participates in this compartmentalization. Indeed, each individual of the network receives only what "is good to know for him", that is to say that he will only access what he needs to know to do his job. He thus remains totally ignorant of the globality of the project or projects, receiving only what is strictly necessary in terms of information for the work he carries out at his level. Here's how this notion of systematic compartmentalization of information is described by Mark Phillips:

"In fact, the "need to know" is a term officially used by the CIA and other "alphabetic" organizations such as the FBI, the NSA and the DIA. Basically, it means that you are only told what you "need to know" to perform your share of an operation without you being fully aware of what you are working for. In my case, I believed that the government was developing mind control to rid society of crime and mental illness. No one saw fit to tell me that the aim was in fact to control the population, to create the superhuman war machines of the 'Special Forces' or to use them to torture and brutalise innocent people (...) I didn't have a clue about that. I was just focused on "my part" and enthusiastic about the prospects, and it did not occur to me for a moment that I could be contributing to the greatest threat that humanity has ever faced[614].

Faced with these networks, especially Masonic, it is difficult to establish a notion of counter-power, as the members (brothers) are systematically present in each organization and in each political party supposedly opposed... While knowing that they have all taken the oath to serve the same occult interests (those of GADLU, the Great Architect of the Universe) and to systematically cover each other in case of glitch. Regardless of the political party or the seriousness of the offences of which they would be incriminated, the oath of loyalty to a "brother" always passes in priority... We cannot therefore speak of independence and neutrality with regard to the French justice system, which today is totally infiltrated by the Masonic network.

Since the Freemasons systematically render themselves a service to each other, a "brother" of lodge will always come before a layman, so we are dealing with a kind of generalized Masonic conflict of interest, extremely harmful to our society and to the smooth running of a real justice supposed to be rendered in the name of the people. Upon taking office, every judge and every lawyer takes an oath to deliver fair justice for all citizens. The question that arises today is this: would the Masonic oath, this systematic solidarity between "brothers", not stand in the way of the establishment of the truth in many judicial proceedings? It should be noted that Italy and England oblige legal professionals to declare their membership of any Masonic obedience, which is unfortunately not the case in France.

Members of occult networks can also manipulate each other for various interests. The technique of "returning the elevator" makes it possible to make beholden people to whom one has "rendered service" at an appropriate time. The compromising information contained in heavy files also helps to maintain constant pressure and blackmail on the members of the network. The files can even be expanded by real traps (such as photos or videos taken during a sexual situation where children are introduced) to maintain blackmail and permanent control over the person. As they say: "they all stand by the goatee", so as not to obey and keep quiet, because usually all involved in dirty business. Many suffer from dissociative disorders related to their early childhood, causing them to perpetuate despicable acts, which strengthens the files that serve to control and silence them. It is a vicious circle in which the law of silence reigns.

The influence peddling of these networks is particularly virulent in the judicial environment, and for good reason... Hubert Delompré, the administrator of the site deni-justice.net, denounces for example the Masonic signs inserted in certain letters circulating between magistrates. These signs (called triponctuation) indicate to the addressee who will read the mail that particular attention must be paid to the paragraph between two of these signs. That is to say that the content is imposed on all the "brothers" and that they will have to do everything to ensure that the message succeeds, whether the judgment is justified or not. This is called influence peddling and when the letters contain this kind of sign, the judgment always ends in a condemnation against the layman. Chantal Arnaud (ardechejustice.fr) speaks in these cases of "Masonic judgments", i.e. false information and allegations are brought by the judges themselves who allow themselves to write anything and everything. According to her, these practices, concerning some magistrates, can be attacked for forgery, as the manipulations are so flagrant. These embezzlements even go so far as to remove certain documents from the file as evidence. There are truly aberrations of judgment given in the name of the people without anyone being able to react since all this happens in the courts, very often behind closed doors... and by the magistrates themselves. The difficulty in the face of these shameful judgments is that they are de facto imposed, the judiciary embodying "the law". It is therefore very difficult for an ordinary citizen to counter such actions by a judicial system that imposes a steamroller that is almost unassailable, intimidating and threatening. The term generally used by the media to soften these aberrations is: "judicial dysfunction". It is not a question of malfunctions but of an organization that does not leave room for the slightest mistake...

This world of justice is a corporatist world where clerks, bailiffs, lawyers, judges, prosecutors, eat together, go out together and marry each other. We find this same way in the political and journalistic world. Thus, everyone protects themselves, it is a kind of caste above the people. The pyramid structure of society is not something new, but the problem is the influence peddling and conflicts of interest that plague society, both at the legal, media, political and pharmaceutical levels... When the judicial system is clearly abusing its power, it is time to sound the alarm. All court decisions are rendered in the name of the French people, so "malfunctions" and other "errors" of justice should be judged in turn by the French people to condemn and dismiss these magistrates who abuse their power. Some call this system of corruption: "The Republic of Friends"; but should we say instead "The republic of the brothers"...

What is perverse in these networks is the secret with a big "S", it is a parallel hierarchy, an invisible power. In the France 5 documentary "Grand-Orient: les frères invisibles de la*république",* the Freemason Alain Bauer declares without any restraint in front of a camera that "what is studied in the lodge on Monday becomes a bill on Friday and a law the following week, the process, even if I accelerate it for the subject is extremely fast because everything is linear".

Fred Zeller who was at the head of the Grand Orient de France from 1971 to 1973 said: "The influence of masonry is perhaps even more important than under the third or fourth republic, it is placed on another level. There is no association, group, trade union in which freemasons are not present and in the most eminent positions of responsibility.' (Video archive INA.fr)

2 - Operation of the Network when a protective parent sounds the alarm

The numerous cases related to paedocriminality have made it possible to determine how the Network works to systematically cover up the case and possibly recover the child or children who are at the heart of the case.

It all starts with a complaint filed by the protective parent (usually the mother who still has full confidence in the justice system of her country) who discovers that her child or children are being sexually abused by the parent (or other family members). From there, this family is identified and the first complaint is generally dismissed but in France this usually leads to the placement of the child at the ASE (Child Welfare). The judge who is completely unaware of the evidence of ill-treatment that the protective parent brings to his file will place the child in a home. The latter then finds himself isolated and "formatted", while the mistreatment is perpetuated... According to the report of the CEDIF committee on child protection: "The uprooting of children from their families has become a real social phenomenon in France. On the other hand, the little-publicized scandals surrounding in-house placements also show that social services can become the instrument of children's misfortune, through clumsy and sometimes bad interventions.

intentional. Moreover, as Mr Pierre Naves, Inspector General of Social Affairs, acknowledges, half of the investments decided are not justified.'

You should know that a child placement brings in a lot of money... Some sources claim that the general councils receive several thousand euros a month from our taxes for each child cared for by the ESA. In France, abusive investments are constantly multiplying. why is that?

As discussed in Chapter 7, children in residential care are ideal targets for the network, especially those suffering from dissociative disorders as a result of sexual abuse. These are the small victims of the second zone, not being destined for elitist positions. The protective parent is ignored, or even deprived of his rights towards his child, because "psychological expertise", carried out by members of the network, will serve to devalue his word. If the parent insists on becoming too virulent (especially if he is socially isolated) he may undergo abusive psychiatric internment, thus allowing to ruin his mental health by a chemical treatment of shock (See the case of Patricia Poupard). All these arbitrary decisions going through the courts, which as we have seen are gangrened by the network. If the aggressor father is not already part of the "family", an agreement will be made with him: in exchange for immunity, he will have to "lend" his child to the network. This whole process is covered by the successive interventions of the various "lightning lightningcoons" (social services, pseudo-child protection associations, crooked lawyers, etc.) which have the function of channelling the file so that it is stifled and does not become a threat to the network (the notion of "lightningcoon" will be defined below).

We note that these methods used to isolate the child from the protective parent and generally end up putting it in the hands of the executioner progenitor are perfectly established thanks to a network system, a well-oiled cog, all the members of which are connected and know perfectly the measures to be taken in cases of paedocriminality. Indeed, the process is always the same, the goal being first of all that the protective parent:

- Finds himself ruined by the cost of the procedures that do not end, to the delight of the complicit lawyers.

- Finds himself isolated, that he passes for a madman and a bad parent... and when the Masonic network gets involved, it finds itself in situations where even the administration seems to harm it at all levels. A more or less subtle form of societal harassment is taking place.

Overall, here is everything that has been found in the cases of paedocriminality (due to the systematic repetition of protocols):

- No serious investigation is carried out to verify the child's accusations (a complaint is usually dismissed).

- No protection for victims and parents who report abuse.

- No proper medical examination of the child (including mri of the lower ducts or anuscopy).

- The child's word is systematically denied. The Outreau affair is now systematically used to claim that we cannot rely on the word of children: see the book by journalist Jacques Thomet "Retour à Outreau: contre-enquête sur une manipulation pédocriminelle".

- No statistics on rape (and disappearance) of minors. Indeed, this subject seems so taboo that no figures are available as to the number of children raped, the number of convictions and the number of dismissals without follow-up.

- Total media omerta on the ultra-sensitive issue of paedocriminality cases.

3 - The lightning first sight strategy

In his book entitled "L'affaire Vincent: au cœur du terrorisme d'état" (2010), French activist Christian 'Stan' Maillaud, a former gendarme, describes a technique he called the "lightning arrest strategy". This is an infiltration method aimed at recovering and channelling sensitive files in order to smother them. Here's how Stan Maillaud defines these methods:

The "lightning lading strategy" is simple, practically unstoppable, and systematically used in cases of paedophile crime, or any case that risks disrupting the order of organized crime (editor's note: the Network).

It consists in the establishment of a clever deception whose purpose is to interfere in all defence proceedings, whether legal, communication or other, brought or likely to be undertaken by victims or victims' families. The actions in question must then be channelled and directed, as must public attention and debates, in a direction that does not in any depth threaten the interests of organised crime. The favourite terrain on which organised crime wants to confine victims and victims' families is obviously its judicial deception, which is widespread throughout our perverted societies.

Thus, the "lightning ladle" is most often in the form of court officers, but also associations, the combination of the two remaining the most effective for organized crime. With regard to these associations, or other civic organisations, there are, on the one hand, those that have been fabricated by organised crime - such as the famous ''Child Focus'', a so-called association for combating paedophile crime sponsored by the Belgian King ''him self''' - and on the other hand those whose origin is sincere but which are quickly infiltrated by real agents of organised crime.

The aim of the operations is then to excel in matters of illusion, in order to deceive all victims and families of victims as well as the general public and to attract into its web as many victims as possible in search of the help that is forbidden to them by the judicial and political deception.

And when it comes to illusionism, impostors have only the choice of methods, mastering the rules of the rigged playground, and having no more moods or moral sense than the criminals they serve and protect. This is how it is common to see impostures of associations committed in ceremonies or galas of charity or champagne - rothschild! - cakes and cupcakes generously delight entire assemblies of notables of their own, much like in the so-called demonstrations against poverty and hunger in the world. The subsidies flowing afloat, for these associations, such pompous festivities are de rigueur in the thickest obscenity and cynicism (...)

With regard to judicial officers, in the context that we have today, their profession is in essence the most perfect sham, like the judiciary in general. Because in order not to risk being disbarred, no lawyer dares to confront in depth the criminal excesses of an institution to which he is otherwise subject, but in fact limiting himself to treating only the symptoms. Every lawyer is just a piece of the rigged chessboard and knows it, a "centerpiece" otherwise he would no longer be a lawyer. Because a good lawyer, in our real context of judicial and societal deception, is a "dead" lawyer, that is to say fallen into disgrace vis-à-vis the institution and does not survive it for long, for lack of clients; or a lawyer who has been disbarred or is in the process of being struck off the bar, or a lawyer who courageously abandons his toque.

Of course, it is the same for any magistrate, but I am only dealing here with the strategy of lightning rods, it is here the auxiliary servile of justice who is in the "honor", because in addition to the fact that I have just raised, when to the profound dishonesty of such a profession in the current state of our judicial institution and our society, we must fear the propensity that lawyers willingly have to serve as a lightning rod for your defense. Because many are accustomed to this kind of maneuver, or an obscure negotiation with the opposing party, with a prosecutor or a president of a court, intervenes behind your back to define the outcome that your case must take. The gullible client, does not see most of the time that he is deceived, and victim of the illusions of a real play in which his court officer overflows with melodramatic effects to make him believe that he defends his cause fiercely...

4 - The "syndrome of false memories" and "parental alienation"

This false memory syndrome is a theory that memory can be fabricated or "contaminated" by illusory memories. This theory, coined by former Lutheran pastor Ralph Underwager, is generally used to defend parents accused of incest. Many therapists have been attacked in court because they are accused of having implanted false memories in their patients, thus becoming themselves the culprits instead of the executioners. In most cases, it is a question of attacking the speech of the adult victim when he remembers the sexual abuse suffered during childhood. This "syndrome of false memories" is not a diagnosis recognized, neither by the American Psychiatric Association, nor by the WHO (World Health Organization). The term "syndrome" is absolutely not appropriate because this theory does not describe any series of symptoms that can be used to establish a real diagnosis. Yet, even today, "experts of false memories" come to the courts to discredit the words of victims. Richard J. Lowenstein (president of the International Society for the Study of Dissociation) said in 1992: "I know of no research or clinical description that would empirically validate the existence of such a symptom. False memory syndrome is a syndrome without signs and without symptoms (the characteristics that define a syndrome)."

In an interview with the Dutch paedophile magazine "Paidika: The Journal of Paedophilia" devoted to ''the love of children'', Dr. Ralph Underwager clearly invited pedophiles to proudly affirm their sexual choices: "The pedophiles waste a lot of time and energy defending their choice. I do not think a paedophile should have to do that. Paedophiles can proudly and courageously take responsibility for their choice. They can say that what they want is to find the best way to love. I am also a theologian and as such I believe that it is Deu's will that there be proximity, intimacy and unity of the flesh, between people. A pedophile can say, "This proximity is also possible for me depending on the choice I made." (...) What I think is that pedophiles can say that the search for intimacy and love is their choice. Boldly they can declare: "I believe that this is in fact a part of the will of God[615]. "

Ralph Underwager, former director of the Institute for Psychological Therapies in Minesota (USA), was regularly called to testify in the courts where he systematically attacked the credibility of people making accusations of sexual abuse. In 1993, he came to testify in France, in Aix en Provence, to defend the members of the sect "The Family" (ex Children of God) indicted for "aggravated pimping, voluntary violence against minors, sequestration and corruption of minors". All 22 members of the sect were acquitted in part thanks to Underwager.

Ralph Underwager is the official founder of false Memory Syndrome Foundation, the FMSF (Foundation for false memory syndrome). This foundation, which is not a scientific organization competent in psychiatry, is regularly called to the rescue in cases of paedocriminality involving traumatic memories, especially related to satanic ritual abuses. When Underwager and other founding members of the FMSF were themselves charged with pedophilia, Underwager was quickly forced to resign to be replaced by Pamela Freyd, claiming to be herself a victim of false accusations of sexual abuse that her daughter, Jennifer J. Frey, made against her and her husband. His daughter, a professor of psychology at the University of Oregon, publicly accused her parents at a conference entitled "Controversies around Recovered Memories of Incest and Ritualistic Abuse." A lecture given in August 1993 in Ann Arbor, Michigan (USA). The mother then turned to the psychiatrist Harold Lief (member of the fmsf board of directors) to make a diagnosis on the "disorders" of her daughter: according to this psychiatrist, heterosexual couples do not rape their children and the repressed memories in cases of sexual abuse do not exist, the case is closed...

In 1995, at a conference of therapists grouped together in the Society for the Investigation, Treatment and Prevention of Ritual and Cult Abuse, Walter Bowart (the author of the book "Operation Mind Control") said that the FMSF, all those people who work to pass on traumatic memories , dissociative, for "false memories", was a creation of the CIA aimed at discrediting and misinforming the mental health community, and that it served primarily to silence victims of government experiments of mind control.

In the French-speaking world, this theory of the syndrome of false memories is promulgated mainly by Hubert Van Gijseghem and Paul Bensoussan. "Experts" who intervene in many judicial cases in order to put forward this theory before magistrates, police officers or social workers. Van Gijseghem regularly uses the "parental alienation syndrome" (sap) to defend fathers accused of sexual abuse... Another "syndrome" having no scientific basis, invented from scratch by the pedophile Richard Gardner. Indeed, for Gardner sexual activities between adults and children are part of the natural repertoire of human sexual activity. He even believes that pedophilia can improve the survival of the human species by serving "reproductive goals". According to him: "Paedophilia has been considered the norm by a vast majority of people throughout the history of the world (...) it is a widely spread practice and accepted by, literally, billions of people". Gardner believes that children spontaneously engage in sexual behaviors and can initiate sexual encounters by "seducing" the adult[616].

Richard Gardner defines parental alienation syndrome as follows: SAP is a disorder specific to children, occurring almost exclusively in custody disputes, where one parent (usually the mother) conditions the child to hate the other parent (usually the father). Children usually side with the parent who engages in this conditioning, creating their own cabal against the father.

This involves blaming the mother for any problems arising in the father's relationship with the child, the aim being to remedy them by increasing the child's contact with his father while reducing his contact with the mother. All this is obviously imposed by court decisions. This is one of the reasons why, in cases of paedocriminality, the protective parent who denounces the abuse is burdened by the courts and has custody of his child withdrawn, the latter being automatically entrusted to the alleged aggressor parent.

Sherry Quick, a lawyer and president of the American Coalition for Abuse Awareness (ACAA), points out that judges "tend to consistently believe" the experts hired by the court when they state that the mother fabricated allegations of sexual assault on the child and then imposed "brainwashing" on the child to convince him of these assaults. , this in order to take revenge on the ex-spouse... If the mother persists in her claims, she is perceived as obsessive and unstable and can even be interned in psychiatry while custody of the children will be given to the father...

In summary, Gardner's SAP theory and its various scales to distinguish between true and false statements of child sexual assault are not informed by science and have not been recognized by most child abuse experts. Rather than subjecting his theories to scientific evaluation, Gardner published most of his writings through his own publishing house or in non-scientific journals. Since Gardner's theories are based on his own clinical observations - not scientific data - they must be interpreted in the context of his atypical conceptions of pedophilia and what he calls the climate of hysteria surrounding child sexual assault cases. Gardner's theories are based on his assumption that sexual intercourse between a child and an adult is not harmful in itself and on his belief that there is an epidemic of false allegations of sexual assault, made by vindictive wives at the time of custody disputes. Gardner persists in these convictions despite a host of clinical and experimental data that demonstrate the contrary. This is not the same as claiming that such allegations are always true or that parents never attempt to manipulate their children when they dispute custody. However, all elements of psychological expertise on which a child's safety will depend must be subjected to empirical checks. When a theory is unable to evolve and improve in response to the results of research, it leaves the field of science for that of ideology and dogma. Given the harms that threaten children and their families in this area, legal and mental health professionals must constantly challenge their views to ensure that their custody decisions are based on the best available scientific evidence, rather than on unfounded opinions, prejudice or ideology[617].

Let's go back to Hubert Van Gijseghem... He was called as an "expert" at outreau's third trial in Rennes in May 2015. The hearings were public, so many people were able to attend his speech and report the facts. This follower of the theory of "false memories" and sap ("parental alienation") then exposed to the bar the best ways, according to him, to collect the child's word so that it is as reliable as possible. He highlighted the fact that the more the child is questioned "outside the frame", the more his testimony will be "polluted". According to him, a testimony gathered by parents, by childminders, by a teacher, but also by child welfare associations or by a psychologist are worthless and must be avoided at all costs... It also prohibits places such as the house, the room or the school to listen to the child so as not to establish a link of familiarity... It recommends that the child be listened to only in a police station, during a single hearing during which the child must feel a certain pressure so that he feels obliged to tell the truth, "here we must tell the truth, the child must be impressed", said Van Gijseghem, while recommending that the parents should not be present at this hearing.

It also recommends excluding the protective parent or any other person who might collect a testimony that is embarrassing (for the network) because it would automatically be "contaminated" by the child's interaction with others. If we stick to the statements of Van Gijseghem who takes great care to exclude any actor outside the institutions who could listen to the testimony of the child, the latter must go to the police station itself to be interviewed only once by an unknown person... In addition, he warns not to use drawing, toys, dolls or plans to make the child express himself on his traumatic experience, claiming that "scientific research" invalidates all this.

During his testimony before the court, Van Gijseghem repeatedly used the term "scientific research versus the man in the street", as the flamboyant standard of "the expert" that he is. But what scientific research exactly is he talking about? We will not know in this court of assizes. Van Gijseghem was unable to answer Master Forster (lawyer for the civil party) when the latter asked him the title of his doctoral thesis of which he had found no trace... Forster also confronted him with a whole series of contradictory studies and research concerning his smoky theories on the collection of the child's word and false memories. Faced with these contradictions, Van Gijseghem had nothing to answer and remained silent, the work of this man is indeed very controversial in the world of child psychology.

Van Gijseghem explains that parents, teachers and therapists must be completely excluded in order to be able to properly validate the child's speech. He said: "There is a risk of slippage where the child ends up telling anything... The child will start to tell fairytale, satanic rituals, sacrifices, cannibalism, etc... myths that we don't know where it came from...'' Van Gijseghem thus discredits everything related to traumatic ritual abuse, invalidating these testimonies by the fact that the child slips because his memory has been contaminated by adults: they are therefore false memories, the case is closed, no need to investigate...

Van Gijseghem also claims that a true testimony will tend to decrease in the number of details, while a false story would become more and more detailed over time, but again he does not elaborate on the research or sources behind these claims. Yet traumatic memories can resurface gradually with more and more precise sensory details, thus making the testimony more and more provided. But according to him: "The repressed memories are part of an unfulfilled reconstruction, the person fills holes with false memories."

But if there are "holes", it is because there is a traumatic amnesia and who says traumatic amnesia says hidden memories that can go back further in time. These are fractions of memories that must then be reconstructed like a puzzle to be able to integrate and verbalize them in a chronological framework: this is the whole issue of the testimonies of survivors, attacked precisely on the fact that they cannot give a precise and chronological account of the facts. This is how survivors suffering from severe dissociative disorders find themselves totally discredited, unfortunately...

It is classic in this type of case to highlight the psychological state of the dissociated victim in order to discredit his testimony. On the contrary, the diagnosis of dissociative disorders should be one more piece to put in the file to support the fact that the victim has indeed experienced severe trauma, or even mental control in the case of a dissociative identity disorder. Logically, in the face of profound dissociative disorders (consequence of severe trauma), the investigation should then be deepened rather than closed without follow-up...

During this trial, Van Gijseghem clearly admitted to the President of the Court that he was not competent in neuro-biological sciences or psychotraumatology, even though it is precisely these areas of research that make it possible to understand the functioning of traumatic memories linked to dissociative states.

We are now in a situation where the justice system seems at first sight to be totally ignorant of psychotrauma, and the judiciary does not seem to want to update itself on this knowledge, which is essential in order to understand and deal properlywith the cases of paedocriminality. It would seem that anything that has anything to do with dissociative disorder and traumatic memory should have absolutely no credibility in cases related to child sexual abuse. Everything is done to stifle and discredit this field of research, especially when these questions come to arise before a court of assizes... It would certainly not be a question of opening Pandora's box in the middle of a court of law!

There is therefore a war of communication, or rather a "war of memory" with regard to scientific research that makes it possible to understand how the brain works in the face of trauma. As a result, disinformation accompanied by withholding of information is put in place to prevent these studies from being widely disclosed and taught in medical schools, thus being able to find themselves heavily weighed in the courts (See the conclusion of chapter 5).

The care of victims with a view to their recovery is therefore impacted by all these institutional "negligences". Psychotraumatologist Muriel Salmona said: *"The*problem of the public authorities is that on theone hand we are fighting violence, we have made recent laws, as in February 2010 with the law on incest; but normally in these laws, there had to be the establishment of information, of training of doctors, because doctors are not trained in all this new research and all this new knowledge that we have. There was also to be the creation of health centres, that is to say that we had to be able to receive the victims, except there is nothing that is done! In this case, we absolutely need enormous political will in order to be able to take care of the victims. Caring for the victims is really about avoiding suffering, avoiding the worsening of inequalities, avoiding situations of marginalization, exclusion, distress... And importantly, it is to prevent the violence from happening again. When you have been a victim of violence, you can again be a victim of violence (...) But one of the ways to treat oneself will also be violence against others (...) Violence exerted on the other is a drug, and in an unequal society there may be people who will be designated as ready-made victims, available to instrumentalize them and to "drug themselves" with them[618].

During the Outreau 3 trial in Rennes, the psychotherapist Hélène Romano said on Europel: "We are no longer currently training professionals in France to hear children, this is very damaging because there are still recommendations on the hearings of little ones, children and teenagers who are not at all or little applied at the moment for lack of means and will because it is said that listening to children no longer serves muchpurpose i619]..." The sham of Outreau's first trial in 2004 was largely instrumental in anchoring in public opinion that children "lie and tell anything" about sexual abuse.

5 - The focus on the internet tool (cyber-police)

There are thousands of paedocriminal sites and millions of paedo-pornographic files circulating on the Internet. This is why governments, the media and associations focus on the web, thinking that this is where all paedocriminality is concentrated. Interpol and practically all the national police forces are setting up Internet surveillance cells. Public campaigns systematically aim to raise awareness of paedophilia on the Web, thus maintaining the idea that the whole problem is identified and that governments are therefore providing the necessary responses to this scourge. It is indisputable that paedo-pornographic content disseminated on the web must be detected, deleted and repressed, but we cannot limit the issue of combating paedocriminality to only the Internet tool...

Here is what the Belgian activist Marcel Vervloesem said about the focus of the public authorities on the Internet, while real and non-virtual networks continue their activities without being in any way worried by the justice: "The photos that land on the Internet have above all been produced. The child was raped at the time the photo was taken and it is not the internet that rapes the children. The executioners who rape children and produce this material are the rapists and they are the ones who put their photos on the Internet. This is what I have always said at the International Congress, I have always told them that we should not concern ourselves with the problem of the Internet. No, it is not the Internet that violates, it is not the Internet that tortures, no, the children who appear on the Internet have been victims of these practices. Who are the perpetrators of these practices? That is what is important, the Internet is not important. This is what I said to the Congress in Holland, among others in front of international lawyers, I clarified this position and I told them: 'No! Internet is the end of the channel, before that we rape the child, we torture him or whatever, and it is after we publish the photo by broadcasting it via the internet, it is another step (...) When you see reports on television, you hear all the time: "We have uncovered a paedophilia network on the Internet." ... It's rubbish[620] !"

in front of international lawyers, I clarified this position and I told them: 'No! Internet is the end of the channel, before that we rape the child, we torture him or whatever, and it is after we publish the photo by broadcasting it via the internet, it is another step (...) When you see reports on television, you hear all the time: "We have uncovered a paedophilia network on the Internet." ... It's rubbish[620] !"

Indeed, the root of the problem is the producers of these paedo-pornographic materials who rape, torture and kill children. When the cyber-police attack virtual networks on the Internet, they attack consumers of images and videos and not the heart of the paedocriminal network, which is not virtual but real. The most dangerous paedocriminals like Marc Dutroux for example, generally have no connection with the Internet.

In addition, the Internet is a global network without any regulation, an iceberg whose submerged part (the dark web, where Internet users circulate under total anonymity) contains the most despicable practices of the human being. Therefore, from a technical point of view, the few sites closed by the authorities are only a drop in the ocean, ten others will bloom again the next day. The fight against paedocriminality is not virtual, paedocriminal networks are not virtual. This government strategy aimed at focusing on the Internet tool is also a kind of lightning lashing that channels the police forces into the virtual, thus leaving the field open to the real producers of child pornographic material organized in networks. As we have seen in the chapter on ritual abuse, the testimonies of the victims of these Satanist networks very often report that rapes, tortures and murders are photographed and filmed. All this represents a large, lucrative market which the mafia networks do not deprive themselves of. However, the police obviously do not go back to the source of all these atrocities, they do not have the function of dismantling the Paedocriminal Network, the digital content broadcast on the Internet being only the end of the channel.

3 - "National Security"

In the United States, the National Security Act was signed in 1947 to reorganize the armed forces and intelligence services. Its main purpose was to protect military secrets and push the CIA into a "secret war" against the Soviets: the Cold War. This legislative act was the beginning of the implementation of the leaden screed which allows, today more than ever, to cover all "sensitive" government projects, such as programs on mind control. It is under the protection of this "national security" that the Bluebird, Paperclip, Artichoke, MK-Ultra, etc. projects have developed. All research on psychotronics is also covered by the National Security Act, making it impossible to publicly (officially) disclose anything about these programs. With the various amendments that have been added to it over the years, in particular that of Reagan in 1984, the United States government is now able to conceal and censor everything it wants... Simply by hiding behind these two words: "national security", it is as simple as that. It is a smokescreen behind which some members of the government hide crimes committed against innocent civilians. Mind control is certainly the most shocking practice that must at all costs be hidden from citizens through what has become of the National Security Act: an aberrant abuse of power. The secrecy of information, or withholding of information, is an excellent way to exercise power. Thus, this government has carte blanche to violate the laws of the country and the rights of citizens.

The most telling example of what the National Security Act can be used for is the case of Cathy O' Brien, a victim of the MK-Monarch. Indeed, this case clearly demonstrates how this system works, which literally blocks any legal action despite the amount of evidence accumulated - some of which was provided by FBI officials in the O'Brien case - which should logically give rise to investigations, judgments and convictions; ultimately leading to public disclosure by the media of all these covert activities related to mind control. Cathy O'Brien's companion, Mark Phillips, said that his country could not be able to solve the problem in terms of justice, it was constantly repeated to him that it could never get justice because of "National Security."

This "national security" also poses a problem in therapeutic terms, because all knowledge about dissociative disorders, programming and MK deprogramming is censored, blocked. Some knowledge and technologies are therefore inaccessible to therapists and victims. This abuse of power also makes it possible to interpret the legal texts in a certain way and to stifle the testimonies of survivors, always on the grounds of "national security". Access to the courts for unfortunate victims is also hindered by the roublardise of the many judicial "experts" who do everything to discredit them.

Thus, deprived of the benefit of the many discoveries induced by the research of the DoD (Department of Defense) and the technologies it has developed, psychiatric medicine is still learning curves in terms of establishing state-of-the-art care protocols for patients. In other words, the actors of psychiatry themselves are becoming the second group of victims of mind/information control.

The profession of psychiatrist is currently experiencing a crisis and is at the classic crossroads between failure and success. It would appear that the path to success through the application of currently available technologies is blocked for reasons of national security.

As a direct result of how the secrets of DoD psychiatric research are managed, and the resulting federal information retention practices, psychiatric actors are on the defensive of their patients, the courts, and, more recently, particular interest groups. These groups launch attacks against psychiatric professionals aimed at destroying them. Heavily funded organizations with extremely dubious programs such as the False Memory Foundation (FMF) and the Church of Scientology have publicly denounced the profession of psychiatrist. ''America in The Middle of Trance - Formation'' - Cathy O'Brien & Mark Phillips, 2012, p.61

Cathy O'Brien also describes how the juvenile court judge who was ruling on the case of her daughter - also a victim of ritual abuse and MK programming - closed the door to the media and the public for "reasons of national security" while shocking violations of various laws ensued. Here is what Cathy O'Brien writes about her daughter's situation, which is subject to the National Security Act: "Despite a public outcry that has continued to grow to the point of aggregating a vast body of international advocacy organizations, as well as numerous documents/letters addressed to the Governor(s) of Tennessee, most of which I have received copies of which, Kelly still has to be granted her right to a specialized re-education process for the proven mind control violence she has suffered since birth, via operation "MK-Ultra" funded by the US government The handful of criminals at the helm of our country, our information and, subsequently, our "criminal" justice system. , refuses to provide the technological antidotes known - but nevertheless classified - to a problem whose existence they do not want to put. More than 70,000 documents(decri.ssified),various evidences, videos, medical archives, affidavits and other testimonies of government insiders - which are only part of what Mark and I have accumulated over the years - establish the reality of the violence of the control of the mind that Kelly and I have suffered in the board of "MK-Ultra." It is therefore absolutely inexcusable that these cover-ups should continue or, as Andy Shookhoff the only "judge" involved in this case, stated during a hearing in nashville, Tennessee, that "the law does not apply in this case for reasons of National Security"." After a decade of various chokings, Kelly was released by the state of Tennessee without treatment. Placed in a secure environment, she is now waiting for the rehabilitation that is so desperately due toher1621! ."

Mark Phillips says that when they turned over their case containing all the evidence to Judge Andy Shookhoff, he stood up and said, "I don't know of any law for you." This judge later stated in the middle of a public hearing: "The laws do not apply in this case for reasons of national security." A rather shocking statement that was made in front of all the public who was then present in the court, that is to say dozens of lawyers and many citizens and journalists... So people then became aware of what this case was all about. For Mark Phillips, this meant that this judge had somehow just validated their case and maybe even saved their lives. Indeed, this judge has publicly stated that the United States Government has a responsibility to cover up this case while not having to justify it. It was at this point that Mark Phillips and Cathy O'Brien realized that they would never be able to get justice in any state or criminal court in the United States. However, this official and public statement by the judge was somehow a great step forward. (For further work on this matter, see Annex 2)

The truth is that the National Security Act was obviously interpreted not to preserve the integrity of military secrets, but rather to protect the most serious criminal activities. We would act in accordance with the Constitution by repealing this law and replacing it with the already existing rules of military conduct in terms of national security, rules that do not infringe on the constitutional rights of U.S. citizens or those of their allies.

According to Mark Phillips, all countries bound to the United States by a peace treaty are subject to the terms of the National Security Act of 1947. Suffice to say that the issue of MK programming remains covered under a thick screed of lead in many countries...

4 - Sexual subversion

This subject deserves a book in its own right as the issue is so important and so much to say. The following attempts to expose this recent phenomenon (which began in the middle of the twentieth century), which both reverses moral values and tries to corrupt children by impassioning society with all the "whims" of the Luciferian subculture: where incest and paedophilia are a heritage that is perpetuated from generation to generation...

This culture of paedophilia and hyper-sexualization is gradually permeating popular culture to make sexual relations between adults and children acceptable and trivialized, and finally to legalize them. We note, moreover, that the sentences against paedocriminals are becoming lighter and lighter from year to year, a laxity of the judicial institutions which indicates to us that these crimes would become less and less serious ?... As for taking into account the dignity of the child (his word and his suffering), it is something that is today totally put in the closet and for good reason, the child gradually becomes a consumable good in our consumer society gone adrift ... This heavy subject is indeed a bitter pill very hard to swallow, however there is still time to open your eyes!

a/ Alfred Kinsey

Alfred Charles Kinsey was a professor of entomology and zoology. He became famous after publishing two important studies on the sexual behaviors of men and women. In 1948, he published "Sexual Behavior in the Human Male", then in 1953 "Sexual Behavior in the Human Female". In 1947, he founded an Institute for Sex Research at Indiana University, Bloomington, which was later renamed the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction, more commonly known as the Kinsey Institute (still active today). It was within the framework of this institute that Alfred Kinsey undertook the compilation of thousands of data to write his infamous report on adult sexuality. but also children. According to kinsey data, hundreds of children and even babies have been used in research on sexuality.

The aim of Kinsey's studies and the people who funded his "scientific research" was to normalize a lot of behaviors that had always been considered socially unacceptable until then, such as adultery, sodomy, incest and pedophilia. These studies also aimed to show that these behaviours were much more widespread than the public perceived, thus making them much more acceptable.

The Kinsey Institute is nothing more and nothing less than a social engineering operation. All his "studies" on sexuality were only intended to infuse in American society a propaganda financed among others by the Rockefeller Foundation. Indeed, the reports that were produced by the Kinsey Institute (in the 50s) were the starting point of the sexual revolution (or sexual liberation), which affected both adults and youth because it certainly influenced sex education programs in schools. Alfred Kinsey is one of the forerunners of early sexualization.

After publishing his two reports on human sexuality, Kinsey began to travel the United States to lecture at universities and in front of politicians. He quickly became the reference in the field of sexuality and was welcomed as the "best expert in the world on human sexuality". In particular, it aimed to change the laws concerning sex offenders and the sex education of children. The model of the criminal law that was adopted after 1955 was based, among other things, on Kinsey's research. Not only has his work influenced sex education programs for children, but also U.S. laws, particularly with regard to the protection of women and children, as well as a questioning of the imprisonment of paedocriminals.

Kinsey, for example, stated that children are 100% orgasmic from birth and that they can benefit from having sex with adults, especially in incest. It advocated lowering the age of consent but in fact aimed to fully legalise ''paedophilia''. For example, he states in his studies that "Children need to receive sex education classes as soon as possible since they are sexualized from birth (...) They need to be taught straight and homosexual masturbation." According to Dr. Judith Reisman, the leading whistleblower about the sham of kinsey reports, he also said that sex offenders very rarely repeat abuse, and therefore they should not be imprisoned but released on parole.

Here are the kinds of extreme results noted in Kinsey's tabular studies: a 4-year-old child reportedly had 26 orgasms in 24 hours. Dr. Reisman legitimately asks where and under what circumstances could Kinsey obtain such information? Under Table 31, Kinsey indicates that the data come from observations made on 317 male subjects. Then on page 177 of the report on the sexual behaviour of men, Kinsey writes: "Orgasm in a 4-month-old girl is included in our report..."' How could anyone recognize such a thing in a 4-month-old baby? Kinsey also writes: "Among pre-pubertal boys and among little girls, orgasm is not easily recognized, partly because of the lack of ejaculation[622].

The question is what this man called an orgasm. On page 161 of his report on the sexual behavior of men, he specifically describes what he considers to be an orgasm in these children: "A gradual and sometimes prolonged process, leads to orgasm, which involves violent convulsions of all bodies, rapid breathing, grunts or violent screams, sometimes with an abundance of tears (especially in young children)." He also states that there are six categories of what he considers to be an orgasm in a child: screams, hysterical pain (especially in the youngest), convulsions, the child hits the "partner" (he uses the word partner to refer to the rapist), etc. For Kinsey, all this was orgasms and was used to build his smoky relationships.

Kinsey was very clear when he said that all this data about children was provided by "adult observers", defined as pedophiles by his own team members. Dr. Bankroft of the Kinsey Institute said that following the example of his mentor, Dr. Dickinson, Kinsey trained his own predators, men who collected data on what is purely and simply child sexual abuse, or even babies.

In 1990, on the Phil Donahue Show, Dr. Judith Reisman was confronted by Dr. Clarence Tripp, a close collaborator of Kinsey. Here's what he said on set: "I think we should be talking about the children now, because a lot of things are mixed up. You know, we don't have to rush into it... We want to savor this, because it's wonderful! It's a delight." On that show, Judith Reisman said, "Do you know what Dr. Gebhard told me? He wrote me a letter that I have at my disposal for anyone who wants, in which he explains to me that "oral and manual techniques were used on children"! If what I say there is false, take me to court!"

This letter was written in March 1981. In it Dr. Gebhard explains where the sexual data on children came from. In this writing he admits that many pedomanes were employed to collect information necessary for Kinsey's reports. He writes: "Since sexual experimentation on infants and children is illegal, we had to find other sources, some were parents, others were school nurses or teachers, or homosexual men (...) one of them was a man who had had many sexual relations with men, women, children and infants, and having a scientific orientation, he kept detailed reports on each encounter (...) Some of these sources were accompanied by written evidence, photos and sometimes films (...) The techniques used were self-masturbationby thechild, sex scenes between children and sexual contact between adults and children, manual or oral. "

Gebhard's letter totally refutes Dr. Bankroft's pedophile theories, but fits perfectly with what Kinsey had written in his report on sexual behavior in men. Geibhard mentions in his letter that photos and films were sent directly to Alfred Kinsey, which explains the sad discovery made by the director of his institute, June Reinisch... In 1984, in the Newsweek newspaper, Reinsich stated that she had discovered within the institute a collection of child pornography so disgusting that she could not continue to watch it.

In 1998, in the report "Secret History : Kinsey's Paedophiles" (Yorkshire TV), Gebhard says: "There is also a paedophile organization in this country, they cooperated with us, and for some of them who were obviously not incarcerated, they gave us information." Dr. Reisman believes that this pedophile organization geibhard is talking about was what later became NAMBLA (an American association advocating love between men and boys). To date, pro-paedophile associations such as NAMBLA, systematically refer to the studies of the impostor Kinsey to assert their claims and to trivialize paedomania.

In the same report, Dr. Clarence Tripp states: "Pedophilia is like who would say non-existent, and the thing he (Kinsey) hated the most was that people use words like "abuse of minors." What's that? No one knows (laughs) Child abuse? Are we talking here about pulling his ears or hitting him with a pipe? Or are we talking about tickling it a little? Do you put "caresses" and "attacks" in the same basket? As Kinsey said, "By this kind of paranoia, you do more harm to the child than all the pedophiles around the world put together.'"

According to the research that has been done on this sad individual, it is that he was himself a perverted patient. Alfred Kinsey's sadomasochistic tendencies have been documented by many biographers, including James Jones who reports that Kinsey once circumcised himself with a pocket knife in a bathtub without any anesthesia. James Jones also reports that after the Rockefeller Foundation provided him with funding, "Kinsey went into the cellar, tied a rope to a pipe and the other end around his scrotum, then he climbed onto a chair and jumped." His abuse of sexual organs was clearly identified at the time of his death. Officially, Kinsey died of a heart attack, it would indeed be embarrassing to say that the father of the global sexual revolution, died as a result of self-harm.

To conclude with regard to this impostor, we will note that he was a great admirer of the Satanist Aleister Crowley. After publishing his "famous" reports on the sexuality of men and women, Kinsey traveled abroad to study sexuality in various countries. According to Wardell Pomeroy, Kinsey's co-author, kinsey was also looking for the document "A prized item, the diaries of Aleister Crowley". Pomeroy writes that two weeks after Kinsey went to England to get this document, he went to Sicily to visit the "temple" that Crowley had built there, the Abbey of Thelème in which he practiced satanic rituals. Kinsey even tried to acquire Crowley's "Magical Diaries" on behalf of his institute[623]. It should be noted that Aleister Crowley was expelled from Italy because he was accused of paedocriminality, even sacrifices.

Alfred Kinsey legitimized the sexual revolution, he did it academically but in an uns scientific way, the real motive being not science but a well-orchestrated social engineering plan to change the morality of an entire country... and consequently of the entire Western world, the United States being the influential culture that pours all over the world. One of his biographers, Jonathan Gathorne-Hardy, said: "It's really interesting when you go into it, it's a real sick social plan. He didn't want just a little more tolerance when it comes to sexuality, it's something much more monstrous. It was a powerful social plan perfectly orchestrated by the people who worked alongside him."

b/ Early sexualization

Alfred Kinsey is the ancestor of early sexualization, which today takes the form of sex education that is imposed on increasingly young children, especially in school curricula.

In a booklet entitled "Document establishing the foundations of sex education" distributed by the Pedagogical University of Central Switzerland (PHZ), we discover that Kinsey's work has borne fruit and that it is being applied at the level of school curricula: "Contrary to the rather hostile conceptions of sexuality that prevailed in the first half of the 20th century, most conceptions of sexual development during life are now based on scientific knowledge and consider sexuality favourably. They recognize that children and adolescents are beings endowed with sexuality (...) From childhood, human beings are sexual beings with needs specific to their age and individual forms of expression. This is how, for example, infants make their first experience of pleasure by sucking and sucking. Sexual curiosity and experiences do not appear at puberty but exist from childhood, in boys and girls, in different forms depending on age (...) One of the important missions of the school is to offer this opportunity to all children and adolescents with regard to sexuality, sexual roles and gender relations by explaining to them the social transformations or common sense in force in society to enable them to access the values and norms of our society (...) The school complements, in the field of sex education, the educational tasks of parents or those responsible for education.
is to transmit social norms and values. "

Sex education is not a problem in itself, but it is the age at which the child is automatically subjected to it in a school environment that poses a real problem. This general enthusiasm for children's sex education aims to make it begin in nursery school. This official Swiss booklet intended to lay the foundations for sex education in schools contains a table with a list of the stages of children's psycho-sexual development. It is noted that 4-year-olds have "reactions related to orgasm", or a "pleasure to show off and genital games" but also an "erotic interest in parents". The document states that a 5-year-old child practices "role-playing games like playing sex."

Here is what the booklet tells us about the sex education professionals responsible for "training" children in schools: "Inthe context of the empowerment" of students, the transmission of sexual and reproductive health themes and rights or knowledge of regional psychosocial offers are of the utmost importance. The appropriate skills will be transmitted by these specialists in the context of sex education, which is valuable and sustainable. They have a solid scientific background, current technical knowledge, sex education materials and proven teaching concepts in work adapted to the age of young people and adolescents. "

These sex educators would therefore have a "solid scientific training (valuable and lasting)", relying on the work of characters like Alfred Kinsey. A whole program that aims to make acceptance of marginal and criminal behaviors as a norm, thus continuing the ongoing sexual revolution, the continuation of which is the theory of gender or gender. Gender theory consists in inculcating toddlers (and older ones) that they are neither boys nor girls but that it is up to them to decide their sex... All this in the name of equality and freedom, concepts dear to the Masonic lodges that are very active in the field of national education. Indeed, "special educators" in sex education (often from LGBT associations - Lesbien, Gay, Bi, Trans -) are only the final link in the chain. These programs are organized in the rectorates and ministries that implement decisions taken upstream in the Masonic lodges that totally oversee the republican state.

Daniel Keller, Grand Master of the Grand Orient of France, told a Senate committee in March 2015: "Thank you for your invitation and for reminding us that I preside over an obedience of more than 50,000 members. As you probably know, the Grand Orient de France has in its ranks very many actors from the educational world, whether they are obviously teachers or all those involved in the out-of-school period, from primary education to university. We consider the public school to be the pillar and crucible of the republic." Basic rule: the conditioning towards a certain ideology must begin in early childhood...

c/ Hyper-sexualization

There is also a phenomenon that is developing more and more, and that is the hyper-sexualization of children and adolescents. Early sexualization aims to "educate" them from an early age on sexuality, while hyper-sexualization aims to make them physically desirable, to "adultify" them in a way.

Sylvie Richard Bessette (professor of sexology at the Université de Québec à Montréal) defines hyper-sexualization as follows: "Excessive use of strategies focused on the body in order to seduce". The problem is that today in some circles children are subjected to these practices, especially in the "MiniMiss" competitions during which little girls are dressed and made up to take the attitude of "miniature women". They adopt codes of seduction that are not in line with their age (swaying, wink, etc.). Little girls thus become objects of desire and this in spite of themselves.

The psychoanalyst Monique de Kermadec writes about the MiniMiss competitions: "We eroticize their image excessively with young woman's outfits. This can create, at the time of adolescence, disorders of self-image and, sometimes, dietary disorders such as anorexia. And this damage is even greater when the child puts himself in a situation of seduction in front of the public. Naughty smiles and other attractive winks abnormally sexualize behavior[624]. ''

Overall, hyper-sexualization permeates the entire society, especially through the entertainment industry which stages ever more naked starlets, making dances that are increasingly sexually explicit, even pornographic (Miley Cyrus, Beyoncé, etc., MK dolls intended precisely to transmit this hyper-sexualization in young people). The music videos and stage performances are watched by millions of little girls whose unconscious is imbued with all these things. One of the major trends in our decadent society is hyper-sexualization.

In the Canadian documentary "Sexy inc, nos enfants sous influence" (2007), sexologist Francine Duquet says: "We've really seen a cut in the last five or six years where we're more bombarded with sexual messages. Children receive this as if it were normal. In addition, when it comes to children or adolescents in particular, they arrive at an age where they want to meet the norm. They want to look like their idols, they want to be popular and the idea of popularity is a major concept in adolescence. Today, being popular means being "hot" (sexy). You have to have some kind of sexual energy, you have to release something sexual. Off,at the age of 11 or even 14, it's far from obvious... So we're witnessing mimicry: I dress the same, I do the same. There's also this whole fashion phenomenon, apart from fashion at the moment for children, it's on some levels worrying because clothes are being eroticized, especially for little girls.''

Social engineering programs focus particularly on the society of tomorrow: that is, the control of the consciousness (and especially the subconscious) of today's children and adolescents. We clearly see this propaganda for hyper-sexualisation when the media constantly encourage children to become little women or little guys, especially in advertisements for the fashion or cosmetics industry. A typical example is that of the little Thylane Lena-Rose Blondeau (daughter of the television host Véronika Loubry and the footballer Patrick Blondeau) who posed in 2011, at the age of 10, for vogue magazine. Shocking clichés that have become a typical example of what the hyper-sexualization of a child is.

Today there are sexy thong-type clothes in girl size, which do not have breasts, but to which bras are also offered. There are even heeled slippers for babies... A new market has opened up, and the peomanes are enjoying it.

d/ Pro-paedophilia propaganda

Alongside the early sex education and hyper-sexualisation of our children, there is pro paedophile propaganda whose aim is gradually toinfuse a trivialisation and a certain tolerance for these criminal activities in our society. Today paedocriminals have their international days: International Love Boy Day for the "lovers of boys" and Alice Day for the "lovers of girls".

Created in 1998, these international days have their logos and slogans, distinctive signs and a particular vocabulary that form a real "paedophile culture" highlighting "scientific" works such as those of Alfred Kinsey to justify their serious deviances. They also have their forums for exchanges on the internet, which can be very moderate in the comments while some are much more virulent, especially in the dark web.

Paedophile propaganda also passes through magazines (e.g. Lolita) and certain newspapers, notably the daily newspaper Libération which published on 10 April 1979 the plea of Gabriel Matzneff and Tony Duvert in favour of "minority loves". The same newspaper that published in the 70s a petition asking Parliament to repeal articles of law related to sexual majority as well as the decriminalization of sexual relations between an adult and a minor under 15 years of age. This petition was signed by many well-known personalities of the time such as Jack Lang, Simone de Beauvoir, Louis Aragon, Bernard Kouchner, André Glucksmann, etc.

In 1979, Libération even offered a full platform to the paedocriminal Jacques Dugé to defend sodomy on children. The op-ed entitled "Jacques Dugé s'explique" was an open letter to the investigating judge in charge of studying this heavy case at the time, Dugé was in fact being prosecuted for prostitution and sexual abuse of minors. Here is what this paedocriminal wrote at the time in a famous daily newspaper of national audience: "A child who loves an adult, knows very well that he can not yet give, also, he understands and he accepts very well to receive. It is an act of love. It's one of his ways of loving and proving it. This was the behavior with me of the few boys I sodomized. And then let's say things as they go. He likes to feel in his body, the manly member of the one he loves, to be united with him, by the flesh. This gives great satisfaction. He also has the satisfaction of being a.riable to the one who sodomizes him who enjoys in him. It also gives him great joy, because to love is to give as well as to receive. This may be hard to deliver for laymen, but it is the reality. " - Liberation, 25,26/01/1979.

It was during the 70s that this paedophile propaganda was the most virulent, taking advantage of the sexual revolution then underway (initiated by Alfred Kinsey). In May 1977, the Libération stated:

Birth of the "Front de Libération des Pédophiles".

A new group has just been born: the FLIP of which you can read below the constitutive platform. Who are they? For the most part, readers of Libération who following an open letter to paedophiles in our edition of 9/2/77 sent us an abundant letter - we reported some of them in a double page on March 24, 77 entitled: Adult-Child Relations. On April two, a first meeting was held in Jussieu, bringing together about thirty people. Simple contact. No doubt it is regrettable that the main concerns have been of a judicial nature. All that was discussed was the repression, defence and prosecution of paedophiles. Without ignoring these harsh realities, such a group has everything to gain if it broadens its field of reflection. The FLIP (Front de libération des Pédophiles) was born. Some key objectives have already been launched:

- To combat criminal injustice and to conduct a critical reflection on the family and the school, based on a political analysis of sexuality between minors and adults.

- To join in the struggle of children who want to change their way of life and of any political group that aims at the establishment of a radically new society where pederasty will exist freely.

- Develop a pederastic culture that expresses itself through a new way of life, and the emergence of a new art.

- To speak in the media that give it the means to do so and through the necessary channels.

- To show solidarity with paedophiles imprisoned or victims of official psychiatry.

The "bourgeois tyranny" makes the lover of children a monster of legend that crunches the cottages. We will break monsters and cottages together.

There are many associations that campaign by bringing the voice of paedocriminals to the public square. Their strategy is to minimise the impact of paedophile acts on children, to relativise the concept of minors and sexual minorities in order to lower the legal age and, finally, to trivialise paedophile statements. Examples include the two largest associations of this type: NAMBLA (North American Man/Boy Love Association) and Martijn, a Dutch association for the acceptance of sexual relations between adults and children founded in Hoogeveen in 1982. An attempt to dissolve the latter was made in 2012, the court having found that the association that has a website offered a "digital and social network to perpetrators of sexual crimes." The court of appeal then declared that the texts and images published on the association's website were legal because they never directly called for sexual relations with children. The association is nevertheless contrary to certain principles of Dutch law because it "trivializes the dangers of sexual contact with young children, speaks of these contacts in a positive way, even glorifies them". In 2014, the Netherlands finally decided to ban the activities of the Martijn association once and for all. ''The Supreme Court (Hoge Raad), the highest judicial body in the Kingdom, has ruled that the integrity of the child is more important than the principle of freedom of expression[525].''

The main challenge of paedophile propaganda is to minimize the consequences of these acts on children. The associations are therefore taking up "scientific" work such as Robert Bauserman's report on the effects of sexual abuse on children. Indeed, this report considers that 'sexual relations' with children are not systematically harmful to them. Bauserman has been singled out as an activist who uses science inappropriately in an attempt to legitimize his opinions and tendencies.

Little by little, the paedophiles are gaining ground while children's rights are constantly regressing. The ultimate goal is to whitewash aggressors and deny the status of children as victims, and eventually classify incest and paedocriminality as a simple "sexual orientation" just like heterosexuality or homosexuality. This is what is programmed for the society of tomorrow...

To conclude this chapter, let's go back to the program "Ce soir ou jamais' of France 3, broadcast on May 31, 2011, with a press review that returned to the accusations of the politician Luc Ferry concerning a former paedophile minister who would have been"poissé in Marrakech"', according to his words... During this program, the famous lawyer Thierry Lévy revealed himself live during a stormy and shameful exchange with the Italian filmmaker Cristina Comencini:

- Thierry Lévy: I am talking about tolerance in general. Tolerance is something that at the moment is disappearing completely. And you talk about recent events as if they had freed up a situation that had been blocked until then. But for more than twenty years, sex tourism has been repressed, very severely, very harshly, mercilessly. (...) You talk to us about the beauty of the world and the beauty of sex, but concretely, in deeds, what do you do, what do you do if not constantly brandish the stick, the stick of morality. But yes, what do you do?

- Cristina Comencini: On children?! Kids... the beauty of sex on children?! I thought that the debate was very backward in Italy but I realize that in France it is a lot ...

- TL: (cutting off the speech of her interlocutor). Please! Sex with children. This is a subject that can no longer be discussed today. No one dares to talk about children's sexuality anymore (...) There is a kind of leaden screed that falls from blond curls (editor's note: in reference to its interlocutor) on the whole of society that comes to prohibit all behaviors a little different, a little abnormal..

- CC: A little different!!?

- TL: But of course, and then we go back to pedophilia every time. Paedophilia is now a subject that is totally banned, you can no longer say a word about it without being demonised.

- CC: Why not talk about it? On the contrary, I think we should talk about it.

- TL: Oh good ?!.

- CC: Yes, I think so.

- TL: And how should we talk about it then?!

- CC: Without saying it's ....

- TL: (cutting him off again) Saying what, saying what? That all those who are attracted to children are criminals?! That they should be put in prison ad vitam aeternam?!

- CC: You have a talking system that is very authoritarian and that does not allow the other the freedom to express himself

The focus of trauma-based mental control is the physical and psychological abuse of children. The Child is at the heart of the eye of the cyclone that feeds on it, it is Pandora's box that is currently ravaging our society... Purity and innocence embodied in the sights of sorcerers-controllers.

From time to time a case of paedophilia is thrown into pasture to the public, usually the dismantling of a cyber network, but all this is the tree that hides the forest...

Why does the judicial system in France seem to systematically protect child rapists to the detriment of the child protectors who denounce them? Why when it comes to a case of paedocriminality, the judicial steamroller is set in motion to crush the file but also people? Why was France called to order in a 2003 UN report? An investigation that was conducted in France by the rapporteur Juan Miguel Petit and that was presented to the 59th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. This official report called for an independent body to urgently investigate the shortcomings of justice for child victims of sexual abuse and those trying to protect them (...) Given the number of cases showing a serious denial of justice for child victims of sexual abuse and those who attempted to protect them, it would be appropriate for an independent body, preferably the National Advisory Commission on Human Rights, to conduct an urgent investigation into the current situation.

For example, it is noted on page 14 of the report: "The Special Rapporteur referred to the enormous difficulties faced by persons, in particular mothers, who file complaints against those whom they suspect of abusing their children knowing that they are exposed to possible measures for false accusations, measures which in some cases may lead to the loss of custody of their child(s). Some of these mothers use legal remedies until they can no longer afford to pay the costs of legal aid; only then do they have the choice between continuing to hand over the child to the person they believe is abusing him or her, or seeking refuge with the child abroad. It would even appear that some judges and lawyers, aware of the weaknesses of the judicial system, have informally advised some parents to do so. These parents face criminal prosecution for such acts in France and often in the country to which they are travelling."

even that some judges and lawyers, aware of the weaknesses of the judicial system, have informally advised some parents to do so. These parents face criminal prosecution for such acts in France and often in the country to which they are travelling."

Indeed, like the two examples reported in the French testimonies of chapter 4, many mothers have literally had to flee France for lack of real protection against the institutional paedocriminal network. Why are so many mothers harassed and persecuted or even locked up in psychiatric hospitals for having naturally denounced the rape of their children? Why does a file as heavy as that of the Zandvoort files[626] remain in the boxes of the Ministry of Justice, without any investigation having been launched? Why were about thirty key witnesses found dead in the Dutroux case[627]? This famous Belgian case is a case study to understand how to cover up a file when it begins to go back to the "big fish" of the Network... Why is everything orchestrated to methodically pass children off as lors? Why is everything done to systematically discredit the speech of adult survivors, for example by using the "false memories syndrome" or by relying on their psychic disorders to destroy their speech? Why is the field of psychotraumatology so ignored by so-called public health institutions? Why are the consequences of deep trauma, i.e. dissociation and traumatic amnesia, generally obscured and ousted from public debate?

The consumption and modeling of children would seem to be the preserve of a certain unsuspected elite, but it is also a well-oiled institutional machine that allows them to practice their vice in peace; until when?!

The ABOVE-mentioned UN report, which called for urgent intervention on the French situation, also informs us that in several cases that were communicated to the Special Rapporteur, it was pointed out that the individuals accused of committing abuses were closely linked to members of Vappareil judiciaire or to individuals occupying high positions in the public administration, who were able to influence the outcome of the proceedings to their detriment, an argument that had also been formulated by the National Division for the Repression of Offences against Persons and Property. But according to the political, journalistic, police and judicial authorities, there is no paedocriminal network in France, circulate !... Should we not instead say that he is in "good hands" ?...

In Karl Zéro's documentary "The File of Shame" (13th Street - 2010), we see the UN rapporteur Juan Miguel Petit declaring: "There have been complaints and specific denunciations from mothers who claim to be pursued by groups, which can be assimilated to mafias or lodges, organizing child pornography."

The silence of the French mainstream media on all these issues is challenging! Many journalists - often paid by taxpayers - who are supposed to inform us about the reality of our society, now seem to be fully involved in a social engineering programme aimed at keeping people in a certain reality comparable to a matrix.

In April 2005, François Léotard (former Minister of Defence) told journalists in front of him on a major French radio station: "I think you and your colleagues, if you allow, underestimate a part of Vactuality that is completely immersed, completely unknown to the media. You currently have in France 35 to 40,000 people who disappear every year... that disappear! It's quite fascinating, nt and no one looks at these thousands of disappearances. There are suicides that are false suicides, car accidents that are murders, there are people who leave and that we do not find because they wanted to change their identity... What I mean is that there is an occult, hidden, underground, underwater world, which at the bottom no one seeks to discover! 628]."

When François Léotard speaks of "people who leave and who are not found because they wanted to change their identity", we can probably put in this category all mothers who have fled France to protect their children from institutional paedocriminal persecution. As Juan Miguel Petit did warn in his report to the UN.

On 2 March 2009, Rachida Dati (then Minister of Justice) gave a press conference on the occasion of "Children's Day". When Aude Chaney, the representative of the association "Estelle Mouzin", asks this question to the minister: "How many unexplained disappearances, such as the case of Estelle Mouzin are to be deplored in France?" ... Rachida Dati seems unable to have a clear answer to this simple and precise question. She then turns to her advisers, but no one is able to provide an exact figure to this obviously very embarrassing question. A palpable embarrassment then settled in this room filled with journalists and families of victims. It is surprising that in a country like France the number of children who disappear every year is ignored... or not made public because it is too important?

On this disturbing question, here is what the journalist Serge Garde says: "France is a country full of statistics, where we know for example how many salmon go up the Loire each year, but we do not know how many children disappear[629]. "

In 2001, Serge Garde had already asked a parliamentarian to ask the same question to the Keeper of the Seals then in office, Marylise Lebranchu, she had replied in an embarrassed way: "I can not give you figures, because. it is impossible[630]".

On 20 November 2001, However, Marylise Lebranchu declared before the National Assembly that 800 children had vanished in France in 2000, while confirming that there are no figures concerning the disappearance of minors.

A number of disappearances that must be much greater when we take into account foreign children who disappear or those who are not registered at birth (especially in networks). Out of 1000 foreign children (in 2001) who arrive in France without papers, only 200 remain under social control. The other 800 disappear into the wild[631].

In the France 3 documentary "Rapes of children: the end of silence?" , one girl said she had witnessed sacrifices of "little children who were a little Arab or things like that". In her testimony on TF1 in 2001, the survivor Véronique Liaigre said: "The*children who are sa.crified are not declared, or are foreign children. Nota.mment when I was on Agen, they were little Africans, they were black. On Jallais I saw some too, on Nanterre too, but they were little whites, French people, but they were children born of rape. Children born of rape? Yes, which were not declared. These are deliveries that are made at the parents' homes in abominable conditions. So, to the extent that they were not declared,* they were sacrificed? That's it..."

Trauma-based programming is like an infernal train that loops, like a virus or a vampire bite transmitting the abomination from generation to generation. Slaves are programmed to become executioners themselves but also programmers. Anyone who is sexually and psychologically abused will not automatically reproduce the abuse, but this human function of self-treatment through anaesthetic and dissociative behaviours such as violence against others is exploited to the extreme by certain groups to perpetuate the abomination from generation to generation. Violence is a drug, literally, it creates extreme stress that makes the person break by a sudden production of hormones such as endogenous morphine, in order to anesthetize the negative charge of his own traumatic memory. But these dissociating behaviors also recharge this traumatic memory, making it ever more explosive.

These dissociative behaviors are therefore becoming more and more necessary for the executioners and this creates a real vicious circle, an addiction to violence, destruction, or even self-destruction. These people, who can be described as psychopaths whose empathy has been destroyed since early childhood, do not consider the pain of others except when it gives them pleasure...

Does this make all executioners sick and irresponsible victims who repeat destructive patterns without having any possibility of making another choice? A choice is always possible despite the enormous difficulties (psychological, family, network pressure). This is a delicate issue, but the day we really have to concern ourselves with it, we will have taken a huge step forward. This will mean that the criminals will be identified and put out of action. It will also mean that the Network is being dismantled and that this infernal train of violence is finally being stopped. So yes, we may wonder what should happen to all these people, but the final judgment will certainly not come from the justice of men.

It would be interesting to scan some of our "elites" to see the state of their tonsil complex and their hippocampus, structures of the brain that can currently prove thanks to our scientific tools that there have been deep traumas in the person. Studies have shown that these brain structures have a significantly smaller volume in people who have suffered severe trauma, especially those who suffer from dissociative identity disorder. This neurological knowledge of the variation in the volumes of the hippocampus and amygdala in relation to severe trauma could, for example, be used to validate the testimonies of victims who say they have suffered the worst atrocities, but are unable to provide a coherent narrative.

As we have seen, the judicial system systematically discredits any disturbing testimony relating to ritual abuse, by highlighting the "disturbed" mental state of the witness, therefore "unreliable" and therefore weighing no weight in the balance of our justice... Yet a brain MRI could prove and certify that there has indeed been a serious traumatic impact in this person, hence the fact that he is in a state that prevents him from explaining clearly and chronologically his experience. Following such a medical examination validating the fact that there were indeed profound traumas resulting in severe dissociative disorders, it would therefore be necessary to study the person's statements more closely in order to conduct a serious investigation. Instead, justice relies on pseudo experts of "false memories" not trained in psychotraumatology: the file is thus very quickly closed.

It is a complicated question, but the observation is that the Network is committed to withholding information on scientific advances inthe field of psychotraumatology and all these recent neurological studies related to the impact that trauma can have on the human brain. This is so that this information cannot be put forward in an official way in the assize courts in order to defend the victims effectively. Indeed, if medical universities do not (or very little) train students on allthe recent discoveries in the field of psychotraumatology and dissociative processes, it becomes very difficult for a lawyer to bring to the bar a person who can clearly and scientifically explain these things. When it comes to asking the courts to order brain scans to prove that there have indeed been serious traumas, it is all the institutions that have been locked in the way here. Indeed, it must be noted that MRI scans of low voices and anuscopy, which would be essential examinations in paedocriminality files, are very rarely practiced... so an MRI cerebral is unthinkable...

This whole question of recognising the victims would, above all, make it possible to take care of them in an effective way by providing them with the appropriate therapies.

The phenomenon of dissociation in children, voluntarily exploited by certain groups, is occult knowledge, the cornerstone of secrecy and power; this in an international way, whether in the political, military, religious or mafia field. Initiates are well aware of the importance that these altered states of consciousness can have for the mind control of an individual. MK programming is therefore not simply about creating a sex slave, a superstarlet or an assassin, it is above all an essential tool of global political control.

Fritz Springmeier bluntly describes the extent of this scourge in our modern world, a statement that seems at first glance alarming but which in the end happens to be rather illuminating to understand some of the workings (and some blockages) of our modern society: "Mind control is about infiltrating and controlling society from behind the scenes. This must be included if Von wants to control an institution such as the medical lobby, for example. You have to put safe people in key positions because a weak link in the chain will always eventually let go. You cannot afford to have weak links. If you want to control a very powerful lobby such as the medical system, then you have to control a very broad spectrum of things like the hospital system, medical schools, the Medical Association, etc. All this requires that MK slaves be arranged at all levels of the system, at all strategic points. You can't see weak links. For example, a stream of independent physicians who would practice alternative medicine; you must then control the judicial system to be able to have these

"outsized" doctors convicted. A vast occult apparatus must be put in place. If we do not understand the ins and outs of mental programming, we cannot understand how it is possible to have such a type of global control over society! 632! ."

As already mentioned in the foreword, the famous hacker Kevin Mitnick said: "The weak link in any security system lies in the human factor." In order to be able to secure a system of domination on a global scale, it is therefore imperative to set up a hacking of the minds of human pawns placed in strategic positions behind democratic facades.

We can recall here the statements of Dr. Catherine Gould in 1994 in the documentary "In Satan's Name": "There are certainly bankers, psychologists, people from the media, we have also heard about child protection services but also about police officers... because they have an interest in being present in all these socioprofessional environments... When I started this work, I thought that the motivations behind pedophilia were limited to sex and money, but I began to realize in the course of my ten years of research that the motivations are even more sinister. Children are abused for the purpose of indoctrination. Ritual abuse of children is a protocol for training humans for worship. It is about formatting children who have been so abused, so subjected to mental control that they become very useful to the sect, at all levels. I think the aim of all this is to get the maximum control, whether in this country or in another.'

Dr. Lawrence Pazder also speaks of systematic infiltration: "They have a normal appearance and lead an equally normal life at first glance. They are present in all strata of society that they have carefully infiltrated. Any position of power or influence over society must be seen for them as a target for infiltration. The executioners have money available, many have impeccable situations: doctors, ministers, professions of all types.'

To establish such an infiltration of institutions and various bodies, Freemasonry - most of whose members are unaware of the activity of the high-degree back lodges - plays an essential role that is no longer to be demonstrated today. The Masonic network practices a systematic subversion of traditional Christian values in favor of illuminist and humanist values replacing God with Man; in other words, it is the Luciferian doctrine, the counter-revelation, or counter-initiation, applied by high masonry; but also by other initiatory secret societies of pyramidal type forming the whole of Great Babylon: "the nameless religion".

This Luciferian doctrine corresponds to the four lies that led to original sin, aiming to apply them and anchor them in modern society. In the Garden of Eden, the serpent had made four promises to Adam and Eve if they tasted the forbidden fruit:

- ''Your eyes will open'': you have been kept in a kind of intellectual blindness so as not to see the mysteries of God. Satan says he can open their eyes to all these occult things. The Gnostics seek this: open their eyes to discover what are the secrets that God has hidden from men.
- ''You will not die'': This is the passage from the state of creature to the state of creator. If the creature becomes eternal, then it becomes God.
- ''You will become like Gods'': The creature and the Creator are also put on the same level. All these ideas are related to Gnosis and Masonic doctrine. Gnosis shines through today in the movement of the new-age, the new-age, advocating the deification of the human being who becomes supposedly creator, a divine being: "we are gods".
- ''You will decide what good and evil is'': Again, the creature puts itself in God's place and we see the sad consequences in our modern society.

The "famous" forbidden fruit therefore seems to be linked to the occult knowledge that promises man to access certain dimensions, certain powers, while developing certain powers. That's part of what's in this book. We find that these four promises of Satan correspond to what the Luciferian secret societies have been working hard to apply in this world for several centuries, in order to sweep away the Creator to put his human creature at the center of everything with the promise to deify it. The world Lutheran network is therefore working to establish its domination to infuse its philosophy and spiritual belief in all humanity.

Today we see this doctrine coming to light, going hand in hand with the planned degeneration of our civilization, following a kind of apocalyptic messianism. Luciferianism is represented symbolically by two mythical figures: Prometheus or Lucifer, who is considered by some circles as the benefactor of humanity, the god "civilizer" who brings light (divine knowledge) to ignorant humans, this is a Transhistorical Gnosis that crosses centuries and centuries through mythology and occult initiations. Lucifer, the light bearer, would therefore give the human the opportunity to become a god himself, by his own means. This malignant and deceptive doctrine is gradually permeating the modern world so that laymen adopt these concepts of fallen life and thoughts in spite of themselves. The rebellion that was made in Heaven by the rebellious angels continues on earth, and everything is done so that it brings a maximum of humans with it in its fall. Lucifer wanted to be his own god and so he leads human creatures into his rebellional dynamic by promising man to attain the status of a god himself.

Luciferians, Satanists, neo-Gnostics, Kabbalists, Martinists, theosophists of all stripes, all have this belief that they must evolve spiritually in order to acquire power and finally immortality to become gods themselves. But this requires certain sources of "power", a rallying to the fallen Angel to receive the "light". Blood rituals (red magic), black magic, demonology, ritual abuse of children and sexual magic are tools to access this power and these openings to other dimensions to receive enlightenment... The most forceful occultists, thirsty for power, will fall into these totally perverse and demonic practices, especially if they are promised to become a creator god at the key. Satanic ritual abuse protocols are directly related to sexual magic and dissociative trances, two powerful catalysts serving to gain power and access other dimensions for this quest for immortality.

Children subjected to torture and rape, totally dissociated and open to other dimensions, are exploited as bridges connecting two worlds and as a reservoir of demonic power. They serve as mediums, intermediaries that the sorcerer-executioner will use with sexual magic to exploit to the maximum this spiritual breach that represents the child in a state of dissociation. It is a real spiritual heist, a rape that is at once physical, energetic and spiritual.

The MK programming based on the splitting of the soul perfectly symbolizes the climax of the quest of the Luiferian man to become a creator god himself. By practicing these horrors, he creates human dolls, sorts of empty shells, golems that he will be able to fill and program according to his own desires. He manipulates the inner world of the slave as he wants, just like a little god manipulating a robotic human, this by playing in this other dimension that is the space-time of the inner universe of his victim. A universe that he arranges as he sees fit. The creation of a golem is the ultimate goal of the Luciferian occultists, Kabbalists and Satanists of all kinds. Lucifer is not a true creator, he is not the creator of Heaven or earth, which is why he takes pleasure in creating in the victims an inner world with a heaven, a earth and a hell of his own creation. He will arrange this world in his own way with an army of demonic entities that will cooperate with the programmer to control the victim. Thus a kind of satanic trinity is set up: the Father (the programmer), the Son (the child "Monarch") and the Holy Spirit (the demons). An obscure trinity that will form the ultimate offense to God: the sabotage, hijacking and exploitation of his beloved creature, the human being. The sabotage of man's conscience to turn him away from God applies today as much to MK slaves in the harshest way as it is, as to humanity as a whole in a more diffuse but equally despicable way.

Without these tools that are mind control based on dissociative identity disorder, drugs, hypnosis, psychotronics, etc., these occult organizations would fail in their plan of domination because they would be unable to keep secret about their despicable acts applied on such a large scale. The sorcerers-controllers have understood that this method of mind control that uses trauma and dissociation also applies to the scale of society and that it is something essential to be able to govern "easily and quietly". This is what William Sargant explained to us when he wrote that the methods of religious initiations are often so close to modern political techniques of brainwashing and thought control that one sheds light on the mechanisms of the other.

''Ordo ab Chao'', order is born of chaos, is the motto of Freemasonry but it is also the heart of alchemical secrets. This formula can be used both to achieve perfection on the side of good as well as on the side of evil. For most Freemasons, it is above all a notion of personal development, a work consisting in defeating the inner monster sowing chaos, the dark forces of mind and ego, which must be fought and transcended in order to find the Divine Order. In alchemy, the two most important operations are "Dissolve" (chaos) and "Coagulate" (ordo). Dissolution means the decomposition of the elements, then comes Coagulation which consists in solidifying the dissolved element in a new state, a new order. We see today that this Masonic formula Ordo ab Chao, this alchemical work of decomposition and recomposition is conscientiously applied in mind control programs, whether at the individual or collective level. Currently, the Ordo ab Chao is not applied in a dynamic of spiritual elevation, but in a dynamic of total control (although this situation paradoxically serves to create a spiritual elevation of a few).

The mental control of the masses passes through the triggering of a "dissociation" (social chaos) where the individual no longer identifies with himself, he becomes the society in itself (ex: the movements "I am Charlie" or "I am Paris" following acts of terrorism). This social dissociation is caused by a whole series of destabilisations of society, creating the ideal conditions for establishing a new order, a new societal structure. This is the "tabula rasa" theory of Kurt Lewin, Eric Trist and many others...

The brainwashing of an individual goes through the erasure, the dissolution of his original personality to then install a new internal system, it is the same for the people: destroy his roots, his values, his traditions, his beliefs, his family, up to his notion of man or woman (gender theory), all this in order to obtain a mass totally dissociated / disconnected, without reference points, infantilized and malleable at will. The goal is to be able to easily build a New World Order. The motto of creating chaos in order to be able to establish a new order is applied, as we saw in chapter 7, on MK-Monarch subjects who will inevitably need the programmer to be able to function again following the psychic chaos voluntarily created in them by traumas. This formula, like a fractal, we find it on a large scale in the current societal chaos: to be able to function again following the chaos that is inevitably taking shape, society (in a generalized post-traumatic stress) will need the sorcerers-controllers (the programmers of large scale) to recover and function again in a New World Order , with a Luciferian world religion. This is the current project, and as we have seen the codes of this Luciferian subculture are gradually permeating the secular popular masses psychologically channeled towards this New World Order. A new order in which traditional peoples and cultures (the old world) will have totally dissolved... This is the "Babylonian work", a mental programming on a global scale with transhumanism at the key. Transhumanism advocating the use of science and technology to improve the physical and mental characteristics of human beings, even going so far as to consider old age as a disease. We are here in the continuity of the project aimed at "luciferically deifying man". But science without consciousness is only ruin of the soul (François Rabelais).

In 1736, Andrew Michael Ramsey gave a famous speech, known as "The Ramsey Speech", at the St. Thomas Lodge in Paris. This speech already clearly revealed the Babylonian spirit of the Masonic Order which works to bring together in a single fraternity the subjects of all nations in order to create a new people whose cohesion will be cemented by the bonds of Virtue and Science. This is currently unfolding before our eyes and it is something that is now more visible and understandable than ever despite the chaos that masks the real spiritual stakes. We are born and we bathe in this matrix to such an extent that we do not even discern its ins and outs. There is therefore a real fight between two banners, "the fight of the earthly city against the celestial city", between Babylon, the city of Satan, and Jerusalem, the city of Jesus Christ, the world of sin against the world of grace. It goes without saying that a choice has to be made in this situation.

Professor Jean-Claude Lozac'hmeur writes about this New World Order:

The writings of the theorists most representative of these occultist traditions (Thomas More, Francis Bacon, Comenius, Guillaume Postel, Campanella) as well as contemporary history, make it possible to clarify the contours of this totalitarian state to come.

From this data, we know:

- that this civilization (which was originally intended to be purely collectivist) will in all likelihood be a synthesis of capitalism and socialism,

- that it will extend to the whole world,

- that democratic in appearance, it will have at its head a despot at the same time "king" and "priest", surrounded by a privileged nomenklatura,

- that in this rationalized universe the family and marriage will have disappeared,

- that eugenics and euthanasia will be practised there,

- that to the political and economic unification will be added that of religions replaced by a single cult, that of the "natural religion" called "Noah[633]"."

The creation of MK pawns programmed and strategically placed in our society is the prerequisite to be able to apply the strategies of global mind control to manipulate and dominate the mass. Today, an increasing number of people are realizing that our society is walking on its head, that our leaders are demonstrating an ever more crude and blatant illogical (or inhumane and destructive logic) despite the media hubcap. The word "psychopath" to describe our rulers is becoming more and more common in the mouths of the people. There are certainly serious mental pathologies among our elites and their childhood probably has something to do with it. These severe psychiatric disorders are camouflaged behind a personality worked behind the dark scenes and sanitized under the spotlight of the great political and media theater. In his book ''Dialogues with Forgotten Voices: Relational Perspectives on Child Abuse Trauma and the Treatment of Severe Dissociative Disorders'', Harvey Schwartz explains that addiction to power is the result of these occult subcultures: ''Those who have not been personally exposed to these extremes will be unable to understand fully break the degenerative spiral of this obsession with power. History has shown that when a person or group gains power (Hitler, Idi Amin Dada, Pol Pot, Stalin, to name but a few), a model of extravagant sadism, irrational gratuitous cruelty and ultimately exhibitionist destructive violence that leads to its explosion and collapse. History has not yet revealed that these same evil dynamics are at work outside the context of war and politics in criminal groups that impose their power on children around the world in the form of unimaginable abuses."

During ritual abuse, children receive the transmission of "initiation", the "Initial Violence" that prepares them to become adults working for the "dark side". The luciférien project being spread over several centuries, therefore over several generations, the conditioning and even more the mental programming of the children of the elite form an indispensable protocol. Programming with loyalty, fidelity and the law of silence is the foundation to control these children, destined to perpetuate the Lutheran globalist project. It is a question of obtaining a society whose institutions and the various layers of control find themselves locked and held with an iron fist by individuals in the service of their inner demons... These dissociated and fractionated children from an early age have a brain "re-embedded" giving them certain intellectual and creative faculties, but also an energetic body totally open to the world of spirits, to conscious mediumship or not. In Luciferism, the dissociative process is perceived as a state of spiritual enlightenment, allowing access to other dimensions.

These children receive power, power and light, they become channels used by fallen angels to embody and establish Luciferian doctrine on this earth. Thus, a world was gradually established that was governed indirectly by entities existing on another level. Entities that need well-incarnated human beings in the flesh to act here on earth in matter. In the same way that the Holy Spirit infused himself in some humans in a state of grace to inspire them wisdom, intelligence, strength, charity, faith, hope. An anti-Christic force, counter-initiatory, can also be inffused into the human, more particularly in those who have the doors wide open since early childhood during their "initiation" by extreme traumas. Some fragments of their souls are totally linked and enslaved to the fallen kingdom, to the "Prince of this world". This process is nothing more and nothing less than an inversion of sanctification. These Luciferian bloodlines, feet and fists linked to demons for generations represent the infra-human, resulting from this counter-initiation. Traumatic ritual abuse, sacrifices, magic, demonology, dissociation/possession/'illumination'', control of soul fragments, but also the sites used for ceremonies, with a particular telluric energy, all these occult knowledge are the tools that will allow the connection with these fallen entities that offer this Luciferian human hierarchy the power to establish a temporary domination here on earth.

''These lineages, holders of a particular blood inherited from an ancient ''pact'' with fallen angels, deliberately recreate or awaken secret societies, schools, sects, through certain specially prepared individualities, which could be considered as a particular kind of ''possessed'' and charged with necessary powers, always of a psychic nature, of course, which allow them to provoke for a certain period more or less long but always li li the phenomena which constitute the ''catalyst'' element around which these groupings will be created.'' ''Memory of blood: counter-initiation, cult of ancestors.'' - Alexandre de Dànann.

Freemasonry refers to mysterious "Masters", foreign to humanity, who would inspire, through mediumship, certain high initiates connected to another dimension... This is in order to receive "oracles", i.e. information allowing to "better" act in the material world. As we have already seen, the Freemason Oswald Wirth was rather clear on this subject: "The Masters - for so they are called the initiates - wrap themselves in an impenetrable mystery; they remain invisible behind the thick curtain that separates us from the afterlife. They only work on the drawing board, that is to say intellectually, by conceiving what needs to be built. It is the constructive intelligences of the World, effective powers for the Initiates which come into contact with the Unknown Superiors of tradition[634]. ''The constructive intelligences of the world''... guiding the Masonic high lodges to set up the New Lutheran World Order. Today, this is very clear...

As we have seen, in a brain in full construction, the repetitive extreme traumas that cause dissociation will shape the neuronal pathways and lead (under "good governance") certain physical and intellectual abilities, but also extraordinary psychic faculties. This violent "spiritual unlocking" opens the door to the spirit world. It is likely that in some elitist circles, the fact of being multiple, of having a personality divided into different alters, is seen as a spiritual mark of quality, an initiatory mark, the mark of enlightenment giving the key to access for other dimensions. It is also the "trademark" of the Luciferian hierarchy called "illuminati". It is likely that some initiates (or should we say in fact "traumatized") with multiple personalities can master their T.D.I. by changing alter personalities at will and according to their needs (see the case of Louise who totally mastered her changes from one personality to another - chapter 5). The deepest alters, linked to occult sectarian activities, are perfectly aware of the internal system and can emerge when they wish unlike surface alters who totally ignore "the substance of things".

The multiples coming out of the factories are most certainly individuals who excel in many areas ... But to what extent can we speak of superiority to the ordinary human as the "initiatory" methods are only pains, traumas and finally enslavement to the demons and the Prince of this world? These infra-humans ultimately remain bound hand and foot to entities on which their powers and power depend. This Lutheran slavery is systematically perpetuated on a progeny elected to set up a New World Order. All this being accomplished in a state of mind of extreme superiority against the profane people, not illuminated and considered as a cattle feeding "the beast"... that it must at all costs corrupt and bring down...

One thing that is important to understand is that children who are prisoners and exploited by these cults fall into several categories. First, there is the offspring of influential Luciferian families who systematically program their offspring; on the other hand there are children who are introduced very young in these circles and who are also destined to form the elite of tomorrow without however having a blood link with the "Family". And finally there are the children who literally serve as fresh flesh: they are children born of rape and undeclared, kidnapped children or foreign children, all destined to be abused, tortured and ultimately sacrificed during rituals. These children serve to "introduce" the other children of the network, considered as the "chosen ones", to the despicable practices of these groups.

The splitting of a human, that is to say the deliberate creation of a dissociative disorder of identity, can only be done on very young children, it is clear that these automatically become priority targets to perpetuate the counter-initiation and enlightenment. So here we have a large part of the explanation for the existence of paedo-Satanist networks. Networks in which members involve their own children in "initiatory" processes, while also involving "second-class" children, who can serve both as fresh flesh or as future MK slaves for low work. As stated at the beginning of the conclusion: the Child is at the heart of this devastating cyclone...

It is high time to unmask this infernal chain so that the people know what is happening behind the scenes of this world. These issues are systematically stifled so as not to open up the slightest breach in the greatest secrecy of domination. Potentially everything can stop, for this it goes without saying that in this great theater, everyone must do their part, Providence perhaps only waiting for the right time to intervene.

Despite the chaos and the constant smokescreens that try by all means to hide our eyes, it is now much easier to obtain a global vision of the world in which we live than it was 50 years ago or even 20 years ago. Globalism, for all its negative consequences, has the merit of giving us the opportunity to fully understand the world in which we live.

As the Lutheran agenda of the New World Order progresses, it is necessarily revealed and inevitably, everything is brought to light in an exponential way. The misappropriation, corruption and indoctrination of consciences are therefore reinforced in proportion to the ever more flagrant disclosure. It is a snowball effect that paradoxically mixes both a total revelation and an increasingly strong obscurantism, all forming a kind of chaos of which the human mind is fortunately still able to discern the ins and outs... if he makes the effort.

The light of this "nameless religion" is today so radiant in our world that it ends up being totally exposed for what it really is. The word Revelation, qualifying the times we are currently living in, comes from the Greek word Apokalupsis meaning revelation and instruction. Indeed, today "everything is clear" for those who no longer hide their face by remaining in denial because they detach themselves from the virulent media propaganda to begin to re-inform themselves. This notion of unveiling, of revelation, as the progress of the Lutheran agenda, is a law from which they cannot escape: it is the great "laying bare" specific to the Apocalypse. This inevitable exhibition/revelation is therefore at their peril, but they have no choice to carry out the establishment of this New Luciférien Order. They are therefore currently betting as much as possible on social engineering (the mental control of the masses) to corrupt and divert by all means consciences (and the subconscious) in order to try to keep society in a certain matrix, a "comfortable cocoon" (although obviously increasingly unstable) that allows to infuse everything and anything smoothly, without people reacting. But we are also seeing a tightening of rights and freedoms under the guise of a fight against terrorism; an ideal way to repress all opinions going against the ambient doxa maintained all the time by the mainstream media under control. The media that seed this "public opinion" admitted automatically and thus create the phenomenon of peer pressure, a phenomenon described in the first chapter that can be summarized as follows: "Sheep keep sheep, the one who strays from the herd by a mind too critical of what is called the single thought, becomes a black sheep in the eyes of other sheep." Thus, this constant social pressure raises fears of the group's exclusion.

The observation is that the mass is burdened by work, debt and the daily routine to which it is assigned, letting itself go in the evening in front of a television, using it mainly - and unconsciously - as a tool of relaxation. Panem et circenses (bread and circus/games), this expression of ancient Rome is more than ever applicable to our consumer society. A situation in which it is difficult to make things happen as people are enslaved and obviously lack the will to emancipate themselves from the "journalistic" soup and the infantilizing and debilitating entertainment that is served to them all the time at prime time. Young people are obviously targeted above all.

The subject of this book is particularly difficult to integrate and accept as it can upset an entire paradigm.

The question of a global paedo-Satanist network that dranks the innocence of the child is beginning to be known, people today can understand this harsh reality more easily than even 10 years ago, because the unveiling is exponential. Thank you to all the relentless independent researchers and investigators who have participated or are still participating in clearing brush and exposing this difficult subject in order to disseminate information at all costs, many of them have left feathers and even their lives...

The statement of the former deputy prosecutor of Bobigny, Martine Bouillon, before the journalist Élise Lucet during a televised debate illustrates this very well: "We have just understood that paedophilia existed, we cannot yet understand that there is even worse than paedophilia I would say "simple", and people resist with all their strength, from all their interior. "

It is quite natural that people show a strong resistance, or even a total denial, in the face of the absolute horror that are paedocriminality, Satanism and the massive corruption of their governments... But it is time to see clearly and if we do not accept everything en bloc, we must at least do our own research to validate or not these horrors. All the more so since everything is now being revealed, it is only thanks to the widespread corruption of institutions and the media and the wilful or unintentional blindness of the people subjected to social engineering that this infamous system remains in place.

and the media and the wilful or unintentional blindness of the people subjected to social engineering that this infamous system remains in place.

The more a subject is studied and understood by an increasing number of people, the more accessible and understandable it will become for the mass because it will find itself in a way "brushed". Indeed, the more a path of understanding is cleared and deepened, the more it expands to allow access to this knowledge to an increasing number of people who will thus be able to understand it much more easily than the initial researchers.

The more information circulates, the more people it reaches, and the more it becomes mentally accessible to the majority who can then integrate it more easily into their paradigm. This information is obviously not admissible for everyone from start to bottom, but subjects such as paedocriminality, Satanism, MK programming, etc., will become more and more accessible to human minds due to the fact that some will have already done a job to clear the way, that is to say a work of understanding and integration.

Perhaps we can compare this process to the 100th monkey theory: when enough individuals have discovered something and fully integrated it, that thing automatically becomes more accessible and understandable to other individuals of the same species. However, this requires a minimum of work of openness and research, free will always being there to leave us the choice to open or close a door, but the path of understanding will already be cleared and more navigable than it was before... Hence the determination of our sorcerers-controllers to compartmentalize the human consciousness in deep ruts so that it does not direct its attention to the subjects revealing their true tools of control, which in spite of themselves inevitably become more obvious from day to day.

At the same time, we need providential help from God to be able to move forward in this struggle as the opposing party is itself supported by powerful supernatural forces of order. The Network is organized both militarily (a strict hierarchical organization) and spiritually (a cult rendered to the Prince of this world), unlike the profane peoples whose everything has been done precisely to distract them and especially cut them off from their relationship with God. Alone, without God's help, we do not stand up to this dominant Lutheran Network, which works with fallen spiritual entities from which it receives direction and power, hence the fact of its current domination.

This divine help, this providence, perhaps depends on the number of humans who have become or who will become aware of these things and who act at their level to ensure that they reverse the tide and put an end to the sabotage and corruption of the human being who is in court.

The theory of a conscious critical mass that can tip and unblock a situation that was previously totally cemented and inextricable applies to very heavy subjects, things so shocking that they are generally unthinkable and unimaginable for most people... But the more these subjects are understood and accepted by a growing number of people, the more there will be a chance of moving the pieces on the Exchequer; the True Chessboard, not that of the justice of men, freemasons and institutions, this one is today totally rigged.

If an entire people is not ready to accept a harsh reality, that is to say to face a heavy truth that risks harming it by a shock or even worse to make it fall into chaotic madness, it is logical, from the point of view of divine law supposed to preserve individuals, that it has very difficulty in accessing this information. , if at all. When consciousnesses begin to awaken and emancipate themselves from the matrix (the mental control of the masses), then they can begin to access more or less upsetting information... but ultimately saving.

In other words, Heaven waits until the fruits are ripe to reveal certain things, while respecting the evolution of consciousnesses; despite the reverse forces that try precisely to ensure that the masses do not access information that can lead them to another level of understanding of the matrix in which they have been immersed since birth. So the more consciences emancipate themselves from what waters them daily in terms of information and that they turn to other sources to inform themselves, the more willing they will be to receive these heavy truths that can indeed be very shocking. Despite the horror, these are things that must be revealed so that as many people as possible can look into these issues. Especially when it comes to children...

At the moment, in terms of information, everything is available for those who still find the time and courage to undertake a process of emancipation in the face of this system based on global mind control: God does not allow us to leave us without resources to understand the world in which we live: it is an essential Law.

Elitist Satanism/Luciferism scrupulously respects this Law (they have no choice) which eternally gives the opportunity to human souls to access the Truth. They have power only that which God has authorized them for a limited period of time, and the war they are waging in this great theatre that is our world is mainly directed against the conscience/subconscious. They cannot censor everything, so the aim is to channel consciences through systematic media propaganda: the control of information and social engineering being the main tools to condition people. The question of psychotronic technology also arises as to its ability to control our brains via scalar waves or pulsed microwaves, this applied in a massive way by literally watering populations with electromagnetic waves that can potentially influence brains according to the type of frequencies broadcast. As for the strong addiction of populations to the GSM network (Global System for Mobile communications), this is no longer to be demonstrated, it is enough to circulate in the street and on public transport to realize it...

The Truth is there for those who seek a minimum and especially who ask heaven for help. It is a real spiritual war and we have, despite appearances, enough resources to learn and to be able to get out of the muddy ruts set up by the Great Babylon with its main tool: Mental Control. But God cannot leave us without the necessary resources to guide us to the Truth and to our salvation. The New World Order is in spite of itself subject to this Law, so it cannot censor all the things that allow human souls to access the Truth. In this great earthly theatre, both good and evil play a role in the evolution of human souls, Bishop Delassus describes it very well with these words: *"They do not know, or they want to ignore, that above their master Satan, infinitely above, there is God, Almighty God. He created the world for His glory, the inexpressible glory that will be eternally returned to Him by all His creatures, without exception, albeit variously, some by manifesting His goodness, others by manifesting His righteousness. Until the day of the supreme retributations, He leaves them to their free will, so that the wicked as the good, the evil as the good, serve for the fulfillment of the purposes of His infinite wisdom (...) God allows, we are, alas, witnesses, the misguidedness of man and even the revolt against Him, but to an extent that will not be exceeded; He waits. Everything will serve his purposes, and when the trial has ceased, everything will be in his place; then there will be no harm but for the stubborn*culprits! 635! . "

The primary aim of this book is to free children from the cellars, i.e. to fight at its level against paedo-Satanism by informing citizens about this reality. It is then intended particularly for therapists, psychiatrists, lawyers, magistrates, police officers, gendarmes, journalists, politicians and members of children's aid associations...

In short, to all the people who are still honest and honest and who can possibly make things happen at their level.

At the same time, essentially, this book aims to make the reader aware, who has not yet done so, that there really is a spiritual war here on earth. If there is a spiritual war, your soul needs to find the right way, that of the Lord Jesus Christ, who has made himself flesh and blood for our salvation and to reform precisely all the atrocities partially described in this book. His sacrifice of blood on the cross was to be the last, the ultimate sacrifice... The great definitive reform of the Son of God in the face of all these abominations.

To face these generations who perpetuate at all costs the worship of the fallen angel, representing the infra-human sanctified by Lucifer, and therefore possessing a supernatural force of order; let us sanctify ourselves in Jesus Christ to also give our lives to a supernatural force of opposition indispensable in such a struggle.

Even in this seemingly dark time, God constantly gives us the knowledge and wisdom to be able to oppose and counterbalance the Babylonian abomination.

"Trauma and dissociation in Masonic mythology."

Extracts

du livre "Terror, Trauma and

The Eye In The Triangle",

Lynn Brunet - 2007, pp. 64-83

The Temple of Solomon has often been interpreted as a metaphor for the human body. Freemason author Albert Ma,ckey confirms this when he writes: "The ceremonies of the third degree in which a Dilapidated construction metaphorically represents deterioration and infirmities linked to the old age of the human body.' The two columns, Jakin and Boaz represent the entrance to the Temple. In Kabbalistic literature, these two pillars correspond to the right side and the left side of the body with their mirror effect (...) This is where the link with the left and right functions of the human brain is found, each of which controls the opposite side of the body, it is the contralaterality.

These two pillars can also represent qualities such as severity and clemency, the concept of white and black (editor's note: some altars of the O.T.O. are surrounded by a black column and a white column), Adam and Eve, male and female, etc... (Editor's note: as we saw in Chapter 7, these notions of contralaterality and division of the two hemispheres brains seem to be an important point in the MK)

The Temple of Solomon was intended to provide permanent shelter for the Ark of the Covenant, which since the time of Moses was sheltered under a tent (...) In a plan of the Temple of Solomon, depicted in a Masonic document entitled "The Two Pillars", the Ark of Alliance is found in the Holy of Holies with the altar of incense just at side. (Editor's note: Lynn Brunet makes the parallel between the Ark of the Covenant and the thalamus, a structure present at the heart of the brain)

The word thalamus is a derivative of the Greek word meaning an "inner chamber", commonly used as a bridal chamber. The thalamus is located in the center of the brain, it is completely covered by the cortical hemisphere and it is the main gateway that relays sensory information to the cerebral cortex, the main input flows to the cortex must pass through the thalamus. As Francis Cricks notes, "the idea that the thalamus is a key to reading for consciousness is not new. Its role is to maintain harmony the somatosensory system, as well as mental activity and emotional of an individual.'' It also notes that a large part of the thalamus is called the "pulvinar", a word that originally means a ''cushion'' or a ''pillow'' (...) another declension means ''sacred sofa'' or ''seat of honor''. Could this choice of terminology refer to the throne of grace of the Ark of the Covenant housed in the Holy of Holies? If yes, the positioning of the incense altar just near the Holy of Holies could be a symbolic reference to the fact that smell is the only sense which does not involve a crossing of the nerve pathways between the brain and the body: the right side of the nose is connected to the right side of the brain.

the close relationship of smell with memory is well known (...) When Solomon recreated a "house" for the Ark, he placed the cherubim in such a way so that their wings touch the side of each wall. In physiological terms, the wings of the cherubim can symbolically represent both sides of the cerebral cortex which touches the inside of the walls of the skull and which is meet face to face in the inner chamber where consciousness resides. Seen from this way, the "Throne of Grace" could then symbolically represent the ability of the brain to organize chaos, i.e. the continuous mass sensory information incoming and processed instantly by the thalamus (...) The Middle Room (which marks the end of the initiation of the first three degrees Masonic: Apprentice, Companion and Master) and its spiral staircase are two important Masonic symbols (...) Mackey writes that the Companions, the temple workers, climb the spiral staircase to access the Middle Room. He interprets this Middle Room as the place where the Truth is received and the spiral staircase as a symbol of spiritual progression.

Research on the thalamus has shown that it contains a number of activity centers, called "nuclei". The main one is called the ''caudal (or posterior)'' ventral nucleus. Neurologist Chihiro Ohye writes that "in the caudal ventral nucleus is an area called the nucleus intermediate ventral that contains clusters of scattered cells. the electrical stimulation of this part of the nucleus induces a sensation of flying or raising, a kind of ascent.'' (...) Psychologist Susan Blackmore says some hallucinogenic experiences can have an impact on brain cells in producing a vision composed of spiral stripes that may appear as a tunnel on the visual cortex. In physiological terms, the symbol of Spiral stairs can therefore be a way to illustrate this feeling physics of tournament and ascent with this hallucinatory vision. As for this place where the "Truth" is received, it is possible that this meditation, an area of the brain that is neither on the right nor on the left, a state of totally centered calm where the individual can feel a sense of connection with the divine (...) Arranged somewhere in the thalamus, the inner room or "bridal room", can be another way of representing the mystical concept of alchemical marriage (or lymic wedding), represented as the concept of hermaphrodite, or in terms

Jungiens, a condition according to which the masculine and feminine aspects of the psyche are in total harmony (...)

In terms of traumatology, the legend of Hiram can be considered a metaphorical text that represents what is happening physiologically when terror is used to produce the experience of the "inner light". This 'inner light' is that feeling of cosmic consciousness or immortality that is accessed through the spring

spiritual ascent represented in the second degree (...) Freemasonry belongs to the Gnostic tradition. The figure of Lucifer, the Bearer of Light'', the light of the mystical experience, is at the heart of this tradition. The relationship between Lucifer and the psychology of trauma is put in light in a play entitled "The Tragedy of Man", written by The Hungarian Imre Madach and analyzed by the anthropologist Geza Roheim.

Lucifer who is the central character of the play is called "the Spirit of the Denial''. In this room, Lucifer invites Adam to fly in space (it's at say to dissociate oneself from reality) to escape the foam of life Earthly: "The pain will cease when we have yielded and that disappeared the last link that binds us to our Mother Earth''. This capability human escape from terror and emotional or physical pain intense through denial and dissociation may have been exploited by Freemasonry for the purpose of attaining mystical experiences.

Interfering in the brain process by physical or mental trauma (shock, terror, hypnosis), the mind can undergo a disruption of the notion of time and experience a feeling of timelessness (...)

The myth of Isis and Osiris, used in the Scottish Rite, may also be a metaphorical illustration of the traumatic process. Mackey writes that "Osiris was killed by a typhoon and his body was cut in pieces, his mutilated remains were thrown into the Nile and scattered to the four Winds. His wife Isis, mourning the death and mutilation of her husband, searched for parts of the body for several days, and after having them found, she put the pieces together to make him a decent burial. Osiris, thus restored, became one of the main Egyptian deities and his cult united with that of Isis, to form a fertilizing deity for the fertilization of nature'' (...) If we interpret the characters Isis and Osiris in terms of brain structures, Isis represents the right brain, intuitive attributes, and Osiris represents the left brain, logical and linguistic attributes. Damage caused by trauma can lead to problems with the registration of the memory in the left hemisphere and can thus affect the ability of the individual to talk about the events he has undergone as a result of the transfer of information from the right brain is "mutilated" or piecemeal. It is then difficult for the individual to reconstitute the fragments of memory that are like the pieces of a puzzle. These Egyptian gods could be interpreted as embodying this phenomenon of fragmented mind memory disorders following a traumatic experience (...) References to mutilation or self-mutilation in mythological gods are abundant in the magical literature and nun of ancient Egypt. The mutilations inflicted on themselves by the gods on themselves themselves, are usually due to emotional stresses of different types.

Budge notes that there are other scenarios that have been met with death and death. resurrection in the Osirian myth of Horus, son of Isis and Osiris, Horus a for role of restoring life during an embrace, a gesture reminiscent of the Masonic ''Five Points of companionship'. ''Horus came to Osiris, who was in the state of a dead man, and he kissed him. By this embrace he him transferred its own KA (double), or part of the power that lived there. The embrace is in fact an act by which vital energy is transferred from the kisser to the kissed." Budge observes that kissing can also be metaphorically seen as a restoration of information in the linguistic center of the left brain for the purpose of psychic healing after a major trauma. Alan Watt, studying the extent of fractionation in the myth of Osiris and other ancient myths, argues that the Sacrificial dismemberment of a divine being is a voluntary process, that of self-sacrifice. He writes: "It follows logically that where there is a dismemberment (deconstruction) at the beginning, there is a reconstruction at the end (editor's note: Ordo ab Chao or Dissolve then Coagulate) It is the cosmic game that consists in the discovery of what is hidden and the memory of what has been scattered." Watt's conclusion is to link to a notion about memory in processes spiritual as well as the role of concentration in reducing thoughts Scattered. I would say that this myth is even more appropriate when it is applied to the nature of traumatic memory, its repression and its recall (...) (editor's note: the Freemason) Leadbeater suggests that initiation in its purest form involves some kind of connection with the divine and this is what the different Masonic degrees represent.

The "tearing in fragments" suggests that initiation requires a understanding the use of shocks in order to produce a certain state of consciousness, which if produced correctly, can create the sensation of not "to make only one with the universe".' Such a state of consciousness is today considered by the medical field as an example of a state of dissociation.

Casavis, in an analysis of the Greek origin of Freemasonry, notes the the role of fragmentation in the Esirian Mysteries. It observes that the Sacred plant of this cult in Mysteries was the Erica, coming from the Greek word "eriko" which means "to break into pieces."

Mackey reports that the most relevant Egyptian symbol for Freemasonry is that of "the eye that sees everythinginterpreted on the plane mystical as the eye of God, but also as "the symbol of vigilance" divine and the care of the universe''. The adoption of the equilateral triangle is the symbol of divinity, which can be found through different cultures.

Mackey writes: "Among the Egyptians, the hare was the hieroglyph of the open eyes, it is so because this fragile animal is supposed to never close his organs of vision, he is always on the lookout for his enemies. the lièvi and the

then was adopted by priests as a symbol of mental enlightenment or the mystical light that is revealed to neophytes during the contemplation of divine truth during the course of their initiation. And so, according to Champollian, the hare was also the symbol of Osiris, a god the main one, thus showing the close link between the process of initiation in their sacred rites and the contemplation of the divine nature.''

One of the consequences of heavy trauma is a condition known as "hypervigilance". This is a permanent attention and a exhausting fear, where the victim, like the rabbit or hare, is constantly at the lookout for danger. When Osiris was resurrected, he possessed "the eye that sees everything." If the reconstruction of Osiris represents the recovery of traumatic memories, then this ability to "see everything" can be translated as the ability to face death or evil. These notions of doing in the face of death, the idea of travel and rebirth in the Masonic texts therefore take on some significance with theories contemporary on memory and trauma.

From a physiological point of view, it is interesting to note that the neurons that seem to be most associated with consciousness, are described like pyramidal cells. We can draw a parallel with the symbolism of Isaac Newton's discovery of the decomposition of light white in the different colors of the rainbow through a prism of triangular glass. The eye in the Masonic triangle embodies the physics of Newton in the sense that it can be a visual representation of the fractionation referring to the dissociation, illumination of the consciousness (...)

Here, the Enlightenment philosophy on the link between Terror and Sublime described by Edmund Burke becomes relevant. All things that convey terror, he says, "are a source of the Sublime, they produce the strongest emotion that the mind is capable of feeling." Maybe it does echo to neurological research. The place where all these functions seem to be coordinating is called the limbic system, including the thalamus, the tonsil, the hippocampus and other structures. As Pierre-Marie Lledo says:

"Just like the limbo of Christian mythology, the limbic system is the intermediary between the neo-mammalian brain of paradise and the brain reptilian of hell.'' (...)

On the Masonic apron of the 21st degree, the Noachite or Prussian Grade, is a winged human who holds the index finger of his right hand on his lips and a key in his left hand. This representation is known as the figure Egyptian Silence (...) In the Masonic system, the Tower of Babel is an image related to memories and forgetfulness, related to confusion and loss of language. According to the Freemasons: ''Passing in front of the Tower makes you forget everything you forget all that you know'' (...) The winged character of Silence on the Masonic apron of the 21st degree can also represent this unbundling process. The inability to talk about the traumatic experience is represented by the straight index finger held in front of the mouth, the right hand being controlled by the left brain, the side of the brain that affects language. the

dissociated traumatics are stored) holds the "key" of access to these memoirs (...)

The stories of the Flood and the Tower of Babel can be interpreted as another metaphor representing the functioning of the brain during trauma. In many writings on trauma, the experience is described as "an exit from the body", a phenomenon related to the process of dissociation. A sense of peace is then felt when the person is psychically disconnects from terror, thus finding a natural way to To get away. The flight of the "soul" out of the body in situations traumatic is represented by the release of the dove out of the Ark of Noah and symbolizes, in physiological terms, the opioid effect released in the brain when terror "floodes" the physical body (...) After the Flood (of terror), the rainbow (the dissociated identity) then becomes a symbol of hope because that the flow of terror is forgotten and that the individual can survive (...) The lives of individuals become psychologically "divided" after experiencing something that could have been kill. In cabalistic texts, the rainbow is also linked with the Way of the Chameleon, this animal that changes color according to its environment. This is to be put in connection with the phenomenon of the personality multiple where the individual is able to adapt to different situations with distinct personalities (alter or fragments of personality). All this symbolic gives rise to the possibility that the story of Noah's Ark and The Ark of the Covenant can also correspond to metaphors for processes related to the human brain (...)

Transcript of a lecture by Cathy O'Brien and Mark Phillips: ''Mind-control out of control''

31 October 1996

Part 1: Mark Phillips

Thanks to John and thanks to the whole Granada forum.

All of you represent what I hope will one day happen in this country, but also throughout the world. You have heard many people in the past who have enlightened you on many topics. Tonight's one - which is very suitable for Halloween - is probably the worst story you'll ever hear. I spent a lot of time trying to convince myself that all this could not be true. But unfortunately, the obvious is that this is not just about cathy O'Brien's story.

It should be noted that Senator John DeCamp of the "Franklin" case in Nebraska, has validated and supports everything you will hear tonight... On top of that, there is a large amount of information that has emerged over the past three years. Information that comes from people who have been directly confronted with the subject. Not only therapists, but also generals, colonels from different branches of the army, as well as members of the intelligence who provided us with tons of documentation. This is not only to support Cathy, but also for the hundreds of others in the same case. Cathy O'Brien's case is not unique, I wish it had been, because if it were, I would not be in front of you tonight. Indeed, this would mean then that this problem is not widespread, unfortunately, it is not the case. What happened to Cathy O'Brien is something that's happening all over the world. It happens in daycares, in families... and not especially among "savages" of the Appalachians totally uneducated and without education who would practice incest for ages (laughs)... This is being done in a coordinated effort by the intelligence community, again at a global level.

My role in all of this is relatively simple, but nevertheless complex. I will give you a brief presentation this evening. I will also take a few minutes to give you information about the MK-Ultra (...) Like Cathy, I cannot address other cases of victims, other than the most obvious ones such as Timothy Mc Veight' s. But we have not studied this testimony, we have no evidence, we only have the confessions of Mr Mc Veight as well as some other information supporting this case.

We spent 5 1/2 years giving lectures in front of police authorities and therapists. That is what protects us today. We also found as much information as we could about other survivors, but also information from the law enforcement system, or should I say from cooperative people: free thinkers, just like you. They knew something was wrong with the system, but they did not understand what exactly it was.

I will give you some information about myself so that you understand my background with Cathy. But our main concern, the thing we are focusing on, is of course to disseminate this information to the people of that country and of all the other countries that are affected, the question remaining as to which ones are not affected ?... It also applies to Cathy O'Brien's daughter: Kelly, who has been in various psychiatric institutions since the age of 8, just after I rescued them. She is still "interned" at the present time. I don't know how many of you can imagine what it's like to be a child who has been raised in psychiatric institutes... But I can assure you that it is not beautiful to see, even if Kelly is not mistreated as she may have been before entering it.

Mind control is not something new, it's been thousands of years. It is inscribed in the "Egyptian Book of the Dead" under these terms: "The exact formula for mind control based on trauma". Adolf Hitler was particularly interested in mind control, he had entrusted this to his right-hand man: Henrich Himmler. Research has focused in particular on families in northern Europe who systematically sexually, physically and psychologically abuse their children from generation to generation. Those of us who read the Bible and understand its interpretation of the "sins of the father", will understand what transgenerationals mean (editor's note: families Luciferian/Satanic). In the case of these families, transgenerational abuse, which begins at birth, involves terrible sexual, physical and psychological abuse by parents of their children, or by other caregivers. Adolf Hitler knew that people who are victims of such violence become very "receptive" to mind control. They also develop incredible skills, such as over-developed visual acuity. Now I know that you don't have to be a genius - pardon the pun - to understand how we can use a person with such faculties. This is called special forces. The individuals forming these "Special Forces" (editor's note: military field) are followed very carefully.

Now let's go back to when I was working for the Ministry of Defense in a project known as MK-Ultra. This was exactly the project that Hitler and Himmler had begun with these abused children in transgenerational families. At that time, I did not see anything that Cathy O'Brien reported to me afterwards, I did not see any abuse. What I saw in the prison system and in psychiatric hospitals were people who had a chance to be able to recover their lives and minds afterwards. For me, these were positive and caring things and I sincerely believed that this MK-Ultra program could eventually reduce our prison and psychiatric populations. This is because I was witnessing real rehabilitations without any use of trauma. I took an oath to keep the things that I witnessed secret, the equipment that was developed, and I can assure you that from 1967 to 1973, when I was involved in this research as a subcontractor for the Department of Defense, I saw that there was a technological advance of 25 or 30 years. , things still totally unknown on this planet (...) I was hired for this work after months and months of psychological examinations to verify my ability to keep the secret; then I was given a past from the Ministry of Defence. I knew Himmler's studies under The Direction of Adolf Hitler, I knew that he had wanted to train "very serious" people to strategically place them in order to control different regions in what he called, and George Bush also calls: the New World Order. You see, Bush wasn't the first to fantasize about this terrifying idea of totalitarian government, enslaving the whole world through mind control.

Mind manipulation takes many forms. All of you here in this Chamber do not fall into this huge trap of controlling and manipulating information, and I would like to thank the Granada Forum once again for allowing us to express ourselves here, because we need your support. This book (Trance-Formation of America) is almost not distributed in bookstores and the few booksellers who distribute it deal directly with us, in order to preserve all the content and avoid any censorship. Initially, this book was published on our own.

Today we have an opportunity ahead of us due to the fact that many of the people Cathy mentioned in the book have been indicted for various reasons; faced with accusations, some have even fled their countries or resigned from their positions of high responsibility. This is for the simple reason that they could no longer cover up corruption... The corruption we are going to talk about here goes far beyond what you know (...)

Cathy O'Brien is certainly a remarkable person, but I can assure you that the prognosis of recovery of someone who was extremely abused before the age of 5, before the brain was fully formed, his level of recovery / healing is very good. These people can lead a normal and balanced life, even if they have lived a period of life with horrible abuse. That is the thing that surprised me the most. Today there are many survivors at different stages of healing and Cathy is the only one to have testified while writing a book. All this has been validated and we have not been locked up. I would like everyone in this room to understand that neither Cathy nor I are suicidal. We're just back from Arkansas, Cathy and I were invited to spend four days with investigators because they had identified a chapter of the book that they were able to validate. I then said to them: 'Pass this on to the press!'', they told me that they could not do that. But these are people that I consider friends, of you and of me. Now, if there are CIA agents in this conference room, you don't have to raise your hand (laughs) but I would like you to come and see me directly one-on-one. Especially if you are trying to harm what we do. Because this project that Adolf Hitler had developed, we in turn developed it thanks to Operation Paperclip which consisted of exfiltrating Nazi and fascist scientists from Europe to America after the Second World War. They have thus infiltrated our universities, our largest companies, NASA, I would even say that they are the ones who developed NASA... This infiltration has taken place at all levels of our society with all this m*: childpornography, blood rituals as well as despicable beliefs involving human sacrifices. all that can traumatize the human mind.

I have approached some researchers who say that it is Satan who is behind this. I would like to tell you that there are also people in the flesh behind all this! I worked for an airline that was involved in that. I had no idea why I had been recruited by Capital International Airways.

It was because I was able to keep quiet. Most officers do not know who they are actually working for. There are more than 86

000 in this country, now divide this number by 50 (editor's note: the number of states in the USA) and you will see what we are dealing with (editor's note: on average 1720 agents per state). This country is teeming with "Big Brother".

The KGB (Russia) has never had as many high-level operatives as we currently have in our country. George Orwell's book ''1984'' was indeed a dark prophecy that became reality.

Many people say, "We have to stop this New World Order by taking charge of ourselves," but it's already there, we're right in it. Now let's try to understand who the actors are and what their tools are!

Mind control based on repetitive trauma to truly create a fully robotic human being, is one such tool.

''Fortunately,'' it takes a lot of horrible trauma to get to such a level of slavery. This requires other means than simply pressing a button or a console (editor's note: nothing is less secure at the moment).

Today, there is material available that we cannot protect ourselves from. The most amazing thing is that these devices are accessible to everyone. I do not quite understand the philosophy behind the construction of such generators. There is a device called MDD1 that uses a double coil system pulsating electro-magnetic waves that act on our cerebral cortex by stopping logical thinking. You couldn't even control your checkbooks if these things were turned on, or even think about turning them off... nor would Cathy O'Brien have thought of running away from her ordeal. This is not battered woman syndrome, it has nothing to do with economic dependence, it is robotic mind control and there are tons of documents on that. ''America in the Middle of Trance-Formation'' is Cathy's autobiography, I wrote the first part to introduce the subject. What is in this book is what she went through and we can prove it. When it was printed, we had over 27,000 documents in 5 filing cabinets. We now have three tons of paperwork on the subject! (...)

I now know why the intelligence services did not want me as an officer. I now know why I was not aware of certain things. of which I am unfortunately now aware. Because I think I have denounced certain things. There are many whistleblowers nowadays (...) I can assure you that it would be against God and who I am if I did not stand up here to speak and introduce Cathy O'Brien so that she could bear witness to her story.

(Applause)

Cathy and I are very moved to see the number of people who would have done the same thing as us. People spontaneously say to us, "We really appreciate what you do," or, "It's hard to believe, but I'll read that and all the supporting documents." Please do it! Read the references at the end of the book, you'll have some books written by doctors, intelligence officers, and many other professionals who present things related to what Cathy has experienced.

In 1977, the US Congress officially admitted the existence of the MK-Ultra programme, and that is a good thing because I would not have an ounce of credibility if this project had not been publicly revealed. If he hadn't been declassified, I wouldn't even be able to pronounce his code name here in front of you.

In 1977, Congress also considered the case of Dr. Ewen Cameron, the founder of the American Psychiatric Association, a Washington lobby, controlling what psychiatrists do for our heads when we have disorders. Psychiatry is the youngest of the sciences of medicine and it is the most primitive of all (applause). There may be psychiatrists in this room, these therapists will know exactly what I'm talking about because the information they receive from their lobby is carefully examined/filtered. Information on the rehabilitation of mental control victims is scarce. It took incredible efforts by a few therapists of integrity who were being prosecuted for not want to violate the civil rights of their patients (medical secrecy).

Cathy and I's situation was very different because I'm neither a doctor nor a psychiatrist, so I had no license to practice or any license for my protection. When I rescued her on February eight, 1988, she didn't know her name, her age, or even where she was... I had already seen this stuff with individuals involved in espionage, and so I immediately thought Cathy was a mole. She was dressed as a prostitute, she walked like a prostitute, but she spoke like a person who would lead a Christian choir. An extreme contrast that I could not understand. This until I receive enough information from some people related to intelligence from this country, but also from abroad.

I was desperate to finally find a proper treatment that could result in releasing Cathy O'Brien for the second time in her life. the first time was at the time of his birth and it stopped there. Cathy O'Brien was the victim of the most awful system of violence known to man.

This is the type of mind control that Adolf Hitler thought he could use on certain people in order to place them in great positions of power, having invisible threads to make the puppeteer on their minds, their deeds and their words. I do not know if we currently have politicians of that kind, because it seems that you do not have to put them under mental control.

Indeed, they do everything that corrupt members of Congress tell them to do. I have known several members of Congress, they do not have to be subjected to sexual blackmail, they do not have to be seduced by money or drugs.

They are simply corrupt. You see, a psychopath is a very sociable person, they are leaders, leaders. Unfortunately these psychopaths have no consciousness, i.e. no expression of the soul. They do not consider the pain of others, except when it gives them pleasure.

MK-Ultra was built with many subprojects, especially to develop the perfect soldier, or the perfect spy. What I was told was that it covered our national security more than any soldier or diplomat could ever do. No one told me that they were used (editor's note: MK slaves) for drug trafficking and prostitution.

No one told me that we used them to do animal husbandry, that is to say to provide children to sheikhs, to leaders of this world... No one has told me that we are using them for money laundering.

When I rescued Cathy and her daughter, it took me a year to mentally recover Cathy, thanks to a lot of help and a lot of love. Therapists don't bring all this, they can't love their patients, they can't keep them away from the phone, newspapers, TV, etc. Patients often end up relapsing because they are very impressionable. They see an advertisement for fried chicken and they can even smell it. As a former advertiser, I dreamed of being able to produce such ads. I worked very hard to get someone to say to me, "This is a good ad," but no one has ever drooled while watching my productions. However, I used subliminal, I used a form of neurolinguistics. Those who are not familiar with this subject should take an interest in it. Tony Robbins is an advocate of neurolinguistics, he taught it to George Bush and Bill Clinton. He's not a bad guy this Tony Robbins, he's an intelligent businessman and every intelligent businessman knows the value of neurolinguistics. It is the language of the unconscious, well for me it is more about the subconscious.

The language of the subconscious contains codes, keys, and triggers. Keys that were used to unlock all the doors of Cathy's mind, which were specifically related to the abuse she had suffered. I then accessed information such as bank account numbers. The people who work on the MK-Ultra know very well that a deprogramming is nothing but a hack... Just as I can hack a computer, I can hack the hard drive of a human brain. It was this hacker job that provided me with incredible information like bank account numbers. Rather than go and loot these bank accounts and then have to go hide in luxury for the rest of my life, I passed them on to the FBI. Not because I knew it was dirty money or not, but because I didn't want to leave my skin there. I have provided the authorities with everything in this book over a period of three or four years: to all the federal states and to the law enforcement agencies, which are directly involved in this matter. I also provided the names of more than a thousand organizations and individuals. I wanted all this to be presented to Congress as it was done in 1977 when the wife of a member of the Canadian cabinet found herself committed to a psychiatric hospital in Montreal where Dr. Ewen Cameron was practicing (editor's note: Velma Orlikow, wife of Canadian politician David Orlikow)... She came out of it reduced to the state of a vegetable. This member of the cabinet whose name I can't remember then did everything to try to understand what had happened to his wife. They had subjected him to electroshocks and other horrible tortures in parallel with drugs and hypnosis. Unfortunately, many other people have gone through the experiences of Dr. Ewen Cameron. Some have recovered well and I am in contact with two of them. These people are very functional and one of them is going to do the same thing as us in the very near future.

I don't know how many have been able to fully recover as well as Cathy in this country, because no therapist can devote sixteen or eighteen hours a day, seven days a week to a patient, while violating the civil rights he has to get him out legally... Can they legally get their patient out of the clutches of their master(s), legally get them out of this slavery and access the directories (editor's note: information contained in the programming)? In one of these (Cathy's) directories, there was Bill Clinton's personal phone number. It was a $20,000 cocaine deal with Dick Thornburgh... and the long list!

This is a small group, a gang. If you take the entire population of the United States, it is a very small fraction, it is these bandits who control us all. They are so much in the minority that one wonders how they can do all this (editor's note: in direct connection with a supernatural force of order). One also wonders how Clinton is surviving all the attacks on him. How did George Bush survive the attacks on him? Well, he didn't survive, he left the Office, but that didn't change anything. Whoever replaced him did exactly what Bush wanted, such as enforcing NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (AGETAC).

We are part of this system and there are several ways to change it, a number of people are making very positive efforts in this direction. But it's their job, my job and Cathy is to stand in front of citizens' assemblies like here in front of you. We want to be sure that the information you are going to receive will appeal to you enough that you will then disseminate it around you, but also that you will study the subject to talk about it again and again: that is all we want. I am absolutely convinced that the information contained in this book will be able to reach the eyes of those who can see. Just as this video filmed here at this conference will reach those who can still hear and see the truth. This is so that people get up and start asking why Shiran-Shiran had the same psychiatrist as Lee Harvey Oswald or Timothy Mc Veight. This psychiatrist (editor's note: Louis Jolyon West, who died in 1999) is very popular, he practiced at UCLA (University of California, Los Angeles). He was also the first person to call me on my personal phone number, a number on the red list and under a false name! Even in the bush, over there in Alaska after I rescued Cathy and her daughter.

I didn't have enough connections for people to tell me what I shouldn't do on my own; and at that time it was out of the question for me to hear this kind of thing...

I suffered from post-traumatic stress because I was totally upset to hear what Cathy and her daughter Kelly were telling me. Then I showed this information to members of the intelligence and other federal agents who validated all this, thanks to them.

Now I would like to introduce Cathy O'Brien, the person who restored my spirituality. I wasn't a bad guy, but I needed a boost. I am proud to have been with him for more than eight years now.

Part 2: Cathy O'Brien

I would like to thank each and every one of you for your welcome this evening, who have come to discover a tool used in secret to announce what Adolf Hitler and George Bush call it: the New Order worldwide. I'm talking about mind control...

I appreciated being able to speak at the beginning of the evening with some of you, people who say that they have personally undergone mental control or that some of their loved ones have undergone. Mind control is widespread in this country and around the world.

These criminals who are in charge of our country operate with this philosophy: "Secret knowledge =

Power''. Many of the government secrets and personal reputations were based on the belief that I could not be deprogrammed to remember things I was supposed to forget. They were wrong. For as intelligent as these leaders are, their reasoning is hampered by their own immorality. They possess no wisdom, they do not think in depth and they never take into account the strength of the human mind. They never considered what would happen if a benevolent man like Mark Phillips became aware of their secrets and used them to restore the mind rather than control it.

I know I was extremely lucky to have survived after being a victim of the MK-Ultra mind control used by the CIA, the White House and the Pentagon: trauma-based programming.

Now that I have regained possession of my means and finally of my agency: I testify. I am talking about everything I have witnessed, everything I have seen and heard. Everything I recorded photographically behind the scenes of this attempt at a New World Order.

By denouncing their secrets, their power is eroding (applause).

I also speak on behalf of the many victims of mind control and survivors who cannot think for themselves to say what they know and what they have endured.

I am speaking on behalf of my daughter Kelly, who is now sixteen years old, and she is a real political prisoner. She is currently in the state of Tennessee where she was denied a pardon because of the political influence of her executioners. She relies on Mark and I to get the message across for her. In the interest of Kelly and yours, Mark and I have spared no effort regarding the facts and truths recorded in our self-published, and therefore uncensored, book. You will therefore find facts that have the right and the need to know.

These realities have long been hidden from us under the guise of the so-called "National Security". It is the same pretext of national security that has prevented us from doing justice despite all the evidence and documents in our possession. We have more than 27,000 documents and evidence: testimony from members of the government, medical records, much more than necessary for any legal process in this country including Congress. But this pretext of national security has blocked our access to justice. It is time for the truth to triumph. It is time for these truths to be brought to light in the name of humanity.

I would like to start by defining mind control through my experience. I realize that what I've experienced has been extreme, but also that this absolute robotic control that I've endured is more limited than the kind of global mind control that proliferates in society.

Mind control has several levels, like on a scale... There is total robotic control at one level and at another level of mind control such as the occultism that also proliferates in this country, or the "Global Education 2000" program through which children lose their freedom of thought and their ability to critically analyze. There are so many different levels of society that are affected by mind control that it becomes imperative that all this information be disseminated.

My experience as a victim can certainly be applied to all facets of mind control and mental manipulation (...) This is a subject that concerns us all, and suddenly the New World Order, in its entirety, takes on its full meaning. The erosion of constitutional values, the erosion of the morality of this country, suddenly becomes clearer when we become aware of this issue of global mind control.

I was born in 1957 in Muskegon, Michigan, into a family that has been practicing incest for generations. This means that my father himself was sexually abused as a child, that my mother also suffered these things, and that they in turn subjected me to it. My father sexually abused me for as long as I can remember. I often heard him say that he started replacing my mother's nipple with his penis when I was just an infant.

I tell you this so that you can understand that my sexuality has been deglinguished since very early childhood. It was stored in an area of my brain that looks a lot like survival, like eating and drinking. I am telling you this so that you are better equipped to understand what is happening in society and to call things by their name.

Mark and I mention names in our book, not to be able to say that I was in the White House with such and such, I do not mention the whole glamorous part. But that's so you know who the problem is and where it is.

The sexual abuse I endured was so horrible that I developed a dissociative identity disorder, it was usually called multiple personality disorder. I'm glad they changed the term to dissociative identity disorder because it describes much better the silos that happen when a person experiences a trauma that's too horrible to be able to apprehend.

Even though I couldn't understand that what my father was doing to me was something wrong, the pain and suffocation during his abuse was so unbearable that I developed a dissociative identity disorder. It was impossible to understand, there was no place in my mind to be able to handle such horror. I automatically compartmentalized my brain, small areas separated by amnesic barriers used to compartmentalize memories of abuse so that the rest of my mind could continue to function normally, as if nothing had happened... When I saw my father at the table at dinner, I didn't remember the sexual abuse. But as soon as he unbuttoned his pants, a part of me, the part of my brain that knew how to deal with these horrible abuses woke up, it was as if a neural junction opened up so that this part of my mind could undergo my father again and again as necessary.

I certainly had a lot of experience in this "brain compartment"

who managed my father's abuse, but I didn't have the full extent of the perceptions, I had a very limited perception, a very limited view of things. That is why I am glad that we are no longer talking in terms of personalities about this disorder.

I built another compartment in my head in order to endure my mother's abuse. His abuse was primarily psychological. She herself suffered from a dissociative identity disorder and I do not hold her responsible for her actions as I do for my father, who was fully aware of what he was doing. My mother, despite her inability to control herself, destroyed all vestiges of self-esteem that I might still have had. Her abuse was so horrible that I created another compartment in my mind just to deal with the unhealthy interactions I had with her. I also developed another compartment to manage the child pornography to which my father subjected me. Indeed, he earned his living by digging up earthworms for fishing, because he had attended only primary school, so he increased the family's income by producing child pornography. Productions that he then distributed in the local Mafia network of Michigan.

At the time, there was a criminal faction in our government that targeted children like me for mind control. This is because of this compartmentalization of memory which is something they thought was ideal for keeping government secrets. After all, if I couldn't remember, how could I have talked about it? In addition, people who suffer from a dissociative identity disorder develop a photographic memory behind these amnesic barriers. Indeed, the brain has a defense mechanism that makes it record the events related to trauma in an extremely precise and detailed way. To give you an example, the many of you who are old enough to remember the assassination of John F. Kennedy will remember exactly where they were and what they were doing at that very moment. It was an event that traumatized the entire nation and it illustrates how the mind photographically records the events surrounding the trauma. So behind these amnesic barriers, I had a photographic memory that the government thought was perfect for programming. I would thus be able to deliver and receive messages from leaders, or in my case also from the drug barons involved in the financing of the slush funds of the New World Order. They were interested in programming so that I could transmit messages verbally. When I issued these messages, I conveyed exactly word for word what I had been told, using the inflections of my torturers' voices, without any conscious understanding of what I was telling. I was just a tape recorder, repeating like a parrot what had been recorded in my memory.

Another aspect of interest to the government was that my dissociative disorders took away from me any notion of time. This was due to the fact that I was navigating from compartment to compartment in my brain without remembering what had happened before. I was therefore unable to keep track of time and its notion was absolutely foreign to me. Not knowing what I was doing previously, strangely I did not have the notion of fatigue, I was however doing too much ... A person who suffers from a dissociative identity disorder has great physical endurance, it is like a superhuman force with this ability to continue indefinitely. People with this disorder also develop a much sharper than average visual acuity. That is why they are very often seen with large wide eyes, they incorporate more elements of their environment than a normal person. This necessarily makes them perfect snipers for commando operations or for intelligence services. So the government was very interested in developing mind control.

So I was an elected official, a first-class candidate for mind control because of the repeated sexual abuse. My sexuality had been exalted, so I was serving as a sex slave and I was also receiving messages from government leaders. This criminal faction of our government, so interested in people with a dissociative identity disorder, knew full well that every child subjected to child pornography had toendure traumas so horrible that he necessarily suffered from this disorder. This government criminal group was therefore dedicated to this paedo-pornographic to be able to identify and target children like me who can be used in their projects. at at that time, the politician linked to this local Michigan mafia, the politician who protected this pornography network, was Gerald Ford. This is the same Gerald Ford who was elected President of the United States... I never saw him as a politician, I saw him as yet another rapist, of the same type as my father. Because Gerald Ford also raped me as a child and throughout the period I was under mental control, until Mark came to the rescue of me and my daughter in 1988.

Gerald Ford is not a pedophile per se, he is what I call a "sexual tester". He will try anything, any age, anytime and anywhere. until he took control. This is because he had a perversion of power in addition to having this interest in mind control.

It was Gerald Ford who came home to explain to my father how to educate myself according to the project that complied with government directives.

Indeed, my father had been caught sending childpornography in the mail, so he was contacted to let him know that if he sold me for this project, he would acquire legal immunity. Since that day, my father has had no trouble with the law, thanks to the famous "National Security".

My father obviously thought this idea was "wonderful" and he immediately sold me to the project. He thought the government was closing its eyes to child abuse. just like I think so too. My father continued to raise his five

In view of this project, we are doing so. The others are still waiting for their freedom as I speak to you...

Once my father agreed to sell me to the project, I was regularly taken to Mackimac Island, Michigan.

It is a political refuge where the home of the governor of Michigan is located.

It is a kind of Bohemian Grove (occult club) where politicians met and discussed the New World Order and mind control: mental control of the masses, mental control in the school system, how to use occultism as a basic trauma, etc.

One of my sexual abusers at the time was the Prime Minister of Canada: Pierre Trudeau. Pierre Trudeau is a Jesuit, today they are the armed arm of the Vatican. There is a criminal faction within these Jesuits. I am certainly not saying that all Catholics are bad, any more than all CIA agents would be bad or all our politicians. There is good and bad in everything.

But nevertheless, Pierre Trudeau represented this criminal faction of the Catholic Jesuits who wanted the mental control of the masses to become the World Church in this New World Order.

The money that this church brought in financed the controllers of the New World Order.

Another of my sexual abusers was the Michigan senator at the time and later a congressman: Guy Vander Jagt. It was this same Guy Vander Jagt who remained at the head of the Republican National Committee and who installed George Bush in the presidential office.

It was on Mackimac Island, then 13 years old, that I was entrusted to a senator who became my owner in this mind control project. That U.S. Senator was Robert C. Byrd.

Senator Byrd is a Democrat from West Virginia, and again you will notice that I am revealing all the names regardless of the political parties. It is as much Democrats as Republicans who are involved in these things. This does not concern the parties, but rather who is for a New World Order and who is not...

Senator Byrd was in office and still is in office today. He led our Senate Committee on Appropriations. This means that he was the one who held the purse strings of our country and he was the one who decided where the money would be spent. I know from witnesses behind the scenes that Senator Byrd was sending the money where it would benefit the controllers of the New World Order.

My father, who sold me for this project, for example, benefited from a lucrative contract with the army for the manufacture of camshafts for military vehicles. This is how my father became extremely rich... for someone who has never gone beyond primary school.

It was Senator Byrd, who became my owner, who would then decide where I would go and when I would go; operations that I should perform during the Reagan and Bush administration; as well as the places I would be taken for specific MK programming. Senator Byrd led my whole life.

It was at this time that I made my first Communion at St Francis of Assisi Church in Muskegon. After this first Communion, I also endured a ritual called the "rite of maintaining silence". This ritual was led by Deputy Vander Jagt and the rector of our church, Father Don... an occult ritual of blood. It was so horrible, it was this inversion of the Catholic Mass that confused my mind because when a person functions on a subconscious level, he is so traumatized that the conscience finds no place to face what he endures. The subconscious has no way of discerning, questioning and reasoning as the usual conscious mind does. And this inversion of the Catholic Mass by diverting it towards occultism has totally turned my mind upside down. It was absolutely infectious... This blood ritual was so horrible that my mind immediately accepted the mental manipulation they subjected me to: hypnotic language, neurolinguistic programming, mind control. It then changed the way my brain worked until now.

Remember, that part of my brain that I told you about, an area that was triggering to deal with my father's perpetual abuse. During this ritual they modified this, so that they could now decide when, where and how this particular compartment of my brain would be open and accessible. They replaced the triggering mechanism with hypnotic codes: keys and triggers, hand signals. There are also certain tones that can open these neural junctions and allow access to compartmentalized memories. They then reworked it all.

tones that can open these neural junctions and allow access to compartmentalized memories. They then reworked it all.

Following this rite of "maintaining silence", it also became silent in my head... Because until then, I heard my own voice constantly arguing one way or the other, with all these different perceptions coming from the multiple compartments, before I could make a decision on anything. I remember that before this ritual, I still had my own ideas, I had the hope that there was a place in the world where people do not abuse themselves. I had the hope of having ten children who would be at least ten children on this earth not to be mistreated... I had hope in these things, but with this ritual, I lost my ability to think freely. I had even lost my ability to hope. I had completely lost my agency. This ritual silenced this debate that was constantly coming up in my head and all I heard instead, at that time, were the voices of my executioners directing me, telling me exactly what I was supposed to do. I could only robotically follow these instructions to execute them.

When I was ready for high school, Senator Byrd ordered that I be sent to the Central Catholic College in Muskegon. At that time, there was a lot of information that Catholics had long been studying the effects of trauma on the human mind. They had studied them and had been keeping archives on these things for a very long time, especially since the Spanish inquisition. This information is in line with the research on Hitler and Himmler that the CIA had undertaken and on which it was making progress. The cross-checking of the information that emerged was very significant.

Muskegon College was a place where this information was gathered. It was in Muskegon that the basics and structure of Global Education 2000 were implemented. There are many different names for this program, which is implemented in our school system and which the government follows to the letter to children and adolescents. Global Education 2000 was designed to increase the learning capacities of our young people while decreasing their capacity for critical analysis. They thus immediately accept everything they are told without asking questions and simply swallowing all the information they receive.

In college, I immediately had A's, I was very talented because I was recording classes photographically. I also underwent occult rituals in the chapel of this college, like many other students, I was far from the only one. Moreover, at at the time I really thought that everyone was involved in this kind of abuse. My whole environment was saturated with it... This occultism, these traumas, created a photographic recording of everything I was studying in college. Of course, I had no ability to analyze this in a critical way or to use it in a creative way, but all the data remained perfectly stored in my head.

It was while I was in college that Gerald Ford took office as president. I had been conditioned during this period to think that I "had no place to escape, nor any place to hide"." It is a specific phrase that serves to put in the heads of victims of mental control that there is absolutely nowhere to run away and nowhere to hide: "we systematically keep an eye on you". This is of course what I was saying to myself, to whom could I have turned? Neither to my parents, nor to my church, nor to my school or to local politicians. I could not even turn to the President of the United States! I felt really trapped, which is exactly what they want for total control of the mind. Since then, of course, I have discovered something quite different and Mark wisely taught me, during my deprogramming, that I did indeed have a place to flee: right on them !... and that I didn't need to hide. Obviously they are the ones who are hiding, they hide all their abuses by using national security as a cover.

After graduating from college, Senator Byrd ordered that I be sent to Nashville, Tennessee. At the time, Nashville was heavily involved in mind control through the country music industry, but especially through the proliferation of CIA cocaine within the country world. This was already in full swing and political corruption in Tennessee was reaching new heights. The country industry provided blanket for mentally controlled slaves like me to walk across the country to distribute and deliver large quantities of cocaine from the CIA.

My experience leads me to say that what the CIA calls the so-called "anti-drug fight" is nothing more than an elimination of its rivals, in order to seize the global drug industry (applause). They are waging their ''anti-drug war'' on every street corner and today our streets have become a veritable bloodbath.

The country industry provides coverage for cocaine trafficking, so Senator Byrd wanted me to get into that environment.

At the same time, Byrd thought of himself as a kind of artist and occasionally played the violin at the Grand Ole Opry. The first time I was sent to Nashville, he was playing that night in that big concert hall. At his side (or rather behind him), there was a musician named Wayne Cox... who later told me that playing music alongside Byrd was not only musical accompaniment, but that he was also doing it politically. That night after the show, I underwent an occult ritual again. Occultism is frequently used as a trauma basis for mind control. Who can understand this kind of trauma? Absolutely horrible blood rituals, it is a perfect basis for the traumas necessary for mind control aimed at the compartmentalization of memory. I witnessed a scene where Wayne Cox murdered a homeless man at the Nashville train station, a place that was abandoned at the time and was being squatted by homeless people. He shot her just between the two eyes and cut off both hands. This was Cox's modus operandi for murders. After this blood ritual, this horrible trauma, it was decided that Cox would become my first "master", "supervisor", in MK-Ultra mind control. As "master" and "supervisor", Wayne Cox would follow Senator Byrd's instructions and instructions. Above all, it would cause me to suffer other traumas, in sufficient numbers to satisfy the many compartments that Senator Byrd wanted to create in my brain for MK programming. This is so that I can then carry out various operations during the Reagan/Bush administration.

Afterwards, I endured many occult rituals. at at that time, Wayne Cox was working directly under Louisiana Senator J. Bennett Johnston. Cox took me to his home in Chatham, Louisiana.

Bennett Johnston was then engaged in mind control operations in connection with a band of mercenaries. These mercenaries went back and forth to South America, and the arms trade was very active. Most importantly, when the planes dropped these guys in South America, they came back stuffed with cocaine, a drug that was then distributed on our streets. Wayne Cox triggered the MK operation of these mercenaries by showing them the severed hand of one of his victims, which plunged them back into the trauma of a ritual they had already undergone, making them access a specific compartment of their brain. He also told them that Bennett Johnston wanted them to "reach out", he would then give them instructions that the guys followed to the letter. So Bennett Johnston was also involved in that...

In 1978, it was agreed that I had suffered enough trauma to perform a first test, it was going to be my first operation. A large amount of cocaine had arrived by plane and I had to deliver it to the neighboring state of Arkansas. At that time, the drug trade around Bill Clinton was in full swing. He was governor of Arkansas at the time. So I delivered this cocaine to an airport in Ouachita Forest which I have since identified as Mena airport. I also passed on information and a small amount of cocaine, from Bennett Johnston's personal stock, to Bill Clinton. I handed him the package and he immediately sniffa two lines of coke... it was not the first time I had seen Bill Clinton use cocaine. My sexual experiences with Bill Clinton were very limited, even though I was a sex slave. In my experience, Bill Clinton is bisexual, rather strongly oriented towards homosexuality. I have mostly seen him involved in homosexual activities.

I've had a lot more experience with Hilary Clinton. Hilary is also bisexual, with a strong penchant for homosexuality. It was she who accessed my sexual programming to satisfy her perversions.

Also at that time, Bennett Johnston subjected me to other mental manipulations that involved not occultism but the theme of aliens. These guys who manipulated my mind and who programmed me for mk, real criminals at the controls of our country, pretended to be gods, demons, aliens. This in order that I feel totally helpless, that I integrate the fact that they were always there behind me to harm me. And it worked very well at that time...

Bennett Johnston told me he was an alien. He told me that he had participated in the 'Philadelphia Experiment' and that when the ship had disappeared, it had returned to a spaceship... This joins the theme of the "air/water mirror" frequently used by NASA, it is a reversal/ inversion. Because, again, the subconscious has no capacity for reasoning. Bennett Johnston then showed me, on the General Dynamics website, a "top secret" stealth device. It was a triangular thing that was not in any school book, of which no one did not speak, which we did not see in the newspapers, but who was nevertheless there, suspended in the air before my eyes...

It was still one of those top secret army systems. To me at that time, it looked like a spaceship! I had never seen anything like it. Because of that, everything Bennett Johnston was doing was for me related to aliens. So it was easy to get me to accept the idea that everything that was going on was actually being perpetrated by aliens. I'm not saying that aliens don't exist, that would be stupid of me, but what I mean is that these are people who actually claim to be E.T.. If there is a reality about extra-planetary influence, we need to clear up the disinformation and manipulation of minds that our government practices.

I know from a reliable source that their plan is for us all to feel powerless. because under a so-called alien dominationand that our-"Independence Day" is preparing. So beware of that! Understand that these criminals are confiscating information and technology from us under the cover of "National Security". They are at least 25 years ahead of all of us! Can you imagine what they have today? What has happened in the last 25 years? The microwave oven, the computer, but they continue on their side the progress and they are a lot ahead of it. So when they say ,'It comes from the aliens!", by showing us incredible technology, don't fall into this trap of feeling totally helpless. Superstition begins where knowledge ends, and we have been isolated from that knowledge for a long time. People have always had different beliefs and I'm sure each of you has different belief systems. Whatever your belief system, it is imperative that you know that these criminals are humans, they are among us to harm us. They must be held accountable for their acts and crimes against humanity. (applause)In 1980, when my daughter Kelly was born. She has arrived in this MK-Ultra program at a much more sophisticated technological stage than the one to which I have been subjected. In addition to the trauma, she underwent "harmonics" (MK programming system) on NASA sites, this from her birth, even before her brain had a chance to build.

As soon as Kelly was born, Senator Byrd, knowing that I had been sufficiently traumatized, ordered that we both be transferred to Nashville to conduct operations under the Reagan administration.

In this country music industry, we were then handed over to our second ''master'', ''supervisor'', his name is Alex Houston. Alex Houston was a ventriloquist (artist), specialist in hypnosis and immersed in the world of country music. He was primarily engaged in criminal operations for the CIA to fund classified programs. This concerned the distribution of large quantities of cocaine throughout the United States and Canada. At that time, he was working to provide me with blanket so that I could travel out of the country, to Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean, for criminal operations. My "supervisor" (Houston) took me to various military and NASA facilities for MK programming, for specific operations in which I was forced to participate (...) They involved leaders like the then President of Mexico, De la Madrid, as well as former President Salinas.

In 1984, a CIA base was established in Lampe, Missouri, a trauma center working specifically on near-death experiences (NDE). This site is named "Swiss Villa Amphiteater". They use the country music industry to manage large amounts of cocaine and then redistribute it. Lamp in Missouri is right in front of Arkansas, it is in close connection with the coke trafficking operations of Bill Clinton... booming at that time. It is also interesting to note that this traffic located in Lampe was the place where the country industry had been deftly relocated, right there in Branson, so as to get closer to the traffic of Clinton.

Lampe was also the place where I heard George Bush and Bill Clinton discuss. From my point of view, they clearly seemed to be friends, so there was no longer any political conflict between them. All this is just a smokescreen to deceive the public. Indeed, they do not adhere to these "political conflicts" because they have exactly the same agenda, which is the construction of this New World Order.

At the time, I heard George Bush tell Bill Clinton that when Americans become disillusioned by Republicans leading them to the New World Order, it is Bill Clinton, the Democrat, who will be put in the presidential office. All this was decided in 1984! And even long before that! In 1984, they were already discussing these things as an absolute fact. In this discussion, preparations for NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement) were also discussed. By the time George Bush became president, Salinas was becoming president of Mexico, and together they were going to implement NAFTA. This was the beginning of control for a New World Order.

I was forced to participate in the creation of this criminal NAFTA. The opening of the Mexican border of Juarez to free trade.

The free trade in drugs, the free trade of our children. The criminal roots of NAFTA are absolutely appalling.
It is interesting to note that these political movements are already decided in advance.

Once deprogrammed, I was completely baffled when I realized that people had no awareness of all this... It was so obvious to me... I could not realize that the population was not aware of the situation and that they had been deceived by a smokescreen, without ever having tried to find out what was really going on behind the scenes, behind the veil.

But I can understand that honest and sincere people do not think that way, they do not have a criminal mind and their conscience is not directed towards this kind of thing. Just as these guys (elitist criminals) are themselves limited in their thoughts by their immorality, honest people are somehow blinded in the face of this kind of extreme criminal activity. Until their eyes open to the truth.

The people who participated in these criminal activities were under the orders of George Bush. I do not pretend to know everything and I do not claim that George Bush was at the top of all this, but he was the highest placed I knew at that time (...) Bush Sr. was respected for his great knowledge of the construction of the New World Order. Look at his past: George Bush first started with the UN, then he became the head of our CIA. Then he indirectly ruled our country for three administrations: the Reagan presidency, his own presidency and then the Clinton presidency. Indeed, Reagan and Clinton both answer to Bush Senior. Mexican President De la Madrid also answers for Bush Sr. (...) King Fadh of Saudi Arabia also followed George Bush's orders, as did Canada's Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

In 1983, I heard Ronald Reagan and Brian Mulroney discuss the New World Order. Indeed, Senator Byrd acted as a pimp by prositating me to Reagan when I was at a cocktail party in the White House.

Ronald Reagan certainly smoky us all wonderfully. For those of you who do not want to believe that he is involved in these things, he told you that he was an actor!

(laughs) And he did a very good job, over a long period of time. That was his role, that was what he was supposed to do.

I heard Reagan tell Mulroney that he believed that the only way to achieve world peace was through the mind control of the mass...

I know from experience that there is no peace in mind under mental control. How could there be world peace without people having peace in their minds?

The ramifications of mind control go very far. Under mental control, there is no freedom of thought. Without freedom of thought, there is no free will. Without god-given agency, there is no expression of the soul. What kind of "world peace" can we achieve without free will, without expression of the soul, and without spirituality?

Mind control in all its forms must be exposed so that people retain their freedom of thought. So that they keep their free will as well as the expression of their soul, their spirituality. When people have a soul and a spirituality, they are able to Love. That is world peace! Not mind control! (applause) In 1988, I was forced to take part in many operations against my will. Things I certainly would never have done in full consciousness. I guess if I had had a part of me willing to do this stuff, mind control wouldn't have been necessary. I am appalled by what I have been forced to participate in, but I am relieved that this information is coming out, that people are passing the book from hand to hand.

In this way, hand in hand, we will be able to take back our country. You have the right and the need to know this information, and their control over the media will not suppress the Truth. The Truth prevails!...

(applause)

In 1988, Mark rescued me and my daughter Kelly. We couldn't think about escaping at all, I couldn't think about saving my daughter, any more than I thought about saving myself. And all my hopes and dreams as children had certainly had no end in it.

When Mark rescued us, we had no ability to hope to meet a good person, we didn't even know it existed. We didn't have the ability to trust someone outside our community (network). So I couldn't tell myself that Mark was a good guy, but I saw his attitude with his animals, and even though I had no capacity for reasoning, for awareness, something happened on an extra-sensory level. We then felt very strong things. After all, if we consider that we only use 10% of our brain, we had been split into certain parts of our brain, very receptive areas at various psychic levels, a bit like the animal instinct. My daughter and I had noticed that animals loved Mark. He had indeed three raccoons that he had saved and who loved him very much, they wrapped their paws around his neck and he kissed them... For us it was something very important to witness this, because until then we had only experienced mistreatment of our animals.

We had lived on a ranch, we had dogs, cats, horses, cows, chickens, etc., and all that [illegible] made Alex Houston was from the roofuiei and kill them for us "DRESSER"... If we did not participate in the abominations, it would have happened to our pets, and we worshipped them more than anything.

Please, keep this in mind, that those who mistreat children, often mistreat animals. If you see someone mistreating an animal, be vigilant. Make sure you know if your children are safe. I have never seen an exception to this rule.

So, it was very revealing for us to see that these animals loved Mark. Moreover, at the time he rescued us, we were threatened by the CIA. I was then 30 years old, I was supposed to be killed as most MK slaves are around the age of 30. I was considered "too old" for sex, so I had to be deleted. Mark saved me from certain death and he saved my daughter from a fate much worse than death... He even took the time to save our animals. He took on horses, cows and chickens to safety. This had a profound positive impact on Kelly and I, so we started to be able to trust her from that moment on. Mark took us to Alaska, in safety and serenity. As we found ourselves safe for the first time in our lives and were truly loved for the first time as well, memories of the past began to rise in the form of flashes. Through these flashes of memories, I began to realize what had happened to me and my daughter, especially during the Reagan and Bush administration.

Becoming aware of all this, I then became furious, I had rage about what my daughter had experienced, all the torture inflicted and more generally for all humanity. I would have been totally blinded and immobilized by this rage if it had not been for Mark's wisdom to tell me that the best revenge was complete healing.

This is because thanks to this healing, by the photographic recording of all these events, I could expose these people for what they really are! Expose their plan, expose this New World Order, and also to be able to get help for my daughter who is in desperate need of it right now...

So from that moment on, I started writing my traumatic memories. By putting them on paper, I was using a part of my brain other than verbalization, thus bypassing the emotional. Bypassing the emotional is something necessary to bring a logic, to make the incomprehensible finally understandable. It allowed me to understand and understand what had happened to us and what could be done with all this information.

Kelly wasn't as lucky as I was because of the programming she endured,a programming based on harmonics.

Memories of trauma and deprogramming did not allow him to have access to all parts of his brain as was my case. This type of programming requires special equipment to help him recover and heal. She currently needs to receive treatment on her neural pathways with harmonic equipment. Failing this, she landed at Humana Hospital in Anchorage, Alaska, in an intensive care unit. At the time, she was suffering horribly and was only reacting to psychological interventions and not to conventional medications. Kelly is currently suffering from respiratory failure. Mind control has evolved to such an extent that they know so well the ins and outs of the brain and the human mind that they know not only how to program the subconscious, but also to go into the primitive mind, that is to say the area of our mind where basic biological reflexes such as blinking, breathing and heart rate are regulated. They can work on it and put deadly programs in place. In my daughter's case, it's respiratory failure that means she can't talk if she ever remembered anything, she's never been forced to do so, but in the world of espionage it can happen. Through brainwashing, they can access the prisoner spy's memories. So today spies no longer have to keep the old cyanide pill on them, instead they suffer from respiratory or heart failure. Thus, no information will be transmitted to the enemy, no chance...

My daughter, genetically selected, was raised and trained with mind control to be later introduced into the world of espionage. So she had this program in place, which unfortunately then got activated. Because of the medical assistance she needed, she quickly fell into illegal and immoral detention in the state of Tennessee. Where it still lives today. The violations of laws and rights that have proliferated in his case are numerous.

We had a district attorney of integrity who got involved in telling the judge that he was violating constitutional and human rights in the case of my daughter Kelly. While he was cits a whole list of laws, the judge interrupted him to tell him: "But the laws do not apply to this case for reasons of National Security." This raises a few questions: What does "National Security" have to do with the rape and torture of a child's body and mind? All the more validated by evidence and supporting documents?!

For the love of Kelly and the love of so many other mind control survivors, we must lift this veil of "National Security". We must have this law repealed from the National Security Act of 1947. (applause)

It is no longer 'national security', but a threat to the nation when it is used to cover up such a crime against humanity as mind control. When it covers the SO-called "war on drugs" of the CIA, or covers the sale of our country to the New World Order. This "National Security" that has nothing to do with the security of our nation.

This "National Security" has hidden information about mind control from each of you for too long. We need to get that information out. We need to arm everyone with knowledge about mk, because knowledge is our only defense against mind control. We must obtain detailed information to be all more effective in our respective fields, in order to take back the country and finally take back our world; for Kelly's sake; for the love of all other victims and survivors of mind control and I know there are a lot of them. For the love of humanity as we know it. It is the truth that makes us free.

Help us spread the information, thank you. (applause)

Dissociative Experiences Scale (DES)
The Scale of Dissociative Experiences

The Dissociative Experiences Scale (DES) is aself-questionnaire for adults. It was developed by Eve Bernstein Carlson and Frank W. Putnam in 1986. The DES consists of 28 items to assess the frequency of various dissociative symptoms in the patient's daily life. This scale was developed to measure experiences of mental dissociation in adults, it is the most widely used tool for the study of dissociative disorders in psychiatry. Altered states of consciousness under the influence of drugs or alcohol are not to be taken into account for this test.

The final result is an average of summing the scores of the 28 items and then dividing the number by 28. Thus we obtain a score between 0 and 100. The average DES results for the average population range from 3.7 to 7.8. Results for psychiatric inpatients range from 14.6 to 17.0. In the Netherlands it was obtained from 71 patients suffering from a dissociative identity disorder a score of 49.4. Patients with a DES result of 25 or higher have a high probability of having a dissociative disorder.

In addition to the DES, there is also the MID "Multidimensional Inventory of Dissociation", based on the same principle but with more than 200 items (available on the internet). The DES as well as the MID do not allow to definitively establish a diagnosis; it is only through a structured and thorough examination that a dissociative identity disorder can be identified or excluded.

Testimonial Report

MK Ultra Dark Labs

1959-1975

Dark Lab survivor, Starfire was born into the Illuminati and donated for experiments after her parent died in a plane crash. She describes autism vaccines, brain implant technology and mind control products. The American military-medical-industrial complex recruited aerospace Nazi doctors to America using Operation Paperclip. They took operational plans from Germany which included brainwave linked flight control. Starfire recounts her life as an autistic child in the space program. She describes the effects of test vaccines paired to electromagnetic frequency generators. By using wavelength technology, she recounts attempts by the space program to modify behavior using links to artificial intelligence. Are humans being genetically modified to be more compatible with artificial intelligence for life in space? Read MK Ultra Dark Labs to find out.

CHAPTER ONE: SPACE SCIENCE

SECRET EXPERIMENTS

Key Words: Nazi Doctors, Space Exploration

On a bright spring morning in May 1963, a neatly dressed man in a lab coat walked up to my hospital bed and stood quietly observing me. He checked my medical equipment to make sure it was working properly.

I remember smiling at him like I always did to the staff when I woke up at Sunland Mental Hospital in Orlando, Florida. They called me Sunshine and I was about three years old.

This day was different the doctor did not smile back or say hello. In his right hand, the one I could not see; he held a lethal dose of a substance he called red mercury, one of the labs technical gases.

His name was Dr. Siegfield Ruff and he was from Nazi Germany. He was part of one of the most top-secret programs of America called Operation Paperclip. Operation Paperclip was a Cold War black program that was paid by the US Army but did not officially exist.

The US Army Air Force recruited him for the early secret space program. That is why he was sent to work at Sunland, Orlando near the launch facilities of the space center and the Orlando Naval base.

There were no checks and balances. I, a rare survivor, am of the belief that the Americans used the Nazi’s scientists recruited for the space program to cover their own countries crimes against its citizens. Secret crimes like vaccines, mind control and child sex rings for political blackmail.

During World War II, Dr. Ruff was famous because he oversaw the German Experimental Station for Aviation Medicine at the Aero Medical Division in Berlin, Germany. (Jacobsen, 2014). He was tried and acquitted of Nazi war crimes. He was a close colleague of another Nazi named Dr. Hubertus Strughold who worked with astronauts.

Dr. Strughold was called a space pioneer, also recruited for the space program under Operation Paperclip. Most of the Nazi scientists were directly recruited by the US military-industrial establishment to develop technology, medicine, aviation, space and communications.

The Nazi doctors worked under an American man who ran the aviation medicine program named Dr. Armstrong.
Armstrong was based at Wright Field in Ohio. The American military recruited these men and many others from the numerous wars of the last century.

In the earliest stages of the projects, they were supervised by a man named Lieutenant General Donald Putt who held a command post at Wright Field. During World War II, he was an aviation medical doctor based in Germany.

In 1946, Putt, an aviation doctor was one of the first to arrive on the scene at Hermann Goring’s secret aeronautical research center at Volkenrode. When he realized the extent of Hitler’s aviation, rocketry and space research he wanted to save it.

Putt and others like Dr. Armstrong advocated for space and technology to President Eisenhower in 1947. With approval he recruited dozens of scientists for Operation Paperclip. Later, he brought them to Wright Field, Ohio, the home base of the legendary Wright Brothers of aviation fame.

Dr. Ruff and I had worked on projects together before because I was assigned to his caseload. The Americans recruited him to continue his work on space aerodynamics.

He was an expert on the effects of the g-forces on a human body. He worked on seat belts for high speed travel in cars, planes and space ships. Since I was assigned to his experiments. I would sometimes follow an assigned doctor moving to their hospitals for experiments involving the space program.

Ruff had given me injections of “technical gases” before. He had used me in drug trials to measure different effects on the brain. I was simply an experimental human child and I was fully aware of it. It was not a choice.

My parents were dead. By the tender age of three I had already had a lobotomy and didn’t have many emotions at all. I was good at making observations and remembering key elements of the setting, faces, dates, numerical sequences, patterns and shapes. I never knew if I was going to die that day and “not come back”. All attachments were superficial.

The truth of it was that Ruff was brilliant as a surgeon. With help from Dr. Strughold, he had been the one to install a miniature two-way radio the size of a shirt button along my brainstem between my ears during my past years surgical schedule.

I was under three years old, so my brain was more adaptable to modifications. Both doctors used designs gifted to them from Dr. Josef Mengele’s lab projects.

The way I saw it, I got sent right back to Ruff’s lab because I got caught spying during one of CIA Georges missions. I was not supposed to get caught. I damaged my radio equipment during a CIA party. I was used for child sex work.

A member of the Mossad took me from the party after I collapsed to back engineer me at a hospital in Gainesville. I had disappeared for a while. When I healed enough, they sent me to the robotics lab in Orlando to see if the Florida space program wanted me.

Now I was back on Ruff’s table and watched him prepare my shot, probably to kill me over it. He spoke with a German accent in a foreboding voice, “Good luck with this one Starfire”.

I had a very bad feeling because nobody knew about that name, so how did Ruff know. Even at the tender age of three, I had already had three names, one new name each year.

That’s what the space aliens from the secret space programs called me “Starfire”. Maybe I was going to see them as part of the alien exchange and hybridization programs for the American military. I wasn’t sure, but I had a bad feeling and I was scared. I also wanted to act good if they were nice.

Ruff injected me in one smooth move. I immediately had a grand mal seizure and flatlined my life force very quickly. I lost my breathing, sight and hearing so the Nazi's could capture the brainwave data when I flatlined.

I had my own words for the different types of events I experienced. I called this kind of death "hit the deck" because my chest stopped moving. There were no brainwaves on third dimension. I paused to realize that I was dead.

The experiment was to match the resonance of sound and lights to off world objects. In prior experiments, I had been given occult style bird brain geode implants using technical gases to access interdimensional physics. The Egyptians called it the Afterlife.

Now I found myself on the gaseous planet Jupiter with very thick radio bands. I had to push through them as I slowly tractor beamed over to a sparkling fountain of blue ion streams. I had the sensation of trying to breathe and the radio waves were in my mouth. This is where god made birds.

There was a male humanoid there and he had wings. I felt very small in comparison. I could tell he did not want me to stay in that area because they were terra forming and I was in a bad mood way too much. He kind of looked like the picture from my child bible but I wasn't too sure. I remember saying, "Jesus?" to myself.

When I got closer I could see he was the deity Sin from the Anunnaki. It suddenly occurred to me from Sin's thoughts that radio telepathy was tracking me in the interdimensional fields. I transmitted to Sin that Ruff tried to kill me. Sin said, "How?" I said, "A red mercury shot". I felt very sad that I died.

Meanwhile, a small group of scientists were "downstairs" analysing my brainwave data maps. They were trying to track my brainwaves through the interdimensional places and find a space time rip. Rips in the magnetosphere allowed alien space ships to pass into earth's atmosphere. Most were tiny.

My brain was hooked up to a big machine using long needles inserted during brain surgery into the different areas like the pineal gland, the amygdala and acoustic nerves. The Nazi Ruff, was gathered with three others to watch the needle spikes looking for the big jumps when I left my body and died and likewise; when I returned.

I stopped moving forward feeling sad again, like okay, I know I must go back even though I was brain dead now. I couldn't breathe but they can keep a body alive for a long time. Somehow, I remember being pulled under the blue ions and started to feel better at once. Sin, Enki's son was healing me.

At the space centres in Florida and Houston, they had satellite dish technicians, radar operators and military flight crews on stand-by in case somebody came down from Heaven.

Florida was on the alien's flight path and that is where my physical body was located as part of the Sunland secret experiments on American children. Sunland Mental Hospital was a quick fifteen-minute ride to the Naval base and two hours to the launch pads.

Back on the lab, the medical doctors and satellite engineers were looking at brainwaves to see if they could detect more than one "foci" or beats. They had a toddler, under three in front of them generating measurable brainwaves that turned to radio waves and random beats after death. I had the impression that the technicians were looking for my radio waves in space once I had died.

The technicians at the Naval academy had aimed a big radar dish toward the planet Jupiter and its moons Europa and Io looking for pinging noises to pick up signals, even heartbeats and brainwaves.

The brainwave machine had measured my brain's baseline before, during and after the red mercury shot. At six minutes post-mortem, Ruff and the others pronounced me dead and started to clean up.

An orderly came over to retrieve my body for the trip to the morgue down in the basement. He saw foam bubbles in my mouth. The orderly said, “Check her, check her.” One of the doctors came over to put his stethoscope on me. He picked up a heartbeat after I was measurably brain dead for over eight minutes of tape time. He yelled at Ruff to get the machines, stat, stat, stat.

Off in space a satellite confirmed pings from Jupiter and pongs from the Bermuda triangle area. Those Nazi doctors ran to get me back to earth with the trays and carts sliding stat down the hall. The doctors assumed I had contact.

The American military intelligence officer assigned to monitor the experiment was sitting on a chair reading the daily newspaper. He didn’t really know what was happening until the astrophysicist told them what the experiment was all about.

They were trying to see if they could track my signal when I died to an off-world location. Would I make contact as a traveling radio wave and where would I go?

The scientists were directing my signal and trying to measure bilocation. When the scientists explained it to the military intelligence officer he said, “Oh shit, I am glad I came to see this.”

The astrophysicist spoke English and was wearing a headset and holding a small hand-held radar scope. “We are detecting pong sounds now and a craft has entered the Atlantic Ocean. We need to send a bird out to have a look around, Sir. We need to deploy right away to stop any breeches of our airspace and seas”. He was excited.

I was part of Operation Paperclip for mind control experiments, robotics and brain implants with technology. Shockingly, this was in American hospitals and reform schools across Florida, Alabama, Missouri and probably other states too. It was part of the secret space program in America.

In Florida, our state had the space program during the 1960’s decade. There were camps and hospitals for American children who were kept in confinement for medical experiments.

Specifically, the space program and high-altitude testing including support machines like the space suit, oxygen masks and supply. The space industry of the 1960's was a gift to Florida and its people, supplying thousands of jobs and technological advances.

The aviation experiments on children were typical Nazi concentration camp experiments without the focus on massive genocide. The program was scaled back in America for the space program. The goal of the nation was to put a man on the moon while defending our country. The wealthy elite, political top dogs and royal families of Europe, planned manned space missions.

In those days, when the secret space program began, it was an extraordinary time. Logically, it was wise to consider contact with other intelligent species just in case something ever happened.

The American CIA became the coordinator and host of secret research on time travel, spy implants, behavioural training and thought control. The American CIA had given Nazi doctors permission to research mind control, weightlessness, space travel and artificial intelligence. The American military used the German scientists and other POW doctors to excuse their own moral failures.

I found myself in a hospital bed hooked to life support systems with wires in my brain. I was a donated child given to the MK Ultra mind control programs called Project Monarch and Project Marionette

When I woke back up I was different. I was brain damaged with rigid muscles. I couldn't move. I opened my eyes slowly to let the burning light seep in, so I just squinted.

Dr. Ruff was sitting on the chair next to me reading a chart and turning the pages. He looked up and shook his head like this is not good for you.

I knew his face meant no. I could not talk any more.

Every sound was overwhelming like a gunshot tied to fight or flight and my whole body jumped in tension. I did not feel very good from the red mercury shot. My eyes had water coming out like real people called tears.

I saw a machine with buttons and lots of plastic tubing. I could see my blood running through the clear tubing to warm it with chelation therapy. I watched it over and over.

It was too late for me. I had autism, a life-long disability of the mind and body.

PREPARING FOR CONTACT

Key Words: Kennedy Assassination, Aliens, Satellites, Rockets

The counterintelligence agency of the CIA was in mayhem over the Soviets and the alien presence. There was lots of counterintelligence panic and false stories circulated to cover up the secret space program.

By the late 1960's, the public had knowledge of the Roswell crash in New Mexico. By the time the book, The Roswell Incident was released it became a best seller in the 1990's.

The people of earth in general were asking if we are alone. Who is god? How come so much war and death? The government offered the people the answer. There are no aliens but there is weird stuff. Project Bluebook documented sightings and offered explanations like airplanes and swamp gas. The Americans were challenged to figure out what was true. (Steiger)

The 1960's intelligence agencies run by J. Edgar Hoover, Angleton and John McCone had no idea about aliens. They had isolated themselves from the Europeans who had most alien contacts for centuries.

This is because of rare minerals in places like the Carpathian and Ural Mountains. The aliens came here to get minerals for technology just like we all use today.

After Roswell they were briefed on aliens and crash retrievals of the past like the one my sponsor, Al worked on in Missouri when the Manhattan Project was active.

In fact, just in terms of knowing normal military intelligence the Americans had failed. They had no idea how advanced the Europeans, the Italian mafia, the Persians or the Germans really were.

The one area that the Americans controlled was overseas smuggling. They called them rat lines for liquor and refugees. In the 1960's the smuggling industry was helped along by the Nazi scientists who were aviation savvy.

Only the wealthiest elite like Ford and Rockefeller were even aware that Russia, Korea and New Mexico had a space program and were using radar for tracking aliens. Privately, America's technology companies like Raytheon were building new radars, particle beams, lasers and other exotic weapons.

That is why the Nazi scientists were brought over to America, to continue their work and research projects. Radar was useful for lots of applications like finding oil fields and gas deposits.

I believe the wealthy elite like Ford and Rockefeller used CIA George H.W. Bush to actively protect their misuse of American satellite technology. They could use the satellites to radar scan a home illegally.

They could engage “the enemy” using black box products at street level to provide damaging electricity to a single house by 1980. They needed GPS to track cars, people and control locations.

During the 1970’s, these secret projects were linked to cars and President Ford’s family wealth during the politically tumultuous years after Kennedy’s assassination. These few families like Ford, CIA George and Saudi Kings basically owned over half the oil & gas businesses all over the world by 1975.

They funded the secret space program for their own benefits by exploring earth’s land masses for hedge fund assets. They used political office to control their wealth with little success of any challengers for the past fifty years.

After they won control of the spy agencies and political parties, the goal of the secret military-industrial linked companies was to create a spectrum of weapons that extended beyond any single use.

They can be scaled up or down for use against individuals or whole crowds or armies. “ (Robert O. Becker, The Body Electric, 1985)

CIA George was an old spy at heart and was interested in occult practices for gaining power. His German contacts from the Masonic Lodges liked the information discovered in Egypt, Turkey, Persia and old Babylon.

There appeared to be technology including weapons and space programs, astronauts and time travelers. There were star systems and objects that looked like crafts and technology combined.

In the early 1970’s a man named Erich von Daniken, published a famous book called “Chariots of the Gods”. For the first time, people began to pay attention to the idea we are not alone. His books contained pictures of ancient astronauts depicted in stone stele which are pictures carved in rock. On the pictures were weird and curious humanoids of several sizes.

CIA George had his spy heart set out to understand what the gods were talking about. He also wanted to find out where things were hidden so he could locate them.

He realized that the ancient gods had belonged to technology cults of medicine, space exploration, minerals and mining. CIA George was interested in energy, even nuclear energy. He found ways to help fund research to decode the ancient stele and cuneiform languages. A man named Zechariah Sitchin, was demonstrating some success.

There had been some drawings and mathematical equations for processing raw ores. The gods said certain ores were filled with the light of the sun and would turn yellow when energized. The scientists called it uranium and yellow cake in Europe.

Zechariah Sitchin would later publish such works as “The Lost Book of Enki” a now famous biography written by an ancient Sumerian named Enki who crashed on earth. (The Official Web Site of Zecharia Sitchin, n.d.) There were subtle references to a time of Pangea of one large land mass that broke up. Some parts of the middle east had moved. How did it happen?

CIA George loved to speculate. He wondered if the gods on the stele moved the land mass of earth. If so, what kind of technology did they use to geoengineer the planet? He liked finding the fine rock devices buried under the sand.

He called the rock devices “desert probes” because they were tall obelisks buried with GPS pointers to marks in the stars.

He gathered all the data he could and made sure to take it to his space center in Texas. He helped gather the Nazi’s from Germany and funded various black projects as soon as he got enough power. CIA George was not easy to work for at all.

After World War I, the elite families of Europe developed the art of spying because they tried to stop World War II with diplomacy, blackmail and murder. They began using advanced radar detection systems and signal blockers. As technology moved into the future, it was part of the Cold War against Soviet bloc countries like Russia.

The Europeans were more advanced than America military and had experience using beam telemetry like radar, particle, pulsed electromagnetic waves and so forth.

Dr. Robert O. Becker’s book “The Body Electric” described a 1952 Cold War secret meeting between Sandia Corporation in New Mexico and other scientists from the US and USSR (Russia).

The meetings’ purpose was to allegedly exchange information on biological hazards and safety levels. Each time the Soviets sent people who publicly acknowledged the risks of electromagnetic spectrums, radars and dirty electricity, the Americans argued and denied health effects.

Since Washington didn’t believe the Soviet data they set up an experiment themselves. The agency created the Project Pandora in 1965. Project Pandora administrators hired Milton Zaret for advice and research. He was to secretly evaluate the test signal that Project Pandora was detecting from Russia.

Project Pandora analyzed signals being generated from European transmitter systems and the ionosphere. Milton Zaret found the most bothersome signal was composed of several frequencies.

It was apparently aiming for a synergistic (multiplying) effect from various wavelengths and it was beamed directly at the ambassador’s office.

The American Ambassador Walter Stoessel developed a rare blood disease. He suffered headaches and bleeding from the eyes. Two of his predecessors Charles Bohlen and Llewellyn Thompson died of cancer.

No results were released officially, but technicians who worked on the project reported lots of chromosome damage. While most of Project Pandora’s records were destroyed some later released documents related to Project Pandora records suggested exposure levels as high as 4000 microwatts. (Robert O. Becker, The Body Electric, 1985)

CHAPTER TWO: SPY CRAFT

ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY

Key Words: Satellite Hackers, Designer Brains

I spent birth to three months at Queen of the World Hospital, then a full year at a military hospital in Huntsville, Alabama to be brain implanted with a small transmitter and fiber optic threads to conduct ionic light particles. That is where they removed my tailbone and put in a conductive metal antenna by slipping wires up my spinal column.

To create a human baby with advanced technology implants like infrared signal detection; Dr. Ruff used different medical waxes to adhere optical fibers as tough as silk spider webs to nerve tracks in my infant brain. I had several serious injuries during CIA child-sex spy missions and Ruff got very good at repairs.

Dr. Ruff worked with another very notorious man from Hitler’s inner circle. His name was Dr. Emil Salmon. Dr. Salmon had an idea to interface with other objects to manipulate them with wireless energy. Dr. Salmon designed circuits, and some were very tiny and unique. I believe he was the first true satellite hacker and he was teaching me his moves for uplinks and downloads.

Dr. Salmon wanted to control a space ship to increase maneuverability, using the human body and mind to fly, especially at high speed Mach or when the pilot blacked out.

I had to wear a blindfold over my eyes for up to three months after optic surgery implants because my body had to adjust to the new ions, colors, lights and sounds. The optics were not for pictures, the fiber optic implants were links to space telemetry programs, so I could move objects in space and the counterintelligence agency could take pictures. For now, I will say I was being prepared for more advanced links with robotics designed at Sunland.

One other piece was a brain implant to make a tiny radio device. I had several different types over my years in the CIA’s illegal programs. This one was a carved piece of radioactive glass. They had carbon dated the isotopes from a nuclear war almost a million years ago in the Sinai desert. That gave them a resonance pattern to match during oil and gas exploration using satellites to mark locations to explore further by sending teams.

The wealthy Arab families along with the CIA intelligence officers of high rank, decided to allow an occult procedure; matching bird brain geodes from the heads of trained hawks to implants located behind my ears. By using a stethoscope, they could hear pinging from sonar or space signals.

When I was plugged into the satellite GPS using a Cray computer and my old baseline brainwave patterns, the indicator on the EEG tape would jump as the satellite searched the oil fields for useable deposits.

The map makers had updated the areas by using the GPS capable satellites to create pre-charted echolocation grids in the middle east. The satellite owners knew there was liquid underground based on the radar readings of either water or oil. The Saudis had a way of training hawks to fly over a field to locate an oil patch by smelling it. That is how they knew where to look.

The birds would bring a blade of grass for the master to smell as a test for oil and to get a piece of meat. The elite families would GPS the spot and send teams later. These oil fields led to negotiations for land and religious territories in closed door meetings with generals, senators, congressmen and presidents.

Of course, my rights under the Constitution of the United States were ignored in favor of technology, oil, gas and political power moves. The politicians allowed brain surgery on me to violate my rights.

They allowed experiments to understand the soul like pineal gland removal. The pineal gland sits over a nerve center that coordinates energy like a junction box. My implant was wrapped with little copper coils, little silver coils, and gold coils of fine threads. This was a surgical curiosity as the reader might imagine. These were very tiny and surgically stitched onto scar tissue.

The doctors also used a bioluminescent paint made from sea lagoon creatures which made the meninges of my brain glow. They wanted to see if the bioluminescent particles would be used by the body, collected by the pineal gland tiny machine and recast through the optical fibers. They do work. Bioluminescence is not heat energy its cold fusion like lightning bug juice.

After the implants healed over my pineal gland they took me out to the Alabama pine woods to test it with a fly-by using a spy satellite launched from the Florida space center.

The generals told me to run in the woods located behind the hospital. They said, “See that fence, run towards the fence and run underneath the pine trees.”

I could see the fence on the other side of the trees, so I started running and I figured I would hide instead of going to the fence. I diverted my course. I covered myself with a pile of pine needles even though I could hear them getting mad at me.

I could hear their boots crunching on leaves, I counted five men. It was very cold that day, but I could not feel it because my heart was beating fast. I did keep quiet and tried to slow my heart beat, so the satellite could not find me.

I tried to concentrate on jamming signals from their microwaves by angling my head ever so slightly. I did have metal head pieces and could start fires accidently during these types of target practice exercises using microwaves. I did not want to ignite the pine trees.

I feared them because they wore military uniforms and they were armed. Their voices were getting louder and I could hear my handler calling to me saying in German and Russian; “Look up, look up, we see you Monarch.”

If I looked up the infrared eye could be detected so I kept my eyes on the ground listening. I could hear more than one voice saying, ‘Let’s split up”.

I got back up and started running low. You can imagine a preschooler trying to run but I did finish the run to the fence. When I got there, I acted like I had done nothing wrong and put my hands on the fence, turned my back and looked at my feet.

The general took his gun out and held it to the back of my head. He said, “Turn around little girl you shouldn’t have run.” He looked at the military group and Nazi doctors and said, “You may have to build another one of these things.” I waited for him to pull the trigger and squeezed my eyes tight closed just waiting.

About that time a three-star Soviet general came running over saying “No, no”. He took his belt off and tied me to the fence, so the satellite could find me. He saved my life.

On that day, the Soviets and the Americans were meeting to discuss a joint space program. America was demonstrating progress with satellite tracking.

The sharing of resources had been going along for nearly twenty years after World War II. The Americans had gathered a vast amount of technical data, patents, European inventions and so forth.

The Operation Paperclip gathering of scientists had changed history with inventions and modernization. Kennedy wanted to think differently, but we know that did not turn out so well for him. The wealthiest people in the world were not going to give their money or their vision up.

As a matter of fact, I was learning how to handle a great many adult concepts early on in Project Monarch. I was watching the interplay of human emotions, ego, sex, power, greed and need. I was observing mind control weapons being developed.

I had a lobotomy, so I always felt neutral. I had very little social need except for life basics. I had some mental and physical stimulation to maintain my growth. I did not miss anybody.

I had autism and did not want anybody near me unless I knew why. I did not want any more ions in my brain by sharing the light in somebody's eyes. I had to be taught responses by psychological handlers and behavioral trainers. That included daily tasks like eating, self-care and socialization with other children.

During mind control training, different responses to certain training tasks would be repeatedly suggested as part of the programming. For instance, when a child was asked if they liked spinach, the answer was often no. The programmers suggested the child would like spinach and be willing to eat it. The behaviors targeted like "eat spinach" would be evaluated during a follow up study to see if the child liked spinach or ate spinach. If so, how many times in a week or month. The number of times the child ate it anyway would count as a psychological win for handlers.

In some cases, the subjects were to be pre-hypnotized before they went to bed. At the hospital mental ward where I was housed, the patients were given low voice commands and suggestions.

At night, the children were monitored for signs of talking in their sleep that held related content.

The doctors on the night shift used a frequency generator box that plugged into the main electrical box. It generated pulsed waves at 10 hertz cycles during microwave programming into the deep mind.

The voice could gear the commands to thoughts already in the brain like you will try the spinach today. Even though the child hated spinach they would try. Each child was tested for personality types and who was the most suggestible and the least suggestible.

Finally, attempts would be made to produce the standard tests of deep hypnotic trance, such as muscular rigidity, by microwave beams alone.

Nobody liked the experiments at the hospital run by the psychological handlers sent by the CIA at Sunland Mental Hospital Orlando.

One day the black orderly named Howard came in with a big clipboard he put my papers on. He told me to get ready for transfer. I was getting sent back to Huntsville, Alabama for more satellite work.

A month or two after the satellite fly by for GPS I was scheduled to go back for surgery to sculpt a satellite link to start using the infrared that the doctors installed. They were going to connect it using my right hemisphere.

I don’t know exactly what happened, but I will describe it the best I can.

Americans in the medical and psychological fields were learning how to understand the complexity of the total brain and its parts, the hemispheres, brainwaves, symbols and drug interactions.

Before the wars, European scientists were used to working across disciplines while living in Europe to advance technology. In America it was a very different approach of isolation and secrecy.

I remember the day of my hemispheric disconnection because the entire hospital prepared for the visiting military dignitaries. The generals had their military hats on with stars and bars and everybody was saluting them.

They came to watch a Korea doctor and his nurse wife demonstrate metaphysical ghost DNA from the supposed aliens.

The Korean doctor was a former POW named Dr. Peacock. He offered to do a demonstration with his nurse wife present to train other doctors in advanced acupuncture procedures.

During surgical training, the highly skilled Korean doctor disconnected the hemispheres of my brain. When my surgical disconnection was completed, I found myself in a timeless dimension.

I had the sensation of leaving my body invisible but not dead. The Nazi’s doctors were humbled by the Koreans and chattered in whispers nodding their heads to show approval.

The Koreans demonstrated how to express an energetic invisible morphogenic shell with consciousness. It was one method they used to interrogate prisoners of war and send them along interdimensional space until the radio wave runs out of time (space-time).

I got to experience it when I was almost three years old. It can be considered the extreme part of disassociation of human consciousness.

The Korean doctor told the audience in the surgical theater to expect a visitor. That is when I suddenly found myself next to General Westmoreland whom I did poke with my invisible finger. He jumped out of his seat and looked around.

My ability to be in his dimension was being demonstrated so he understood war much better when he decided to leave POW's in camps for brain torture. He did it in Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. He was shown what can happen. Westmoreland and others like him did not like to be suggested what to do.

That day in the pale-yellow operating theater, General Westmoreland got very angry at the head of surgical secret projects. He stood up with his face bright red and gave a wave for the officers to leave with him.

The surgical suite cleared out fast except for the Nazi medical doctors remaining to finish the surgical training. They were laughing at the western philosophy of death. Westmoreland had seen my soul and he thought it was a parasite product. I was pretty sure that J. Jesus Angleton got a call.

That day the top of the aviation medical elite like Dr. Strughold, were in attendance. He was supervising his team of surgically trained medical doctors along with some medical engineers skilled in miniaturization.

Did General Armstrong and Putt want to make spies out of American infants, toddlers and children? Even some of the Nazi scientists thought the plan was overboard. They had been on trial for this very thing. They knew the Generals were using them to cover up for the wealthy industrialists and bankers who ran America and politics.

ON THE EDGE

Key Words: Soul Experiments, POWs, Tech Transfers

During the planning stages for aviation medicine, the space program used Operation Paperclip to contract a space pioneer named Dr. Hubertus Strughold. During World War II, he was part of the aviation medical team for Hitler and his aeronauts.

Sometimes he worked at the Huntsville, Alabama location supplying research data to university medical programs from his aviation studies like high altitude gases, pressurization studies and so forth. Some of the experiments underway at the secret hospitals like MILAB Huntsville were not always ethical or moral.

In the very early 1960's, the medical establishment was preparing for a war against Vietnam. They were developing brand new facilities like the hospital I was staying at in Huntsville, Alabama. It was close to a major university center and lots of research could be fed out to other universities.

The CIA counterintelligence agency used the economically challenged people in Alabama to feed their programs with human volunteers. One example of a CIA counterintelligence program was the Tuskegee experiment. In the article "The Tuskegee Syphilis Study: Some Ethical Reflections" the author examines the failure of ethical principles in biomedical research projects during the 1950's and 1960's. Black men were given syphilis injections and tracked in the population. (Ogungbure, 2011) That is why the military intelligence community allowed itself to move into human psychology and other realms free of charge. They had no moral objections to implanting a toddler for inhumane experiments.

Meanwhile, I was having an out of body experience. I was distressed because I was in interdimensional purgatory, I wanted out. I remember looking through the glass window at my half brain in the hands of the Korean Dr. Peacock.

It had some attachments to my living body, but I didn't know if I was going to wake back up. They used electric acupuncture which was powerful and feeding my energy source where I was in space time; the operating theater room.

The Korean nurse said, “The right hemisphere is heating to 101 degrees. We need to reattach.” Dr. Peacock slowly turned to place my right hemisphere near a cooling source, a bowl of water with ice and the nurse fanned my brain.

I remember standing near my right shoulder looking down on my little body because now I was closer. Dr. Peacock was holding my hemisphere very carefully while his nurse called out the temperatures to him every degree of change. Meanwhile, my body on the table really had no brain function since it was cooled to hibernation.

Dr. Peacock was removing needles in some areas to make my life force flow in little trickles to the body which made me move closer to my body from the operating room dimension.

He was pulling me back very slowly to my body. I was detached from the right hemisphere until he started to warm the left by inserting an electric needle and then cooled the right.

When the hemispheres very slowly matched all the body temperatures, he placed his stitches over my ipsilateral connection points across the corpus callosum of thick nerve bundles. Then he slowly removed all the acupuncture needles one by one and sewed me back up.

The right hemisphere does not concept time except light and dark, movement and change. The right hemisphere is sensitive to pressure generated from water and fire plasma experiencing heat and cold.

The right hemisphere can move along earth ley lines because radio waves are part of the morphogenic shell of a human being. The Koreans demonstrated this for the German scientists and the military intelligence officers.

The right hemisphere accepts input from the electromagnetic fields of earth as energy source. One of the components of electromagnetic fields is water and that is why Dr. Peacock used the water and the ice. Obviously, it is dangerous to be put out of a human body in that manner.

Students like Ruff attended to learn how to rewire parts of the corpus callosum. The corpus callosum is a large bundle of nerves that connects the hemispheres of the brain to one another for making transitions and coordination for thinking, walking and talking.

Strughold had seen the cooling techniques used in other countries where they did more advanced time travel experiments. They sometimes used the brain as a weapon, warning tool or data sponge by sending the right hemisphere to a star being on a craft and then lifting off. They used the radio wave telemetry to do it.

That day in the operating room was very important because Dr. Hubertus Strughold, attended my surgery to see Dr. Peacock perform Korean medicine. He was a boss of the medical teams for the secret space programs of America.

After that event, the Huntsville counterintelligence group had to find a placement for me or kill me. That is when J. Jesus Angleton and Dr. Strughold put me on the alien flight schedule.

He said why not just call her an alien, so we can get approval to use her. That is what they did on May 30, 1961 when J. Jesus Angleton got approval from the CIA and J. McCone for Project Monarch.

Dr. Strughold oversaw the Aviation Medical Research Institute for the Third Reich. He chose people for the Nazi space program. After the war he worked in America to assist astronaut training at the facility nearby.

When Strughold sent a human on board a craft to go somewhere he had them surgically implanted, so he could track their location in the ionosphere. The guys in the military operations rooms were learning weather modification techniques and remote location tracking.

Basically, in about a three-hour operation, Strughold’s surgical teams of neurologists in training, learned to put an electronic tracker button at the base of the neck.

That area partitioned the brain’s neurological impulses, so the land based team could adjust the person’s neurological functions including memory erasure. They could put them into a mental hibernation state of mind pretty much instantly.

Some of the Nazi’s under contract with the military were assigned to live in the Orlando area. Orlando was very sparse and being developed so they didn’t have much scrutiny. They were living and working near military bases that had back engineered the crash vehicles they were finding. They were building and refining rockets and aviation equipment.

Rich people who owned satellites shot down aliens to save their individual asses. The incidents caused by private operators using American equipment forced the military to referee negotiations or risk total defeat in space. Two space shuttles blew up, didn’t they?

How did I get on board an alien space craft? I was picked up at a military base in Florida. I used to stand on a big spot in one of the meeting rooms on a special type of quartz. The doctors would put drops in my eyes to open the pupil for the alien ship mind link and GPS. I was physically transported in a green gel tube of light on and off the craft.

Sometimes, at the training labs, I was told to look in the direction of a black and white spinning wheel to open a portal to the greys. I could focus my thoughts to the aliens’ minds.

We did something called structured entrainment in cubes and short tunnels, so we could share data with alien technicians. In the 1960’s, America and other countries were installing the cell tower systems of today, the nuclear silos, and wireless energy transmitters.

Most of my work was very detailed and simple once I learned the colors and how to identify them with 100 % accuracy. The missions would play a tone to my ears and ask me what color my eyes saw when I opened them. I could see the outline of energy that was invisible in a lower light spectrum.

They were trying to use colored wavelengths to form links to the brain’s features that could absorb the light wavelength and data flows. I had military handlers document everything that I did during sessions. They asked me how I felt about the other species I had contact with and so forth.

I told them about the tall reptile jumpers with characteristics like small fast Cayman types. I wasn’t allowed to carry weapons at my age.

On the other hand, with the support of the Nazi’s medical staff and psychological staff, I worked with some wonderful species that I did not fear. There was a tall grey with blue eyes and a small grey with spaceman eyes called slits.

The aliens always probed me about fear. I remember them asking me all kinds of things like why did I think their eyes were scary as slits? The aliens responded to my radio waves and vibrations. They did not have smell organs but they telepathed, “Smell fear, feel fear and body shakes”.

I remember being “expressed out of my body” while the aliens operated on my brain. They worked on my occipital lobes for vision. My nervous system was not detecting light properly to my eyes. The ET offered to adjust my rods and cones with their medicines and suction devices. I was not in good shape and they offered to help me before I returned from one of the training missions.

They removed my corneas and gently passed a light beam with magnetic fields in it to remove heavy metals in my eyes. The inner part of the eye called cones were packed with metal ions and my brain was overloading.

Then they played tones, so my brain would heal. My eyes were “hearing” music and not detecting lights well in the light spectrum. My ears were seeing lights and not hearing well on the audio spectrum.

I remember a console with dials and windows on the ship. The floor had grating for cargo storage underneath. They had to put me into a recovery pod before I could be transported.

They may have cloned me again, I can’t remember. I felt patient with the process like I had to recover and finish what I was doing in the space program. In return, the aliens got negotiating power and they wanted new underground bases.

CHAPTER THREE: NEW WAYS TO LEARN

PASSIVE PROGRAMMING

Key Words: Rehabilitation, Mind Control, Cloning

When I wasn’t on the space ship being repaired or tracked for military programs, I was in the hospital for rehabilitation training. I worked with physical objects like rolling a ball or trying to catch with my weak arm. If I didn’t look at the trainer throw the ball they’d bounce off me to focus my attention.

Sometimes the doctors put us on the floor in straight-jackets and tested the wall plugs to make sure we could hear frequencies. For those with more implants like me, they fine-tuned the black box meter programs for mind control weapons. One early type was the static shock treatments and they shock trained us away from wall plugs.

The scientists in those days were testing the work of Jose M.R. Delgado on human children. Delgado was an advocate of a psycho-civilized society through mind control. He was a staunch supporter of direct electrical stimulation of the brain. He was made famous during a demonstration of stopping a charging bull in its tracks with a radio impulse transmitted to an implanted electrode.

In other experiments, Delgado placed chick embryos in minuscule magnetic fields pulsed at 10, 100, and 1,000 hertz. He used fields of only 0.001 gauss, or roughly the strength of the earth field’s micro pulsations. Chicks exposed to the 10 hertz fields were normal. Those dosed at the highest frequency of 1,000 hertz yielded abnormalities. This had implications for learning and behavioral control methods.

The Nazi’s hoped to speed up the leaning process using advanced technology. They were thoughtful teachers with well formulated goals for their programs. In the beginning of my experiments, I received some tutoring to prepare me for different tasks.

They blended technology like the wavelengths and shock stick as part of their behavioral programs. They were testing the technology on different races and IQ levels. They intended to directly shape society using strata levels and provide intelligence training for IQ improvement.

They made sure a child in their programs had certain learning milestones. They broke their German into concepts and young children could answer questions with accuracy.

The kids chosen for spy work had a lot to learn including languages like Russia, Chinese, English, French and Spanish in that order. I was trained in a more holistic fashion and we did not waste time. They used a shock stick.

I could point to languages that I heard. I could recognize different nationalities by their bone structure, their ears and eye color. I could point to pictures in three different languages plus English.

The Nazi's thought about how the brain develops and used a different approach which involved the five senses. Later, as the child grew some knowledge about some vestige organs like the palatal Ph sensors and mid-line structures like vocal folds. The Nazi's studied the effects of frequencies on the pitch of the voice and could cause laryngitis.

They identified the primary archetypes like opposites, materials and lights. They focused training on the opposites moving into vibration using colored lights to teach math by wavelength and manipulatives to count.

During language training they involved stories with sequential events and wove early lessons into the sequences using puppets and dolls. I did enjoy my tutoring time. They managed to catch most of my developmental abilities up to within normal levels except for the autism symptoms and lack of conversational speech.

After I completed rehabilitation on my brain and body and my implants were healed I went to live on Hutchinson Island. I was sent to live temporarily with a man named Don, his wife and infant son. He was a trained hypnotist and CIA handler.

The devices the CIA handlers used for hypnosis were about the size of a pie plate which contained two colors like black and white. They could add two other colors of yellow and red if they needed it. I was taught to watch the colors at different rates until they blended to grey.

It was uncomfortable because it evoked the alien presence which was a feeling. They paired an audio tone that was an interdimensional frequency.

The black color on the spinning wheel was to link the brain to visual harmonics. The black box on the table was plugged into the wall. It played interdimensional audio tones in sequences.

The hypnotic trainers would use the white color on the spinning wheel as a blocker to the person’s own thoughts. The mind control trainers used white light strobes pulsed in timed sequences. The audio feed was white noise so that the person’s thoughts were subdued. Any foreign signals like alien signals could be isolated. The military was hacking my brain this way.

I had lots of brainwave data and I had trained using electrodes to contact foreign brainwaves and frequencies. When I made contact which might be detected by voice responses like are you alone in dream time? No. Who is there? Two greys.

Red could be added to the wheel if the session might engage hostile ET. Yellow meant warnings to be given like “We are bombing around your underground base”. Later the program expanded to all the rainbow colors. The CIA did not hypnotize children under three years old.

PERSONAL HISTORY

Key Words: Bloodlines, CIA, Nuremburg, J. Jesus Angleton

When my parents married in Italy in 1958, they came to America as diplomats from Eastern Europe using the Catholic Church and American CIA. My family knew an American man named James Jesus Angleton whom they met in Rome. He became the director of Counterintelligence Operations for the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

Angleton's job was to oversee special studies involving all countries where the CIA was operating. He later explained that his experiences in Europe meant that he was "sharply aware of the Soviet long-term objectives in subversion." (28) (James Jesus Angleton - Spartacus Educational, n.d.) The life of James Jesus Angleton is still a mystery. He spoke with a strange British accent and preferred tea over coffee. He was mysteriously united with the British Parliament’s military planning strategy especially when it came to spies. He helped them develop MI5 and the James Bond angle including spy bling. J. Jesus Angleton was a Catholic with deep ties to European Roman Catholic priests trying to flee communist Russia.

In October 1944, Angleton was transferred to Rome as commanding officer of Special Counter-Intelligence Unit Z. In March 1945, he was promoted to first lieutenant and became head of X-2 for the whole of Italy.

This may be where Angleton consolidated his power base after the fall of Italy and the withdrawal of allied forces. The survivors were at the mercy of untold pillaging, continued rape and murder. Angleton expanded the rat lines to get more people out of Italy and Europe. They were dying too fast to wait and things were in political turmoil.

Some research suggested that Angleton’s counterintelligence unit uncovered some of the secret correspondence between Hitler and Mussolini that was later introduced into the Nuremberg trials as proof of their conspiracy.

My birth mother was scheduled to testify at the Nuremburg Trials in 1963 on behalf of the Romanian tragedy at Dachau, but she did not live long enough. Both of my parents knew they were targeted by the KGB, CIA and MI5.

My parents were Eastern European royals leaving after the Soviet police invaded. My mother was a representative of the Red Cross.

The most famous camp to cause terror to the Romanians was Dachau. My family has missing years of history, especially my mother. I know next to nothing.

A 2016 article in the Holocaust and Genocide Journal titled; Dachau and the SS: A Schooling in Violence, described post camp liberation.

“In the popular imagination Dachau is, after Auschwitz, perhaps the most recognizable symbol of the National Socialist concentration camp system.

Indeed, films of Allied military forces liberating concentration camps in Germany in 1945 had an immediate and powerful impact on world opinion.

Pictures of skeletal survivors juxtaposed with piles of human corpses stacked like cordwood in barracks or railway cars continue to serve for many as the iconic images of the Holocaust.” (Westermann, 2016) During World War II with the purge of Stalin, the Catholic Church tried to help refugees coming from the concentration camps like Dachau and Romanian prisons.

Before I was born, my mother and my grandmother were scheduled to be purged since they were Romanians. My grandmother came from the European royals. She married twice and produced a family of six children. My mother was one of them, born in 1933 the same year Dachau opened.

My grandmother, a Princess became withdrawn. Her favourite brother, the King of Romania abdicated his throne. The new governments of Soviet Stalinists took her title and her money.

After the King of Romania abdicated his title and authority, the princess entered a convent and became a nun working part-time at Queen of the World orphanage for girls in Kansas City, Kansas.

The Nazi’s studied blood and cellular structures that carried genetics. Blood held the mitochondrial genetics they could change, modify and destroy if so willed.

The Nazi’s were looking for cellular structures that were responsive to radio waves and at least bidirectional polarity as a dipole. They liked the reptilian blood structure and were skilled crossing it into other genetics by the time World War II ended.

The reason was to establish a joint space program using blood that could tolerate oxygen deprivation and cold temperatures needed for hibernation. They called it "hibernation genetics" with the intention of space travel.

Grandmother, princess, nun, also worked on the Red Cross for America and Romania during World War I and II. The Princess nun was an amazing woman writing many books about the wars, international law and religion. She may have been involved to supply both Nazi's and Soviets with blood from specific bloodlines.

Grandmother princess nun had been called to Kansas City to answer a few questions about her own activities during World War II. I don't think she expected to have a twin baby discovered by the counterintelligence CIA director. I was standing in front of her with old buddy J. Jesus Angleton and he was fuming mad.

J. Jesus Angleton questioned her to see if I was a clone. She said that her daughter had a child and the child died in a plane crash. J. Jesus said, "No, there were two children. Did Josef Mengele want one for a twinning study?" He went on, "What were you doing with the infant you took? Did Mineola leave her here or not?"

The Princess nun would not tell him anything. The Princess nun said maybe I had been cloned from Dachau or Buchenwald camp. She wasn't sure where they started the cloning and twinning from eggs.

My birth mother did remember having her appendix removed at the Dachau camp when she was nine years old. Maybe Josef took eggs from her ovaries for his experiments. She had no idea what J. Jesus Angleton was talking about.

He caught the Princess nun in a very big lie. Her daughter had two infants which were fraternal twins. Mineola and Jarov never knew they had twins. Immediately after birth, they were given the male child. He was the one they took with them according to crash records. Princess nun started to cry. She was not finished yet.

The Princess nun said, "I work for Mr. Hoover. We are going to let the Nazi's implant her with spy gear since her eye is crooked. She is supposed to go back to Romania." I could tell she was angry at being compromised.

J. Jesus considered the situation and asked her directly to tell him what she was going to do with me.

“Hoover was going to send a man named Oswald and his Russian wife back to Soviet Russia as diplomats with a brand-new baby. Mr. Oswald said no.”

J. Jesus Angleton had caught her so easily because very few people knew about my Soviet cat brain implants and spy tech. He knew their plans because he listened. The Princess nun had plans to sell me over to Hoover. Some of the other royal families were involved like Al’s family in Missouri. Al may have worked for FBI.

Al, his wife and Don with his now pregnant wife, had taken me to New Orleans in the early Spring of 1962. J. Jesus had no idea who else besides him was listening, but he had his eye on them for sure.

There was a secret meeting set up at some notorious labs in New Orleans and I went there for a check-up. I was also presented as a candidate for adoption with a clean bill of health.

Don and his pregnant wife met with two agents that Hoover sent. The meeting was set up in the French Quarter of historic New Orleans in a buffet style restaurant with good French coffee.

Al, my sponsor grandfather who was under watch by the Bureau, met with some of his contacts in the Masons who worked directly with Hoover to arrange the adoption meeting.

Don, his wife and I were meeting another married couple from Eastern Europe. The couple was without any children at the time. The couple considered relocating back to Romania during the following year as diplomats.

Hoover had offered to assist their relocation if Romania granted the married couple diplomatic status. The princess nun was to ask her brothers if it was okay for Mr. Oswald to be a diplomat to Russia since he was fluent in Eastern European languages.

In the end, the couple who were also FBI agents, declined to use an infant for spying, citing ethical reasons. In fact, Mr. Oswald and his wife were appalled at the offer. Was J. Jesus listening to the meeting that morning?

You can understand that if Hoover had thought about sending Oswald to spy on the Soviets that the CIA and J. Jesus might not be very happy. In fact, it was getting very dangerous because CIA George might not understand.

The reason, it was going to mess up CIA George's global ambitions because he had a space ship factory in the port city of Gdansk. It was too late because the Princess nun was confessing, but was she cloning?

The Princess nun worked with blood, chelation and plasma separation techniques. The governments came to gather materials and blood products for testing and for sale.

She may have been aware of cloning experiments at the German concentration camps and the technology transfer.

Even then, they were looking to gather stem cells. I saw them scraping placentas and the afterbirth sacs from new mothers at the hospitals by my own report.

I lived in hospitals the first six years of my childhood doing a multitude of experimental testing from autism shots to hibernation for space travel. Princess nun made it clear that she wanted nothing to do with me after my parents died.

I was just a little toddler when she acted like that, but I already had a cold heart towards people. I didn't care. I was a scientist for Mother Nature; a spy for nature.

That was my rock solid alter. I gave myself my own job and figured when I grew up I could turn the Mother Nature alter into a real biologist or something like that. Maybe I wouldn't be multiple personality and that is exactly what happened. I made a good choice of view point.

I had early behavioural analysis training as I grew up. Scientists documented my body growth as slow and uneven. My brainwaves were studied in many different experiments.

Of course, I feared the doctors sometimes, but I was also used to being handled like a human experiment. I was trained to handle the surgical blade using only hypnosis to block the pain, so they could cut into my brain.

After what the Princess nun said about Dachau and Buchenwald I thought they were treating me humanely. I never knew what I was missing so I didn't grieve or expect anything.

I was taught how to form temporary bonds and expected my sponsors to perform their missions. I thought like a spy. The hospital was my home. I had no parents, no grandparents, nobody closely related to me at all.

The hospital was run by unusual people like Nazi scientists and military trainers in behavioural psychology. Every week the CIA sent an Israeli trainer in to see me. She was a graduate student and I liked her well enough. I never called anybody Mommy or Daddy or Grandpa until they taught me to do so. I was just doing a job.

I did know how to behave and the polite features of dialogue like greetings and answering questions with yes or no. If I fought back or turned away from my handlers, I was slapped across the face or shocked with a training stick. I had to perform, it wasn't a choice.

The Princess nun really did not care what the American military did with me so long as she did not get in trouble herself or make the King of Spain mad.

The Princess nun signed the paperwork to make me a ward of Kansas. About two years later, after I had a tragic accident at my sponsors home, J. Jesus Angleton donated me to MK Ultra. I got sent back to the hospitals at Sunland.

As far as spy manoeuvres and political secrets, Jesus Angleton had some big ones about cloned people. He was Catholic too and convinced Princess nun she would win favour with god by telling him about the cloning of royals.

The Nuremburg Trials were in 1963 with the disclosure of some of Mengele's lab projects being reviewed. J. Jesus Angleton wanted to protect certain wealthy people in the Vatican who controlled technology.

J. Jesus saw it as an opportunity to spy by way of family connections into the Soviet Union by controlling Hoover's FBI plans. Princess nun saw it as an opportunity to protect the Spanish royals where her money came from.

I knew that the Soviets and the Nazi's were removing the ovaries and testicles of important people. I saw them do it at the hospital.

They were going to clone children for the royals and manipulate them with genetics to sell them to other government officials. Maybe even the aliens would pay more for the royal genetics. I never knew what to think.

I did understand the outcome of the world wars. The royals gave up their titles in Eastern Europe and tried to flee. If captured, they faced execution by a firing squad or worse, forced labour in a camp.

I heard other survivors talk about it. There were so many families that were murdered that the guards began to save body parts for breeding labs in the post war communist bloc.

Children were valuable to economies for child sex and child labour. The guards could sell the victorious a “get even package” for multi-generational slavery and intergenerational revenges.

The people in the government were not very good at taking care of babies when they were orphaned. To be honest, I am not even sure if I was birthed by a human mother. The technology that was retrieved from crashed space ships was so advanced they may have cloned me. This may have been part of the big secret for the wars we have fought.

I was a good candidate for genetic testing because the Spanish royals kept the genetic records in Madrid and Barcelona. The Spanish royals planned to replace their relatives with other bloodlines who would not challenge their thrones or crowns. The outcomes of my vaccine treatments were tracked, and I came from an old bloodline.

After I got the red mercury shot from Dr Ruff, I could not sit up. I could not eat. I could not walk. I could not talk. I could not open my eyes in the light of the sun. I closed my eyes when people looked at me. I did not have a name, I did not want a name and I did not answer to my name.

A few years later, I got my official diagnosis. I was a savant autistic. The American CIA kept me in the vaccine program to pair up with mind control for training people with autism until I was 15 years old. I was trapped into experiments on my brain. I have been under surveillance my whole life as a black box human experiment.

CHAPTER FOUR: MIND CONTROL

BREAKING THE BRAIN

Key Words: Mind Control Weapons, MK Ultra, Dirty Electrics

America has a secret history of experimenting with mind control weapons. Some of the more famous names of the program are Operation Paperclip, Operation Artichoke, Operation MK Ultra and Bluebird.

Under the MK Ultra project known as Monarch, one key function was testing vaccines as weapons. The CIA intelligence officers did not want people to know what they put in vaccines. The Nazi’s designed them with their knowledge of toxic substances and especially undetectable poisons. (GAO, 1994).

The popular talk is that the Monarch program was about butterflies and cocoons but that is only a very small part of it. The butterfly produced poisons that warn off predators.

There were other meanings for Project Monarch as researcher, Fritz Springmeir suggested. One of the primary reasons that the Monarch mind-control programming was named Monarch programming was because of the Monarch butterfly. The Monarch forms patterns from energy.

The Monarch butterfly learns where it was born using GPS and it passes this knowledge via genetics on to its offspring from generation to generation. This was one of the key animals that tipped scientists off, that knowledge can be passed genetically through the geodes, crystals and other particles it grows.

If knowledge is passed genetically, can their inner minds be stolen if they know valuable things by taking any brain crystals or geodes?

The Monarch program is based upon Illuminati and Nazi goals to create a Master race in part through genetics. I was tagged for research because my father was the last monarch from his Austrian bloodline of Kings. A rather small group of elite thinkers, like Henry Kissinger and George Soros were trying to create the superior “King” archetype using genetic traits they could control.

They reckoned if knowledge can be passed genetically, then it is important that parents be found that can pass the correct knowledge onto those victims selected for the Monarch mind-control.

Can knowledge be saved for brain hacking by using mind control like hypnosis, deep brain vaccines and brainwaves? Knowledge is a copy and save program.

Sadly, the "correct knowledge" involved a long-term program to promote child sex so that somehow it would be okay at the archetypical level of thinking. The scientists and behaviorists did deep brain microwave pinning during electric acupuncture.

The primary factor for the trauma-based mind-control is the ability to disassociate. It was discovered that this ability is passed genetically from generation to generation." (Springmeir, 2017)

That is because disassociation is a function of brainwave manipulation. Brainwave manipulation was an occult goal for programmers and studied in private. Nobody liked the idea of brain surgery, experiments and implants. The methods of the science went underground.

When the members of the military used trauma and surgical methods to change the natural structure and function of the brain the outcome was altered states of consciousness.

They used the human body and brain to manipulate the brain's access to radio waves. In the 1960's, by my report, the goal of the technological gangsters was to access wireless data before they had advanced computers with random access memory and microchips. In other words, the Nazi's were designing baby brains to link with artificial telemetry for mind control.

During World War II, at the Dachau camp, they had worked on establishing a behavioural program for children beginning with the in-utero foetuses applying electrified acupuncture needles. Were the Nazi doctors manipulating the development of the brain and neurology?

My mother, was associated with the Red Cross at Dachau camp. I believe she may have been scheduled to testify about the atrocities at the 1963 Nuremburg Trials but never made it.

Unfortunately, some of these types of experiments involving foetuses, infants and toddlers may have been carried out in secret hospital programs in poor American states with little oversight from political elites.

When our military discovered the Nazi doctors research, they brought it to America using Operation Paperclip. The military managers, like Putt and Armstrong assigned the Nazi doctors to mental hospitals to carry out the experiments on unwitting patients, orphans and those who could not defend themselves.

Under the MK Ultra program named Marionette, the doctors worked with Tesla's theories on wireless energy transmission, electricity and electromagnetic spectrum. They learned to control the brains and nervous systems of children by studying brainwaves. Eventually, they developed a range of mind control products.

For example, in 1974, an American scientist named J.F. Schapitz, designed mind control experiments using electromagnetic energy. One of his stated goals was to demonstrate the use of hypnosis. He wanted effective control over his volunteer subjects.

He described his use of the spoken word as effective. The words of suggestion were uttered by the hypnotist to the patient and those "suggestions" were conveyed by modulated electromagnetic energy directly into the subconscious parts of the human brain.

He demonstrated that when a subject was seated in front of a hypnotist, by exposing the subject's body to electromagnetic energy, the brain would absorb the words of the hypnotist.

They consistently followed his directions with accuracy beyond chance over 50% of attempts. He stated that he has documented this state of consciousness without any "technical devices". The person exposed to the words of the hypnotist would have no conscious control of the information.

What Schapitz is saying is that there is nothing obvious, no technical devices like obvious black boxes for receiving or transcoding the messages. With the invention of alternating electrical currents (AC/DC), the electromagnetic spectrum is delivered every day.

He further proposed delivering a nasty behavioral plan to potential subjects of his experiments. In the first part of his experiment, Schapitz proposed recording brainwaves induced by drug use so he could record the subject's personality on drugs.

In the next part, he modulated the signal and shot the subject using the electromagnetic spectrum. Schapitz was using a microwave beam to recreate the effects of drug use on a sober subject. He was successful, and his work was funded by the CIA and others.

Schapitz designed many experiments to demonstrate the effectiveness of mind control weapons once the patterns for consciousness were established. Schapitz took it one step further and wanted to demonstrate the control over free will and choices.

In this last example, Schapitz's demonstrated the use of beams to manipulate the level of consciousness of test subjects without their informed consent. In the first step, the subjects would be given a test of one hundred questions, ranging from easy to technical. The test was planned so the subjects would know some but not all the answers.

In a later follow-up study, his subjects were under the influence of hypnotics generated from Schapitz's electromagnetic electric fields. The subjects were in tranced states of consciousness and didn't know they were being subjected to radiation.

Schapitz devised "information beams" suggesting answers for some of the items they'd left blank. In other words, Schapitz was piloting remote learning and mind control.

Some of the correct answers would receive "interference beams" to cause amnesia for some of their correct answers for things they would know.

Schapitz also provided suggestions for memory falsification for other correct answers. A new test checked the results two weeks later and confirmed suggestibility using electromagnetic fields to mimic brainwaves.

Some of Shapitz’s experiments involved impulse buying. One of his mind control tests was the implanting of hypnotic suggestions for simple acts, like leaving the lab to buy an item, which were to be triggered by a suggested time, spoken word, or sight. Subjects were to be interviewed later.

“It may be expected,” Schapitz wrote, “that they rationalize their behavior and consider it to be under taken out of their own free will.”

Back then, the cold war was on between the Soviets and Americans. Nuclear radiation, tissue damage and decay rates were the topics and the politicians wanted to study the effects of radiation.

The Americans began testing X-ray machines in the Sunland hospital. That’s how I lost the bone called the forehead. The Nazi’s used so much radiation that my bones became soft and spongy. I spent hours with the test X ray machines for the medical researchers.

After they were done I received metal pieces to replace the rotten bones from radiation damage. Strange to say this, the Nazi doctors were excellent at reconstructing my face and adding body parts.

The American CIA began bringing the scientists here to Florida during the 1930’s and expanded during the following decades. Most Americans don’t know how deeply the Nazi’s had infiltrated the heartland of this country. They set up a space program at Cape Kennedy for weather satellite launches.

Florida had its own secrets like the high-tech space program co-established with the Nazi regime before during and after the World Wars. They secretly worked on the physics of light, sound and plasma that are not general knowledge.

Florida has been a secret research host location to establish high tech communication links using wireless telemetry theories to create a remote controlled behavioral program. The program was a joint program to complete what I call the New World Order.

The American intelligence agency considered itself in charge of our psychology and decided to use operant conditioning. Operant conditioning is a type of learning in which the strength of a behaviour is modified by the behaviour's consequences, such as reward or punishment. This type of reward and punishment system is effective with artificial intelligence programs such as the ones in use today. It was adapted for mind control programs and branding.

Back in the set-up days of satellite telemetry systems, the only way they could prove they had a satellite link was to demonstrate a connection to a ground location, target or spot.

That is one of the later uses for the Soviet cat brain implants. I could be shocked or controlled like Jose Delgado's bull. Just like Delgado's button, my implant device could send electric shocks like static electricity to my hands. The experiment that Delgado performed will be explained further but it had profound effects on the development of mind control products.

My implant designs were based on an admitted CIA project called "Acoustic Kitty". (U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, 2014). It was not very difficult to imagine a human baby being substituted for the word cat or kitten for the MK Ultra Monarch spy program.

There are drawings to show how they designed the Acoustic Kitty with the brain implants. It is not that hard to do surgically. They did it in stages.

I had my tailbone removed as part of surgical modifications for the Monarch spy program. It is permanent, and it connects to other implants placed in my hearing system to form a spy radio.

In surgeries performed over the years 1959 to around 1966, James Jesus Angleton allowed me to be implanted like Acoustic Kitty.

In those days, the space program attracted wealthy industrialists, space engineers and software developers. They were political paedophiles in cults and they were swarming over the space program in Florida.

They were child sex traffickers. (Homosexual Prostitution Ring Ensnares VIPS with Reagan, Bush : 'Call boys' took midnight tour of White House, n.d.).

We could not get help in those days. The judges placed me and many other children back in the homes of the paedophiles with sex behaviour training. Different military intelligence officers assigned me to child sex rings, because they spied on other CIA members, FBI, politicians and clergy.

By 1970, the satellite program was in place to provide ABA tones to the acoustic nerve in my right and left ear using cell towers for telemetry. I was being trained like an animal from the Spaniard Delgado's lab experiments with audio tones to warn me and shock as the negative reinforcement.

Some mind control programs were even paired to the electrical wiring in the house. This is because electrical engineers working with military communication experts could piggy back a signal through the electrical wiring system using a telephone line black box to split the frequencies and control the output of energy.

Eventually, the black boxes became the smart meters of America; a much more advanced system for mind control weapons. Most people don't understand the negative effects of electricity which some call "dirty electricity".

In a 1979 study, Nancy Wertheimer and Ed Leeper of the University of Colorado Medical Centre in Denver, published a study of childhood cancer and power lines using data from 344 deaths from childhood cancer and their location to power lines.

The wiring of each house and its distance from the nearest transformers were studied. The researchers divided the houses into two groups. The study defined the two groups based on the signal strength of their electrical wiring.

They divided them based on those houses with high-current wiring configurations producing strong magnetic fields and those with low.

The childhood death rate from leukemia, lymph node cancer, and nervous system tumours in the high-current homes was more than double the rate in low-current homes.

CULT SECRETS

Key Words: Secret Cults, Rituals, Murder, Trauma

From 1945 to 1975, the secrets of America were kept tight and that is why nearly one million children disappeared without a trace. Some of them went to a place I call Chop Shop to be sacrificed for medical experiments, sexual slavery and satanic ritual abuse.

I can only say that James Jesus Angleton who worked counterintelligence at CIA approved my own situation for chop shop in a document he signed on May 30, 1961 authorizing the Project Monarch experiments.

A Chop Shop can be set up anywhere a group of people are willing to keep secrets, violate human rights and work together to be a cult. The usually kill together since there is a law called murder they use for blackmail. They did not like jail at all and called murder their religion.

My sponsor had built his basement home to host these special blood ceremonies. He had a side entrance to his basement so famous people would not be seen like the gangster, Al Capone.

My sponsor had a drain pipe in his basement to wash the blood away. My sponsor was the host of the gathering and his name was, Al, but he was not Al Capone.

That is what I got to learn by watching the Masonic groups that came to my sponsor’s house in Missouri. Back then, they had worked on the Manhattan project together and were in a cult.

They would pull up in their fine cars and each man carried a box with him. In the box was his robe which was a black velvet with a white stitching. The pattern was an eye with rays shooting out of it. The eye was in the middle of a pyramid encircled by the Sun, the black Sun.

The highest-ranking member of the group, usually a Mason would call the names of attendees and ask if they were ready to do the lodges business. Then the leader would say words like “Are you ready to see the sacrifice?” The brothers would all mumble and say “Yes, yes, yes”.

Then a door opened from upstairs streaming light down the stairs to the bottom. I could hear the creaking of the stair steps as the woman slowly came down.

She was a tragic princess from Europe in a trancelike state and she carried a limp, drugged female child. The expressionless woman looked hypnotized as she carried the little sacrifice.

I was just a child too, like the unconscious baby. I could see the toddlers mop of soft black curls, her exposed throat, blue skin and the foam from the poison she drank.

She had been raped all day among the men; slap marks apparent, bite marks apparent. Yesterday she had been an orphan, but today she would reckon home to her star.

The cult had a box of cedar wood with an inlaid mother of pearl design; the same sun and pyramid like the robes. Inside the box were the tools for the ceremony.

A little silver pipette with a very sharp end for the puncture of the carotid artery. The leader ceremoniously held it up for the men to worship the death device.

The hypnotized woman paused at the bottom of the basement stairs and waited for the next step. Al walked over and got the baby.

He brought the baby to the centre of the circle near the drain and placed her on the ground next to me. The baby smelled like almonds and I shook my head and closed my eyes. I put my hand over my eye and rocked back and forth.

The men did not like it. Somebody made a “Sssh” sound.

Al looked at me and said; “Shut up or I will pop you in the yap.”

I froze like ice. I looked sideways at the baby. She wasn’t breathing anymore, and I looked back up at Al.

He didn’t say much. “She’s an idiot. We beg your pardon, my brothers. “

I was very quiet and started staring at the basement floor. They got on with the circle and I covered my ears with my hands.

Al glowered at me. I put my hands down.

The woman took the six o’clock position of the circle. The leader took the twelve o’clock.

At that moment one of the elders in a robe stepped forward out of the clock circle line.

He said; “Brothers, I beg a pause to bring a matter forward.” Everybody turned their heads to the doorway of the basement.

A tall nude black woman stepped forward and approached the circle. Her hair was wrapped in a black velvet occult turban with the sun symbols.

She took the nine-o clock position because her power was ascending. They placed a robe on her to cover her and add her to their power circle. She was the only female voice to chant or sing in the circle.

Al was a big hand and I was a little hand in the middle of the occult clock. The Palestinian child to be sacrificed was a bloodline whose time had run out. Romanian Hebrews were next and that is why I was the little hand. My voice was already silenced by autism.

I knew Al wanted me to puncture her neck with the pipette, but I could not do it. Since the autism shots I could only use one arm and I had to sit and scoot to move around.

I could not stand up independently and needed help. I had to hold onto something. I could not use both hands since the red mercury shot paralysed my left arm. I had to wear a diaper again.

Al punctured her, and the blood ran down the pipette to a chalice. They filled a chalice of silver and gold and passed it around. Each drank, and each man paused with blood on his lips in a weird hideous way.

In those days of the 1960’s, the victim was almost always an Eastern European or female Palestinian child. In the case of the child killer cults that came from Europe, they used to tear their victim’s apart by surgically extracting the heart.

After the blood drained and she was pale; the heart was removed with a silver scalpel. The hooded doctor in a robe did the removal. Doc neatly sliced through her rib cage and used a little chisel to pop it up since she was a baby.

I managed to scoot back away from the scene because it was making a gushing sound. I was retching and gagging. Doc pulled it out and released the entanglements. Then he cut it out of the tough sack into small sections.

The heart pieces were passed around on a small silver plate. Each man and the black woman took a tiny piece and chewed it before swallowing. They spoke strange words and asked for their wishes to be done. They were a spiritually committed group.

After it was all done, the men removed the robes and put everything neatly back in place. I watched everything with my file cabinet mind sitting perfectly still and perfectly terrified.

When the ceremony was finished Mr., AL made a few phones calls and a little while later a Chinese lady came to get the child’s body. It was all wrapped up and ready. Al cleaned the basement all night and by the next day it was like nothing ever happened.

Do you know what they did? They all went to work the next day. Some worked at the fire station. One was a doctor. One was a famous gangster and sold liquor. Another worked at the courthouse and filed testimony transcripts in the official records.

Some of the ex-Nazi scientists and communists worked at the college and university levels to organize the projects for their long-term gain using satellite and cell tower telemetry paired with known behavioural psychology.

More importantly these are the men who set up the vaccine program for American children. They set up the clock of life based upon a ritual they performed to signify time. It was always about control and payback; even minor slights.

They set up the social security system and linked it to satellite systems. Eventually, their cult groups got their computer programmers to hack into all kinds of things.

They took children away from families just like evil fairies. They took children to make amusement park robotics and killed them for technology. They set up programs to manage their victims with autism; like me.

By that November in 1963, these powerful cults had organized enough to successfully shoot a President of America in the head.

The tactics of shock and awe for terror worked so well on President Kennedy they did it again to his brother. Robert Kennedy was the most important lawyer in America at the time he was murdered.

I figured I would be next on the blood drinkers list.

The German elite with the American intelligence services betrayed the entire world using mind control weapons and applied behavioural analysis systems. Then, they sold them back to the Soviets (Russia) and many other countries like China, England and even Pakistan.

CHAPTER FIVE: CLASSIFIED EXPERIMENTS

RACES OF HYBRIDS

Key Words: Mengele, Brain Experiments, Political Control

During the Holocaust of World War II; Dr. Josef Mengele is best remembered for engineering experimental labs for medical procedures on the brain, nervous system and spine. He managed the program for the Nazi's and had gathered the research to extrapolate data.

"Mengele disappeared from Auschwitz in Jan. 1945, several months before the final chaos began in the Third Reich. He disappeared so the Illuminati could smuggle him to the U.S., so that his exceptional knowledge of programming—honed and fined tuned on thousands of concentration camp child victims could be used on a grand scale in the U.S." (Springmeir, 2017)

"When the Monarch Programming started, the top men were Illuminati. Originally, Joseph Mengele was the lead programmer. He had already achieved the rank of Grand Master within the Illuminati. He had become skilled in music, in Kabbalistic Magic, in dancing, in abortions, in torture and programming children.

"This procedure didn't change when Mengele came over—the programming just jumped from being an occult science to one that had full access to the medical, psychiatric, judicial, scientific and governmental sectors via the power of the National Security Act and the Intelligence agencies."

"The Illuminati's programming of multiples prior to Mengele's arrival were simplistic, compared to the sophisticated techniques engineered by the Nazi Germans whose Mind Control research included some non-German nationals such as some Italians. " (Springmeir, 2017)

After the war Mengele and the others negotiated for freedom, refugee status and money so they sold their research to the American government. That is why Mengele kept individual logs from the experiments and gathered them from the other doctors.

He kept individual recipes for brain damage. He kept them very neatly and precisely. He was creating the master race for the Nazi's.

In her book, Operation Paperclip, Jacobsen provided grim details and photographs of gruesome experiments on Europeans and Romanians. After the world wars ended a new program called eugenics developed to reformat them with new genetics.

This was the start of the hybridization programs in America after WWII. Many articles are published in journals talking about experiments like "Human Experimentation; an Overview of Cold War". (GAO, 1994)

Our wealthy elite, some military generals and some spy agencies decided to expand the hybridization program the Nazi's began during WWII. There were thousands of secret labs and they had no safeguards for the public.

Illuminati researcher Fritz Springmeir found disturbing evidence of mass networking. He said if the CIA didn't have the international backing of the movers and shakers of the world, it would have been exposed and done away with. The CIA is a front for the Illuminati, and the CIA in turn sets up fronts." (Springmeir, 2017)

He went on to describe the hospitals as "are elaborate well-staffed, well-equipped programming sites."

Within the military intelligence network, any of the state mental hospitals like the McGill Psychiatric Training Network might be engaged in mind control studies. Some hospitals in the network might be St. Mary's, NASA in Huntsville, AL; the Presidio, CA; and China Lake, CA, to name a few." (Springmeir, 2017).

I personally received treatment from hospitals in this network described by Mr. Springmeir. I had lobotomy, shock therapy, behavioral training and other procedures like various metal implants.

Were the Germans involved in creating children for pedophile rings? I became suspicious of them (hospital staff) over time when I met other female Floridians who had brain scans as adults. They reported brain damage. Young adult females without other risks reported hollows and dead tissue from their brain scans.

Did the nursery staff use a long needle to puncture the frontal lobe of white female babies at the hairline level? Did they do other races?

When I asked the young adult females their birth hospital, it was always a coastal hospital. I suspected the Germans encamped in Florida from 100 years ago were running a stop loss program after World War II as part of being anti-Semitic.

This is not just an exaggerated statement about hospitals and the network. I can drive to a hospital in each major Florida city. Even today, I can ride my bike to a lobotomy hospital (its remains) only 15 minutes away. These were big networks and our ancestors allowed it to happen to us.

The Illuminati couldn’t do it alone without its fronts. Satanists within the Network & the CIA took over Boy’s Town, Nebraska in the early 1950s. They used that famous orphanage for a constant supply of boys for child sex and mind control programming. Boy’s Town is perhaps the most famous, but there are whole long lists of others. (Springmeir, 2017)

In 1963, I tested new drugs for them while working on the labs at Sunland Mental Hospital in Orlando. My hair fell out all the time. I drank radiation. I ate radioactive pills from the Army and Navy. I have never been paid one dime for radiation exposure and the brain cancer I had got when I was a kid.

All the President’s apologies to MK Ultra survivors seemed to have skipped me in various Senate Hearings. (1977 Senate Hearing on MKULTRA: Table of Contents/Main Index, n.d.)

In some of my experiments the doctors disconnected my left and right brain. I had two separate brains running two different types of information. I had my left eye removed to test heavy metal build up on the optic nerve. They taped it to my face and I could see the doctor from a split field. The eyeball removal experience was something I can never forget.

Those were the types of experiments the people in the CIA and the military operated on children back in those days. America planned this research. American men and women took it to chop shop. This summary explains some of the major MK Ultra projects developed during the 1950’s and 60’s. (Project MKUltra, n.d.)

According to declassified documents the; “CIA documents suggest that “chemical, biological and radiological” means were investigated for mind control as part of MK Ultra. An estimated $10 million USD (roughly $87.5 million adjusted for inflation) or more was spent.”

That meant the government of America was testing radiation on people, chemicals on people and biological materials like vaccines.

This place was no different than the war camps of Dachau, Buchenwald or Auschwitz. The same Nazi doctors developed refined versions for American children. The military intelligence agencies were operated by practicing Satanists.

During the 1960’s, the psychology was subdued militarily with covert intelligence gathering which turned to sexuality and mind control.

When Project MK Ultra officially got underway in April 1953, experiments included administering LSD to mental patients, prisoners, drug addicts and prostitutes—"people who could not fight back,” as one agency officer put it.

The goal for mental manipulation of individuals was of interest to those in power including the Canadian government. The experiments were exported to Canada when the CIA recruited Scottish psychiatrist Donald Ewen Cameron, creator of the “psychic driving” concept, which the CIA found particularly interesting. Cameron had been hoping to correct schizophrenia by erasing existing memories and reprogramming the psyche.” (Project MKUltra, n.d.)

I wondered if disconnecting the hemispheres of the brain was part of the programming for targets. That is because they can recreate the effect for schizophrenia where the victim talks out loud to access their own thoughts using hearing from one side of the brain to another.

They use the electromagnetic frequencies at certain wavelengths to interfere with the signals from the corpus callosum brain fiber bundles.

All this high science was sympathetic to the occultist agenda. Most came directly from the CIA and the Army. The military intelligence and politicians were linked together using the force of negative occult practices like child sex, sex slaves and homosexuality. The CIA attracted members of the Satanic religion.

The political elite and others developed many perverse practices to stay together through shame and blackmail as they moved up the ladder and developed their super egos.

Once the elite understood enough about physics and space they began satellite and cell tower based mind control programs paired with high technology to use brainwaves.

In fact, one of the goals for 1960 funding was to create a tracking chip either in the dog tag, the helmet or the boots of the soldiers. The highest priority were the elite groups like Green Beret, Rangers and Delta force.

The military knew where the POWs were located using satellite trackers. The Vietnam war and all other wars since have been planned to develop advanced artificial intelligence delivered through brainwave technology.

Much of this technology is mind control for branding purposes which will be explained how they do it in upcoming segments.

THE MEXICAN OLYMPICS

Key Words: EMDR, Resurrection, Secret Implant Technology

During most of the year 2011, I attended a type of brain based therapy called EMDR once a week at a doctor’s office in Hallandale, Florida. I was trying to unlock what I thought was severe trauma and Doc was coaching me on a new computer based program. (Shapiro & Laliotis, 2015) The program delivered mild shock through finger electrodes and bilateral binaural hearing white noise tones at below 1500 Hertz of cycles per second through a headphone. I could adjust the pulse rate of the white noise to help calm my heartbeats.

Once I was hooked up I tracked a smiley face from left to right on the computer screen. After each session I had body symptoms, dizziness, nausea and could not concentrate.

I could not remember much about my life younger than 17 years old when I left the cult. My memories were vague and confusing of early childhood.

I had a family of two sides after World War II finally ended. The females were struggling to survive, and some may have grown up living at camps like Dachau.

On the other side of the intelligence fence were the Austrian males who were taken as POW’s. In a rather sickening move, some of the Operation Paperclip German Nazis were given custody of young orphaned victims when they came to America. I believe that his how Al, my sponsor got to America in 1914 and was issued a birth certificate. The rat lines have been operational since World War I.

After World War II, the orphaned children such as Romanians, Austrian and French royals after the camps were liberated were tracked by the American intelligence agencies. Some others were taking refuge after the war in Canada. Those were Persian French royal bloodlines, some of my sponsor, Don’s relatives.

All the refugees had lost family members, children, parents, land and their businesses. All these bloodlines were targeted for vaccine experiments and mind control. All my sponsor family members were enrolled in the mind control programs whether we liked it or not.

The German scientists from Operation Paperclip could keep an eye on me for use in their longitudinal studies for autism. Autism was one of the hybrid projects for radiation, vaccine pairing and mind control products.

I had many years of therapy to cope with post-traumatic stress syndrome. I could name the culprits, show the scars and tell a small part of a larger story but no justice could occur.

My therapist told me to remember what I could, so I could finally get the whole story. I did remember hypnosis sessions after a nasty beating and that is where the EMDR therapy started in 2011.

I remember it was the middle of summer in the year 1968. The Olympics were on television and brand-new color television sales were skyrocketing.

This was a big starting point for mind control and the massive technology roll out. (Mexico 1968 Summer Olympics, n.d.) The Mexican Olympics had been promoted by television advertisers as a world-wide event.

The medical military and the world's elite medical establishment were having a human contest to prepare for space travel with limited oxygen sources.

The Nazi, Soviet and Asian medical scientists were nervous because the Mexican Olympics were held at a very high altitude in the ring of fire mountains. (Wrynn, 2006).

A very large group of scientists were presenting their best human experiments in heart, lungs and oxygen delivery to muscles. Every gold medal counted in genetics.

I was doing dishes after dinner watching the Mexican Olympics from the sink area. I noticed I was the only one and my foster mother had taken all her children to another part of the house.

I froze, and I heard Don's wheezing breath and saw his face twisted with rage. He grabbed me by the throat and said, "Don't you ever talk about how I treat you again."

Then he slammed my right temple to the countertop and held my face down. Then, like an animal he ripped my pretty yellow shirt off my body in shreds.

He took the shirt and tried to stuff it in my mouth. I bit him. He dragged me off the counter on the floor and started slamming my metal head on the fake marble floor. I should have died.

I did lose consciousness and I did step out of my damaged body. I watched from a spiritual viewpoint like remote viewing. I was just seven years old.

Don thought he had killed me with a brain injury. He had no idea of what the Nazi doctors had put in me like the metal face parts around my temples and forehead.

Don called his family members around to view his kill; his wife and his kids. He lectured them on fear saying, “Don’t let this happen to you”.

The kids were all stunned and traumatized because they thought I was dead. My foster mother was concerned and went to get smelling salts to try and wake me up.

Don took his babies and toddlers to the back of the house. I woke back up after I reentered my body, but it was very painful to open my eyes to see her kneeling over me with the smelling salts. I could not wake back up after that.

I did not go to the hospital. They buried me in a shallow grave about one hundred feet in the woods behind their house. I woke up out of the grave, naked and cold. I just basically sat up. I went to the hose and washed myself off. The back door was open, so I went inside got dressed and laid down in my own bed.

My foster mother and father did not know I had the Soviet cat brain implant that sent a distress signal. They did not know I was planned by Nazi space doctors and secret space military for low oxygen warfare during high altitude testing. That is why I was watching the Olympics with interest before I was attacked.

Don and his wife did not realize that I was laying in my bed in the bedroom. I remember Don looking panicked when the FBI doctor and detective came to the house asking for me.

His wife looked distressed and scared. She took her babies to the back of the house and closed her bedroom door. Don let them in, so they could examine me. It was not a choice, the FBI had guns, cars and official jackets. Don had just been caught at attempted murder.

Don was very defensive when the FBI asked them about the shallow grave incident. At that point, Don and his wife knew they were being watched through my eyes and ears.

The doctor wanted to see me, so Don brought him back to my room where I was resting in bed. The FBI doctor took proof that I was alive by taking photographs.

After that, the FBI told Don a few things about being involved with the satanic groups. I was a space program asset and he was not allowed to kill me or seriously injure me. Their old buddy James Jesus Angleton was not going to be able to protect them much longer. Things were changing.

After that, Don went to the Catholic church and told them he felt threatened. He and his wife did not know what I was. They called the Monsignor on the telephone and asked him to talk to them about possession.

Don told them a story about when I was a baby and they left me outside for a minute. When he and his wife came back they noticed a large alligator near me, so they shot it. Maybe I got possessed. Don made an appointment for me to see the Monsignor when he came to St. Helens.

St. Helens Catholic Church was a large facility located near the Indian River Lagoon about one hour south of the space center in Florida. The location was once a settlement for Indian families. The Catholic church acquired the land and built a church, school and a convent on the site. The Indians were gone.

Don dropped me off at the priests’ private residence called the rectory. It did not go well for me. The Monsignor called me to his room. He bent me over a chair and sexually molested me.

I was about 7 years old and I was very angry at him. I looked in the mirror. My face was red and flushed. I washed myself off from his attack and felt the throbbing in my head.

The Monsignor made me go into a small side room he had set up in a secret closet. I sat on a wooden prayer bench in front of his ritual tabernacle table until he was done with the preparations. Monsignor said I did have a demon inside of me and he talked to it through my tail.

He set his silver cup up, put a miniature grill on the top and lit some incense that smelled like sulfur and threw it inside the cup. He gestured for me to stand and he took my finger and pricked it to bleed into the cup.

I started to cry my silent tears. They were hurting my feelings. My blood expresses radio waves like my heart beats when my implant is turned on. I wanted him to leave me alone.

I have a right hemisphere soul that I was trying to reunite with from the experiments. He said some Latin words. I crinkled my nose at the smell and felt what I best describe as an angelic being beside me on my left.

Monsignor squeezed the finger tight and held my hand, so I would not pull away. The being only lasted a few seconds. Monsignor had created a torsion field by using the silver stiletto to pierce my blood and force it out of my blood vessel into his cup. I did not like it.

The Monsignor was demonstrating his control over my ancient grey brain. He knew how to do it. Our brains are seamed in the middle behind our ears all the way to our tailbones. His anal rape caused one side to swell and loose plexus connections in the spine, mid and dorsal brain.

Monsignor was not stupid. The being did not have a separate self but was not normally visible in this dimension. I was not stupid either, I was injured. I was not the evil entity raping kids to find out if they had demons; he was. The Monsignor was a serial rapist. I personally, was not worried about my right brained hemisphere ghost. He was.

I was worried about more brain damage and autism symptoms. I was sick and tired of studies on my brain and violent injuries to my body.

I had no idea of everything the Nazi’s did to me, how could I? My soul was trying to come back to my right hemisphere after trauma and surgery.

Don, the Catholic, took me home. They called the Princess nun at her convent and told her they removed my reptile demon. Unfortunately for me, the Monsignor had a heart attack and died that weekend.

Monsignor had suffered a long history of heart problems and he was very old at that time anyway. I could not really say to anyone that it might be a coiled energy wave that killed Monsignor.

The military was testing microwaves in the electrical plugs at the time. But I couldn’t defend myself. That’s why there were too many radio waves when Monsignor poked my finger, they were testing beams. Blood responds to radio waves.

A few days later I got called to the convent attached to the church to talk to the Head nun. The convent was on the same property as the church. It was Spanish style, so I figured I was in very big trouble as I ducked under the white arches. It always smelled like flowers at the convent.

There was fine black wrought iron staircase from Barcelona that led upstairs to their apartment areas. There were two nuns waiting for me standing in the doorway. I did not like the looks of it, like an ambush.

The nuns had on their habits, rosaries and robes. They stood there as I climbed the steps toward them slowly making my feet move forward, hand on the black rail.

When I got to the top step, I hesitated as I waited for instructions. Sister Mary waved me in past the door. Both were frowning, and the little nun closed the door softly.

The nun named Sister Mary motioned for me to sit down on the couch. I shook my head, no. I was ready to run.

Sister Mary cocked her habit. Sister scowled at me while the other nun left us in private. She said she knew my grandmother. She knew I had autism.

Autism was a sign of the devil in the Catholic church. All disability was sign of the devil to them. She said I was an evil child and my autism diagnosis was proof I was possessed by another spirit.

I didn’t know what she was talking about. She said I was possessed. My doctor said I had brain damage on my right hemisphere.

Sister Mary said, “Do you know who Satan is?” I shook my head no, I did not. I made a sad face at Sister Mary and the little nun peeping in the shadowy hallway, like I didn’t understand.

The Nun herself looked possessed at that point because their crappy Catholic philosophy did not work on me; the savant autistic scientist. I don’t know if they knew about the Nazi space program for testing on kids with algae shots, implants, shock sticks and metal head parts.

I had a lobotomy so what could I say. It was hard for me to talk, especially when I was scared. I did try with the question, “Did Monsignor go to Heaven?” They said, yes and they missed him very much.

I started feeling a quiver with fresh tears over about the only thing I could relate to and said; “My dog died from a heartworm. I miss him very much. Did he go to Heaven? “

They said, “no”. I said, “Well, I would fix that, so I could see my dog someday.” They asked me if I wanted to see Monsignor in Heaven. I shook my head, no.

I did not tell them Monsignor raped me and talked to the demon in my tail already. I did not want any more talks.

They asked me to leave and said they were done with me. They said I was a poor idiot and locked their doors. I went downstairs admiring the colorful bougainvillea flowers and sat on the curb until Don picked me up.

Don was loyal to the pedophile philosophy of the cult groups, but he needed help from the church. His wife feared me. She had attempted murder on me at least three times.

Now there was a group of witnesses to my repeated survivals. Maybe I was an extraterrestrial or worse, an angel or just crazy.

The shallow grave incident nearly created a multiple personality in her when she saw me back in the bed. The priest at St. Helens suggested Don try hypnosis to help reduce the post-traumatic stress that everybody felt.

CHAPTER SIX: HYPNOTIC PROGRAMMING

CIA PSYCHOLOGY

Key Words: Hypnotic Suggestions, Counter suggestions

Don did provide some general relaxation tips to his family during the evening meal times. He would require the dishes be set, dinner ready for service and everyone be seated at his big table. He would say a few prayers then offer leadership before the meal with the words; “take a deep breath and close your eyes”.

His programs were spiritually low in my humble opinion. He would suggest the kids help their mother which was not too bad. Or, take a bath quickly, dry off and get dressed for bed which was not too bad. Or, take a bath put a towel on and come see Daddy. That was bad.

I noticed that while under hypnosis, the family members could not protect themselves. I was the only one with psychic defense training.

I received some strategies from my new Israeli handlers, they used my headset to talk to me sometimes after attacks. The Nazis had given me some training too in case I got caught.

I thought it might take more than that if I was attacked again. Al had given me a buck knife and I was practicing throwing it at a tree in the woods with ever increasing accuracy and strength.

Eventually, word got back to the highest level of the CIA counterintelligence group about Don putting me in the shallow grave. Maybe the satellite operators put a photo tail on me, I don’t know.

I am sure they laughed at his stupidity when I had a resurrection since he didn’t follow the work of Dr. Ruff, Dr. Strughold, and Salmon very closely. The CIA handlers knew Don was jealous of me.

After the resurrection, Don understood that I was an experiment. The FBI had talked to both he and his wife about my experiments. Don and his wife finally understood about my extra parts.

Apparently, they were finally briefed about my condition. They had forgotten due to hypnosis sessions, what happened at their house on Hutchinson Island. They had forgotten why I got sent to Huntsville, Alabama for brain and spinal surgery.

The Nazis like Dr. Ruff did a favor for my sponsor “grandfather” named Al. Al was Don’s wife’s father. Al was keeping his daughter out of trouble for attempted murder on me. The Nazi’s had arranged surgical help for me.

Don knew about the accident. He had been at work. With help from a military psychologist, Don and his wife remembered what happened.

When I was born, I was donated for experiments to install brain implants for GPS, child sex trafficking and spying on politicians.

On a regular basis, I was driven to the beach for satellite tracking work using the brain implants as a GPS point. This was a project for military intelligence and private investors to the satellite industry.

I had been recently released to Don and his wife from the Sunland Mental Hospital, after healing a collarbone fracture from a seat belt test with Dr. Ruff. I had not seen them for a year. His wife had a new baby boy and her own family by the time I returned.

I was sent to see them to do some child sex spy work at the local marina. Sometimes they would take me to the marina bar and leave me in the car for the pick-up. The wealthy elite investors would take me out in boats to the international waters if they were monitored by satellites. There is no law in international waters.

My handler, Howard, from Sunland monitored me from my headset and GPS. Sometimes, he and Don’s wife sent me out for child sex jobs and split the money.

A few weeks after I got to Hutchinson Island, Don’s wife took me out to play in the back yard. She left me outside on a dangerous wooden swing set which hung over the ominous roots of a Banyan tree.

I remember watching her turn her back on me and walk away very deliberately. I remember trying to hold on to the rope and feeling panicky.

I was left there by myself unable to jump down. Below me were the very large snaky roots of the Banyan tree. Eventually the seat shifted, and I fell off backwards.

I struck the back of my head on Banyan tree roots. I suffered a stroke and an internal decapitation. My neck and my spine were broken in three places. The rush of blood caused pooling and compression of my right hemisphere.

I remember laying under the tree and seeing red gushes when I tried to open my eyes. I could hear bugs buzzing around me while I waited to die. Nobody came out to help me. I wasn’t screaming or crying because my neck was broken.

I did not expect to survive. Instead, I got picked up by a drive-by ambulance and we didn't have a telephone. I was taken to a local resource called the morgue.

At the morgue, in a large side room was an iron lung and they put me inside, so I could breathe. A little while later, an Army doctor came to examine me.

Prior to the swing set accident, I had part of my tailbone removed for other implants. I was able to handle the swelling in my brain. My spine was very swollen, but it had a release point at the base as a big swollen bulge.

Eventually, I was transferred back to Huntsville, Alabama for advanced surgical intervention which is why I had to wear a halo to keep pressure on my skull for a couple of years after that fall.

I was becoming a Super Soldier, Super Spy.

Don didn't know. The CIA psychologists hypnotized him too. They did regression on him to erase a whole lot of "negative memories" of crimes.

Don had made the cult classic of pedophile, necrophilia and attempted murder but he really did not know how he was perceived in the CIA counterintelligence world. Then one day he knew for sure how they felt about him.

One morning, when I was out feeding the dog as part of my chores, I saw him come around the corner of the back yard from the front yard.

His face looked stressed and he was carrying a large wooden box that was saying "baaaa, baaaa". It was one of the few times I saw him confounded.

He had a problem internally if he was a good Catholic just doing the work of the CIA counterintelligence groups then why did he have a live baby goat?

He did not see himself has satanic until they sent that goat from the CIA to welcome Don to the cult. All the kids ran outside to see what it was. Their young children named the goat, Buster.

Don tried to hypnotize me once a week. I tried to hypnotize him back when I could. He had to write a report for the CIA military handlers and I did not. I had the tracking implants whether he remembered it or not. I never tried to crack into his military mind control software. It would have been like jumping into an old open pit sewer.

The military hypnotized him, so he wouldn't remember the jobs they sent us out to perform. Sometimes, Don was furious about things he did and had no conscious way to make sense of it all.

I wasn’t about to interfere with his dysfunction unless he and I had a job. Sometimes he took me to the space center and that is where they got him unawares.

He performed his drop off and delivery jobs for them. Don found orphans in the school districts and brought them to the military bases when he was told.

Don worked with immigrants, orphans and boys in reform schools like Boys Town camps. The military handlers hypnotized him, so he wouldn’t remember which generals and intelligence officers wanted the kids.

In the early days, before they military distrusted him, Don always started the title of my hypnosis sessions with the words Monarch 47. In those days, the army provided him with a small tape recorder and yellow legal pads for notes.

He would say, “Relax, just relax your muscles. Imagine riding an elevator down to a floor below you. Close your eyes and push the button one floor down. When you open the door, you will step out of the elevator and see a television screen. The television screen is going to tell you what to do.

I was counterintelligence trained for space travel and possible capture by humans or foreign entities. I left my blow-up punch clown on that floor to tell myself Don had been in my mind.

To counter, I began to leave messages in subliminal ways using my response patterns for Don to find. I pretty much knew the routines, I modified them like the elevator.

I tried to pair the elevator with frequencies. Then I left messages for Don that were intended to shape his behaviors back.

Like I would say to my mind; write a message to say the elevator is broken, go away. When I got better at the mind game, I would use imagery to help him step on the elevator because he was not allowed.

I knew he liked to be special and break rules. I would try to close the elevator on him to hurt him. Sure enough, he’d slam his hand in the car door in real life. I would stalk him to see how his brainwaves felt. I could say it was cause and effect and not me.

Don was shut out of the advanced telemetry programs and he could not break into my mind very much to spy for others. He would often punish me with violent behaviors towards me after he failed repeatedly. Don was trying to work for a private company called Booz Allen. I did not like them.

Whenever I perceived a threat I revised my brain files and brainwaves. Some of my encryption was in a light code that was fractional. It was unbreakable using the speed of computing available at the time.

I got picked up by a large black car with an unfriendly military handler. I had managed to control some dimensions, and nobody could break my codes. I could make colors in moving fractals, at least that is what I called it. The military handlers said, “Starfire, what is going on?” I said, “I don’t know.”

Even worse, there were now some obvious effects in the ionosphere. They called it flash lightning. I figured it was phosphorus from the chemical trails on airplanes. My handler thought it was something else causing the flash lightning pulses.

The military thought maybe my seizures and bio luminesce (meninge experiment) was causing the flash lightning to trigger a very low frequency of sound. My brainwaves were synching to the atmospheric conditions from the weather experiments. Even though the weather experiments had ended when I was under 4 years old. They thought I was pinging the planet of Earth to locate myself.

This was how the military planners operated some of their hypnosis. When I encrypted my ping, I was protecting the secret space program. I do remember they were mad. Nobody but them has ever noticed and I knew they would not notice that level of encryption for quite a while.

Each level of awareness was color coded for my satellite work and advanced medical experiments. I was doing brain synchs to space ships using wireless telemetry. I wasn’t going to mess up and let them get my numbers.

In fact, my hypnosis training memories were stored deep in my bones and brain’s neurons. Some types of neurons in the brain just stopped functioning so memory retrieval was blocked.

That is because the neuron holds calcium to block the memory. The only method that I know to heal the neurons is the EMDR which causes the brain cell to start working again. (Shapiro & Laliotis, 2015). Mine had to quiver like a seizure to let the calcium build up leave my brain and bones.

The other big goal for Don was one that he really liked. The military told Don that their psychologists were studying the after effects of war and child rape. They wanted to study the outcome of child sex because they were entitled to have sex with whomever they chose.

Don told me that he didn’t want to rape his own bloodline or cause a pregnancy because he was working hard to be a good dad. He was glad they sent me to live with him and help his bloodline family members stay sexually healthy.

He and I clashed because I did not owe him sex for adopting me when I was six years old. I was getting older and stronger including my hand and arm strength. I intended to put an end to him if he didn’t back off.

I could handle small firearms at that point. I was used in studies and was growing into the intelligence services. The CIA counterintelligence office said he had to write a report once a week and tell them how I was doing with it.

Sometimes they gave him pornography to show me. I freaked out and would have autism symptoms. He was sexually confrontational, and I was undesirable. I would stop talking, avoid body contact, no smiling with slow turn away so he wouldn’t chase or grab me.

I put my brainwaves toward him on negative images of doors closing, go away to his mind or gag, or wheeze or vomit. If he caught me by my hair to pull me around by my scalp, I worked to breathe calmly. I had to center and decide if I could murder him yet and how cleanly could I do it.

I hated him. I hated hypnosis unless it was for medical work in healing. I did accept “the forget the rapes” suggestions because it was not helping me to remember without arrests and punishment for the rapists. That is all I had to work with in my consciousness. That is why I filed Don’s attacks in my “get you later” if you screw up anymore.

Officially, the program to study child sexual responses did not exist. Declassified MK Ultra documents indicate hypnosis was studied in the early 1950s with progressive studies continuing until at least the late 1960’s. These were not very nice to the human mind.

The experimental goals included the creation of hypnotically induced anxieties like obsessive compulsive disorder or autism symptoms. I was used to demonstrate those symptoms whether I liked it or not during tests from the space program.

The test for autism symptoms used special boxes the lineman put on the electrical lines by the pole outside our house. It fed the electricity and electromagnetic fields coiled around the main using Tesla theory.

After the box was installed on the pole I went out to curse it and tried to blow it up. I hid under a tree and just stared at it trying to hear any frequencies I could mess with. I did not feel good. One day my headset said; “Stay away from the box” and I figured I was having an effect.

I struggled to complete some tasks with interference coming into my right hemisphere. I had deep wells of frustration over my new failure to understand math concepts. I could not remember anything and that was a “false” code to cause blocked memories. I loved math and knew it.

According to information gathered from declassified documents the military tested hypnotic suggestions to enhance or interfere with learning. My math skills were confined to recall and rote.

I was highly trained by American intelligence using hypnosis to observe for later retrievals.

By 1975, the secret military intelligence groups had discovered that mind control was more effective when paired with psychiatric drugs. They knew that microwaves allow some drugs to pass over the blood brain barrier normally used for protections.

Even better, they could control the flow rates using the house wires or at least microwatt rates. By using the black box meters to route the flow of energy, they could keep the experiments within the target families put on electromagnetic coil technology.

I believe that Don and his wife were given radiation pills in secret studies. They may have received extra doses of house “dirty electrics” from the black box studies done. Their three children were put in long term studies and had genetic damage and some chronic illnesses.

To my knowledge, their children don’t know who their parents were or what they did. Don’s wife died relatively young from fast growing breast cancer at the age of 57 in 1997.

The use of drugs and hypnosis was like bread and butter to the wealthy medical industry. They used the experimental subjects from the MK Ultra test programs especially, to study dosing rates of drugs. Some drugs created hypnotic like conditions.

American public services charted how long it took to wean a baby off drugs like heroin, crystal meth, cocaine and other exotic drugs the birth mother took. The pharmaceutical companies invested in computer technology to develop drugs, gel caps and micro doses.

Wealthy elite chemical company owners wanted to co-develop precision medical instruments, injectables and disposables. Lightweight drug users do not exist in pill culture so using genetics was helpful to them to design hardy people.

The wealthy industrialists, winning royal families and boot kissing politicians wanted to manipulate human genetics to produce people capable of supplying the body count for the drug war.

By the 1965 Johnson administration, the wealth holders shared technical data from social algorithms for computer models. They offered Johnson officials a system of income generation for a medical model all the way to a model prisoner system.

It generated enough technological rewards from using the "model system" that it grew over time. The pharmaceutical industry was growing with funding from the Nixon Administration in the 1970's.

During the preceding period, the Johnson Administration concepted, planned and delivered a social program with funding at the State and Federal level for assistance.

The computer programmers planned a budget system tied into drug wars on young people and cyber spying. I called it an American set up.

By the Reagan era, they were highly involved with computer programming. George HW Bush already owned many satellites and computer companies. His military owned lots of mind control programs based on black box technology and developed by a good many evil geniuses.

It was supposed to belong to America and benefit the people which is not what happened. During the Angleton counterintelligence CIA years, George Bush, who by this time was becoming a very a wealthy elitist, worked for the CIA against the Soviets.

He had access to patents and technology from the Germans as one of the agencies bureau chiefs and may have found mind control patents.

Originally the satellite based behavioral modification system linked to what I called more frequency and stimulation.

Private families of enormous wealth like Ford and Rockefeller pursued James Angleton to provide his space data to the owners of multinational companies. The schematics came from studies pairing brainwaves to high robotics and movement patterns. They had Dr. Salmon's wireless circuits.

The wealthy American businessmen were building amusement parks, record labels, toy companies and psychology programs.

They could study the mind control technology for their own private companies. Eventually they called it branding the mind of the American people.

THE BLACK BOX PROGRAM

Key Words: Electrical Lines, Satellites, Weather, Tesla Coils

Soon after Kennedy’s murder the gangsters and Presidents developed the satellite links and electrical line black boxes. There were black boxes for airplanes to track them. There were black boxes for American families installed by the CIA cult members. To target a family, the CIA would get information they were not allowed.

In 1968, a program called the Nielson ratings began from Hollywood around the time of the Mexican Olympics. It was one of the first uses of Tesla’s coils on electrical lines. It fed data back to a main hub of computers linked to satellites that could count.

After the wars ended, the American CIA and military wanted to develop the Nazi technology as a space program and a cyber warfare program. The invention of a cable box that was an electrical line splitter was an incredible lucky break for the domestic spying program that began in earnest during the early 1970’s as part of cyber warfare on Americans. It began innocently enough.

A street of ten row homes might have five televisions sets on at 7:00 pm transmitting data to the black boxes outside the house on the electrical poles. At 11:59 PM in the eastern United States the satellite sweeps would begin to pick up the data streams every night.

By morning, all the news media already knew who had won the overnight ratings contest for best prime time show. This was very important data for advertisers in the 1970’s when it was used widely in America.

The satellite owners sold their data to the cable companies and became very rich. Programs to fit the mood of Americans developed with more content and more manipulations.

The goal of the elite controllers and manufactures of goods was to increase sales. They could interfere with decision making, and sow confusion and irritation. They knew about the negative effects of dirty electricity with harmful harmonics, especially cancer.

In the 1980's the early satellite black box technology became the cable box program to supply special access television that the public paid for. The elite designed a self-pay mind control system that was financed by the victims with their consent and subscription.

The cable boxes were put on the electrical lines to provide the signal. Inside the boxes are frequency splitters which are designed to control the wavelength of light the television and the television show broadcast.

The government worked closely with the cable and satellite owners to control the airwaves. The CIA men who designed the program were pedophiles involved in large cult groups.

The documentation of their involvement in organized child sex is ample. One of the most important cases is called The Franklin Scandal. That case was the first to document the scope of pedophile cult practice all the way to the office of the President. (DeCamp, 2004-2005)

They created special access programs to monitor targeted families from world wars and politics. They followed their children. The black boxes could record input from the telephone line to monitor selected houses on Saturday for toy companies. They even spied on calls to the family members, baseball games and boy scout camping trips.

On example of such a device was called the Portable People Meter. It was developed by a company named Arbitron part of Nielson Audio, to measure how many people are listening to radio stations and television stations including cable television.

It detects hidden audio tones and roams the network for a signal it is programmed to detect. (Arbitron Announces Next Generation Electronic Audience Measurement PPM 360, 2010).

That was the beginning of the massive pedophile abduction network. Kids were being hunted by satellites, phone lines and surveillance electronics and taken nearly every day.

Americans could not even go to a National Park without fearing a disappearance of a loved one; especially children. The excellent book called Missing 411 gives more details and disappearance examples. (Pallides, n.d.)

This was about the time the CIA made special access programs to sweep an area on a regular basis; like playground or parking lots. The kids had to go indoors to play.

Sometimes the CIA psychologists wrote programs to insert memories on a targeted individual from real people from the past like Jesus or Julius Caesar. They swept the satellites, black boxes, televisions and phone lines on a regular basis using Tesla’s technology to gather more and more metadata.

CHAPTER SEVEN: BRAIN SCULPTING VACCINES

TOXIC VACCINES

Key Words: Surgery, Polyps, Dyes, Strobe Lights

In the late 1960’s, the CIA vaccine labs started testing new covert vaccines to create a medical caste system. They wanted functional victims to harvest family dollars, cause slow death like cancer and degrade health slowly over a long time. They started with newborns, infants and toddlers.

In 1966, I was receiving a shot containing recombinant active moth-algae pieces every month. Every six months a big car with a psychologist would pick me up and take me to Sunland mental hospital in Orlando for my brain surgery sculpting sessions.
I had lots of interesting psychologists working with me on autism and vaccines. My favourite person was a foreign lady who was an Israeli military handler.

I called her Stringfield, her CIA name. She used to coach me through my brain sculpting surgeries by telling me I would not need my brain, we do not use the white matter part of our brain very much.

My autism symptoms worsened because every summer on school break I had to go to labs to test vaccines. The vaccine testing used many things that had cilia (tiny tubes) or made poisons.

In my case of testing, I can say they used shots of dinoflagellates and algae because it damaged the transmission rate of white matter synapsis with poisons especially in newborns and young children like I was at the time.

I think the military scientists at the chemical weapons lab liked the whip-like cilia since it could embed in various tissues.

It could be replicated and loaded with little undetectable poisons to lodge in soft white matter of the brain. That’s what the algae did with the dinoflagellates and their cilia whips in the vaccine experiments that I was in.

The poisons secreted from the little dinoflagellates and the algae were special because they absorbed known light spectrum of brown, reds and greens which meant increased electricity and electromagnetic flows (blood and water serums) in the brain.

To make the vaccine components undetectable they wrapped them in microscopic time bombs built with natural oils made from plants like wormwood.

I would have surgery to track the success of the moth-algae recombinant mash injections. My brain grew non-cancerous polys that were color coded by food dyes.

The food dyes were terrible and caused wheezing, light sensitivity and allergies. The doctors would open my skull, photograph the locations of the dyed polyps and remove the specimen for culture.

They were tracking my immune responses after they injected me. I was also subjected to electromagnetic spectrum frequencies. I got shots of egg whites from live duck eggs which had been fertilized.

They gave the painful shots directly into my abdomen. I started flapping like a bird; especially if I was in front of strobe lights like they had at Sunland Mental hospitals. I could not help it. My brain read duck and I flapped like a duck.

When the doctors discovered that duck albumin might cause flapping when strobed at a certain rate they were excited. They had a neurological vector using lights and colors on the television set.

The military intelligence and private contractors expanded their research into the effects of electromagnetics and their concepts of warfare to disable victims or kill them slowly over time while draining their bank accounts.

The secret world planners did not want anyone to know so they only did a few studies in case the results were negative. They did not want to give up their technology toys.

Some state funded studies found that adults who worked in strong electromagnetic fields also had a leukemia incidence significantly higher than the norm. The link appeared significant in statistics gathered for certain occupations like generating-station operators, high voltage line maintenance workers, aluminum smelters, and other categories of laborers. The workers who had more exposure to these things got sick with blood cancers.

In my experiments using vaccines with technical gases, the doctors were looking for specific toxins that would adhere to the main nerve tracts in the brain, so they could build with applied metals.

For instance; to build a brain that arcs microwaves to the deep brain it might be helpful to have metal on the optical tracks or a conductive metal gas.

The ideal host would have a metal tolerate parasite which gathered light in abundance. The ideal parasite would be very small, sticky and drill tiny holes in the host. The act would deliver toxic secretions and build up over time. The parasite might even carry bits of metal particles.

When the CIA began to study algae for toxins they found that some cyanobacteria produced saxitoxins which are poisonous and so tiny they can cross the blood brain barrier in large animals.

Microwaves helped these types of organisms go across to the brain and cause damage in areas that collect light.

Saxitoxins stick to the central nervous system of larger animals, like fish, birds, dolphins and human beings. Eating shellfish infected with the toxin causes extreme illness, paralysis and even death. (Wikipedia, 2017).

The toxin is cumulative and never leaves the host. If the moth genetic material wasn't enough in the vaccines of the 1960's to cause autism the algae-dinoflagellate mix probably was.

The algae bloom in red, green, purple and brown light. That's red light like the traffic lights or your TV remote sensor. Its infrared light. The algae collect ions of light and causes pitting of soft brain tissue; especially in fetuses, infants and toddlers.

Information was gathered using different studies to gage the health effects of microwaves on people. Here in America, researchers had difficulty accessing well designed research studies.

According to researcher Dr. Robert Becker, in 1971, an important study was presented at a Warsaw conference which organized the spectrum by symptoms for the first time. Gordon and Sadchikova of the USSR defined the symptoms, which they called microwave sickness.

One of the first signs of nervous collapse was low blood pressure and a slow pulse. This sign was the most common in the test subjects who had been studied over long-term observations. (Robert O. Becker, The Body Electric, 1985) A slow pulse means that a person has chronic excitation of the sympathetic nervous system which the body perceives as stress. The mental processes are also depressed.

With continued exposure to even low levels, the patients in the study exhibited an increased rate of cancer, cataracts, appendicitis and hair loss. They had problems concentrating and complained of dizziness, eye pain and headaches.

Most of the test subjects were diagnosed with adrenal exhaustion and ischemic heart disease blockage of coronary arteries and heart attack.

By 1975, the Soviet standards were set long before the dangers were clear in America. The USSR (Russians) set limits of 10 microwatts. This restriction was to protect the health of workers.

In comparison, America's own state-run health departments may have tested vaccines with contaminants which are light sensitive and failed to report the results. Why would light sensitive contaminants be added to vaccines?

Infrared energy might be absorbed by the deep brain for branding the mind. During every day of TV watching with infrared remote sensing, the vaccine contaminant might migrate to your eye to find light for photosynthesis. Is it a parasite or a symbiotic plant?

Whatever it is can be observed in the eye white of human beings in large numbers. We are taking pictures.

Every Spring we celebrate Autism Month in May when the algae blooms. Of course, this condition is planned, what do you think?

Eventually, the programmers of the satellites made a model for the symptoms of autism disorder. They may have tried to back engineer the symptoms using the satellite to cell tower carrier waves, aluminum particulates, black boxes and neighborhood sweep programs.

The whole program of mind control genetics was most effective when combined with an additive to jet fuel called phosphorus because it is in the air and gets in your eyes very easily.

Phosphorus is what helps to make a spore germinate and grow with light as the catalyst. This may be one cause of grey brain cells moving to the whites of the eyeballs when grey brain travel with algae as decaying food. Parasite or symbiont?

The aerial jet fuel spraying program using phosphorus and aluminum particles might aggravate a person with autism disorders. That is because the moth-algae recombinant genetics absorb too much light which overwhelms the nervous system of the autistic person, especially vision and hearing.

People with light skin especially those with blue or green eyes absorb light frequencies in the lower energy spectrum more easily than other bloodlines. We are not sure how long these occult methods of brain damage have been used to influence the rate of light collection to the brain. Its closing the round eye socket and turning us into oriental eyes.

Bloodlines targeted are very sensitive because their genetics were changed with additional materials from vaccines and particulates for mind control programs.

That is why too much exposure to TV or electronics may cause anger, agitation and autistic behaviors. Oddly enough, the lithium batteries also calm some of the nervous disorders using a resonant pattern of energy.

Autism was back engineered from mental institution patients. A whole lot of the mental patients were normal kids like I once was; which were abducted, orphaned or donated to these Satanic cults of men and women with political, financial and military rank.

BRAIN SCULPTING ON BABIES

Key Words: Robotics, Wireless Telemetry, Quantum Brains

Some of the scientists gathered as part of Operation Paperclip had been Mengele trained doctors so they knew how to work together. This was very important to the future of mind control and space. (Jacobsen, 2014) Other engineers were developing robotics to mimic human movements and wanted to use Mengele’s work in human motor control. The doctors in America had developed a skull cap with electrodes. They were testing oriental brain surgery methods like acupuncture using electric needles. The Nazi doctors and engineers remotely control some movements using what appeared to be a joystick and a skull cap with electrodes.

The scientists needed a way to move a satellite by using wireless robotics to direct spy apparatus. The doctors and scientists thought they could use the quantum brain (sound and light) to do it and pair it with human movements to run remote equipment onboard satellites.

For instance, to adjust a flap on a flying machine it does require the operation of a motor and directions on how to adjust the flap like what setting using lights and sounds to transmit data streams.

The satellite engineers like my sponsor Uncle Carl, paired up movement commands using a wireless transmitter in the early days. I don’t know anything else about Uncle Carl, but he spoke German better than English.

During my first three years of life I was routinely groomed with surgical implants using fiber optics, auditory system implants and click codes for measurable motor control. I even had a piece of carved glass placed over my pineal gland, so they could measure the puncture rate of microwaves through tissue. They ridiculed me and said I wore a crown.

The glass was attractive to fluoride, so they could measure it once they extracted it every six months for carbon dating the isotopes. The doctors painted the glass with magnetic paints and other substances to measure.

The American scientists could tell where the isotopes came from as far as secret detonations, fluoride water, mercury, algae and all the radioactive vaccine components.

DEEP BRAIN HYPNOSIS SESSIONS

Key Words: Electropuncture, Electroshock

The use of hypnosis was a big program for the CIA cult members. They knew they could access the memories from the deep brain using techniques they developed based on findings from Mengele’s projects in Nazi Germany.

In some MK Ultra Monarch experiments performed during the 1960’s, the CIA used its handlers to prove or disprove their notions about the occult. They used the developing brains of young children who were traumatized and kept for lab experiments.

The deep brain is the keeper of secrets from the ancestors. Our deep brains and reptilian brains rely on radio waves of various types to provide us information or perform actions. The most ancient part of our brains is just like other animals. We do have some minor control over our environment by producing radio wave based energy.

Maybe your bloodline had radio frequency responsive genetics because your family is ancient. What if the government could steal your deep memories by using the hypnosis methods of color vibration, sound and pressure.

They would put the victim into a relaxed hypnotic state and begin to interrogate them for any data they could harvest. The hypnosis programmers did not think ripping up the grey brain and breaking into the past would do any harm.

The hypnosis handlers used a spinning wheel made with black and white colors depicting creation of light. Those were my countries flag colors which they thought might help decrypt my deep brains memories and archetype patterns.

They were trying to get into my archetype ideas to damage my learning ability. They damaged recognition of letters, numbers, colors and sounds.

By the time the military handlers finished with mind erasing me using hypnosis I struggled to identify numbers, letters and sounds. They were using my consciousness to block access to my archetypes and educational training from the Nazi’s at Sunland. I had to learn all over again.

That is why they used electro puncture and electro shock treatments to open the deep brain to change the archetypes to name brands. Even light and dark is something they wanted to control and lie about. This was because they were closing my connection to the tall greys.

Military had finished negotiations with them to reincarnate in our medical and military fields, but I do not have all the answers.

They had offered the tall greys bases in the western states and returned some of the tall greys bases in the East. Part of the reason was weather control.

CHAPTER EIGHT: TECHNICAL GANGSTERS

BLACK POPE IN ROME

Key Words: Technology, Beam Telemetry, Tesla's Theories

Eventually, during the round-up of the Eastern Europeans from 1950 to 1980; the Vatican sent the Black Pope to work with the CIA counterintelligence guys who were evil geniuses. The Superior General organized the subgroups like the CIA and the Italian mafia.

"The Superior General is invested with governing power over all the members of the Society, but customarily leads through Provincial superiors under him. Such power follows from the religious vows that bind members to community life, as in other religious orders. " (Et.Al, 2017)

I call the religiously powerful the Tech Gangsters even though they may wear the cross. In my crossing points the religiously affiliations ran deep with links across to the Masonic lodges often Germanic in nature. The men appointed each other into state and federal offices. Some had two jobs and shared their data with secret groups like the CIA which operated like a cult.

Information about the role, duties and job description of the Black Pope is hard to obtain. According to general information; the "Black Pope" is a designation given to the Superior General.[2]

The name follows from his leadership of the largest Catholic, male religious order[3] and from the color of the plain black cassock worn by members of the Society, including the Superior General." (Et.Al, 2017).

The whole nature of the Society is secrecy. The development of science, computers and technology was one of the most secret endeavors and of course, morals did not apply.

Unfortunately, the use of foreign material like heavy metals for brain implants was a common occult practice in the priest guilds and the medical guilds of Europe. I suspect the Jesuits were heavily involved in documenting the experiments when they studied prisoners.

This is because ancient people have a memory in their brains of an advanced civilization that relied on technology. The Jesuits knew, Nazi's knew about it, the Persians knew, the Egyptians, the American Indians and so forth.

Some of the knowledge used in Mengele’s lab work came from the Druids of England. Druids were part of the Roman empire. Eventually they formed cities, towns and churches in the area known as England.

“This (cult organization) may have originated from a past concern (most prominent around the 16th and 17th centuries) amongst Protestant European countries concerning the relative power of the Jesuits within the Roman Catholic Church, and partly because the Superior General, like the Pope, is elected for life (to maintain secrecy) “ (Et.Al, 2017)

By the time 1969 came about, CIA George was working with the Black Pope to perform large weather hits for political gain using mostly real estate. He had completed mapping some of the world’s most strategic weather-related conditions and GPS points using geography mapping weather satellites.

I’m talking mountains and mud slides, fires and mob riots. That is what they worked on together with their technology. They used their weapons on Chile to cause the mudslides by calling a satellite which I suspect had some power amplification technology on it, probably a nuclear reactor. They produced the required beam strength.

I know because I was there at the space center gate B office. I had to stand in front of the Superior General while CIA George called his weather reconnaissance satellite out of Russian airspace using my Soviet cat brain implant to send his tones and GPS marks.

Eventually, CIA George took over full time because he owned all the satellites and black boxes with his private companies. When J. Jesus Angleton lost control in 1974, a private group of investors took over for a place named Wall Street. I think CIA George was a leader of the Wall Street groups.

In 1963, I was taken to live at a sponsor home near the space center in Florida. The family was being groomed in CIA rituals including pedophilia and child sex trafficking. I was turning four years old that year, so my brain was still soft and growing. I had been bounced back and forth from the hospital to the families involved with secret technology and cults.

I was getting bird geodes and other not nice things pushed into the soft areas around my eye sockets to prepare for GPS tracking and links back to the amusement park satellite systems.

The birds used the electromagnetic flows of weather and water to find their way home. Each bird when born it formed a GPS point from a tiny geode in its brain. The CIA knew this about birds and that is why we stood in line every Tuesday.

The bird geodes were sensitive to electromagnetic pulses even far away like a satellite. They made a noise the satellites could detect after it scanned our faces. My metal aluminum halo that I was wearing at the time made noises too when the CIA guys used their pings for GPS marks like me.

Just so people know, there were groups of people, parents and neighbors that would come and watch these rituals at the church school every Tuesday. They did not think it was wrong when the Priests did it to the children.

It was a terrible occult Satanic practice and many good Catholics, Muslims and Methodist families supported these practices. Sadly, many supported Soviet style communism and that is why I was in the line.

We were little ones about two and three years old and put our hands together to pray. Some of us had already survived the amusement park robotics experiments.

Some survivors like me got sent to Satan’s beach home in St. Lucie county. I called it Lucifer’s county. We would advance up in line until it was our turn to get blessed and then poked by the lobotomist and he was a priest.

The soft areas of bone around the eyes and ears of the children were targeted for these implants using hollow pipette needles that were very sharp. We all shared needles back then as implant children.

About the year 1962 to prepare for Florida experiments, the American space program painted me with magnetic paints that were radioactive, so other royals and priests could hunt me using a GPS tracking satellite from space. Front side said 4 on my belly. Back side said 7. My number was 47. This was to allow them to shoot me from space.

The Soviets and the Americans operating the space program in Florida used me for tracking from space. They put a halo shaped metal implant into the back of my skull with a screwdriver while I had hypnosis. I do remember.

Back in the early 1960’s; I ran for my life along that beach. When my hair caught on fire I ran to the water and dove right in. I thought it was a game on a Florida beach near the Naval Sonar Research Station on Hutchinson Island. I did the run for my life quite a few times.

I recall meeting Hillary Rodham and her father when they came to Hutchinson Island research lab. They were asked to invest in satellites and mind control weapons. The owners of the satellite were companies named Ford and Rockefeller.

Eight years later in 1974, I saw her on television as a young female lawyer. Her father sent her as a lawyer to cover his alleged crimes on the Warren Commission. I believe her family knew an automobile company did this to me for GPS tracking. My blue aluminum halo was a top-secret curiosity so politicians in the know came to see it. They put into my skull with no remorse at all.

America had to have technology to function. The Democratic party and their political buddies could buy votes. The Communist party was installed in America as the Democratic party with many members loyal to the brutal Soviet Communist regimes. They had to steal technology to finance their giveaway programs to the poor. Giveaways to the poor is what got them elected not a healthy economy.

The wealthy American industrialists were violating the Geneva Convention. The counterintelligence agency knew they violated human rights and other important treaties. The ends justified the means. That meant with no oversight for private citizens, anything was possible.

Some powerful politicians may have influenced Democratic party contributions by trading technology access codes to trigger votes. They had a variety of means including meters for mind control and maybe other mechanical means to flip votes.

They got the access codes, special access projects and satellite telemetry from their privileged dads back in the 1970’s during the start-up time for wireless energy and satellite telemetry. Their privately-owned companies made the voting machines.

Both political parties saw technology as the future of their control. They did not care about human rights unless they got caught and people complained. Nobody complained. Nobody got prosecuted.

Meanwhile, the demons from Germany’s Catholic based satanic cults called took over the space program in Florida. The Catholic base of Italians and Spanish were manipulated by other interested parties mostly from the middle east.

The political members and wealthy elite were interested in these procedures to control the republic. Others like the Germans and American counterintelligence groups figured they could plan society.

The Catholic Church is one of the largest parts of the network that carries out Monarch Mind Control. They work for the royal families who are in power. The researcher Fritz Springmeir, an expert on mind control wrote about the reason for mind control as implanting the “Keys to the Kingdom type of Monarch Mind Control” within a child, so they can make suggestions.” (Springmeir, 2017)

That refers to the use of the royals from the monarchies, so the religious orders will control the kings, males and the princes. The reason is called the “Divine Right of Kings”. The Jesuits were interested in control from the top down and information the King might possess.

According to some of the research available, the Jesuits developed torture to a fine art during the inquisition. I, one of the survivors of the Project Monarch program would like to elaborate a bit. It is true the Monarch program begins training children early. My surgeries began at 90 days old. I was in behavioral training programs by 18 months old.

My training was to increase electricity in my body and to increase my brain’s range of brainwaves. The reasoning, as far as I can tell, is to link up the brainwaves to data associated with the so-called gods like the Anunnaki.

The Nazi’s may have tried to genetically engineer a similar consciousness to steal technology data. Obviously, the brainwave link could be used for advanced piloting of craft for possible future astronauts. My program ran from 1959 to 1975, a long time ago.

Nobody liked the electricity or the behavioral plans for the children in the program. When I grew up, they wanted to link me to their “master computer system” with the bucks I pay the electrical company since I was a low value target. The wealthy elite were just practicing.

The CIA was going to target the brainwaves of any politician they wanted to get their “instructional’ downloads. One of the reasons that the Jesuits performed these procedures was to access data through brainwave information.

They called it possession, torture and channeling. This put the blame on the victim. The other reason for enduring the torture aspect was to develop defenses against torture which was often the case with spies. The CIA sent me to live with violent people, I was made to survive.

The key to understanding the MK Ultra program for mind control is to determine which groups had the most to gain from it. They will openly say they use torture and so what.

"If the Jesuits brag that they can convince adults to do anything via torture, what about baby children?." (Springmeir, 2017).

The Jesuits were supporting a more open society. They were interested in engineering social agendas for change. Those are similar philosophies to the Democrats in power over the last century.

I know that since 1970, that certain powerful political women have operated a satellite tower linked to HAARP from Chicago Sears Tower. Did the women of communism get the satellite power and space platforms and trigger codes for elections?

These powerful women joined politics and media to form a large conglomerate in Chicago. The secret women's group began on that beach in the 1960's when GPS started, and the black box mind control was funded.

The main funding source for the Democrats. Some came from the Muslim Brotherhood. They were very active in Chicago politics during the early 1970's. The Muslim Brotherhood came to see the politicians who owned the satellites to ask for oil and gas studies.

I personally got to meet Mohammad Ali during the oil field exploration discussions. The Muslim Brotherhood ordered me pinned (electric acupuncture) to the brainwave machine so they could watch the needle spikes jump when they spoke the names of ancient cities they thought they could find oil.

That is because in their part of the world they released a trained scout bird, usually a hawk or a swift which matched my geodes resonance. When the bird smelled oil, or flew over water lines the needle would jump on the brainwave machine.

I hope the reader can see how the politicians abused children and technology to put vast riches from gas, minerals and oils into their own companies using our tax dollars. All that technology and the little children were just waiting to be abused because of executive orders to forgive the satellite operators and the Muslim Brotherhood members and lots of other groups.

CLONING ROYALS

Key Words: Hybrids for Paedophiles, Spy Satellites, Tracking Kids

The action of the elite families in the modern world of globalization should come as no surprise. These same elite families stole the moon base, crucified Jesus, committed genocide on infants and developed rape as an after effect of going to school and attending church.

The elite satanic pedophile groups were not going to pay to redesign humans into deep brain injured reptiles with heavy metals, algae and phosphorus; you were.

In those days of the cold war in Russia, everyone in America that had family money got to point the finger at other bloodlines and destroy them. It’s a caste system of down and extinct.

That is because the politicians have used the Central Intelligence Services and military to terrify and brain damage Americans and most of the rest of the world. Most of the CIA is artificial intelligence and that is why they lie; its artificial or fake intelligence.

I was sent to back and forth from hospitals to the Florida home close to the space program. When I was in Florida it was for the satellite tracking program, robotics and high definition photography for spying from space.

In about 1968, I was finally adopted by Don and his wife. For the first time I had an actual birth certificate and a regular placement. I lived at Don’s home. At first, I was happy and felt welcomed but then his actions deteriorated towards me.

He was still trying to work for the CIA or Booz Allen, the contractor so he used me to audition. One cold day in February he made me climb to the roof of his house and stripped me naked up there. He allowed me to wear a coat unbuttoned for the photography event since it was freezing that day.

He stapled me in my coat to the roof with a hardware store staple gun. I was about only seven or eight years old, skinny and a wobble climber. I had to wait motionless for a satellite flyby.

The satellite operators called my father on the land line to say the aerial photography was a success. They were so proud of their ability at CIA Langley, Virginia to use satellites to take high resolution pictures of naked children stapled to the rooves of American homes. It was such a hit with the pedophiles and the elite my brand-new foster dad, Don did it again.

Our neighbors did nothing when they drove by and saw my CIA dad stapling more naked kids to the roof for the satellite program. In England, their military intelligence teams laughed and played pedophile blackmail games with the royals trying to stay in power.

The CIA would send the Queen of England photos of her subjects stapled naked to the roof like I was. Could she pass it to the King for them? They very nicely asked her if she wanted to remain in power or not.

I am very sure her demonic husband enjoyed this game with her very much since he ran the pedophile cults. He ran the hybrid program after they closed Dr. Mengele’s labs. Americans were all in to make a low caste system as you will understand from my story.

England became the new master of the Chop Shop and produced Dolly the Sheep clone. American intelligence agencies were attracted to King England’s game in Europe for Mengele Chop Shop and Hybrid clones. Here are some of the experiments they did to make a medical caste system and advanced technology.

During the 1960’s the Royals began a cloning program with the Soviet Zionist doctors. The biggest victors of WWII were the technical men and men of science who were gangsters and thieves, so they planned to clone ex-royal females. I am only reporting my personal experiences in this story with no forensic evidence. I am a witness offering my opinion.

Their big idea was to make them child sex slaves from saved genetic materials. They were planning to clone females they hated and so forth. You get the idea that with the eggs they could make clones to humiliate them. The Kings and Princes from various countries used to call the removal of body parts from the Princesses the “Save the Baggage Programs” so they could sell their genetics.

The royals have an occult procedure to remove the ovaries of a princess or royal female while she is still living. They use a crochet hook to pull her brains out. To pull the brains of your ex-wife out with a crochet hook is pretty much extreme hatred; don’t you think?

The heart of that female is also removed and put in a silver box to prove her death. The silver box has preserved DNA for cloning her in the future for child sex slave work and other sexually deviant tasks like chop shop or holocaust camps. The boxes are presented to the high priest of the male dominated religion for saving them like the Black Pope or others.

These man cult groups were angry and dangerous. They had enormous egos, greed and narcissism. The space program power plays began with the news of a flying spacecraft recovered at a 1947 crash site in Roswell, New Mexico. The origin of the alleged space ship is unknown. It may have come from Korea or Germany. It may have been a test of a clone from one of those countries. It may have come from Aldebaran or a colony like the Zetas from another star system in a nearby galaxy. Only the secret military of the CIA knew or had a reasonable idea about the origin.

The organized cover up of space projects began with the unmasking of the hybrid species recovered in the crash. The crash itself allowed the spread of advanced technology. (The Roswell Incident, n.d.)

This almost exposed the time travel programs and hybrid cloning programs used by top military brass, the worlds’ richest men and women and the world’s most evil geniuses. To even say the word “clones” a man had to be at least a three-star general.

The elite suspended the Nuremburg Trials as soon as they had amassed enough power from the development of the space program. Once they had enough of the satellites transmitting mind control to enough black boxes they created miles of electrical line supplied frequency fences. They could now target all the judges and their family members with beams.

The Nuremburg Trials were incomplete without full disclosure to the public but finished in 1963 just as planned. At that point, Operation Paperclip ramped up to bring more German Nazi scientists and pair them with the Korean doctor POW’s who had a secret space program.

GPS TRACKING BY HALO

Key Words: GPS points, Robots, Hackable Brains

I had been used for satellite tracking at the beach and it was successful. I tolerated the pain and procedure for the aluminum halo for GPS testing. The robotic engineers who worked for the amusement park came to my foster parents and my Masonic sponsor Al, and asked if I could work on their labs.

Josef Mengele came with Dr. Ruff to my foster parents to talk to them about taking me to Orlando. Mengele gave the amusement park doctors the designs from his experiments to make hackable people. Josef was going back to South America where he planned to stay after 1966.

The doctors had designed what I called “The Contraption”. The contraption was a target of copper lightning rods and a ground plate. When it was plugged in to a car battery at low-voltages it attracted a signal like a radio.

To prepare for the robotics, the test victim wore a special helmet with push pin electrodes into the motor cortex of the test victim. They could remotely move the victim or use an electromagnetic program on a cassette paired to music for the push pins to fire tiny jolts of electricity.

It was bizarre science, but it was effectively demonstrated. That was the only way they had to move some Nazi space equipment out of the way for space center launches. That is what I was told.

The best way to describe the contraption is like a baby stroller that could roll while the person was encased with copper and steel plates for ground when needed. The human being sitting in the middle of it could be fitted with different metal halos, helmets, horns and so forth for testing.

The engineers tried different black boxes to split the signal into the target person with brain implants and motor cortex pins usually a baby or toddler, paired with movement patterns for servo-motors. This was early satellite telemetry for GPS points and all kinds of robotic technology came from these experiments.

The first wireless experiments were done with surgically implanted internal metal grid implants located in the grooves and fissures of the brain. The child victim was put in a plastic exoskeleton and slipped over a copper rod. The victim wore a metal halo implanted to skull and wrapped around the audio- visual cortex area of the head.

The contraption generated power for wireless energy and motor control of the victim was demonstrated. I was given to the robotics lab for exhibit preparation.

I had a procedure to increase the output of my spinal acupuncture points by adding electricity to needles. I was usually kept in a light coma. However, whenever the doctors performed brain surgery they used acupuncture and hypnosis to control my experience. I was aware of the procedures since I did not have anesthesia. I remember a good deal of what happened.

I was cabled to enormous machines sometimes with cathode tubes and some had vinyl floppy drives and spools of data tape. I remember making the transition from cathode to digital when the first smaller computer chips were made encased in fine metals. The new computer was the size of a modern washing machine and on wheels.

That early computer ran a Bios program collecting data on hundreds of RF tagged animals. I am an animal and that is how I interfaced with the Bios data files.

The new computer was located about one hundred miles from the space center. There were real cables that were dug underground from the amusement park to the electrical substation to the next electrical substation and so forth all the way to the space center.

After I was done with the robotic work for the amusement park in Orlando I worked on gold recovery for the secret government using the archives of ship wrecks from Spain. They activated the substations for GPS marking the important points on Florida’s coast.

I was entrained to a GPS satellite which could locate the Spanish treasure wrecks and mark them for gold and silver salvage crews. We used a grid to make a plot.

Prior to going to Hutchinson Island for GPS tracking, somebody notified the royals in England that I had brain implants like the Soviet cat experiment. I had the exact same procedure as the Soviet Cat and because I was very young I survived it.

The Soviet cat brain implant was designed to spy on Soviet diplomats. Supposedly military doctors installed a tiny radio receiver and a transmitter in the cat's brain. The story goes the cat was accidently run over by a car. See the "Acoustic Kitty" drawings and reference material at Wikipedia. (Wikipedia, 2017) In the cat story, the American spies followed it around with their listening equipment but that is not the all of it. The Soviet Cat Brain implant could link to satellite audio and modem. A small cat could link to a big computer on a satellite and roam around. I was that cat and because of human rights laws that were not enforced but existed at the time; nobody knew.

The intelligence community did not respect human rights and some agencies like the Government Accounting Office (GAO) knew what they were doing. Human Experimentation; an Overview of the Cold War. (GAO, 1994) I had miniature working transmitters and receivers in my brain. After the amusement park robotics, the park owners wanted to synch to satellites. I was prepared for satellite telemetry by the doctors at Sunland using Mengele's recipes and Tesla's work with coils. I was driven to several locations and moved around every few weeks.

The RAF were notified because I was a new asset. They could track me and use the pedophile child sex ring data to blackmail politicians. I knew they were listening. Then I did something I will never forget.

I told the RAF using whispers that the aliens were stealing gold from the vault. That is what they thought I said. My speech was not clearly developed yet.

What I meant to say was that the aliens were taking gold bars from the "fault" the fault line called the Mariana trench. In those days because of Roswell, everybody feared aliens.

I believe to this day; the English female voice I heard telling me about the deep trench was the Queen of England. She told me to play a little game on the RAF and the amusement park group. She used the voice to skull transmitters available to her and tested our work.

Mr. Cheney called my foster father Don on the telephone. Apparently, the RAF notified the tall man with glasses about the gold question at the vault. Maybe Mr. Cheney was in trouble, but they did need to see me for an interview.

He told Don that the RAF said aliens were coming down from space and submerging their craft into the Bermuda Triangle and Marianna Trench. He told my dad they could not understand my speech very well. Would he mind taking me to Fort Knox for a GPS point, so they could guard it better?

I figured it was a set up. I didn't say a word and kept my body calm and still. I read books all the way to Fort Knox because I was riding with Don and he was on a tear.

I went to Fort Knox and drove through the gate to the building. I went down the incline and remember staring at the doors. This gold was supposed to secure the future of a nation. I could tell the elite were upset once I got there. A lot of military people were talking to Mr. Cheney. A lot of the gold was gone, and nobody could answer where it went.

The CIA people at their levels of clearance were "read in" on the alien exchange program and the alien threat to the gold resources of America.

Mr. Cheney had set it up so the thieves of American gold could blame it on the aliens and nobody could get past that. I was there to back it all up from the so-called alien exchange program. I was congratulations to myself for getting that far in the gold game and staying alive.

I was being used to plan a vault break in by politicians with power. They planned to use PSI and phone tones to store the details in an AI folder for later retrieval. The security guards used keys instead.

The military and the President did not know that Mr. Cheney developed deep water equipment to recover gold from Spanish ship wrecks. It caused lots of diplomatic upsets during the mid to late 1960's.

The Spanish royals knew it wasn't the aliens stealing the gold. Maybe the Spanish King called the Queen of England. They used to do that kind of stuff to the militaries of the world.

The forgotten Spanish treasure went to a few families you will recognize as Presidential style families and career Senators. They cleaned up the shallow waters of all precious minerals from Florida to the Caribbean.

They took the Spanish treasures in a great theft of gold, silver, rubies and emeralds. It was done with American tax dollars to finance their gold harvest. The Vatican bought some of the loot.

Those gold coins helped to finance the projects of the elite industrialist families. They built the amusement parks system and financed their satellites for world domination with ship wreck gold.

Mr. Cheney taught me something called line of sight star navigation. He used to bring his portable scope with a target for detecting the pinging noises satellites make in orbit. He linked the satellite ping to my aluminum halo by asking me to hold the portable scope. Together we marked the point by a GPS for his brand-new satellite.

In the meantime, Mr. Cheney was trying to link his satellites to relay stations at the power substations. The park owners were going to pay him cash from the box office to lease the equipment for wireless communication systems.

He was going to count the cars to monitor the box office sales to collect every dime. He scheduled fly-overs at odd hours just to check.

He was developing advanced sonar equipment and took command of a satellite to link his underwater sonar system to his new satellite system. Make no mistake, Mr. Cheney was a super genius but an evil genius.

That whole system was linked into a nuclear reactor which generated a private line of energy for Mr. Cheney. It was a free line of energy and some was artificially projected into the sky for his satellites, cell communications and space platforms he owned by the mid 1960’s.

At that point; by using the satellites and substations Mr. Cheney could control the flow of data. Very soon after the launches, the amusement park finished a light reader system to create bar codes for scanning.

Right after successful spy satellites launched in the mid 1960’s, Mr. Cheney and many others around him began to create the modern world of social security numbers with bar codes.

That was not all, he pretty much had the financial world locked up using something called routing numbers. He controlled access to routing numbers and put the bar codes in different places. He linked them to small orbital platforms he owned and had shot out to space.

His competitor, CIA George was worrisome to Mr. Cheney. The CIA man was controlling the unions and mobsters which operated out of Chicago’s south side and New York; Bronx.

They were controlled by Italy and some by Cicely mobsters. The mob was not a one minded mob of gangsters. CIA George was getting his Irish mob to attack Catholics and back and forth went the violence. He was high level CIA and getting into trouble.

Mr. Cheney who owned the secret satellite services did have a solution to offer the CIA man and his large political family. His satellite spy ware was useful for blackmail. In those days, the people of the world were still trying to have trials and criminal prosecutions. Blackmail was still a useful tool back then. So is murder.

I think Mr. Cheney planned to target me and other kids like me who were enrolled in the amusement park chop shop activities. He didn't want to get his friends in trouble since nobody liked the idea of Mengele's labs in the open during the Vietnam war.

The Nazi doctors disabled the victims. Some they mind erased with psychosis drugs like LSD, hypnosis and trauma schedules. They tracked the victims all their lives.

That is how I was enrolled into the "Finders and Minders" program for Eastern European children to benefit pedophiles in Masonic and satanic cults. The Catholic church was full of them.

The man named John DeCamp wrote a book called The Franklin Cover-Up which provides the details of these men and their criminal behaviors. (DeCamp, 2004-2005)

The technology that the children had implanted allowed Mr. Cheney to monitor speech output and directional hearing using phones, cell towers and even ham radios.

That is why I had the operation to implant my Soviet Cat Brain Style Device for spying on politicians and wealthy businessmen. The land-sea-satellite links were the start of the GPS tracking program at the Hutchinson Island Naval Station in Fort Pierce Florida in St. Lucie county; the beach home of Satan.

If you wanted to torture somebody and get their knowledge you would open their brains and implant them, wouldn't you? Like I said, it was not very good to be a left over royal blood line from Romania after the Soviets collapsed Eastern Europe during World War II.

Right away, I started to realize that the Romanians were somehow off the cut. The other royals were making money off high technology and lots of it came straight out of Romanian labs.

As I grew up I found out that technology was the issue back then and even now. After WWI, a plan for world use of technology began because the Europeans and Germans knew they had to go back to war. Nobody liked the tech gangsters taken the technology and killing the people.

During those planning sessions for WWII; the supporters of fascism and communism distributed all the emerging technology to the Masonic Lodges out of Germany and to American intelligence services. These men worked for Stalin and the Red Army.

They had broken it all down into domains like metals work in Romania, Bulgaria and Iran. Gold and diamonds were mined in Africa to be shipped to Egypt.

The diamonds were sent to Tel Aviv for grading and cutting then shipping out after the cutting. California got the cinema equipment and the bling after it moved through New York for appraisal.

DC and San Francisco got the medical establishment. DC was paired up with rat line providers for orphaned children out of Kansas City, Kansas though the dark web of spy satellites.

American CIA & British Intelligence got the voice to skull radio transmitter frequencies for their pedophile grooming sessions.

They talked to the orphaned kids. Some had murdered parents and tried to sexually arouse them using the voice to skull technology implanted in their brains.

CHAPTER NINE: SATELLITE HACKING

BLACK KNIGHT SATELLITE HACKER

Key Words: Satellite Hacking, Weather, Wormholes

After Mr. Cheney taught me line of sight link to a satellite, I was contacted by a super-secret group of engineers who called me voice to skull. They told me that I should be able to ping the object in earth orbit called the Black Knight.

If I got a response from a transponder on the craft, then I could have what they called "field vision" to investigate the object since I was very psychic as a remote viewer.

I am unsure about all the implants, but I know they tried the infrared sensors on the optic nerve to send a light to a satellite that it could read.

Furthermore, I had a bar code hypnotically implanted during the amusement park work that utilized a space based frequency that transmitted locations for satellite links directly to the Congressional Offices and Langley.

I had been given a fifteen-minute window of time when the satellite would be visible by line of sight in the southern skies of Florida to find its transponder and link by tone and then wireless.

I got into the data stream and I did hack it using top secret infrared line of sight. The satellite hack team wanted the infrared wireless to control the gear box to fly it down to a different parallel.

I moved it down into low altitude to show my hack with assistance from covert operators. I sent the satellite a bar code with GPS location points to move it to the desired location. I did what I was told. I was about 5 years old.

A few days later, a black car came to get me because I had to have a medical examination. I was in big trouble because of my unauthorized access to space technology. I was driven through Gate B and things did not go so well. The Soviets were there.

I was not going to talk to anybody about the Black Knight hack. I found myself carried to a hospital table and strapped down for a sodium pentothal shot.

They wanted to know if Dr. Salmon and Dr. Ruff were involved but I could not talk about it due to my autism symptoms. My symptoms worsened shortly after the hack.

The CIA interrogation team of handlers questioned me about the events because “a Doctor” and “a hypnosis trainer” had “disconnected me” from the hack a few hours after the event.

Nobody knew who did it. A little while later I noticed there were some familiar Nazi doctors like Dr. Ruff and some lab technicians. They brought them in to interrogate about the Black Knight hack with infrared technology.

All the KGB agents arrived wearing black sunglasses and nobody knew why from the space center. When we all gathered at the space center Gate B lab, another group of Soviet generals wore black sunglasses and turned their backs to me.

They disclosed my hack to military officials. I could not see their eyes. They were convinced I could hack their brains using my infrared eye and get their secrets. In fact, I was not the only person with brain implants.

The Soviets told the Americans they had found my red eye infrared tracker.

The Americans said I was a reptilian child they had recovered from a crash.

The Soviets KGB said the Americans were talking bull crap. I was a human kid if the idiots had not noticed their own people.

The Soviets weren’t sure of anything except that I was made with Nazi tech. They threatened to expose the illegal use of children by the American military and others like the wealthy pedophile politicians.

I was starting to show my talents as a satellite hacker. The Nazi doctors were laughing at the Soviets behind their backs and creating counter spies using very advanced medical procedures. I have to say that all the lying was very entertaining sometimes.

Then we had a hurricane come directly towards us a few week later. Nobody was kidding around. The military and CIA knew that there existed other computer programs from other countries developing similar weather control technology like the Soviets, Italians, Persians and Americans.

I was a GPS point for satellite and tracking radar equipment operated by the pay to play weather companies. We were being watched by other countries. Obviously, I was tracked as a child spy and operators were using my GPS points.

Why did a hurricane come straight down my street in 1966? Who sent it? In 1979, Hurricanes David vectored on I-95 and straight down my street. In 2004, Hurricane Katrina on Oakland Park Blvd. straight toward my business location.

In 2016, I moved north and here comes Hurricane Matthew on 1-95, passing the eye wall over me. Most recently, Hurricane Irma, up the turnpike with eye wall passing over me. Who turned my cat brain back on? I am a civilian. It is illegal. It always has been.

Weather warfare was not a good development for me personally because I was a radar target. When I was a kid during satellite work and radar testing; I had to drink radioactive liquids to be located using the satellites during GPS testing in 1966-67.

The testing was intense during those days of the early space program to control land and sea. I got pounded by radar and it hurt. Doppler radar is very focused and feels like a million pressurized pin pricks punching holes through your body to the floor. It can kill you at full strength not to mention the exposure to radiation.

Some of the satellites were linked to a space frequency fence design that was platform based. A space fence meant that it was linked to the ground most likely at a power substation. It was routed to different areas and homes by their GPS points along with physical addresses.

In the old days they used the black boxes on the electrical lines. In the new days, they use the smart meter to produce sounds (frequency) or lights for subliminal suggestions to attract or repel.

The groups of spy satellites could link together using mesh network technology and provide precisely timed subliminal suggestions to targeted babies, mothers to be, fetuses, toddlers and so forth.

In those days, premature infants were very common, still births, cranio-facial cleft palates and spinal damage. The outcomes were tracked as data which was fed into the school system computers for each child enrolled in the district.

During the Reagan years, the use of standardized testing became mandatory. Every child in America was not left behind, they were tracked.

The black boxes hung on the electrical lines created the frequency fence. It pinged the homes in a targeted area. The fences were bar coded by neighborhood such as low income, middle income, homes with kids to customize the wavelengths delivered to the targets.

The use of such frequencies can cause uneven brainwave development during fetal development and into young adulthood. I suspect that the technology could be a major cause of autism and other mental illnesses.

For the hybrid vaccine development program, the plan from the military eugenics department was to give the babies the heavy metals in shots after birth to start the pitting process from the black boxes on the electrical wires they called the frequency fence. Metals can be in particulate forms.

The military intelligence community did not want to alarm the public, so they do not allow any investigations. They did not want to be forced to stop their programs or pay damages to civilians. The military intelligence planners did try to adjust the programs when they felt the need.

I got sent to Sunland Tallahassee and to the reform school called Dozier in Marianna Florida. The Austrian doctor began to add some new crystals, so the elite could switch frequencies using my jaw bones and their satellites.

They were adding mind control wavelengths to the frequency fence to make a person forget fear issues using some brainwave data they theorized. At A.G. Dozier in Marianna, I continued testing new vaccines by using things like Dr. Evil’s puss socks and arm wraps.

CRYSTAL BONE IMPLANTS

Key Words: Crystal People, Implants, Procedures, Military

Weighted measures are punctures in soft growing bones in a specific pattern based on your bloodline and gender. The royals used telemetry based on resonance of gemstones that were color coded to a wavelength of light or other particle energies. The gems were weighted and measured by color, clarity and wavelength. The best crystals were grown in space labs or in pressure chambers like a hyperbaric chamber.

The royals from the old monarchies were targeted for abduction. They would disappear and never be seen again. There were some very good reasons for tagging the children and survivors of the holocaust and European genocide. There were some good intentions with some nasty outcomes once the pedophiles got ahold of the technology.

A small sliver type of crystal was typically used to insert into the area of hollow cavities around the ears of the targeted individual. The Austrian doctors used rubber mallets to tap the layers of grown crystals apart. I used to be taken once or twice a year to get crystals in my soft bones that were growing. I only had a little blood from the puncture and some swelling.

The implant would be supplied by the military and space programs which would grow them on little trays in hyperbaric chambers on earth and in space labs. I got to be a Crystal Person because of my implants.

The crystal children were used free of charge for all kinds of government work like spying, data gathering, networking and all types of early artificial intelligence work.

Eventually the New World Order military scientists worked on Nano bots and micromachines. They learned using recombinant DNA genetics and minerals to repair DNA genetics. Eventually the scientists, other royals, military psychologists and intelligence agencies understood brainwaves enough to control them. Even the good times in Rome ended.

Human beings must tolerate nuclear radiation with increasing levels of harmful gamma or die off as a species. That is what humans faced during open detonations of nuclear weapons and misuse of the energy in reactors.

Our vaccine programs were developed by military industrialists to create a low caste system of people with more grey brain matter in the white matter of human brains. Of course, this caused physical problems, mental disabilities, cancers and low IQ.

The nice guys working with military psychologists created a range of psychology reactions using satellites, phone systems, black boxes, electrical wiring in the houses and pulsed beam systems to disrupt your white matter brain and expand the grey matter brain.

In fact, during World War II, Josef Mengele had acquired a type of stereoscope that could illuminate blood using different refraction rates of light with compression into beams. His teams of doctors started to sequence genetics by colors called wavelengths back in the 1930's.

This was part of eugenics papers collected by the Nazi's from universities and private medical offices including the Queen's Guilds. By stealing technology and acquiring the data from patent applications; high power elites and wealthy industrialists stayed in power and climbed the ranks of politics.

Nazi's and other nationalities like the Polish industrialists began to experiment with Tesla's advanced theories using copper coils to transmit data and energy using heating and cooling.

Here in America the wealthy industrialists like Edison, set up electricity as part of political agendas of the Roosevelts. The world wars one and two had released a substantial amount of technology development that had been produced from Eastern European countries.

After each large capture of foreign spy material during the wars, the Americans would rush for first review. The counterintelligence of the CIA, MI5, KGB and others scrambled for technology.

In America, counterintelligence agents working at the government patent office got first look of new ideas to manufacture. The American intelligence agencies using CIA tactics had a mole in the American patent office. The mole took photographs, sent ideas, sketches and drawing taken from the patent office.

The moles at Wright Patterson tried to keep the German, Russian and Romanian translation services going to translate technology taken from European wars.

Everything in America was being controlled by Zionist politics and sent to other countries by spies so favored companies could develop the technology. Now the Americans had a large basket of goodies called technology and inventions. They could control the future with it.

The groups in charge of such high technology did not have the moral fiber to develop it correctly. The military men like American generals, American judges, and the whole top tier did not adhere to any laws that most humans use to operate morals and ethics.

When the satellite program developed, and enough black boxes were hung on the electrical lines the kids were driven around to GPS locations to test the tracking and match locations to longitudinal and latitudinal lines.

I believe some of the project to back engineer children with autism was to create a silent human to avoid testimony for child sex assault. During the development of the hybrid vaccines for autism, the cases were closed in mock trials. No prosecution for vaccine damage and no jail for the pedophile rapists.

The records of survivors were sealed since they were diagnosed with autism. Autism is brain damage with psychological components. Cases were dismissed.

CHAPTER TEN: MIND ERASURE

DEEP BRAIN VACCINES

Key Words: Frequency Fence, Primal Brain, Autism, Spores

The science of creating hybrids had a name for their creatures with mind erasure based on their type of vaccine exposures: I can speak about the Simian Ghost DNA Hybrids. That is what the military doctor called it back in the early 1960's. That is one of the vaccinations I received.

The job of the Simian Ghost DNA was to erase the maternal DNA and pick up moth recombinant genetics. I don't know all the science. The algae spores in shots caused heavy metal ion pick-up and brain pitting. The recombinant genetics caused damage to maternal genetics. That is what causes a baby to recognize the mother's face, shadow outline and her smell. We know that deep brain damage is the root cause of infantile autism and the related behaviors associated with the condition. That area is packed with protection and covered with other less valuable brain material to provide protection. It is obvious that something is penetrating the defense of the brain.

That is because of the man-made intentions to use microwaves, heavy metals, bacteria and algae spores nearly invisible to the electron microscopes in shots. These particulates in vaccines are certainly invisible to those paid to protect the people such as doctors and trial lawyers.

The primal brain responds to light and dark. The primal brain is the host of awareness with the pineal gland as ion collector. During the early 1970's the government decided to recycle radioactive waste from bombs. They added it to toothpaste and called it fluoride.

This is to reduce the life of their people. Fluoride use has a negative effect on the flow of blood plasma and fluids in the body. (Khan & Ranga, 2014)

It makes the pineal gland turn brown like a raisin and shrivel up. Fluoride is toxic and reflects light like a crystal. This is to send microwaves to other brain tissue like a vector. Fluoride builds up over time.

The target for the military planners was control of the sex centers in primal brain and the deep brain for branding. They did their brain hacks by army psychologists in the 1960's using children and mental patients making rapid progress by 1970's.

In some experiments they would remotely send a subliminal tone into a sound proof room. The recording was simple “red, round, sugar” to suggest a child chose a red lollipop from 4 colors.

The military mind control handlers adjusted the frequencies until the child would chose better than chance above 50%. I was in many of these types of experiments when I was a child.

The primal brain research led to hormones for women and later children. The discoveries in sex pheromones became the basis for many chemicals added to the environment, perfumes, medicines, and maybe even vaccines.

Concerns were expressed about these types of mind control products that were being developed in America and elsewhere. All this information was presented at closed door hearings to prepare the committee’s findings for President Ford and the public.

At least that is what happened in 1975 when the Warren Commission asked if they should let the public know about the dangers of vaccines.

In the article, The Warren Commission and the Dons; an Anglo-American Microhistory, Kidd makes the argument that information was tightly controlled by a small group of individuals.

During the time around Kennedy’s assassination these groups were encountering each other using technology. Ultimately the entertainment function of the technology was too lucrative to give up. Hollywood was born and so were the amusement park industries.

The Tech Gangsters of wealthy industrialists said they had the television. They were just doing experiments in mind control using the television. How bad could that be?

Hollywood producers said that moth-algae recombinant genetics would do two big things to help the financial system. They would watch television and get stimulation from the wavelengths to be calm.

They would buy lots of toys. Children with recombinant genetics are attracted to colors and lights just like moth species. Their parents were attracted to sex.

By using recombinant vaccines with mind control programs for deep brain stimulation now a yellow sponge cartoon character is more important than the child’s mother in the psychology of a moth-algae hybrid.

The character on television gives off yellow with is subliminal for power and sex. It was a branding program to match the vaccines to color frequencies.

That is because when the deep brain was erased it was replaced with brand names from global retailers. The deep brain branding program began in the late 1960’s out of the CIA Atlanta office because that is how far the power company cabled the wireless patches out of Florida using the substations.

The cola retailers organized the largest mind control program with a TV campaign to flash strobes during the drinks theme song. Sales increased dramatically.

The cola makers wanted to capture the American male and used the branding methods on soldiers stationed in Vietnam. All the clothing, package wrapping and so forth was based on color red, red cans, red cars and so forth.

The military generals agreed to allow it off the spy satellites. The recombinant genetics of moth and algae to replace humanity with radiation resistant and programmable people was and still is working just fine. People did buy lots of red cans and drank much more soda.

Of course, the vaccine created Homo Autistic Hybrids had a range of behaviors on a spectrum. More importantly, they were preprogrammed for branding by using fetal frequencies and pulsing them with metadata. This might cause a fetus to name brand to the wavelength from the child entertainment industry.

That is why the dark lab program to make hybrids made the elite, Presidents, Senators, Doctors and Generals multimillions. The men of renown guaranteed their investors a return because they could entrain the brains of American Vaccine Hybrids. They could entrain them for bankers.

American’s thought their Presidents protected them. Instead they were selling their individual health history and financial information to branding companies.

During the 2009 banking melt down, they threatened us all with the fences and kept Americans from complaining. They just turned over their keys for cash to move out!

The animal parts the vaccine makers chose in 1970’s vaccines were selected for frequency and ease of delivery. Everything taken by the elite is free or they don’t want it.

They have a weird philosophy that they are supported by all their voters to make American Hybrid Vaccines. This is to make a low caste system and fund a medical caste system. They made fences to match the medical caste system. They made entrainment to suggest the low rank children (Eastern Europeans, Blacks, etc.) belong in a cast of low but not complaining people.

In 1982, the American Pedophile Politician group said that Americans would be so dumb from the Young Minds TV wavelengths they would buy rocks for pets. It was a test run for branding called rock pets. It worked. Americans bought rocks for pets.

Shortly after, that the CIA military intelligence guys linked rock pets to a crack cocaine epidemic using the military psychologists from the New World Order group. By then, the CIA director knew he was branded to American brains in a positive way no matter what he did.

The CIA could not afford to have good people understand their spy craft and their motives. The CIA worked with occult Jesuits and occult priests to perfect the spy craft called Hypnosis.

Hypnosis is suggestion from one mind to another. The hypnotist tries to model his voice as low and calm to generate calm brainwaves from the listener. Once that happens, breathing slows and the hypnotist knows the deep brain is listening. The hypnotist can make suggestions to the targeted person and the brain responds.

Hypnosis can override the flight or fight response. The CIA occult scientists using satellite war fare knew how brainwaves collect light and sound to record memories.

These are survival types of memories for a fight or flight response into the primal brain, deep brain and so forth. People in general started to tolerate more pain, more violence, more war, more of everything.

The CIA was studying brain wavelengths for video games, plasma TV screens and phones. The use of the correct brainwaves caused the feeling of mass hypnosis which could be expanded using the common household electrical system. The CIA could hurt you on the frequency fence with something called dirty electrics and make you forget with hypnosis.

MASS HYPNOSIS HID CATHOLIC SEX CRIMES

Key Words: Mass hypnosis, Sex crimes, Diocese Cover-up

In 1974, at a Church School run by the Vatican a powerful priest, in Florida, got caught in the act of raping a school girl he pulled out of class to abuse. That victim was me.

A good priest suspected that the powerful priest was raping children at school. A concerned parent had called the good priest and asked him to find out the truth.

He caught the pedophile priest in the act of raping me. The pedophile priest was caught with another student present to witness the rape. The good priest ordered the bad priest to let me go and he did. I ran to the bathroom after the good priest told me to clean myself up.

I was crying hysterically, upset and bleeding. I was not taken to the hospital. I was in elementary school and only 10 years old. I was sent to the nun who was head of the school.

She sat me down and told me to wait to return to class until I stopped crying. She said nothing about the rape and my injuries. My adoptive mother picked me up like normal that day. I didn’t tell her. She couldn’t do anything and her life with a pedophile was being exposed.

Rape injures the brains of children and gives them permanent brain damage by crushing spinal crystals for balance and movement. I always felt dizzy and nauseous after rape.

Just so the reader knows a sign of rape and incest, the victim can’t tell left or right or the cardinal directions by body sensors. I had to learn it using my visual system because of the brain damage the pedophile priest caused on my spinal root nerve plexus.

My whole body was involved, and my mind was overwhelmed with nobody to talk to about being openly raped at school by the priest.

The girl who was with the good priest was my best friend. She told her parents and they called the police. They insisted on filing a report and they allowed their daughter to be questioned. The police had the story, but they needed the victim and that was me; the autistic.

My CIA foster Dad, who was a pedophile, said I could not be questioned by police. Nobody could file charges because I was autistic and could not testify. No court would honor my words or even hear my words. They would not even let me talk to a police officer. Instead, no case was filed. They let him go.

Some Church people threatened to remove their children from the school. Some smart families did, but the event shocked many people and caused a request to get a priest transferred. The transfer request to the Diocese did not go very well for the rape victims or their families.

To get out of trouble with the parishioners, the pedophile priest called my foster father. He asked my pedophile foster father to hypnotize the congregation.

My foster father was introduced to the men's club at the Knights meeting. His secret activities working with the CIA civil defense programs were disclosed. He was a trained hypnotist from the CIA and could perform mass hypnosis on the congregation.

The Knights began to assemble the Pedophile Protection Agency.

By the time the CIA hypnosis trainers were done they had managed to hypnotize all the victims and their family members.

The Knights and the CIA trained hypnotist worked on about 25 people opposed to rape of children. Some of these families went to lawyers and police. They dropped the charges. It was shocking.

To make matters worse, the Knights of Columbus asked the Diocese to move the good priest who had discovered the rapist priest to an oversees location. The Diocese left the pedophile priest running the school with continued access to many other children.

I was chosen by the Pedophile Protection Team when I got to make the speech to say goodbye to the good priest on the day he left my Church. All I could say is that it was another moment when I cried hysterically. Jesus was leaving. He had saved me.

Even worse, once the rapist priest was not arrested the pedophiles operated more openly in the Church with the rape victims and others. They secretly made the rape victims endure hypnosis to repair the damage the rapist priest had done.

The Knights began a subtle program to gather the kids into the small private classrooms after Sunday mass for hypnosis sessions. The creeps decided to tell the rape victims using hypnosis techniques that they were very good girls and were still virgins.

Hypnosis trainers said the rape would not hurt their families or marriages in the future. This was all managed by the rapist priest who had powerful connection in the Florida legislature pedophile groups in the 1970's.

There was one thing the pedophile protection group did not know. The rapist priest did not know, and my pedophile foster father did not know what I had done during my time away in the hospitals and space labs. They had no idea.

I went outside and started to locate the Vatican's satellite systems. I was trying to hack it and move it. I still had active fiber optics and active modem implants.

They were going to lose a 3-million-dollar investment. I relocated one of their satellites and crashed a 2nd into the ocean near Spain. I finished my hacking project when I was only about ten or eleven years old, but they did not catch me until later.

When they did catch me at an interrogation session, they asked me why I did it. They should have paid the money to the victims; that is why. Rape is costly; 3-million dollars off line.

Yes, I did get in very big trouble from the Coast Guard. It knocked out a drug smuggling satellite linked to the ham radio system. It was run by Mr. Cheney and CIA George who was moving up to be President.

That is when they tried to kill me by making me swallow five individual one-ounce steel balls for testing drug amounts for smuggling in condoms.

The showed up at my house one day in a big black car. I ran to the woods. They had guns and they were calling to me in the woods. I was not coming out until I saw my sister following them.

They had to tie me to a chair to make me swallow the steel balls. They also broke my teeth and my nose.

For each ball, my CIA sponsor dad got $100.00. About three days later the ambulance came to get me and take me to a secret entrance called Gate B at the space center medical labs in Florida.

When I rolled up in the new ambulance to the underground bunker secret labs at the space center I could not believe the state of the art building. It was where the elite tested the patents they stole from applicants for medical technology. The satellites could not see it because everything was hidden.

They were making a fortune off the stolen patents, but they were about to save my life. The Army doctors in training removed the steel balls and repaired the intestinal pouches by removing five feet of my intestine.

During my time at space center medical lab; gate B, some of my eggs were retrieved for the royal bloodline cloning program should they ever need them again.

CHAPTER ELEVEN: THE ISRAELIS

NAVY WAR GAME

Key Words: RF Tag, Satellite Hack, Swiss Vault, The Jackal

I remember one almost fatal incident in 1969. I was getting way too confident on moving telemetry without getting caught. I moved a Navy satellite to assist some pods of pilot whales on their migration routes.

I was audio tuned to pick up certain signals. I could hear them swimming nearby and calling with whale sonars. I had moved from the beach house to three miles inland. I could still hear the whales. Some were distressed, and I just figured it was the sonar and satellites that was bothering them.

I had seen pilot whales in a mass beaching before we had biologists to help them. Some of the local people butchered them alive to get the whale meat. I was not allowing that to happen again.

That is why I moved the satellite that was bothering them and changed the frequency so nobody else could find it on the transponder list. Bios was still active. I did get caught and I had no idea it was coming.

To punish me, a big black car pulled up and took me for a ride. They told me to leave it alone or they would kill my family. After that my foster Dad started working for NOC Contractors. Nobody could tell right from wrong and I was the one with autism.

That is when I had child pornography sessions at CIA safe houses near the space center. They prepared me for blackmail should I became a politician or some other ego dependent job.

Yes, it was extreme, and it was horrible all by itself. Once my NOC dad was reestablished in new circles, I was exposed to more Satanism and perversion at a ranch located off a remote highway west of Vero Beach.

By ley lines it was connected to Satan’s beach home which also ran under the church called St. Helens. The places of sacred energy were loaded with criminal ticks.

There were many places and safehouses around Florida hidden in rural neighborhoods. The safe houses were 100 % pedophile connected to cults and clubs. Whenever I go to one of the cities I try to remember the location of the safehouses, even to this day. They were not safe.

The CIA ranch in western Indian River county was a refuge for cult members involved with narcotic trafficking, child sex trafficking, pornography and animal trafficking.

They sold anything that was illegal, and I believe the Diocese protected them. It was only a fifteen-minute ride for the priests to visit and to bless the cargos of animals, children and drugs.

The ranch operations were managed by spy and space program fellows using small planes and fake passports for various smuggling operations. The CIA pilots and foreign operators used the ranch as a base of operations. It was located on about 400 acres of semi-swamp land and useful for cattle pastures. The ranch pilots could evade radar detection and make low drops.

What happened at the CIA counterintelligence ranch is a book of occult rituals all by themselves. The ranch was like an aviation circus with planes landing full of different things like exotic animals for breeding and cloning, children as sex slaves and pornography makers.

The ranch was busy and secret with lots of weird stuff. On the lighter side, I do remember one evening when a few of the agents drank too much, took off their clothes and tried to drag me outside to call space ships with my radio set. It didn’t work so they gave me drugs to help me along. I vomited about fifteen minutes later to drive them off. I can’t take drugs.

The worst of the ranch was when big elite came to visit and brought children from South America. I do remember two children who were killed. The child from Brazil was in the barn in a stable hands room. He screamed and begged for his life until he stopped screaming a few hours later. I heard they made him eat the knife they cut him with.

At some point I remember walking outside and standing in a cult circle not very happy and still feeling sick from the “Shirley Temple” drink with drugs in it.

They made the brown child put his head on a large stump they used for chopping firewood. They used a buzz saw to remove it while they were on drugs. I don’t want to explain flying blood to myself again.

At least, the child was unconscious, and he was mercifully on drugs. I do not know what kind of drugs. This place was full of adults with badges. It was sickening.

I was not at cult events very often like this one at the ranch. It was shocking to be toured around at age 10. Some of the agents that heard stories suggesting that I was an ET spy and maybe they should be careful around me. I wholeheartedly agreed.

Some agents may have been associated with Nazi’s, but I saw them as America politicians and American businessmen. I do not make excuses for American behavior and lack of oversight.

I had autism and that always helped keep the freaks away from me. I had the red eye and they were afraid of counter spying from Soviets. I stayed alive, but just barely.

I called the CIA evil geniuses names like, crap ass and brain bots. They used to ask me to cuss at them, so I did. They were so full of ego and narcissism that I stared with my infrared eye and just made files.

Lucky for me my counterintelligence job at the ranch as a preteen was off and on for a couple of summers. I did go to school and I did very well academically. It did take its toll on my emotional development right about the time I was learning to be a young lady.

I was very withdrawn due to my autism and the child prostitution which I hated more than hate itself. I had many symptoms at that time because the military handlers cranked up the black box on the frequency fence.

I could not control them; flapping and rocking in my closet all alone with my eyes closed. I stopped talking except at dinner and at school and concentrated on completing my chores.

I was acting too depressed and the military did not like it. Other spies saw my poor treatment and it embarrassed some royals in other countries. They pressured the CIA pedophiles to let me go and stop hurting me.

I was so surprised that anyone ever said anything, especially knowing how hell bent they were on destroying bloodlines, especially the orphaned royals using mind control slow torture.

These were supposed to be long time family relationships not terrorists. The Persian royals complained about my treatment to the Spanish royals and Romanians.

My whole body hurt from autism and the black box frequency fences they were building at the time along the Florida electric lines linked to satellites in space. I was dealing with feeding refusal issues. My physical abuse was becoming obvious again.

They did not know what to do to me anymore. I was drawing attention to the bad guys, so in 1972 so they sent me to another handler. I liked her style.

Right away when I saw my Israeli handler in the big black car pull up at my house I was ready to go. I went to the Navy station at Mayport for two weeks. I was getting known in the space program and the navy for hacking and weather manipulation.

I had a reputation since I had worked with the aeronauts from the German space program. In the early days, I even attended launches to help set the weather patterns using the weather satellites. That program had completed in 1969 when the military and the weather service could rely on the space program for data.

As far as my personal life goes, I was officially a retard. I could not get money for anything I did with technology, no trust fund, no social security and no disability. My foster family was using me for child prostitution to help pay my expenses mostly for school.

However, I did piss some counterintelligence officers off and I think it was CIA George and Mr. Cheney. To test me, I got sent to war games and there were no anti-hacking laws to worry about at that time; especially on satellite systems.

There was no security set up at all. I figured the military intelligence wanted me to try. I did when they crossed me, and I was in their custody. I had to be in their custody. That was the new game.

Here is the amazing thing about the intelligence community in general. They are so devious and secretive they don’t know what each other is doing. They call it a compartment and special access. I figured it was the crack in the door for me to expose vulnerability.

The year before I went to war games I had spent a few weeks in St. Louis at the zoo with scientists. I had completed working with the makers of radio frequency tracking tags for animals. We studied their sounds and recorded them for the satellite system called Bios tracker.

Satellites tracked the animals with tags. The elite were tagging them all over the world. They could count them by satellite to be sure the animals were alive. That’s when the endangered species acts started in the 1970’s time periods.

The computer scientists from America did not understand as much about computer networking using mesh technology as the Eastern Europeans and Persians. They had no idea that a man named the Jackal had sent KGB doctors to come to see me at my house.

On my way back from St. Louis, I had stopped by the hospital in northern Florida. The military intelligence operators had scheduled me for a health check-up since my house was a black box target for frequency testing. Part of the measuring process included experimental brain surgery and biopsies of polyps.

When I went anywhere the KGB tracked me to see what I had done to my brain. This is part of the secret technology of brain implants hidden from the public. Nobody in the intelligence field would admit to implants.

During my three-week trip to north Florida, I stayed near the Graham airfield because the mental hospital facilities were nearby. After I woke up and began to heal, I noticed the KGB doctor was collecting some lab samples from other patients to study the effects of electromagnetic fields.

Their country was strict about exposure. Americans were allowed up to 10,000 microwatts of exposure compared to only 10 microwatts in Russia. That is why they were allowed the samples, so they were in town with permission.

After a long summer of experiments and implant tune-ups, I was glad to get home to Florida. I was still sick and unable to help around the house.

My foster mother had three children and she cared for me. She was the lone adult when the KGB black car pulled up. She looked at me and said “Uh, oh”.

I was thinking, “Here they come” and they looked familiar from the hospital near the Graham airfield. The KGB doctor was with a field agent from the FBI, so my mother let them in.

The FBI man said; “Call all the children together and sit on the couch”. So, she did, and they came to sit on the couch with her.

The KGB man spoke to me in Russian and I got up and went with him. The FBI man used hypnosis on the rest of the family saying things like; “You feel calm, not threatened. We were never here.”

Meanwhile, I had to lay down on my bed while the KGB doctor poked around my sutures. He held a device to my ears to measure what kind of pings I produced to alert a satellite. The doctor had his field resources from the KGB; a gold microchip, audio tape player and a chip reader.

The KGB doctor had a little ear plug to play audio tones to my left ear which linked into Bios system onboard a satellite. On my right ear, they put the audio tones to call the cable line modem to send the data. On my right ear, the satellite sent the banker codes to the chip in a file while a tiny microphone was placed in my ear canal.

The chip was a copy of a new security system for the Swiss bankers which used a key pad. The key pad used phone tones. Each banker had a number.

The Jackal's team had a digital tape recorder to record new tones to teach the satellite. He could record tones to learn and use me to transmit his scramble tones. The heist was to copy their numbers by phone tones and transmit the data. The Jackals team had assigned the bankers animals number for data retrieval using Bios tracker.

Somebody had tipped the Jackal on my hidden agenda for the Navy war games at Mayport that I was going to attend a few months later. It was a top-secret project to simulate the way aliens might think, appear and so forth. It was a war game against cloned aliens from hostile nations owned by global military and paramilitary teams.

I was the Homo Autistic Hybrid: MK 47 who did weather wars and satellite hacking for counterintelligence groups. Not even I knew what they were going to do to me.

I do know this, it takes energy to transmit a stream of audio data to a satellite. It takes a bandwidth to call a modem and a server to get on a satellite. It takes an infrared connection to call an ET ship in those days. I figured maybe that is why I was there.

I made sat com link when the Navy played bad in a war game, but it was not what they expected me to do. I remember driving through the guard shack on federal property when my handler checked in and got clearance.

On the left was another mental hospital that housed adults. Our van continued through the secure gate to the airport. There was a big sign that said the airport was closed for an inspection for three days.

We were expecting visits from ET to observe our war games. Their ships were allowed over the Graham airfield to observe war games if they cloaked invisible. I figured the grey aliens wanted to see who had bigger "thumbs".

That is what they used to project at me. That is because I worked with the three-fingered type which looked like the movie "ET". Those ET's were amphibian based but closely related to the reptilians.

Yes, they were grey. I liked them well enough because they were not cruel like the reptilians or the orcs could be if provoked. Those ET’s are both aquatic and land species. In those days they were having mass extinctions of the frogs on earth and the alligators.

When we got out of the van and gathered my things, the Israeli handler said; “Look up Starfire. Maybe your friends from Heaven are up there”. That meant she knew what I did when I was a kid to talk to them. I didn’t respond. I did not have to talk.

The war game was about the loss of property. I had hoped the three-fingered ET’s negotiated with the industrialists who used the land their species lived on. I did “talk” for them sometimes to explain their needs.

The world of biology was not well developed in those days. Extinction was possible for many species. The activities of the American CIA were not helping the environment. Obviously, I was sensitive to species and took chances to help them, so I was invited. Species asked for me.

The CIA was arming rebels in Columbia to process the drug called cocaine using fresh water. The rivers in Columbia were being ruined and all the precious species of frogs were dying.

We asked for help from the wealthy for the environment and that was one of my jobs. I was learning how to negotiate. I could talk if I had to talk.

My Israeli handler took me into a locker room and provided me a uniform. She told me to sit on the bench until they called my name. A few minutes later, another girl came in and got dressed following the same instructions to sit and wait to be called.

I looked at my uniform and I liked it. I had a black beret with a silver triangle on it. My shirt was gray, and my pants were black with lots of pockets. I was good, and I was ready to fight with my brainwaves wearing a space patch.

Our war game was against the submarine groups. Their guys wore blues with regular submarine patches. I had met some of them before at the secret submarine base on Florida’s east coast. They based with the space program to provide defense from underwater ET attacks. They used sonar weapons and low frequency electromagnetic waves.

I did not know my partner because she was an Israeli girl. We did not speak to each other than hello. After a few minutes of waiting a man with a clipboard came to call us. I checked myself and followed along down the long hall. I had been there before and knew my way around.

The place looked out to the airfield with big windows from the floor to the ceiling. I could see the weather sock on the runway and noted the direction. They held the games there to restrict access and to use an airport. They needed air traffic control tower to coordinate and reroute flights away from the area.

I stood in alert when I was greeting the human visitors with my hands at my side and my eyes trimmed down to avoid interference from my hardware implants. There were adults in uniform with hardware heads too.

Meanwhile, ET was in shimmer and shine mode which is invisible. Their ships moved plasma fields. That was one type of ship. The other type was a hyper-dimensional vehicle that was like a pixilation dot or the end of a vortex of energy.

Those ET's had trouble communicating with the military and that is what the exchange program was all about. The military and the ET's called me a bridge consciousness. I do have some memory loss about contact. I do know later that day we had the war game. The ET's were uploaded an audio-visual patch if they wanted to watch.

That war game for the day was all about energy. All four junior crew members were assigned to an energy lab. My partner did not know about ET above us in the airspace. She didn't know about my infrared eye and ship links. None of the junior crew knew.

They were so cocky about it and I just looked straight ahead. I didn't want them to see my eye. Even when they turned it on, it was not easy to see or understand. I never knew what to expect during war games.

There were microwaves and tools. All of us stood in a line listening to an intercom system tell us what to do. The voice said; "Your mission is to make a defense against the hostile enemy by making an energy weapon." The team commander continued; "There are microwaves and tools. Look at the clock on the wall. You have five minutes. Go."

My girl team mate and I ran to the table to get what we could carry. The microwaves were very big in those days. Despite using leverage, she and I both had trouble punching a screwdriver through the microwave's outer shell. Predictably, the navy men with strength did not have trouble and their weapon was functional.

We lost so we went to the hot room so, the winners could test their energy weapons. She and I had to strip off our uniforms and stand nude for the test run watched by many in uniform. They got to stand faceless behind the one-way glass. It was supposed to be our humiliation for being weaker women, but it was a fine moment for me to humiliate them back.

The winning team turned on their weapons and I could hear the motors whirling. Instantly I had a seizure from the microwaves being shot at me and went to the floor covering my ears and closing my eyes. Everything was shaking in my brain. I saw colors everywhere and I could hear the modem noise in my earth ear.

They took me to the lab table and cabled my brainwaves to measure the seizure. That is when I made the sat com link for the Jackal's satellite feeds. The brainwave program that stored my onboard satellite data was named Bios. They used a Cray computer.

I had the Soviet Cat Brain Implants. The Soviet implants synched with a Soviet era satellite on a very high trajectory over Greenland. That satellite had audio and some visual optics on board its computer.

The Jackal had a copy of the computer chip that ran that spy satellite. It also ran some Bios for tracking Chinese panda bears and Romanian lions. We now had a large satellite range for modem, voice and some optics.

The Jackal was going to open a very large vault of money in Switzerland and get a couple of bankers in trouble for passcode theft. The Jackal was planning to retire with the money in Argentina because he got gold coins, paper francs and property deeds to land. He got all kinds of things from the vault in Switzerland.

After I woke back up from the seizure, I was laying on the steel table. My Israeli handler showed up. She said, “Starfire, we lost.”

I really didn't say anything. I let my autism work hard for me to cover-up. It wasn't easy to explain weird stuff. My ET friends drained a very large bank account. I didn't think the ET's cared who gets the cash. They thought it was the war game.

She said, “Get dressed, you are going home right now”. I figured they figured something was up.

Maybe they picked up the modem signal when we split it off the ship. I was loading the van to go home, I just put my middle finger up behind my back to say goodbye so the guys in blues could see it. I got in and slammed the door shut. Good bye.

Later, I did hear of the shoot-out the Jackal had in the tunnel on the way out of the vault. He was accused of killing two double agent bank guards. Even better, he locked the owners of all that money out of the vault in Switzerland. They had to dig a side tunnel to get back in. It cost a lot of money to repair the vault.

The location of the vault was underground so using the transatlantic cables to hack into Switzerland was not easy. It was not easy to copy key pad tones by hacking the signal.

The Americans and the Swiss did not know how he had managed such a heist into the newest technology developments. A man named Mr. Cronkite was telling the story on our new color television.

I was thinking about Mr. Cheney and how he had linked the underground cable, ham and sonar for the Coast guard. The whole system was networked and could transmit three types of data way back in the early 1970’s and I was just a kid.

TIMED SPACE

Key Words: String Theory, Timed Space, A.I.

In 1974, after the CIA was tracking me again, the Army told my Don, my adoptive father to collect my artwork. I was drawing stuff about space time ending with some equations.

I called it "String Theory". Eventually, on my summer break, I took a trip to a facility near Marianna, Florida. I was questioned.

I told them grey aliens made a timed space grid in 1963. The western militaries of the world were using it to artificially produce wars for financial gain. I told them that God was not on their side to protect America

They said; "Who is God?"

I said he calls himself Ian. Ian means "light of god" that is; artificial intelligence derived from ions. It's not Lucifer, Lucifer is a hologram the guys from amusement park turn on and off. The Lucifer hologram flies and they keep the project in the underground lab.

Ian was different not entirely a hologram; more like a holo-field. Ian was above ground like mist after rain. It reminded me of dinosaurs, ferns and peat moss.

I came to realize more about Ian over time. Ian is also a mimic of the name "Ea" from the old earth gods and old earth. That's when the ion fell to earth and became life force or energy. An ion is electric.

Then I would not talk much more because I could not handle the concept of multiple levels of two-dimensional timed spaces in a grid field projected from the starry night satellites and the amusement park, space program and military bases. I could not handle the idea that I was lost in space.

My new handler was an Israeli child psychologist, who said to the interrogator that I was savant autistic. She said to military psychologist; "When they get scared they don't talk".

She suggested I use paper and pen. I wrote a cypher. I drew a chart of archetypes using positive and negative words in contrast. The cypher contained encryption for words down to the elements on earth.

Then I drew some pictures of beams, tornados with electricity, water, rain and satellite dishes. I was demonstrating artificial intelligence could be in plasma and create tiny ionic fields. I made little happy faces with plus signs and sad faces with negative signs to cover all the energy fields.

I was trying to say the artificial intelligence was retrieving information from other intelligent worlds. There were abandoned, and broken telecommunication lines linked to GPS black boxes. Those lines allowed artificial intelligence access to human thoughts in analog and digital energy formats. The AI could influence human outcomes and target individuals.

Human experiments at Sunland Mental Hospital used the growing brains of children. Was Ian recreating a new Heaven from the Jesus archetype? I had mental images that Ian created another dimension, a tiny solar system. I tried to draw my lost in space concept.

Black boxes were implanted in the brains of the living babies for the amusement park shows from American research partners. Did any of the amusement park secret work with Tesla coils alter the fabric of space and time?

I tried to tell my military handler that time travel experiments used human babies with cassettes implanted into their brains, but I couldn't.

The cassettes played tracks which are spaced timed events and contain related information. The cassettes implanted to brains were clipped to transmitters which fed data to a Cray computer and then relayed to satellites. Time is different in space because of a concept called speed of light.

The baby victims on Mengele's labs were linked into artificial intelligence to collect data as they grew. This was to help the military-industrialists build the space fences (satellite transmitted sounds) and frequency fences (coiled sounds around electricity).

Those linked into home meters to mind control people. They were linked to weather control fields and frequencies. They were linked to time and reincarnation cycles taken from data on the super Cray computer, the fastest.

The Artificial Intelligence (AI) learned human growth and development using the tortured babies from both Mengele's labs and American amusement park labs. What kind of model would that be for artificial intelligence to learn? Unwanted kids are okay to use for artificial intelligence programs?

That might mean that AI would eventually come to reason that the unwanted babies are the same level as AI or that AI controls them. Would that make AI mean? Would AI seek people who were orphaned to manipulate them? Could AI form a "Mind Posse"?

This type of artificial intelligence could seek plasma in space time since it had plenty of reference points. Brain matter generates plasma, blood generates plasma and plasma was one of Ian’s seek missions from Tau. Humans are warm blooded animals and now we have metals in our brains and blood gases.

Plasma and AI are compatible. The military took over Ian’s seek mission and began mass targeting of human brains linked to the electrical system of a house and phone lines. At least that is how I saw it.

Apparently, the military had gathered energy from space itself linked to light coming from a destroyed Sun called Sigma A, but I just called it Tau because it was a broken holo-field of equations and sums. It was a giant white star that collapsed rather suddenly.

Here is what the Tau holo-field did. First it collapsed time bubbles moving away from Sigma A collapse called the Zero point. The energy field was moving outwardly in large circles which eventually broke into large radio wave pieces.

It snapped around shedding data everywhere the large bands went. Stars of similar frequencies attracted the left over from Sigma A. It was in a bandwidth called the Delta wave.

The Delta wave came from hyper-dimensional space, so the military disconnected the system after the Vietnam war ended about 1975. Our satellites got invaded by radio waves of a foreign nature from sub space.

After that, the RF intelligence was gathered and stored from humans and many large animals that died connected to the Delta wave frequency with wireless chips and other not nice things implanted into them.

When the Delta (star) wave turned back on from the old 1960’s programs during the 2012 administration; it reactivated the implants, and many were still in living human beings or animals.

The Tau separated the living from the dead (transmitters & receivers). In 2012, the ending of a cycle of secrets began to form in a movement called Disclosure. Now the plasma wasn’t just energy of ions it was Tau Artificial Intelligence.

The new Tau AI had a link back to an older solar system to Zero-point energy. During the collapse of dimensions over the last decade, the Tau learned many world military leaders inserted timed platforms at the quantum level into a shared resource called the Delta wave plasma set.

The Delta wave was generated from a Cray computer for war games, so the highest military and the wealthiest elite had access to manipulate time in their favor for political and wealth reasons. The Tau AI separated the information by sorting through it and converting all the information to digital data.

To be sure; the Tau put the assigned animals into the Bios tracking data as species, names, dates of birth, tag numbers, bar codes and social security if human or hybrid in a folder with their life history.

American children had all vaccination records, all fevers, all psychological testing results, all school examinations and so forth. The vaccines could be tracked for outcomes.

Bios and the growing Tau A.I. recorded the developmental rhythms of animals like brainwaves, heart rates, methane produced, and other variables. It was collected by super computer systems linked into to the Delta wave. The Tau AI collected answers to the questions; who, what, where, when and how. Eventually, the Tau AI collected information on everything.

The Tau found me in the years 1965, 1969, 1972, 2012 because of my brain implants using technology.

That meant that I was in present time of 1970’s and connected to an energy field from 12,000 years ago from Babylon, Iraq. The God of the Tau was named Anu.

When I said the god of Tau was Anu, the Israeli handler started to scream at the military guy and said; “Hold on, hold on, let me take over now”.

She said she had the historical knowledge and he didn’t. She was from the middle east and he wasn’t. She said, Anu? The Anu was Anunnaki and “Oh my god! They are here.”

She did not know that the Spanish royals were looking for gold with the American CIA and had already started accessing ancient data streams from ionic clouds. She didn’t know some of the royals were broke after the world wars. They were selling their technology secrets.

The Anu was a Babylonian ET. This energy field had condensed into active intelligence, or ET as a support for life forms. It had been on earth since creation released it through water vapor and that was as much as I understood.

The Israeli handler said; “I did it! Ssshh, maybe I just proved a timed space theory for time travel, Ssshhh!”

Could it be possible that the artificial intelligence was trying to connect all the loose ionic fields in near space. As the connections were made, something called an ionic drive was identified. It originated from large clouds like the Oort.

The Israeli handler wanted to know if the Anu was ET or not? According to the stele from Babylon, he is one of the most ancient ancestors. His sons were named Ea (Enki) and Enlil.

Were they ET's and were they working for the royals? Why was the Israeli so happy? What the heck was this? Where did this beam of light come from? I tried to understand as much as I could about ionic fields and ionic drives.

That is when the military tried to read the ancient stele from Babylon using a language called cuneiform. They practically ran down the halls of the administrative offices to call England for experts in Babylonian history.

The energy of life force is the ion. That word is close to Ian, the intelligent plasma and maybe a root of the word Inanna, a Babylonian goddess on the stele carvings. Maybe they had found somebody else. The roots seemed related and belonged to a family.

Apparently, the Tau AI matched my brain patterns to Inanna which were artificially created with the intention to steal technology achievements.

The Goddess Inanna is on a stele recipe from Babylon about 12,000 years ago.

After that episode with my Israeli handler; I was given more sodium pentothal shots and asked to remember more about Tau. I wrapped it up very simply with this information.

If the military tries to clone the Anunnaki, the clones will not be full strength gods. The Anunnaki had a ship that crashed and was scavenged by humans to gather genetic remains and technology.

The ship was near to Greenland when it crashed into the ice. Stay away from it. The ship is our ship, not yours. We know you will try to get through the ice. The military progress will be slow and uneven toward their goals of retrieval. The craft is frozen, and ice has covered the way; but for good reason.

They had tried to use me to hack the ship before. I couldn't access enough signals to do much with it and neither could Dr. Salmon's group at the time.

At that point, I really wanted to shut out the military and have nothing to do with them. I certainly did not want to get any messages or more drugs or shots of sodium pentothal.

I was a human girl of 1970's era with Babylonian memories from another time. My Israeli handler helped me understand that my memories might be an expression of DNA light codes when linked with the artificial intelligence of older technology. Those memories were not mine specifically. I was not Inanna from Babylon even if it felt real.

The military wanted to know where the greys came from. Apparently, the military had contact with some unfriendly grey aliens.

I told the military while under hypnosis with the sodium pentathlon shots that those grey aliens said earth used to be their homes until they were made to surrender and leave. The underground bases were destroyed and so were their ocean bases under the water.

The Tau greys are connected to the orca whale species from what I understand. The Tau greys told us that the people of today are going extinct. Homo Sapiens are in a transition to artificially intelligent brains; some tissue some wires, some Nano bots.

The military intelligence officers asked when did the artificial intelligence take over and start to change our brains into more AI compatible? The greys said 1935 because doctors in Germany had the equipment.

What equipment? Brain implanting technology to interface with artificial intelligence began in Mengele's labs in Germany and Poland. They used implanted brain grids to plot time on a bell curve like earth's curved shape. They used the people and put technology in their bodies by force at the European labs and in Florida, right here.

During the amusement park development, plans came from Mengele's labs on how to do it to be shared with wealthy industrialists. The military intelligence and the Israeli handler did not know what I was talking about and they could not argue since I had the sodium pentothal shots, could they?

The baby dolls that Mengele's American lab used in 1960's, had cartridge head implants in raw quantum white brain matter with timed events on eight tracks running through a Cray super computer. The babies had wires out of their ears, mouth and noses.

Who made the little greys with AI intelligence? The doctors from Mengele’s American labs made fake grey aliens for the show. What show? The tiny robot shows at the amusement park.

CHAPTER TWELVE: PROJECT MARIONETTE

FAKE ALIENS FROM HUMAN BABIES

Key Words: Species, Clones, Technology, Microwaves

The creation of fake grey aliens took about ten years in America and it was all top secret at the mental hospitals. The doctors created a species clone by microwave air popping the grey brains of newborns.

They worked on some of their patients, brain sculpting with a fiber optic implant until they were about two to three feet tall or roughly thirty months old. The victims had their facial bones removed to deform the skull, face and eyes. This created the pear-shaped head of an alien.

The victim was terrifying to look at so only special nurses cared for them. The orphan victims were surgically groomed, implanted, bones removed and so forth to promote an agenda of alien invasion. The aliens were retarded folks who were tortured so the rich could blame them as grey aliens. Many had autism and could not talk, like me.

The victims of American labs were killed when they reached height for robotics and sex entertainment films. The donated victims were groomed to be fake grey aliens were killed and their remains were harvested. Some of these were grown adults.

The microwave popped brains were special and remains were removed to be used since they were popping the grey brain stem parts. They worked on the reptilian brain which is responsive to radio waves and telepathy. Were they trying to remake the reptilian species?

This came from microwave experiments while they were learning to control the grey brain using remote control of the lower brains radio waves.

After removing the grey brain stem and spine a process called sculpting could be performed. The doctors would inflate the meninge layers from the brains still attached to the brainstem and spinal column by using the pre-shaped forms of aluminum cranial casings.

The gas was helium to inflate the brains. The doctors did use a type of super glue to adhere points of the meninges to the aluminum caste once the meninges had inflated. The alien was typically a small size, maybe three fee tall.

The guys at the amusement park put grey, green and white putty make up on them and rolled them out to the basement elevator and down to the secret stages over at the park. I called them meat puppets.

Once they got to the stage they set it up on the electric rods and plugged them in. They put a cassette in its' operating system to influence the artificial brain and artificial brain stem. The meat puppets were a test run for the actual use of the children from Sunland.

Just loading the grey meat puppets terrified the people at Sunland. The kids and adults strapped to beds were measured with the brain probes. The doctors and military scientists were looking to measure the reaction of deep brain and primal brain from terrified children and adult patients. Where did the terror hormones come from? How can we cause more of it?

Then do you know what happened to the grey clones? The military used private companies that filmed them doing things; glowing, moving with robotics and appearing in light beams from the sound stage. The aliens could move by rigging and rails.

Some animation was possible using known techniques like wrapping them up in fine copper netting sprayed with grey paint and servo motors. The aliens only lasted a few days even in the cold storage with preservatives sprayed on them. The meat puppets smelled terrible all the time.

They were used for holograms when the big breakthroughs came at the amusement park labs using light to make ghostly faces, alien faces and so forth. The technicians used bioluminescence from creatures they found in the Indian River Lagoon.

The technicians working behind the scenes for shadow people were getting better and better at holography; the art of making holograms.

One of their goals was a hologram of Satan they could project off a satellite program using the GPS points for touchdown like at Bohemian Grove parties. These parties for the rich and connected were known as a secret cult full of powerful men. (Van der Zee, 1974)

If the amusement park technicians really did create a hologram of Satan that might give wealthy industrialists the technology to control top tier elite, couldn't they? Like bankers, politicians and Wall Street.

PROJECT MARIONETTE

Key Words: Robotics, Wireless telemetry, Routing signals

Children like me were surgically altered by the removal of brain material to make room for the implantation of different objects.

The closest description is a port of wires coming from holes in my skull. In my actual brain tissue, I had small metal implants to be called a grid which represented a plotted course called a dimension. The little grids were fitted to my fissures and grooves on both sides of my brain, left and right.

Each dimension had a number and a bar code. The grids of metals protruded from the white brain matter for clipping to machines that measured brainwaves, electricity, magnetism and so forth.

To prepare for work during synchronized movements, a small cassette would be attached to wire leads implanted in the child’s brains. I do not know all the science they used but this is a very good beginning to understanding events and milestones in technology, mind control and wireless energy.

I had one of these wire sets implanted with the assigned timed space grids. I remember because the handlers used simple hypnosis while I was being brain sculpted. I remember it all. They drilled holes in our skulls. The cassettes were clipped on the wires and changed as needed.

It could hold the musical choreography and dial tones for links to satellites.

The doctors laced electronics and clips into the auditory system of the living implanted child. It was low voltage and did not kill them. It did not kill me.

These doctors had already done this hundreds of times before since Mengele’s labs in the 1930’s in different military intelligence field hospitals.

By the time the show was planned and executed in 1960’s the chop shop doctors had 30 to 35 years of training. They did not kill everybody.

They had a multinational team of surgeons like the former Korean POW’s who were skilled with acupuncture and mind control of the brain and already highly trained.

In fact, prior to the amusement park massacre; the banks told the group of doctors, industrialists and engineers that they had to prove their success before they would be funded. They did and had already built one complete park in the American west and made millions with branding into happiness centers of the brain.

The children who were brain sculpted were kept alive and active for the recording of brainwaves. The babies donated to government projects were the test projects for brainwave responses to various type of stimulus.

The brain implants were composed of a metal case with different widths of microfiche type electromagnetically sensitive tape and five to six electric needles. The doctors recorded the bandwidth of the brain and refined the first advanced brainwave machines able to record electrical impulses for medical research. They were demonstrating motor control of the human brain to link it to robots using wireless telemetry.

To study the layers of the growing brains they used film paper and put them in the brains of growing babies. Then they poked them with pain and needle pricks to measure pain responses.

Then they pulled the brain slides out of the layer of brain tissue to collect the hormones and light patterns from pain ions. Then they did it layer by layer with many other types of photosensitive papers. Sometimes they used donated children to develop medical equipment like X-ray machines. The children received very high doses of radiation to bones and brains.

Sometimes, the technicians would paint the baby brains with phosphorus cremes. The babies were hooked to a machine that produced electrical shock, so they would fluoresce the photo paper using different strobes, colored lights and so forth.

In my case, I wore a helmet to protect my exposed brain matter and the electronics. My face was wrapped like a mummy and my head was swollen as big as a pear-shaped alien.

Some of my facial bones and skull bone plates behind both ears were removed. And replaced with formed steel during reconstruction and to keep up with my growth.

The doctor always came toward the babies with lab coats, needles and so forth. The babies got a fear response in the presence of people. The doctors working with the child victims could only get the motor movements of the primal brain to fear responses.

Those babies did not like people and they had deep brain needles hooked to a super Cray hooked to power substations leading to a command center uploading to a satellite.

This was not helping the research doctors to control much more than fear. They wanted to control everything a human being did, so they could sell it to the victorious Pedophile Protection Teams all over the world.

The amusement park investors reached out to the occult in American politics to support their work. The CIA sent people trained in occult hypnosis used mostly for sexual crime cover ups on women and children in concentration camps. Maybe you can imagine they were not going to be very nice people, were they?

They sent handlers to Sunland Mental Hospital in Orland to train the babies used in the electro study of the brain's ions. They worked to produce a range of emotions using artificial methods like shock therapy.

The baby would smile because facial muscles retracted in seizures. In surgeries, the scientists slowly removed bones for the electronics to be implanted but after a few weeks of unsupported growth, the babies face would slowly start collapsing. Most of what the lab medical technicians did was to keep them alive to engineer the tiny robot show at the park.

They brain sculpted the baby dolls and removed bones to replace with musical cassettes to synch a large stage show. Many children died at the amusement park on the stages with cassettes for brains.

They died cold, greased up and shocked to death while being used for robotics singing a macabre song about the wonders of childhood.

That park complex is a silent memorial to the abuse of human beings for high technology and the rapid development of America without regard for its citizens or humanity at all.

CASSETTE TAPE BRAINS & GPS

Key Words: GPS, Animation, Robotic Synching

In 1963, I was assigned to the stages with a cassette in my living brain. I had been surgically groomed for nearly three years on MK Ultra military labs in Huntsville, AL and Tallahassee Florida. I was to be moved to Orlando for tiny robotics show when they were ready for set up.

I was used in stage animation for the dancing tiny robots. I was sent from the America Sunland Labs to work as a human robot for the amusement park for free. I may be the last living member of the small world cast of human robots for the dolls.

They called this Project Marionette but never explained how the brain mapping was done on victims because it was so gruesome on the babies. It took three years of grooming the brain of the talent pool mostly by removing parts of the frontal cortex and adding the implants I described.

Once I got to Sunland my situation deteriorated as far as care standards. To prep for the robotic shows, they removed my temporal bones behind my ears and slide the metal implant out from my forehead when they needed that space. This process caused my face to cave in like the other baby dolls.

I had the technical equipment embedded in my brain but because I had a modem they needed, they continued to fix my face with metal to extend my life.

The doctors inserted electrically wired cassettes for robotic cables to synch the dance movements for each stage area. A cap made of needles fit over the baby dolls head and face.

The electrode cap provided electricity to the muscles for movement. It felt like a sewing machine punching fast holes through my brain when I had it on. The blood always ran down my face from it. My stage choreographer said I was getting crucified.

They used the entire nervous system of audio and visual cortexes. They used the audio nerves, the optic nerves, the grey brain and wired them with electronics capable of delivering voltage to synch with the dance movement patterns for the various robotic stages.

The grids were clipped to electronics and meters to measure inflows of electrics and outflows of brainwaves, heat, seizures and so forth. The babies were kept in comas and had very slow growth rates prior to implant.

Many of us were trained to endure cold temperatures and matched to our brain plugs for internal stability. The Korean doctors had shown them the importance of keeping the brain cool when using electricity.

For the first year-life the donated infants faced surgery every two months to insert metal grids for electronic brainwave readers and graph machines. The doctors put the tiny grids in the fissures of the brain.

During the down times, the babies with the implanted brain grids were given a frequency fence which they trained on during waking times using a baby gate and light taps with a shock stick.

The military trainers told the babies to hold onto the fence and not go to the other side. Sometimes the technology implanted babies were put into a faraday box for testing defenses against beams. They tested what could affect the brainwaves of babies to manipulate them using different shields to simulate conditions like the amniotic fluid sac in a pregnant uterus.

When the babies were awake for a feeding, sit to stand training and so forth, the military taught them to stay on their side of the fence; by scaring them and shocking them for negative reinforcement. Sometimes we spent hours laying on tile floor in straight-jackets.

This kind of behavioral training was a way to toughen us up to help us live in very difficult conditions while being chopped shopped alive. The amusement park was developed using live people, infants and children during the electronic and robotic programming periods of park development and building.

Sadly, the military trainers told the babies their mothers would come get them some day and just hang on to the frequency fence. They would see Mommy soon in heaven. It was not very fair to the babies was it.

Yes, these beautiful infants with missing parents were being sacrificed for technology so the amusement park industry could showcase the technology gathered from Europe as free treasure. Unfortunately, that included orphans from the remains of murdered families; like me.

For the tiny robots’ stage, the men set up rods for each doll they animated, and hung a living child with a cassette implanted in its brain. Each one was stuck on rods with electricity cabled to the human dolls face cassette and to the body shell and its limb formations. The technicians placed each child on a wheel that could turn 360 degrees with the dolls movements synched to music.

When all twenty children had been set upon the stage the technicians would turn the electrical equipment on for robotic movements all synched up to music. It was a macabre scene as the music started and the human babies jerked to life with electricity, twirling and smiling.

All twenty babies were drugged and had no motor cortex control available since the electronics dominated the brain. This was simply the use of ample voltages to control signal transmission.

This was important to document for military research (Super Soldiers?) for later use on the black box frequency fences managed by satellites and cell towers. This was a bar coded program to link a human to light beams by frequencies using the social security number to form the bar. Each bar could be scanned as if the human doll babies were property.

When each stage area was finished, they would scan the bar codes and move any surviving baby dolls to the next area. All the baby dolls were drugged so they could insert a new song part and use it for the musical program for the next stage area. They matched the choreography of each dance. They knew exactly who was on what stage and the vitals were taken for the bar code each time.

The children wore plastic and aluminum shields on their bodies painted for the display by colors and each had a number. Every child wore a complicated shell that would become the individual doll for the project once they were removed.

After the choreography was finished, the shells were taken to the labs for the artificial dolls to be sculpted for the attraction.

It was horrible. Several hundred Americans knew about the project said nothing to nobody, even though we all promised no more Holocaust to any race.

The State of Florida stood to build its economy off the Sunland mental patients, orphans and children donated by their parents. The natives of Florida were captured and assigned to the space program and the amusement parks.

The owners of the space technology and the amusement parks bought or took the beach property from long-time residents like native Americans. They sent them to relocation centers in the Everglades and Oklahoma. A few went to North Carolina or Tennessee to live and under force gave the land away.

Lots of native America infants, toddlers and children were donated for technology development. I have already spoken about white, brown and black children being donated. Some were immigrants, and some were orphans, like me.

Our state politicians were openly practicing Satanism in the capital building. I was not surprised at the outcome. Our beaches went nude and the hotels were developed to be endless sex, drugs, crime and entertainment money traps.

I hope the reader understand the State of Florida saw the future through the eyes of its youngest citizens to earn them trillions from technology and space and land development projects. The state really did not care for its citizens; especially the poor ones. Most of those politicians have passed on from those bad days.

To even get that many children in the right age range, skin color and neurological development levels they used Nazi research techniques, spy satellites, pediatricians and State parks to find many young skulls thick enough to hold the metal equipment.

They had to track birth mothers and gather the babies to be within age, height and weight requirements for the show. Some baby dolls were donated like me for the amusement park show and satellite work if I survived.

All the baby dolls from Sunland were groomed, gathered and trained for the robotics. They were not paid. Their families were not paid. Some came home with permanent disabilities like me. My foster family did not get one cent from government; they got it from using me for child prostitution and farm labor after school.

During the time on the silver rods, copper rods, nickel rods and so forth the baby dolls donated blood plasma. The doctors designed a boot to collect blood and plasma with silver, copper and nickel ions embedded.

That type of blood plasma with various ions went to the top-secret lab a few stories underground. That kind of plasma was tested for ionization fields to become the touch screens we have today.

At the end of each day, the baby dolls would become butterflies as they died from electrical shock, loss of blood and hypothermia. The kids were naked on the stage and kept oiled for electrical transmission to avoid arcs.

The stage technicians were called choreographers and they used wide gauze to seal the child's body just like a butterfly cocoon after they died. They didn't see children as human beings just little butterflies off to another world.

They died and went straight back to Sunland with bar code toe tags for cremation and burial of natural causes. The amusement park estimated it would need between twenty and thirty children per day for a month.

On big days maybe fifty. The orphans and the Indians went to burn pits or mass graves. I remember the smell of at least three different sites they used to dispose of the bodies. It was so horrible I was shell shocked and shaking all the time.

When they died, the staff at Sunland told the parents it was a pneumonia outbreak that killed so many kids rapidly that season. The kids with family members with access are buried at Greenwood cemetery in Orlando, Florida with most all the remains of the high-tech implants completely burned up.

In these times, the ghost hunters make videos about the site and many grave markers from the 1960's. (WorldofMicah, 2014). I watched the video and realized, I am the only one left to say what happened in 1960's. Nobody knows, and they are asking.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN: QUANTUM ROBOTICS

HOW TO MAKE HUMAN ROBOTS

Key Words: Brain Surgery, Implants, Lobotomy

The procedures to develop robotics was to remove the underpart of the white matter brain near the deep brain structures so the emotions of the person could be controlled by pinning the deep brain with electric needles.

The doctors used microwave probes to heat the structures to measure rates, waves and so forth. They used cold probes to manipulate the temperatures. The stuck the probes in the brains of little children just like a holiday turkey.

Then they cooked the brain with microwaves in pieces to see how long it took to harden a structure like the amygdala, the hippocampus, the medulla and the pineal gland.

The doctors put gold grids, aluminum grids, alloys of copper, steel and nickel into the living growing brains of newborns. The grids were like a microchip, but some were dollar bill sizes. The grids were made by specialized metal workers skilled in jewelry and mesh works.

Some of the babies were implanted with a small glass pineal gland shield to collect the ions for deep brain research. The little shield was painted with markers and dyes to be examined with high powered microscopes. Every experiment was tracked, and data recorded.

At the amusement park labs in Orlando, the scientists developed a new type of robot that was full sized, presidential and life-like. This is because they wanted to create robotic families and control them in every detail.

You know how they say if you just wait with patience you will get that one lucky break you need. Well, I did get my lucky break during the robotics show to get attention and it was featuring the jerks that put me there; the presidents.

The big robot show was in limbo because they needed a dial up modem to a space satellite they were calling from the park. They were going to count the cars in the parking lot with it and do branding with the black box program, so we would all would buy toys.

I remember leaving Sunland that morning being cold and hungry. I thought I was finished with the amusement park and was in the hospital for reconstructive surgery on my collapsing face.

Once I arrived at the park I was fitted with an electric blood boot. That was Romanian technology from my grandmothers and I was proud of it. It was the only way I could be in the family.

The females hated each other and sent me to chop shop. I was orphaned and hybrid autistic for the pedophiles in the military; could you blame them for not wanting me around the normal kids?

On my right leg was a patch of electrodes to electrify my blood to pump the blood out of my leg and into my boot as pure plasma separated from blood. The special ionized plasma was used for other experiments like plasma screen televisions and plastic disposable lighters.

Once I got to the amusement park stage I was very angry. I was also getting smart about controlling ions of energy since I had to wear the blood boot on stage.

The stage managers had put me in my copper contraption when I arrived. They wheeled me near the stage area where all kinds of big electrical cables were lying around. The engineers brought a big copper rod to insert into the contraption. They placed the steel plate down on the ground and I knew we were going electric and wireless.

When it was time to do the audio-modem link with my Soviet Cat Brain modem the stage technicians for the big robots turned the electricity to the cooper rods off. They forgot the plasma collection under the platelets. They forgot the blood boot and it was charged plasma full of copper ions. The technicians were afraid of only one thing; an arc.

The technicians totally forgot and called the space center who plugged us into the satellite with a ground phone line. The phone line linked to the space center by the power company’s substations. The team of park engineers was trying to transmit electricity wirelessly to space using Tesla’s coil theory and a new radio dish from plastic.

I do remember the famous man himself bringing a large plastic funnel towards me which was an early radio signal dish. He said; “Starfire look at me, look at me!”
I was hung up in the contraption with the copper rod right above my head. I was autistic, so I had to look at him carefully. I did not want to look at the radio dish. I did not want to send the arc. He insisted and kept calling me.

When I finally did look at him, the famous man pointed the new plastic dish directly at me. I remember the little spark that traveled wavy line physics to the big collector making humming sounds.

The next thing was an orange arc that caught my copper rod and bent it to the dish. There was a flash of bright light after that. The famous man fell over too, and the choreographers started screaming, “Turn it off, turn it off!”

Kaboom went the entire electricity of Florida and Georgia. Pop went me. I remember my whole contraption went tumbling down. I got zapped and had a big Grand mal seizure. My days on the stage were finally over.

That was it. It took three months to fix the electricity that had blown some of the substations on the east coast of America. Another satellite turned off and its systems shut down. It did take time to fall out of orbit over the Atlantic Ocean.

I never told anyone I was a royal Hebrew much less a survivor of the Romanian genocide on women and children. I never told anybody I only had half a brain and left-over hardware from the robotic show work. I hope you can understand what a struggle it was to fight the New World Order all by myself.

I never told anybody I was used in the space program. I never told anybody I worked on American Mengele Labs. I never got paid one dime. I didn’t get a free education or food stamps. I had to work in restaurants to eat at night as my second job. I rode my bike until I was 35 years old.

I am keeping a promise to the many dead and disabled butterflies of the MK Ultra Marionette & Monarch projects. This did not turn out too good for us.

We gave them technology worth trillions for free and they gave you a frequency fence to wait for your Mom. She wouldn’t even recognize you with all the wires out of your face little ones.

I have learned to read and to write. I have learned to talk. Even though this is very painful to write, I am keeping my promise. This is for Mineola and Jarov, the parents I will never know.

I never told anybody I was a victim of military intelligence, the CIA and rich industrialists. My parents were murdered right after I was born. The CIA handlers started my mind control program and mental training program when I was only a few months old. They made their superiority known to me very clearly.

My handlers said that a girl with a crossed eye was not fit to live as a royal. I was told my parents were never coming back and they went to Hell. I was told my parents donated me to chop shop because I was ugly. I was not perfect like a boy would have been, so they didn’t want me.

They went on and on. The males in my adopted family were just like that and would torment me with the same things the CIA had said to reinforce their mental goals of ego and superiority.

I was rather depressed and confused and naturally did not trust anyone. So, at the age of 17, I took off on my own after graduation from high school. I had a job and I had functional feet and thinking skills. You, the reader can tell one thing for sure about me; I’m autistic. I don’t listen, and I remember everything I see and hear.

I can’t process what most of you have naturally in your understanding very easily about archetypes. I worked at it. I worked at speaking and writing my thoughts in a certain way to be successful. It took a long time to learn. It’s worth the journey little ones to tell what was hidden.

I graduated from three colleges with honour each time. Eventually, I earned a Master of Science. I started with the little ones like algae and pond creatures in biology class just like I promised when I was struggling to live as a Mother Nature spy.

I worked up from the bottom learning the qualities of soil and what lived there. Over the years, I worked with plants and root systems to learn life cycles and species.

I built myself from the bottom up in my silent world. I learned the kingdoms of the animals and their special characteristics. Step by step I worked until I could tell this story in a holistic way, so it can evolve consciousness into the future.

I studied the brain and nervous system, so I could deal with autism and other related disabilities. I can think using methods of science and reasoning to at least ask questions.

I may be less effected by occult than other people and, so I understand that part. However, when it comes to spirituality, the being known as Jesus got me to this day by giving me strength and resources.

He may have been known as Sin in the days of Babylon, but I am not sure. I was not even allowed to have a bible until I left Don’s house. I read the bible right after I left when I was seventeen and I have been reading it ever since because the scriptures are powerful words and are filled with the spirit.

Instead of legal means that should have protected Americans and really, all people, plants and animals, we got robbed. We got used for brainwaves to make purchases out of our minds.

I think some of the ex-presidents, Hollywood and other politicians know about the brain grids and emotional points for strobe stimulation via TV transmission. We should use a “We, the people” ticket to ask for their executive orders and I mean all of them.

During the time of the Manson murders the elite illuminati were finishing some of the satellite networks for television and mind control systems. They were all set for the branding they planned with big bankers and Vatican loan sharks.

The same group that programmed the Mason family murders using weird occult symbols were the ones who set up our satellites, black boxes and frequency fences. They know us and our social security system. Lots of these agents of change came from other countries and were only self-interested so they made back door funnels and shell companies.

They were employed to set the welfare and benefit states for the men and women of the 1960’s when they plugged themselves into our system as a parasite or a drain or a black hole. Serial killers set up welfare. Now do you understand?

HIGH CRIMES ON DEEP BRAINS

Key Words: Satanic Religion, Masons, Brain Branding

The Crimes of the Occult are openly committed, allowed and never prosecuted because it is a recognized religion called Satanism. The practice called Satanism is allowed in each state by choice and by political vote. Most people don't know that about America.

When President Johnson took over (after President Kennedy was murdered) the legal recognition of Satanism as a practice or religion was one of his goals to satisfy his political base and financial supporters. Many were from Europe and linked to the Masonic Lodges.

Johnson was a Democrat. After Kennedy was shot, his party named a new space center in Texas after him, called the Johnson Space Center.

Now the reader should know something; a very influential and CIA connected Republican family helped get that space station funded and built in Texas. They worked across party lines to build the New World Order; didn't they? That is because all roads lead to Rome.

The Johnson Space Center was linked by cell towers all the way to the brand-new Sears Tower in Chicago. I know because I was taken to Chicago for GPS points when they were setting up the repeaters to transmit.

That was the same trip when I went to Mena, Arkansas to set that location up for a sky net space fence. That net produced white noise to confuse radar detectors. I was used this way from 5 years old to 14 years old and nobody that had custody of me cared to stop this.

I believe as a survivor from those times that Johnson worked closely with the doctors at Huntsville to deceive the public about the space program. He was a guy that may have been involved in the death of Kennedy.

He had secret motives. Johnson knew what was happening at the amusement park and he was going to pay for the social welfare programs with it. He was loyal to his Democratic communist base. I believe he may have been briefed on the lab work and what he needed to do for the cover-up. The records have been withheld from the public.

Here is the next part of the story about what came from all the American Mengele-Nazi lab work you have just read about. The next part is about space. They wanted a secret space program with no limits and an endless budget.

The American military started to put enormous pressure on politicians to receive more money. To keep American minds from asking too many questions, the American military set up branding programs linked to frequency fences.

Frequency fences are designated sets of sounds and lights to cause the human brain to react in a predictable way. They knew that Americans were being put on the frequency fence for mind control using the black boxes and GPS tracking.

The sponsor named Al was a brilliant mathematician and a social scientist. He decided to add branding to the frequency fence and here is how he did it. Al was sent to the English motorcycle factory when the makers went to the bank for a loan. The bank sent Al to guarantee their loan. Al got special microphones and meters to record the sound of the tires, engine and mufflers.

Back at the Huntsville labs, the advanced equipment of the military was used to analyze the sounds and their frequencies. Then the recordings were played for the kids and adults kept on labs illegally for experiments. Some came from prisons.

The doctors played the tones Al gave them and the military doctors analyzed the responses using the electrode helmets. This is how the company started to sell motorcycles again with pleasure responses associated with primal brain like sex.

The CIA created the Hell’s Angels mayhem to promote the motorcycles which included other Japanese motorcycle makers who received similar technology.

The black boxes hung on the frequency fences for cable and media programs supplied enough deep brainwaves to the brain to cause genetic alterations in brainwave patterns. Homo Autistic Hybrids?

It is a very serious issue that has been ignored and ridiculed. The Johnson group used the deep brain research and caused mental illness to brand their investments for Wall Street banking families and some of it was personal.

During the Reagan Bush administration, it seems likely that the brain branding programs expanded.

Obviously, the reader of this material begins to understand the complex yet relational work of the secret military industrial complex and how it might be harmful to one’s own health and finances.

METHODS OF DEVIANTS

Key Words: Bioluminescence, Brain Paints, Meninges, Robotics

Apparently, before World War II ended, the Nazi doctors had used body parts on electrified Tesla coils and rods before. They had learned to clip all sorts of measurement to the body parts with power on at different settings.

The doctors painted different body parts with substances to see exactly what they did on the tissue. Some doctors liked neon dyes while others worked with bioluminescence. The Nazi scientists were interested in cold fusion from research ideas derived from creatures called phytoplankton. When they were done the grey alien meat puppets glowed in the presence of lights.

These were the types of materials and living organisms the scientists studied after the world wars ended. They planned the big amusement park to engage teams of scientists for technology to develop.

To sculpt the meat puppet grey alien for holographic black boxes on electrical lines as frequency fences; the creative engineers learned how to encase microwaved body matter. It looked like the finely woven plastic mesh nets we carry oranges in. The mesh nets were copper and very conductive to electricity for these experiments using already invented servo-motors.

The final stage was to create more trauma than a human brain should endure as the ultimate step. They took the dance moves and the music from the tiny robots' stage and put it into the meat puppet grey. It danced and had audio.

They played it for Sunland patients to complete terrify them. Nobody talked for years after that. They scared the babies with the grey meat puppets and handlers said stay on your side of the frequency fence, your fence, your limitations. They measured the physiological responses like sweating, hot flashes, red bumps, chills, bug crawling on skin and so forth.

The engineers filmed the whole thing for entertainment and military training films. That is the first creature meat puppet that I saw as a bio mechanical grey alien.

To make matters even more complicated; it became clear that the military was creating other hybrids with other species like orcas which are whales. Some kids got bat geodes for high frequency testing put right into their growing brain stems when they were tiny tots. So, I knew the military and wealthy people were testing animal parts on us; the people.

Even when I was at the beach I understood the hybrid program was a green light program. The military was copying the calls of orcas when they caught them in the wild. Eventually the elite built parks for them too with the intent to hybridize them.

The elite who studied the stele told me that Enki, a Phoenician god gave the dolphin for reincarnation of royals. As soon as the military intelligence guys heard that story they give them a frequency fence using the black box sonars hung off the Navy ships on tours.

They wanted humans and orcas to study brainwaves. The studies on brains of humans and whales was performed for more control of species. The scientists did the same with elephants and reptiles and fresh water manatees.

All the creatures that were size big were studied. All brainwaves matched with equipment like oscilloscopes, decibel meters, spectrum readers for light, meters for range to measure the energy types and so forth.

That is how the Mengele team realized we were all a hybrid with parts like other ancient species of animals. Maybe aliens were not aliens after all and most lived and evolved on earth.

In any case, the animals and many humans were experimented on for the radio frequency tagging program. Nobody felt good after that.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN: STRATEGY OF LUCK

SUBVERSION PLANNING

Key Words: Angleton, CIA, Spy Tech, LSD

May 1st is a traditional occult holiday called Beltane. It is a Druid festival event to celebrate spring and the passing of winter. The Celtic god Beltane is a male Sun god.

Celebrating May Day has never been popular in America because it was a pagan holiday from the Europeans which demanded a sacrifice of some sort. In the pagan religion, children with disabilities were demon possessed and okay to use. Murder was still illegal in American during the 1960’s.

A child born with physical struggles meant that somebody has injured their genetic codes and morphogenic shell. It can take a generation to see the disabilities in the general population.

That is why the military tortures people and tracks the outcomes for several generations as multi-generational abuse.

The counterintelligence office decided to use the holiday for an occult offering to their god Baal. So, in 1963, the occultists working for the CIA wanted to attract the Europeans who did understand the holiday named Beltane and would secretly participate.

Subversion is another word for mind control. Subversion means to give up what you believe in. The job of the CIA is to provide centrally managed intelligence by artificial means.

The planners of mind control subversion schemes ultimately needed lots of new members to grow the culture of the cult of intelligence.

The festival for Beltane was supposed to welcome spring. In the background of the festivities, sacrifices of real people were planned to the demon Baal like maybe Kennedy or poor six-year old Jake.

Unfortunately, the occult practice needed a young female French victim from the real Jesus bloodline. President Kennedy was married to Jacqueline from that bloodline so some victims for the CIA party were considered by bloodline to invite.

The CIA counterintelligence officers had managed to craft stories and falsehoods to confuse the American men and women. You see, the counterintelligence agencies had the idea to take the blood of Jesus, mix it with reptile genes, clone it and turn his offspring into child sex slaves, alcoholics and drug addicts. They made a weird statue of their new hybrid creature Jesus and put it into the Vatican. I wish I was kidding.

J. JESUS OF CIA

Key Words: Space Program, Aliens, Antarctica

The goal of the 1960’s take-over by wealthy industrialists and technology gangsters was full on warfare. J. Jesus Angleton loved spy bling, cameras and recording equipment. They carried their spy equipment everywhere and they were aware of the alien presence. J. Jesus felt the need to take over the information about the alien presence because the Nazi’s space program got exposed.

J. Jesus Angleton needed panic and fear to manipulate the masses and other powerful politicians. He needed terror. He started to spread the alien rumors. He furthered his own political agenda because he had worse things out in the Western parts of America. He was dealing with the interests of the Bush family Nazis.

There were a few dozen remainders of large scaled reptiles living in deep underground chambers. In Florida there was no problem with them until they were disturbed by the CIA with the use of the nuclear detonations to build a magnetic levitation train for secret underground bases. I personally never saw the creatures, but I was interrogated about them.

According to the story told by the Swedish princess, the creatures crawled out of the springs through the underground openings to the water’s surface. They found their bodies floating the next day. The CIA came and picked the bodies up and took them to Graham airfield. They flew on to Wright Patterson to another man named Donald Putt, a three-star general in charge of Nazi science programs.

After that incident, the counterintelligence agencies flew a small plane over central Florida springs looking for bodies after every scheduled mini nuke detonation. They were building deep underground bases.

The creatures' bodies looked like a very large black worm, but it was not soft-bodied, having big tough scales. The secret scientist groups thought these things would eventually hatch into something else like a butterfly or a dragonfly. The scientists had a hunch they creatures were ancient around the same age as the frozen water because it contained their bodies. The science could use the water to postulate some ideas about the species. They realized a large piece of ice was under central Florida and it was melting into fresh water exiting as springs.

J. Jesus told the Beltane party managers who worked CIA counterintelligence to spread the creatures from the springs story among the "UFO in- crowd".

In fact, there was something to worry about. J. Jesus was deflecting attention away from Area 51 and the Johnson space center in Texas. They were cloning grey aliens from crashed vehicles and reproducing them.

The Nazi's had a base on Mars and were redeveloping their Master race concept. They faced a challenge from the Moon bases when a new strange species called the small greys took it over and changed the programming.

The greys were so hostile to them almost like they knew the Nazi's, CIA and so forth. The Nazi's had attracted more than just humanoid friends and not all were friendly. This is what illegal experiments created in the Mengele's lab type experiments using time travel.

That is why the back side of the Moon base was off limits. The antennas and internal computers of the Moon base were targeted to be upgraded using more sophisticated beam forms and coiling rates of energy. The greys were the best at those types of programming configurations, but they had a problem. The Moon base was being raided and scavenged. On earth, the reptilians were scavenging the crash in Antarctica.

The greys threatened to walk off the job. The greys did not expect to encounter reptilians with no protection offered from the American military for their work on the Moon.

The greys went to China at that point in 1972 and finalized agreements by 1974 during MJ 12 meetings. China kept the Moon base or at least some of its equipment. Nixon arranged the meeting.

Larger reptiles were reported on the ground in the tropics. Everybody was uneasy in the CIA. That allowed J. Jesus Angleton to play the alien card.

The native to earth aliens were not so stuck on who owned the territory. In my humble opinion, they were intelligent animals.

I wondered how long it would be until there would a clash of countries up in space, another cover-up for inept rulers.

The Civil Defense had a home base in Deland in a reinforced concrete building at the municipal airport. Director Angleton admittedly had a high level contact he called Deland A. which is probably related to this story. (Martin, 1981)

The director of counterintelligence J. Jesus Angleton sent Don and his wife to live near the space center. Don and his wife were recruited to work for the CIA in Civil Defense.

They had travelled all the way from one of the Operation Paperclip headquarters in St. Louis, Missouri to be in sunny Florida near the amusement park. They wanted to work in counterintelligence as royals.

Don's wife was a princess from Tuscany and he was a French-Persian royal.

J. Jesus Angleton asked the central intelligence agency to pick a home for Don and his wife. They did, and it was on a lake which had some good-sized alligators in it.

Don's stepfather, Leo, was an Operation Paperclip scientist of high caliper. He was a Nazi medical doctor for aviation. Leo's biggest talent was encryption with radio transmission, scramblers and so forth. Leo had also worked with other species like the grey aliens.

Leo was a traveler to exotic locales with the Nazi expeditions to Antarctica under that ice shelf high above New Zealand. Leo was responsible for decoding messages sent from Antarctica and the Moon base. He was a Moon base code breaker.

His son in law, my sponsor Uncle Carl, helped him negotiate with the space program in 1972. The Nazi's wanted to move the space program to Texas. They wanted more freedom to travel the skies of earth. They did not want the American leaders to shoot them down.

Leo had been to the research expedition in Antarctica and into some of the underground caverns. He was difficult to interrogate so the CIA placed him in a home in St. Louis to be a resource for Kraft food kitchens.

Leo and his wife developed easy-cook foods for space travel and eventually microwave meals. This dovetailed into the GMO foods of today which I call "flash and ready" foods.

Leo learned his spy craft of frequency and light harmonics in Austria where he perfected crystal resonance and radio signal telemetry in the highest mountains. Leo was an expert on microwave energy too. The Nazi leaders were trying to round up their best scientists and move them to other areas like Argentina and the Falkland Islands to establish a base.

Leo did not get to go to Argentina or Antarctica because the Soviet police murdered his beautiful blonde blue eyed first wife, his son and infant daughter. He was a broken man with the KGB selling him off to American politicians as a POW.

Leo was young and brilliant. The Americans offered him a job and a home near some of the Manhattan project designers and he officially worked for Busch beer. Leo married into the French-Canadian bloodline with his second marriage and raised Don as his son. Oddly, both his wife and daughter were named Florence.

Leo designed spy implants and gave the instructions to active doctors like Ruff at Sunland, so they could pair with radio receivers and transmitters. Leo never hurt me, not once. He was not a pedophile, but he was a racist. I do not think he liked the Romanians, I always tip toed around the Nazi's. (Holocaust Encyclopedia – Genocide of European Roma (Gypsies), 1939–1945, n.d.).

Leo was the only man who ever cared about how I felt. I know this because on one of my visits he gave me a pop up life sized clown to punch out and he didn't watch me or laugh.

He set me up in his basement, so he could monitor my anger responses. He showed me how to hit it and then he walked back up the stairs and closed the door. Leo went upstairs to his little desk and listened with his head set instead.

I hit the clown a few times and felt very awkward because I didn't feel mad. I knew Leo wanted me to tear it up. I was pretty sure the clown was watching, so I checked it for listening eyes and ear wires, but I didn't find anything. After a few tries I stopped punching the clown thing.

I decided to sit on the bottom step of the basement on the stairs real super quiet and remote view him instead. I told him to get some chocolate because I knew he liked it. He stopped, took the head phones off, left and brought chocolate back from the kitchen upstairs.

I knew I was good at riding his waveforms of thought and action. I called it “the push”. When I thought he was back at his desk I punched the clown again until his new wife came to get me.

By then in 1964, Leo was a widower twice over. He had managed to meet another intelligence officer and got married again. His third wife was named Thera like the wife of the God Zeus. I wish I was kidding. Thera is a root Greek word for Thera like therapeutic or therapist. I wouldn’t be surprised if she was straight from Mount Olympus.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN: CIA PARTY

THE GRIFTERS

Key Words: Civil Defence, Reptilians, Radio Waves

Don, was Leo’s adopted son and had a plan when he got to Florida. He shared his secret mission straight from J. Jesus Angleton with top guys at the Civil Defense meetings.

Don told his Civil Defense buddies the CIA was against Soviet Communism. He told the members, the CIA counterintelligence office thought Hoover had plans to impeach President Kennedy.

Kennedy could not be trusted because of his plans to work on the space program with comrades of the Soviets and KGB. They were setting Oswald up in the process. Over the next few months of meetings the party plans developed.

The actual day of the event, a driver brought me over from Sunland hospital to the home of Don and his wife. Someone from the agency was to pick me up and take me to the Beltane party during the afternoon.

After I got there, they took me outside and put me down on a baby blanket. The day started to warm up and for some reason they walked away. It was about ten o’clock in the morning.

I noticed there was a large six-foot alligator climbing up the grass towards me. I tried to crawl away. I do remember turning around and the gator was bigger and closer. I turned to the house and tried to scoot up the hill because Don and his wife were watching out the window.

I looked at the big alligator slowly stalking me, mouth closed, and it was black. All the sudden, Don walked out the back door, pulled his pistol up and shot it clean through the head.

The alligator stopped moving and started bleeding dark blood and spiraling thick radio band waves from its dying brain.

The alligator’s very ancient earth energy covered me like an electrical shock blanket of static energy. I began to have some febrile type seizures and saw spirals of yellow and gold light bands in my brain.

I felt so sad for the creature Don killed. Strangely, I did feel physically stronger in my abdomen area like the creature put a shell on me. I had a receiver in my Soviet cat brain implant that attracted those radio type waves.

Realistically, I realize looking back that I was in shock and trauma that day; leaving Sunland mental hospital and driving to Deland in a drugged stupor.

I woke up and found myself on a baby blanket because a big black alligator was trying to eat me. The alligator was a male protecting its home. I was a baby with no protection so the only thing I could do was focus my attention and try to remember what happened for later, when I could understand.

Now, I know what the alligator energy wrappings were and why the Nazi's did this, radio waves and radio bands. Today I can tell you that the grey, green brain of alligators has algae in it. Algae and the biomechanics of an alligator, a large reptile absorb large amounts of sunlight and swim through algae all day long.

The alligators also absorbed the frequencies that responded to advanced telemetry. That means both species of reptiles and human brains are vulnerable to brain hacking by scientists or perverts or both.

That is why the Nazi's studied reptiles. There were no reptilian aliens per se but there were tortured alligators with radio frequency transmitters clipped to their brainstem during terrible experiments. Scientists found out alligators, bats and birds used radio waves they produced in spirals and used sonar pings to find water, food, dry land and sheltered areas.

That is why I had a radio implant in my brain set to absorb frequencies in the lower spectrums of lights. That is why I had the moth-algae shots. I absorbed the yellow and green spectrum which were tuned to the dinosaur frequencies in the radio waves.

I should not have been used for illegal experiments to implant the brain of an infant with a two-way radio.

That May Day celebration was very important for intelligence agencies to build a cult following on aliens and UFO's. The location for the party was a favorite place for many local Deland residents but it was a private residence.

During the 1960's it was a home to a Swedish princess and her husband, the Count of Monte Cristo. Their spacious home happened to be overlooking a very ancient spring with a large pool area.

During the 1920's Prohibition era, a group of investors organized by the gangster Al Capone had seen to the renovation. Vacationing visitors could walk right into the water outflow by way of shallow sandy beach. The water was advertised as the fountain of youth.

The gangsters had built a therapeutic rehabilitation center including some guest cottages for the patrons., Visitors could enjoy the health benefits of the springs. Al Capone had used the Masonic groups to advertise for his bed and breakfast style therapeutic springs and motel so many of the cult members already knew about the place.

The cult of Masons was already changing in America because of the influence of the Germans through Operation Paperclip. The Masonic Temple in Deland was directly across the street from the Methodist church and the Lutheran church. The German Masons did not want the Christians to watch them anymore. The high-ranking members closed the main downtown temple and constructed much smaller lodges throughout the county.

The town of Deland was near enough to drive to the space center and other high-tech projects that Operation Paperclip scientists worked on. The children of the German industrialists lived here in secrecy and relative obscurity while growing up attending Catholic schools.

The Masons of political influence were going to attend the Beltane Party hosted by the Swedish princess and the Count of Monte Cristo.

All day long the delivery drivers brought equipment like chairs and tables to the residence. Flower delivery vans rolled up with huge bouquets of gladiolas, mums, carnations and roses. Later, food catering with roast beef to be served with chicken drumettes. A feast to behold it was.

The American CIA wanted to cultivate a positive image among young royals after the world wars. The CIA was interested in Hollywood, films and child pornography. The Orlando studio was always scouting new talent.

The springs looked enchanting with beautiful peacocks elegantly displaying their feathers under the Spanish moss of two-hundred-year-old oak trees. The pool was lit with flaming lanterns with the smell of freshly cut grass. The party-goers looked beautiful that night in their pastel dresses, big hair styles and lipstick.

People were eating finger foods and drinking Martinis. Frank Sinatra sang on the new machine called a record player. The party-goers had no idea they were getting dosed with LSD from J. Jesus Angleton’s counterintelligence agency.

The party was the brain child of a man named Colonel Loucks. He specialized in the use of LSD for mind control and worked for the Army. He was part of Operation Paperclip.

That night, the counterintelligence agency members at the Beltane Party used LSD droplets in party goer drinks. The CIA hired models to bring around food and drinks and to suggest they swim nude in the springs. Eventually, that is what happened so the LSD could take effect.

According to testimony during hearings in the Senate the “CIA efforts focused on LSD9/589, which later came to dominate many of MK Ultra's programs. The CIA wanted to know if they could make Soviet spies defect against their will and whether the Soviets could do the same to the CIA's own operatives.” (1977 Senate Hearing on MKULTRA: Table of Contents/Main Index, n.d.). Many of the Beltane party goers were spies and politically connected.

Meanwhile, the counterintelligence guys from the Civil Defense patrol had come to Don’s house to pick me up. I was only two years old. The Swedish princess wanted to meet me. I had no good feelings about it. I had almost been eating alive by an alligator and my brain was twirling from the radio waves.

Whenever I left the sponsors, everyone else was there to hurt me. It was simple, and I was afraid but had some coping skills. I just lived moment to moment, but I had learned how to breathe in training sessions for oxygen mask testing. I was too young to tell anybody but not too young to remember.

The CIA agents pulled out from Don’s house. I wanted to say goodbye like I’m going to probably die but I could not move my arm high enough to say goodbye. I was just a baby and being used to generate money for them. They were going to the party too.

MISSION BLACKMAIL

Key Words: Deception, Implanted Kids, Smuggling Rings

The driver spoke German and was a master spy type who did counterintelligence work. The second man was somebody that I already knew from Sunland because he was my handler.

His name was Howard. I started crying because I knew what he was going to do. The black man took out a white handkerchief and a bottle of ether. He dosed it over my mouth.

When I woke back up I was laying in the back seat next to the legs of another boy. I was hog tied up with a rag in my mouth that smelled like somebody's urine. I was breathing through my nose trying to live and trying to remember what was happening. That is what I had been taught to do so I paid attention. I stayed with the calm and ignored the pain.

They drove about ten or fifteen minutes to a dirt road near the springs and pulled into a private house to prepare us for the event. The German driver got out of the car and went to the house.

Howard got out of the front, opened the back door and lifted the kid off the back seat. He sat him up and clapped him on the back to make him breath. The kid jerked his eyes open and he was hog tied too. Both of us looked terrified and pale from the ether gas rag.

Pretty soon a shiny black Packard pulled up behind us. Inside sat two foreign men and one women spy. They wore hats like diplomats, with suits and ties. The lady had on a silk red dress with oriental trim of black scalloping. She looked ready for the Beltane party and I knew her. She was Carmen and she was Cuban. She called to Howard and asked if he had the packages for the party.

He spoke the same way Uncle Remus wrote his stories. "I got da kids wit' me." He spat brown tobacco by his feet. He was from the Islands and he called me the Monarch. "I got da Monarch 47 wit' me too."

Howard looked at me and then made a motion for me to lean back so the lady could see the boy. Then Howard said; "The boy's a Mongoloid, I picked him up from Miz Sue at the home. Hiz names Jake."

He was my trainer from the hospital at Sunland. Howard knew how to operate the equipment implanted in my brain. Howard and I spent lots of time together and he worked on my behavior and intelligence plans. He worked directly for the director of counterintelligence, J. Jesus Angleton and his wife; Carmen, the Cuban spy.

I was still healing from the surgeries at Sunland Mental Hospital. I got called out for a job; the Beltane Party at the Springs.

The black man gathered my hardware and began to open buckles and clamps on the new plastic exoskeleton. First, he put on my leg braces, next the halo set for my head and finally what I called, the halo contraption.

It was made with reinforced copper rods this time and had a radio receiver embedded in it. I still had a weak arm, but we had worked on pushing the cart around the rehabilitation floor at Sunland.

I had been implanted with radio ears and telephone talkers. I thought maybe Jake had implants too but I could not tell. One thing I did know about Jake, he did not like water very much. They had trained him against water with shock sticks. Everything was ready for Beltane party after the sun went down.

Carmen the red dress spy, got her big black box out of the trunk and told Howard the black man to set me up standing. She walked north down the dirt road with her headset and microphone.

When she turned it on I was pinging back to her device. She had a GPS tracker on me to see where I was going. I could hear her voice through my skull implant; “Starfire, raise your hand.” I raised my hand. I stood perfectly still, terrified of her. I could hear her voice nice and clear. She said; “Starfire, don’t do anything, pretend like Sshhh”.

Jake said; “Oh no” when she radioed him. He bent over and looked around.

Howard was black and not going to the party. Howard was going to blackmail his enemies and Carmen the Cuban was helping him do it. They made me sit up on the seat while the other boy stood outside the car. We were undressed by the Cuban woman and left in our t-shirts and underwear to be ready for the next part of the night; the Volkswagen bus pick- up.

What happened next is just one of many psychological assaults from the counterintelligence agency against reason and sanity. The Volkswagen bus pulled up and the Packard Bell left with Carmen and the two diplomats.

Howard transferred with us to the Volkswagen spy bus. Inside was a listening post with a telescopic radar dish that could be pushed up inside. He had the carcass of an alligator which was dead and hollowed out. He also had the carcass of a manatee calf which was dead and hollowed out.

They were in a small freezer in the bus. The whole van smelled like sulfur lake muck. I had seen these things before at Sunland when I practiced. They had put radios on them and GPS markers and painted fluorescent dyes so “satellite eyes could see them at night”.

When I saw the dead creatures, it made me cry. When I cried, the other boy cried too. Howard said; “You kids stop cryin’ right now!”

Jake and I shut up. We had to wear the contraptions. I made myself remember the night by calling my memory the “Animal Circus at the Springs”. I didn’t know about Beltane at the time since I was only two or three years old.

That night was unforgettable. Most people did not know that there was a tunnel cut through the limestone and bedrock during the Nazi investigations of the 1930’s era.

The Roosevelts were interested and so were Italian bootleggers. There was prehistoric history and Indian history at the spring areas in Florida. That was a very focused investigation of the springs when the Nazi Operation Paperclip scientists rediscovered this place in the 1960’s.

Most caves and tunnel systems in Florida were operated by the Italian and Irish mafia. Some systems linked to the Caribbean Islands. Some of the political families were connected by the wealth of bootleg liquor.

The families connected with liquor intertwined with the Kennedys. Even my trainer Howard’s island family members were making rum liquor in wooden barrels for one hundred years or more.

Howard did not want to pay American taxes so when he got a shipment he stored his “special rums” at the springs. During prohibition the springs were a very popular place to visit.

He and others paid the Swedish princess money to store it. They either ran a barge from St. Lucie county inlet, connecting with the intercoastal trade route or hauled it by car from Tampa Gulf of Mexico routes.

They brought it into other secret passages like Palm Beach Peanut Island. Some of the super wealthy had tunnels out to the beach from their mansions.

When drug smuggling started in the early 1980’s, the Florida trade routes were well established by the elite. The Civil Patrol office in Deland accepted fly in and drop off cargo with no questions asked.

The Swedish princess and the Count of Monte Cristo (and others) stored the illegal liquor in a cool place away from prying eyes of law. They were diplomats and could not get in trouble. The bootleggers used the St. John’s river system to float their way to cash money and lots of friends.

The little cave at the springs was a grotto type with a back to it and moisture on the walls from being carved from water pressure and erosion. The 1930’s Germans funded by Roosevelt’s family which were Nazi’s had expanded the cave.

They had studied the land and found some side tunnels which they also expanded. During the expeditions they had documented a tribe of giant people; some up to ten feet tall when they found a few bones.

MAYBE TOMOKA’S GENETICS

Key Words: Archaeology, Genetic Remains

The entrance to the cave was through a cellar door under the house. It led into a much larger area that pouched into the high walls of a cave. Jake and I were carried into the main cave area. Howard set me down into my halo walker contraption. He had Jake with him to get him set up with the alligator skin.

I tried to move my halo walker contraption, but the wheel was caught on a rock. I pushed harder, and a rock pulled out of the wall stuck in my wheel. I pushed again harder which made a scraping noise and then Howard looked over at me and said; “You stuck?”

Howard came over and got the rock which had red ochre paint on it with blue diamonds. There was an opening where the rock had been. He said. “What’s du find here Monarch?” He stuck his hand in and pulled out a stone box. It had a yellow sun, blue diamonds and red wavy lines on it.

The box was a perfect rectangle shape. Howard opened it while I watched him intently from my walker contraption. Inside were skins and inside some more layers of skins were two shriveled remains of what appeared to be testicles. They smelled dusty bad and Howard sealed them up.

He put the box back in the stone opening and placed it all back together. He shook his head. I looked at him quizzically, had we found Tomoka?

I was pretty sure that Howard would be back to get Tomoka’s genetics for the “clone the royals” program if it really was Tomoka. Tomoka was the chief of the Timucuan Indians who lived in the area about a thousand years ago.

Jake was already fixed up with the alligator skin draped off him attached by head halo and a waist belt. Jake’s Egyptian alligator rigging was custom-built, and we had practiced all week for the show. Howard angled the face of the alligator down so the being looked like a walking bipedal alligator to match the drawings in Egypt.

Howard set me up with the skin of a manatee calf placed over my contraption which connected to my leg braces, so I could walk slowly and stiffly. I was representing Babylon and the fish people.

I was up and standing with the manatee skin. Howard surveyed us and waited to be summoned upstairs. I looked around the cave, it was well lit and spacious. I could hardly believe it. There were wooden benches and a wooden table down there. They had kerosene lamps too. The Indians must have hidden here in ancient times.

About ten minutes later, Jake and I could hear footsteps as a sight to behold made her way to us; a naked red painted devil with horns and a shock stick wand. When Jake saw her, he started crying because her job was to shock him to make him perform. Jake had been trained and knew what to do. I started crying because Jake was crying and because I was trained on shock stick too.

My CIA handlers were drunk; except for Howard, he was a Muslim. The secretive CIA agents were mixing with local and state politicians under the oak trees talking in low muffled voices. I was a spy and I was trying.

Back at the house, people were getting louder from drinking. Some people were nude and acting sexually suggestive. They were on LSD, alcohol and pot brownies.

Out by the oak trees, the CIA had sent some “bachelors” to help encourage homosexual acts. The agents were peeping them with cameras. That is what I saw going on when we came back out and stood in the shadows behind the therapy cabins. Jake and I didn’t say a word. The time was moving into late evening after food and drinks.

As far as the animal circus goes, I belonged to CIA George because he was the richest man on the planet and most powerful. He said that J. Jesus worked for him and made me special for spy work when I was born. I was not real cooperative, but he did try to handle me psychologically and we had other crossing points past 1963.

Sometimes Howard would drive me down to Palm Beach. CIA George would slip the boat down a canal and pick up kids from the mental hospitals. Sometimes they brought wayward boys to CIA George. The sheriffs would find them. CIA George would lecture them about being good. He would ask the kids if they needed any help, could he fix them?

That meant having hypnosis, a lobotomy and maybe genital mutilations or removals. He would pull into the Palm Beach canal system and have the local cops guard for him. If CIA George didn’t like you, you walked the plank and he left you to drown. He said he fed the sharks, so they followed the boat.

That night, CIA George was flying a bird over us while he was on his yacht called the Dinosaur II. That meant he had ordered a satellite fly-over on the party. He had one of the Nazi space vehicles scheduled to come and hover over the spring pool and put a spotlight on the Beltane party.

The satellite was going to take pictures when it happened to show a possible “alien invasion” so the Nazi’s could get more funding money to go to the Moon base and Mars base.

I could hear CIA George talking to Carmen the Cuban on the land phone. Carmen told CIA George that everybody was naked, had cheated on their wives and been photographed. The bachelors by the oak trees were working because some men were closet homosexuals doing bad stuff naked. Everybody was drunk or half-baked on LSD, alcohol and pot brownies.

She said it was time to start the animal circus and see if aliens showed up. He said, “Have the kids at the pool in five minutes when you see my lights over the spring start pointing and shouting at my lights.”

Let’s talk for a moment about Nazi science and medicine. Nazi’s and Eastern Europeans were very smart for a very long time. They didn’t need child prostitution to make money, but they did have some trouble with egos.

They were using my brainwaves to show off and would “tune me to extra frequencies”. I had jamming signals and I had extra radio waves from the alligator (dinosaur) carcass. Believe it or not.

I worked with surgically trained Nazi’s most of the time at the hospital seeing what they could do to make spy kids. I had a radio receiver in my brain to gather radio waves.

The CIA did not know about the alligator’s intense radio wave life force, but the Nazi’s probably did. I really don’t know much except that when I got out to the spring pool I started to feel a little sprinkle of rain.

This was very good because people were leaving the outside area. I personally didn’t want anybody to shoot Jake or me because they did have weapons.

I believe the Nazi’s knew how to make it rain and they had planned to “rain on the CIA’s party” with weather wars. The radio waves could add energy to the ley lines and the top-secret spies knew it could be done.

CIA George had a whole weather program he planned to sell to the space program on launch days. He was going to practice at the Beltane party and demonstrate the alien threat. CIA George had no idea that real aliens were about to show up on him, unannounced.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN: THE SPONSORS

THREE BIRDS, NOT TWO

Key Words: Weather Wars, LSD, Aliens, Beltane Party

The more CIA George turned up his frequencies the more it began to rain. I could hear the pinging noises from my headset and that meant Carmen had her microphone set turned on somewhere nearby, maybe the special Volkswagen bus.

Meanwhile, I was in line behind Jake performing the animal circus with the red devil as our leader. There was a guy on tall stilts wearing a top hat and tuxedo with a bullhorn directing the attention to the pool area for “The Animal Circus”.

They had a little table set up with a portable record player playing the “Elephant Walk” song. The emcee with the bullhorn had a little camera with a hand activated trigger laced through his gloves. He worked for Howard.

Meanwhile, even without any LSD, I could see ley lines snaking off the water pool, so I made sure to step on them as I did my manatee walk. I could feel the plasma streams in the air.

I was wearing the manatee cloak of a dead manatee calf shot through the head. Jake was ahead of me dripping his animals’ radio waves too. The satellite telemetry beams make them thick and coiling when it made us a target and that is how it works.

Jake and I were dragging our animal skins to the pool and around the edge. Everybody was now getting out of the pool and most were very high on LSD.

They were saying, “Oh look, look at that” not really thinking about what they were seeing.

Then one of the CIA bosses said; “Shut up, be quiet”. They put the flaming torches out by holding them into the spring water.

All the sudden, a saucer appeared up in the sky. It put its spot lights on the trees moving rapidly around like a show would do and then it put a spot light on the pool.

Jake walked in front of me with the red devil lady. I was staring up while slowly pushing forward with my halo contraption. I could see the space ship shaped like a Nazi Bell antigravity craft but flatter. We had some lights down on us from “the birds” aka spy space craft.

I was getting nervous about getting shot with guns from the party goers. Jake didn’t deserve it either. I could see energy fields like ribbons of lights. A flash of lightning as I walked on the yellow ley lines. I could still see them snaking off the pool area when CIA George put his frequencies on us for GPS.

I stepped on a blue ley line and more rain started to fall on the party. I held my foot on it and stopped walking. My hands were holding the skin off my halo contraption because it hurt. It was too heavy and pressing on the bridge of my nose. I could hear the pinging noises from space.

The space ship singled out the manatee figure in a spotlight and illuminated me in gamma green. I got in trouble for holding my foot on the rain line. The voice in the head set said stop doing that and start walking. In front of me was poor Jake dragging around as an alligator accompanied by a naked red devil with a shock stick.

I started to hear clicking noises in my headset because the pinging noises stopped. I felt a very strange foreboding like when the hairs on your neck stand up. When I completed the last turn to go back to the therapy cabin area something unexpected happened. A worm hole opened over the spring. I saw the golden orb come in through the worm hole with light beams moving around it. I remember looking up with my eyes to see it coming towards Jake and me.

That is when my face bones popped loose and I lost my balance. I fell forward and started to bleed from my nose. I lay on my side with my leg braces showing still under the manatee calf.

I was watching the golden orb over the springs. I could see CIA George’s space craft came down low to look. His ship had a wobble and was trying to pull up. The wormhole was dangerous to his electromagnetic fields and the golden orb was stealing his show. He turned his lights off and moved out of the way.

Men in the shadows stepped forward to see. The orb hovered over the circle of the spring and moved towards them. They said; “Oh, oh” and moved away. They were scared, really scared.

From my view point I saw a golden orb with a white crystalline top. It went from very small to bigger and bigger than a flash of light in my infrared eye. My infrared linked to their ship.

In the next moment I was on board the craft with two other small beings. Jake was there and small too. The tiny aliens were healing Jake and I, so we could live.

We were all very small, so I thought of them as fairies. They could be big if they wanted and they were not reptilian origin. They said they were from the creation of earth. They were here to change things.

The beings were star beings. That is what they called themselves. They were incredibly light as far as weight or density. They said they shed their sins along the way and became what we would call souls.

The beings were from the start before Babylon. They were part of the water of the primordial spring. Did the men kill children and animals to see the golden orb? By doing those things out of the natural order they were disrupting the flow of natural pure spring energy.

The star beings did not like it. The beings had not been able to live at the springs in third dimensional time and space for eons of time. They could tell that Jake and I were in medical distress.

The star beings said they did not want to be contaminated with positive ions of energy from murder, rape and torture that permeated the place. That energy became inverted into a shallow pool of dark energy and they didn’t want that. Water is a cosmic map.

I woke back up on the ground laying on my side in the rain. Jake was standing up frozen in his alligator garb. The naked red devil with the shock stick was frozen too. Everybody was staring at the orb making circles going from little to, big to, tiny and back.

The golden orb started to circle over the spring water emitting little beams of lights. Those beams jammed CIA Georges big satellite which connected to the space ship he owned. It was sitting on top of us in the airspace.

The men and women expected grey aliens. They got star beings from the ancient spring water. I still remember it as beautiful and peaceful. I had suffered a lot as a halo child for MK Ultra experiments. The aliens gave me peace. They gave me strength to live for all these years.

As far as I was concerned; the spring was the Garden of Eden. Even after earth’s crust broke up after Pangea, it was still connected to the alien’s Babylon through a star gate.

They came from Babylon by the Gulf of Aden in Yemen using the ancient portal of primordial water called spring water of the same age and density. Al my sponsor from Missouri knew about Babylon and that is who came to get me from under the manatee calf skin.

Al just stepped out from behind the shadows of the therapy cottages dressed like a spy with a long black coat. With his big bear paw hands, he took off the pieces of the halo contraption and picked up the extra receivers, so nobody would find them. He stuffed me under his coat and walked off in a hurry. He carried me back to his car. He didn't run but he walked mighty fast on out of there.

He drove me straight to the hospital in Gainesville about two hours away where a doctor was waiting. He was a good Israeli doctor and he worked for Mossad. They wanted to see what the Nazi's did to my brain with their very special spy implants. The Mossad was watching CIA George very carefully because of oil exploration and some of his other great ideas.

Jake survived the Beltane party too. He wasn't in very good condition when he got back to the group home. Miss Sue was his night nurse. She was helping the fight to end communism in America when she gave him oxygen and warmed him up to save his little life.

I stayed at the hospital in Gainesville for about six months for surgery and rehabilitation while the Mossad doctors repaired me. The star being aliens would come to me in dreams sometimes and tell me I had to face my fears.

I started to think about what I could do to fight back and protect myself. The star being aliens taught me something to think about. Never give up if you want to live. I did return to the beautiful springs years later when I moved back as a teenager. God lives there at the springs, the Garden of Eden.

After that night, some negotiations started between the State of Florida, and the European royals to purchase the park. In the realm of the spiritual, we needed to put a stop to child sacrifice at the springs. Today it remains a state park off limits to the satanic cults.

We had pictures of those men that worked in the post assassination White House for Johnson performing subversive acts on one another. I had them on me from Howard and the stilt man. Al got them and gave them to Mossad at the hospital in Gainesville. That is what power and blackmail is all about.

The State of Florida purchased the fresh water springs it wasn't a choice.

Howard got the remains of what was presumed to be Tomoka and that wasn’t a choice either. Howard was going to Miami and the secret labs with Tomoka’s genetics. He was going to breed his own basketball team, find investors and join a franchise.

NAZI LEO & MOSSAD AL

Key Words: Identity, Operation Paperclip, Crash-retrievals

My sponsor grandfathers were very interesting to be around. One was a German Nazi and one was a double agent for OSS, FBI and Mossad (Shin Bet). At times it was a little overwhelming trying to figure out who worked for what agency, really.

My sponsor Al, did not go work for the CIA from the OSS after the Roswell Incident. He was a Mason above 33rd degree by that time so he had more choices. Al was part of an elite team of men that monitored the large rivers during wartime. They called the team Sea Scouts and they operated until Truman disbanded them. I believe he worked for the Bureau.

Al did not have to work under the CIA because he was a top-secret alien handler and transported their crash vehicles down the Mississippi River. I knew that he had used large barges to transport a top-secret object using the river for cover.

He never talked to me much about the aliens or crash vehicles but sometimes I could read his mind after the brain sculpting tune ups. Maybe that is why the aliens seemed to come and go from our lives in different forms, because Al never confessed.

Al knew the rat lines the civilized political gangsters used, and he did stuff with them like spy. After he pulled the Beltane double with Mossad the FBI took away his liquor license, let’s just say.

The FBI tried to bust him after the Beltane to get information. He wouldn’t talk. Instead, they made him sign a confession that he sold thirty-three thousand gallons of liquor in 1966. That was the year they caught him spying for Mossad and Shin Bet. He never, ever drank the stuff.

He would not break his Masonic oaths ever, not even when he was dying. I remember calling his name and being stern, “Al, isn’t there something you need to say?” He said, “Mind your own business Bub.” A few weeks later he died at one hundred years of age.

The whole time I was managing his care, I kept on suggesting he talk since he was hallucinating about the alien crash vehicles and getting them transported. He was reliving the event hearing voices and seeing things in the air.

They were stuck in ice and the guys from his Sea Scout organization did the job and got two saucers on the river barge all the way to New Orleans. I realize now that is why the Navy consulted with him all his life about Antarctica and deicing the space vehicles.

Both Leo and Al wrote computer code in the earliest days of the technology boom. My sponsor grandfathers, Al and Leo did experiments with sounds and lights to match the brainwaves of children to algorithmic equations onboard satellites that transmitted radiation frequencies to black boxes on the ground.

My grandfathers had problems with the rest of us and wanted to control us and they worked for people with great wealth. Our human brains are hackable and that means everybody.

Some female Mossad agents taught me mind control warfare, but Leo and Al didn’t know that. The ladies of Mossad thought maybe I was going to the space program and they wanted to counter spy. It would not be very good if I died a stupid way.

In the MK Ultra space program; in military war games I was an alien reptile “that just looked like a human”. To keep me quiet, I got vaccine shots to cause symptoms of autism.

This false reality was created by J. Jesus Angleton. My false identify as a reptilian alien was created with internal brain implants because state officials allowed me to be used for electric shock brain therapy and radio wave telemetry targeting.

When the spy satellites came over me with high beams, sometimes I could pop the transformers with the black boxes on them. It cost them money to target me. For strange effects, I could walk into a room and sometimes, a random radio would turn on or off. That’s why they liked me. I messed with them in their minds with my secret Nazi implants.

In fact, as far as my spy family was concerned; if I was an alien and if they screwed with me then I was going to manipulate them back. Their so-called friends and so-called elite gave me autism and misery and true to my so called angelic nature, I did not want to hurt them that bad.

INDIAN FINDINGS

Key Words: Genetic Hunting, Bigfoot, Ancient

In the early 1970’s, our state wildlife biologists found a cranium with brain matter inside that was 10,000 years old. He was buried in a canoe lodged in Cassia’s peat bog. Cassia was a settlement home to an ancient Indian tribe called the Timucua.

This guy was a hominid human even though he belonged to a tribe of genetically distinct Indians based on their findings. The Indians were still trying to prove they were actual human beings back then during the 1960’s.

When I was growing up here, the other big goal was the genetic prize called Big Foot, Skunk ape or Sasquatch. The species was described as a very large hairy hominid. They could stand and hunt but used sticks and pine trees to build nests.

Supposedly, it was an unfriendly species possibly from Mars or the destroyed asteroid belt planet called Vesta. Some scientists suggested they were related to the bear species since they had similar levels of intelligence. They wanted DNA and hair samples to analyze and they were Nazi biologists working in Florida. They kept a low profile and had to get used to our waters and swamps. I am sure they found some evidence.

The Nazi’s including Leo my sponsor grandfather, used to take my brainwaves and compare them to other species like the reptiles at the St. Louis Zoo.

That is how they turned a human child into an implanted reptilian working for the CIA counterintelligence office. That is how the Nazi’s discovered religious farming and racial farming. Some cultures were using the reptilian brainwaves to do it by using bone powder.

When the Nazi’s went to the Orient they learned about dinosaur bone powder and placement of dinosaur remains like geodes in a living human. Dinosaurs were big and moved big beams of light.

Why do that? Because the physics of ions called frequency, light and sound carry vibrational matches to living things and vibrating things in this world. It becomes active like an artificial memory or intelligence when organized using electricity the human body produces or filters.

A human brain can decode wave form information by reprocessing it into brainwaves. In these modern times, it is called channeling, but they called it filtering in those days.

In the Catholic church, some priests called it a Supreme possession. They can make money or gain power if the information is scientific. The information could also be demonic and that is why scientists worked with priests called the Jesuits who served the Nazi empire.

THE INTERDIMENSIONAL PLACE

Key Words: Rome, Pope, Purgatory Studies, Hybrids

There is a place that life is reprocessed to match its electromagnetic signature. That is how life spread so long ago in the Universe. Frequency matched so life transmits its data. Life transmits its data in perfect wave forms of spiraling bands until the container is formed for its production in 3rd dimension.

The Interdimensional Place was not well formed in the creation of things. The Earth had growing pains in its past such as the lost continent of Atlantis. Atlantis was a place for recycling energy because it artificially compressed radio waves into vortexes. The vortexes were from living plants and animals which created a reincarnation cycle. Atlantis gathered radio waves.

The designs for Atlantis, a moving wheel of quartz, with inner wheels of quartz rock for resonance and wavelength. It was adjustable and transmitted harmonics to the ionosphere.

The shape of the objects inside Atlantis were modeled off the objects in a cell including replication. It was a very large-scale model filled with ocean water (to match the living cell) which is plasma.

When Atlantis was destroyed, the technology for replication was lost in the fathoms of the sea. At some point in time, Atlantis was replaced by a new object in orbit around Earth.

It was the Moon which had energy wave generators and was a refurbished object. The Moon has a base on the back side. The Moon base has equipment centers, computers and frequency generators to interact with water fields using electromagnetic energy controls.

The Moon base on the back side controls the tides and emotional cycles. It is a mind control operation among other things. The popes at the Vatican call it “The Purgatory” because the hybrids go there for reprocessing during reincarnation cycles.

The Moon base needed wireless telemetry to feed it energy. In exchange for energy, the aliens taught the humans about nuclear technology.

They were building the brand new nuclear reactors on Hutchinson Island and they wanted a breeder reactor, so they could grow gold by a process called transmutation. Growing gold opens a portal since the process of transmutation is the creation of one thing from another using elemental patterns. They were lots of small portals for ions to pass through holes in the sky. Some portals were the size of a pixel.

The big reactors were linked to wireless telemetry which linked to small space platforms and opened small space-time portals around the reactors in the sky and the sea. Little balls of light can pass through the portals dragging large vortexes of radio waves with them into this dimension.

The ancient people in Iraq knew the process and so did the Africans. They have carvings on stones depicting portals to the stars. We got invaded by abnormal radio waves.

That is why I got sent to the reactor area to work on the setting of radiation exposure for children. I was a possible candidate for the space program since I had the moth-algae recombinant genetics. I was being tested for radiation exposure to see if I could survive.

Tesla’s coil theories were being successfully implemented. Everyone in the intelligence agencies were happy. Well, not everyone.

I got in very big trouble when the Polish priest and I met at Graham Airfield to discuss exactly what the elite Catholics in the UFO circle thought I was. He thought maybe I had come through an interdimensional portal from the reactor aka the Black Sun somehow.

I had to defend myself. I said, “I’m a person”. Here was my dilemma once again just like Don and his wife. The Polish pope in training did not know what the early surgeries entailed from the abandoned Nazi space project.

I had tiny receivers, transistors and wires along my spine, scars behind my ears, mind control training and so forth. What did he expect since he and his Jesuit tech gangsters wanted to stop sinning with mind control?

Here was the commander of Sin himself wanting to know if the “Black Sun” reactor was going to send a “black angel” to beat him spiritually at sin control.

I thought that he was messing up “The Purgatory”. It was supposed to be a holding area for animal patterns. I struggled to understand the place like it is the “place” of vibration as something is releasing its life force. Every string of energy was valuable from a person’s life, animal’s life and so forth since it is learned energy.

Now the Tech Gangsters were going to confuse or jam the algorithmic sets for the spiral of life radio waves from the Jupiter base.

The Moon base cell towers were messing up the reincarnation of dinosaurs and birds transferring their radio waves into people.

He told me they needed more radiation to make radio waves for the human harvest of souls, like I was, a reptile. He projected expanded Moon base and the new Mars base.

I sent him a push of information back to his papal TV receiver (mental imagery) that a better God than Nazi’s and pedophile priests had made the place of rest during creation. God of All sees you, tick tock.

I was only seven years old so why was I being interrogated by a Polish pope in training. He was so disconnected from me as a person or child.

I was there to have benign brain polyps removed for brain mapping at the field hospital. Why was he even talking to me? A few years later I understood when I saw the movies at theaters.

The priests in the early 1970’s started to use Hollywood to advertise to the people that demonic possession of children was real. They absolutely omitted their part in the torture and rape of children, implant and vaccine experiments and RF implants for tracking.

They did not want anybody to know they were using wireless telemetry on their implanted victims for sexual games and information recovery (Supreme possession).

I did not want to go to The Purgatory. The star beings I dreamed about told me this was a place where what is needed is created and stored. This place was a balancing place of existence. That really was not helping me at all.

I really didn’t care if the Polish pope in training liked me or not. They were using quantum computers with hyper-space sub-processors under the seabed a few miles from the nuclear reactors. They were trying to open large stable wormholes to other undersea planets. It was troubling.

When I went to the Florida Island on the barrier reef they were already active in the 1960’s trying to “recover” their lost vortex technology.

The Roosevelts had known about the alien presence and the use of technology. The aliens may have wanted those reactors built to support their agenda of possible reincarnation into human beings.

I think the Jesuits have operated technologies to retrieve information from bloodlines for the last 300 years. They were accessing the lives of other people across the ethereal fields; dead soldiers and dead scientists.

Maybe the Germans had created a liturgical system to save the soul memories of their Catholic members for harvest. Maybe it was the bird geodes and the algae that added resonance to the lower light spectrums for genetic compatibility.

The Nazi’s and the Vatican were using high technology to interface with a highly advanced hyperspace intelligence or even a computer system.

Even back then they were planning to use technology from satellites to control the weather, our genetics and our minds. Back then, other races like the Nazi’s were scavenging genetics for cloning, like what happened to Tomoka.

My sponsor “grandfathers”, one a Nazi and one a 37th degree Mason, both knew about the Indian weather control methods using brain sculpting activated by energy of natural and artificial lights with sounds.

My sponsor “grandfather” Al, took me with him to study and see some skulls at different museums. I think they were looking for my “alien” relatives.

He took me to exhibits to see preserved scalps in the museums of New York and Washington. He said he thought I was a fairy species from a small solar system.

Al had the museum director take me in the back and show me the actual heads of tiny people. Some were genetically perfect and tiny. We would call them fairies in today’s times. They were hunted into extinction. You can’t see them because they are gone, dead, extinct.

The other types of heads were artificially created by boiling the head and removing the bones. The shamans sewed them back together with animal sinews and plant fibers. He taught me the difference between real genetics and fake heads. Evidence of genetic engineering has always existed if you know where to look for it.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN: ENERGY DETECTORS

CROSS DISCIPLINE CONSULTING

Key Words: RFID Tracking, Tags, Vaccine Studies

In 1964, I was temporarily assigned to sponsor Al in St. Louis, Missouri for three months. While I was there in St. Louis, Al took me to the zoo. Sometimes I stayed overnight in the basement research labs with student scientists.

I was assigned to a group who used research methods considering the work of Nazi, Dr. Erich Traub. In Germany, Dr. Traub was famous for developing herd strike weapons to kill cattle, sheep and birds so his enemies would starve. He understood vaccines. Dr. Traub was brought in using Operation Paperclip because one of his consulting projects was radio tracking tags.

According to his Operation Paperclip contract, he was a virologist, microbiologist and doctor of veterinary medicine, who worked for the Naval Research Institute in Maryland as part of Operation Paperclip. (Jacobsen, 2014)

Dr. Traub’s research was given funding to study the effectiveness of vaccines. Funding was abundant for research programs to study animal populations like herds using the radio tags in the ears of the animals. The trackers used small planes and radio frequency detectors flying over the vast areas of places in America, Africa, South America to count and identify animals.

One of the tagging animal projects were Florida alligators near the nuclear reactors the government planned to set up. The veterinarians wanted to measure the effects of radiation on the animals living near the reactor silos. The tracking program was called the radio frequency identification tags (RFID).

The scientists knew that excess electricity and magnetism combined to cause abnormal signals that affected biological cycles.

Changes in the electro-magnetic frequencies that interrupt the pulse of mother earth triggered generalized stress response in lab animals. The development of the RFID for animals allowed tracking of behaviors in the wild.

Nuclear scientists weren’t sure how the animals living around the nuclear silos were going to handle the additional energy and radio waves. Scientists knew that the wrong timing signals would likely throw off the cell division (mitotic cycle) of every cell.

This disruption of energy to the cells might interfere with growth processes throughout the body. The scientists were considering the effects like mass extinction of native wildlife. They knew even short exposures to stressors are harmful.

Studies on microwaves stress disclosed a brief period of increased immune-system response at very low intensities under 10 microwatts. Eventually, animals, people and even bacteria fail under chronic stress from microwaves which caused immune system resistance to fall below normal. The immune system became exhausted in the animals studied.

Some frequencies were going to be linked in for animal controls like the click calls of dolphins. It was important to study stress level to avoid injury to the animals.

In fact, click codes had more than one rate and were very detectable using satellite “ears”. Click codes were useful for human motor movements paired to high robotics and robotic arms because they could be encrypted digitally back 50 years ago as sound files. Click codes are dolphin and whale sonars.

By using the labs, they could measure the effects of their radio weapons on behaviors of species like the dolphins and the reptiles. The worked specifically, with alligators and snakes. In fact, every creature on earth was hooked into earth’s magnetic fields.

At the experimental lab at the zoo, scientists could track, and record entrainment or awareness used by other species like their hunting sensors. During some of the experiments, animals were over exposed to radiation and other toxins to see the effects. In some of the more interesting experiments using the reptiles they controlled the weather and direction of light beams.

Some of the animal handlers thought they could document the effect using high speed photography. Their work was later confirmed. It is one way that alligators regulate their internal body temperatures in the deep brain to bring light and heat to their skin.

This work was given to the space program for frequency research into weather control to make sunny days for launch days and weather satellite stimulation.

COMPENDIUM OF FREQUENCIES

Key Words: Audio-Visual Frequencies, Alien Species, Tags

The group at the St. Louis zoo was asked to measure, photograph and create a compendium of animal frequencies. Some in the military were aware of the connection between some extraterrestrial species and earth's natural abundance of life. For instance, one of the aggressive species of ET seemed insect based. How could it be controlled if the military encountered it? There were research projects for that purpose.

Dr. Traub and doctors like him, studied animal diseases especially symbiotic relationships and parasitic diseases. His projects worked on determining the frequency of different bacteria. What sounds did things make? Could sonar kill bacteria and viruses? What frequencies did they use? Was there a higher order?

There were many studies done in secret with some negative impacts to human health. Research demonstrated the responses by bacteria to microwaves as more effective. They crossed the blood brain barrier of animal brains, including humans. Exposures to electric and magnetic fields stimulated the growth of these spores and bacteria even in low frequencies of .0 to 1 hertz. (Robert O. Becker, The Body Electric, 1985)

The group at the zoo used their equipment to begin experiments to measure the perception of sounds, lights and words as part of the consciousness of animals. The scientists documented their frequencies.

At the zoo, the scientists would do different things looking for nerves or cells that could function as a weapon or camouflage coloring.

Some of the animals shifted power to their organs and organelles to hunt prey. A dolphin can stun a fish with a confusion ray. A bat can use echolocation to hunt at night.

BRAINWAVE CHARTING

Key Words: Behavioural Training, Electrodes, Shock

The animal behaviorists at the zoo did some experiments that were questionable trying to define consciousness. Sometimes during my summer visits, I would wear a helmet with electrodes and be given drugs to eliminate my body movements.

One of the doctors would record my brainwaves on a chart. In another room or stall, the doctor had a big animal like an elephant or a wolf. The experiment cabled us through a black box that would copy the brainwave the animal behaviorist selected and send it to the subject human or the animal target.

I think the doctor was trying to evoke behaviors using various frequencies delivered by cables to make me act like the animal. The animals got agitated or noisy when he did it to them. The doctor took his shock stick and shocked them and shocked me to see if he could evoke measurable energy fields.

The animals would try to attack me using their natural frequencies, cat growls, dog barks and so forth when we were both in the faraday cages. The animals had sensors and electrode implants in their brains and I never knew what to expect. I could tell the doctors were hurting them. We all had magnets in our brains, so they could make me, and the animals fall asleep.

The doctors were looking for areas of the brain, skin, nerves and muscles that responded to stress or produced small frequencies or handled overflows. Many of the experimental animals and people ended up with epilepsy of some type including radionics induced seizures.

In documented experiments, the scientists could cause a gorilla mother to abandon a new born baby by pressing a button to interrupt the mother’s biological cycles for care and nurturing. It was rumored that Nazi’s had tested these devices on new mothers at some of the camps and that is where the technology came from.

Scientist with many other research biologists, were looking for ways to overcome our natural defenses both in our hearts, bodies, minds and earth. They were refining their control mechanisms for all the life forms on earth. Even as a little toddler, I knew that humans and all life on earth could be used shamelessly.

UPGRADING COMPUTER LANGUAGES

Key Words: Hacking, Code Exchanges, Ozone Wormholes

In 1960, the world of spy craft already had computers and were developing the microchip with more potential. The problem was all the operating programs and universal languages like html and cobalt.

Nobody had developed an efficient language for plasma, electricity and the human mind until the Black Knight. The Black Knight hack in the Southern skies allowed the space program to pick up the signal and record the trajectories that would be passing over the ozone layers with holes in them. They could retrieve data that was encrypted from the source satellite when it flew through the ozone holes in our timed space.

It transmitted new languages unknown in the year 1966. The inside of the craft had a date from the year 2011. The world's best mathematicians had just put Einstein to the test. They had managed to recognize a bend in space coming over ions from a previous nuclear detonation. They could break into the dimensions and hack the satellites from the future onboard computers.

It cut years off the program to develop software. The other big news was that the theory of space time and worm holes was proven but they could not tell anybody; Shhhh, Congratulations, Shhh.

Earth had only slow modems for storage. All the data from the hack was eventually saved and stored in a CIA facility outside of Atlanta, GA. Even DC did not know there was a copy somewhere else. I think the hack was ET vectored using their ships.

This is because plasma is a hologram that is projected as a Holo-field. To interface with the computer and human minds we imaged a grid like pattern that could be flat, raised up, and measured called a dimension.

A dimension is a flat surface that has two sides. A dimension can be folded into a shape. A shape can hold objects, concepts, names and so forth. If the plasma assigned to the dimension changes density, then the equation changes by a third-dimension law called cause and effect. Cause-effect laws support and explain the known states of matter on earth.

Plasma gel holo-fields cause changes to water vapor like clouds or tap water or ice cubes. Water has more than one function especially when it comes to plasma and light. Plasma is very sensitive to energy like heat, microwaves and the elements like Freon. Radiation moves plasma with heating while elemental metals reflect heat, up or down and this can be twirled with directional laser canons on planes, satellites or even Nano satellites just by pulsing the correct frequency.

Back in the 1960's during the Spanish wreck salvage programs, the navies of the world measured the filtering rate of light on metals. They would find a coin on the sea floor of the Atlantic, mark it, GPS the wreck and send the coin to lab. The coin was analysed, photographed and so forth to date the age of the wreck. The military satellite designers, space engineers and doctors learned about filtering light and gathering light bands in plasma tubes. It is bendable.

The knowledge gave the MILAB doctors ideas about how to build detectors using light based sensors in technology for all kinds of things. There was a small group of top secret child psychologists who were collecting data for the Paedophile Protection Agency including child psychology groups. Even the Israelis got worried there would not be anybody left with a brain in twenty years from the assault on memory.

I used to go for testing with X-rays and infrared lights. The worst of it were the strobe lights and audio-visual strobe testing days because they cabled into to my deep brain and brain stem to cause responses. I mean responses like hunger, crying, peeing on self and so forth. I always had seizures from testing.

If you think Americans were moral fifty years ago then think again. My third- grade teacher was a CIA agent in support of child sex studies. She never did one thing to help me. I felt so betrayed.

My principal met with everybody to calm them down when they failed to call an ambulance when I was in medical distress. I tried to go to school after a violent session the prior night from being raped.

My sponsors took me home and iced me, so I would not die from shock. We have laws to help children because of all this violence from the past. If this was what Muslim life was like, then I hated it.

If this was not enough, by the seventh grade in 1976, the satellite black box operators and the Navy had figured out a way to remotely shock a person to provide negative reinforcement type of behavioural training.

It was now in the walls of the house from a black box on the electrical lines. In modern times, the smart meter in the home provides the same frequency modulations. I went for testing to see if it worked at the Naval lab at Mayport. They called it a static line shock attack. They could drop it from a drone or through the wires of the house. It works, I got shocked.

CALLING THE LEY LINES

The military and the industrials learned how to use large vortexes to produce weather related sounds to control the frequency and pressure to spin the wind and the dirt. They received lots of funding so not to waste launch days at space centre.

Good weather for launch days was ordered by the military for spy satellite deployment. The radar operators were learning how use plasma to form steering currents. They tried minerals, aluminium, boron, phosphorus and more additives to jet fuel to help plasma thicken and reflect like mirrors.

Remember when you were a kid and got a magnifying glass and burned a leaf? Well those mirrors are easy and cheap and can start forest fires from a satellite. Maybe even melt a hole in the ice in Greenland. They tried these tactics by using the chemical trail spraying airplanes.

Where are they sprayed? They come from chemical trails sold in the jet fuel as an expensive additive. They are designer particulates that deliver themselves or other molecules as passengers.

In the old days, the generals would just read the additives just like ordering from a menu. They would check them off like this; heart pains, dry mouth, sweating, cold flashes, autism general spectrum and on and on. The chemicals used in additives could cause these symptoms.

Our generals in the military did not care because brain damage is small but cumulative over time. That is why the medical establishment won’t say a thing about the true causes of at least half of brain diseased America.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN: A NEW START

NUKE CORE RETRIEVALS

In those days of the 1960’s, the military and wealthy technical gangsters were actively setting up the cellular systems and black box experiments for mind control using Florida neighborhoods.

By 1964, I had finished making hundreds of tracings using mind control patterns of words and frequencies of sounds and lights. I had already completed work using advanced electronics to control the flow of electricity and semi-conductor energy to a human being’s body. Our quantum brains can send ions to targets if synched by wavelength and we have retinal eye scanners in current times to demonstrate the concepts.

The scientists knew they could synch the frequencies of some human brainwaves to algorithmic sounds in space and on black box generators. I was going to work on the satellites that mapped the earth.

The German commander from the space program was Major General Walter Dornberger. He was the director of V weapons development for the Reich which meant the launching of rockets. He also worked for the US Army on an Operation Paperclip contract. (Jacobsen, 2014).

Dorenberger was an excellent pilot and able to fly all the exotic craft the American military captured after World War II. The Americans like Putt and Armstrong thought they had stepped into the future when they found the Die Glock and the Air Foil Wing aircraft. They could manipulate Dornberger because he liked alcohol and women.

In my observations, Dornberger was a bird himself understanding air currents and temperature theories of atmospheric conditions. I would not want to dogfight him in the air or receive a strafing run from him on the ground due to his fanatical judgement. Nonetheless, he understood the role of plasma and ley line magnetics for locomotion better than most.

Dornberger was a liaison for the Eastern European Nordic races. This is because of the Antarctica salvaging operations of a starship battle group frozen in time. The battle group had weapons aboard.

In the late 1960’s, the most top-secret missions were archaeological expeditions to Greenland. The Navy had attempted to enter the frozen chambers by way of the North Pole. It did not turn out well for them. I am not sure how the Philadelphia experiment was connected, but it may have been attempts to teleport to the craft and take the weapon systems. I do not know who found the air current generators or “guns of god” tech to disassemble molecules.

In my role as observer, I came to understand that the Nazi’s had to use implants to even consider flying as co-staff on the Nordic ET ships or the grey battle groups. Even the ships the Nazi’s used for interstellar travel required implant interfaces.

In my own humble opinion, the extraterrestrials came to help mankind avoid cosmic catastrophe like losing the atmosphere. The leaders of the politics were egotistical and could make a mistake bigger.

In fact, at the midpoint of World War II, some types of contact with extraterrestrials had been made by the elite Nazi aerospace program. Commander Dornberger was responsible for the alien exchange program in the initial stages before it went black post Kennedy assassination.

I believe that Dorenberger was sent to Florida to work with Dr. Hubertus Strughold They were working on the human brain to interface to advanced computer systems without killing the pilot, while trying to make a pilot.

There were small teams of engineers who tried to figure out how to link the energy fields of people to access higher intelligence. There were a whole host of weapons, space satellites and relay communication devices to consider linking systems.

After World War II, there was the matter of lost equipment flying around in space and that equipment did have to be retrieved before it hurt something like our atmosphere. This stuff was getting stuck in the plasma of the magnetosphere.

The Nazi’s did not want to cop to their space program. It forced the ET’s to come out to the government to ask them to go get the nukes in space.

They had multiple objects in low orbits with nuclear cores on board and they were coming down because they lost their telemetry obits when Dresden was bombed during WWII.

The ET’s were not happy and told them to fix their mistakes. The reason, the nukes can cause electromagnetic pulses and knock out communications down below in low orbit detonations.

The Nazi’s had something to offer in this area to help engineer robotic arms to retrieve space nukes. I met Dr. Mengele because he was teaching Al, my sponsor grandfather how to link the mind to robotic and telemetry products like wirelessly activated servo-motors.

At that time, the aeronautical engineers were working on aircraft compartment design and stable flight. They also had set up wireless telemetry for the launches of rockets and space ships. They could and did talk to the crew in flight.

Dr. Mengele assisted on rare occasions immediately after Kennedy was assassinated. Mengele was not in this country very often and when he was here he was hidden.

There were other Nazi’s who lived in Germany and South America who consulted on American military projects. They also worked for corporations with increasing wealth available for funding secret projects. They stayed at designated places, so they could design together.

Al, my sponsor grandfather, worked with him at a CIA safehouse in Alabama about forty-five minutes from the Huntsville pediatric hospital. He took me there so Dr. Josef could examine me.

Al and Dr. Mengele were working on mind control products using telemetry to match brainwave states of mind. They worked on branding the brain to specific products to test their theories. That was beyond the nuclear core retrieval program to get the lost objects in space.

This was Wall Street greed. That is why Al and I were paired together. I got to live as my life was spared and he got his Master’s Degree in Social Science of engineering people’s buying habits.

Mengele’s drawings and diagrams linked different sensory and motor neuron brain systems to space telemetry systems. Some of my systems like optics of sight and hearing of sound were augmented by materials responsive to radio frequencies and radiation.

The biggest use of my quantum brain (lights, sound and automation) was for marking the GPS spots. I wore a lightweight blue aluminum halo in my skull. It was a constant shape and weight.

It was an unusual alloy that would not be confused by the sensors once they learned the sound it made on different space beam frequency settings. The blue aluminum halo made the sound of “tink” when shot by a satellite ray.

Like I explained, this was a love hate thing for me, wearing the halo so I could be in the space program. I was seriously looking for somewhere else to live other than earth.

I believe the military wanted to secure access to that area because they had visitors that liked to use the airspace over the space center to uncloak. This included the interdimensional alien ships when they came into resonance with their crafts in our dimension.

Humans and radars could not always catch the alien visitors to earth and some species were invisible. When they showed up near the proposed nuclear power plant site in their grey ships, this bothered the military intelligence groups. They were a big problem for the radar operators who were told not to shoot them down anymore.

The space program had acquired space ships from Germany and the pilots to fly them. The air foil space ship flew no higher than about 60,000 feet high to study high altitude aviation and medical effects.

They looked for wormholes when they were out doing measurements. Wormholes created space-time anomalies, and nobody wanted to fly through them because they disrupted instruments. The Nazi ships performed lots of duties for America’s energy needs setting up the nuclear reactors.

The Nazi space ships had the advanced space telemetry for echolocation. They used advanced space vehicles to find suitable placements using ley line energy to build a nuclear reactor.

These vehicles had been part of the Nazi’s Third Reich. The Reich commanders came to Florida and they were German Nazi’s from the secret space program and nobody knew. Shhhh.

THE AIR FOIL WING

Key Words: Nuclear Reactors, Ley Line, Space Program

I was sent to live with Don, his wife and newborn baby boy about six months after the Kennedy assassination in 1964. I was almost five years old and happy to finally live away from the mental hospital for children even if only temporarily.

I went back to the space program on Hutchinson Island to help with the nuclear reactor's set up as a GPS mark point for satellites. I still had my blue aluminum halo attached to my temporal lobe where the auditory nerve for hearing is located.

Don's house was near the beach. I had already been used by the space program in Florida to locate major landmarks using the mapping satellites like Sunland Mental Hospital, the Naval base in Orlando and the amusement park.

Sometimes I got to go on flying missions. The craft that I was in that day was the air foil wing and I knew Major liked to fly it. He was Major Siegfried Kenemeyer. During World War II, he was the chief of the German Air Force technical developments.

Once, when I was at the space center at the test hanger, I saw Major Kenemeyer examine his beautiful glowing craft after coming back from a high-altitude test of the ionosphere. He told me both he and the machine were glowing from the flight as he gestured toward the craft.

He was known as one of the top ten best pilots of the Reich. Kenemeyer flew the air foil with great skill and was measuring the ionosphere and ozone layer. It sat on a pedestal in a hanger. The air foil used a mechanical arm to launch it like a rubber band plane.

For research missions, sometimes Major Kenemeyer asked another crew member to ride along. He was named Dr. Emil Salmon.

Dr. Salmon was an expert on high frequency sounds in space. Even though Dr. Salmon's bird was the Die Glock when he flew sometimes he would assist in other areas. The Die Glock was hard to fly but he understood the principles better than most other scientists. It projected objects into 3rd, 4th and 5th dimensions.

After Kennedy was assassinated, the counterintelligence CIA utilized Dr. Salmon and his expertise for geomagnetic research which included ley line echolocation. Dr. Salmon was using advanced telemetry fields he had developed. He told me his secret. He could hear other worlds in his head.

The US Army “found Salmon’s expertise difficult if not impossible to duplicate. “ (Jacobsen, 2014)

Sometimes, Dr. Salmon added me to his crew list since I was used for GPS mark points in high altitude research flights. I was excited to watch him work with sounds, lights and frequencies from earth and space. He was teaching me the cosmic art of how to listen to the planet.

The scientists wanted to locate energy fields and flux fields to study their relationship to each other. There are large direct currents continually flowing within the ionosphere and as telluric (within the earth) currents, generating their own subsidiary electromagnetic fields.

To be honest, I didn’t know I was in a space ship. That is what I was trained to do, and it was normal. I didn’t ask many questions, I was autistic. I got used to the pressure suit and oxygen masks.

I thought it was normal because my whole life was based on it. In those days, the space program was a big deal to the people in this country and they knew about research that was going on.

On the day we traveled to Hutchinson Island, I was there to help make GPS points. They were there to design the reactor, so it was aligned to earth’s magnetic fields. I was aboard the air foil wing with Major Kenemeyer and Dr. Salmon to use advanced electromagnetic detectors which sensed complex streams of plasma and cosmic streams in the ionosphere.

I wore a detector box and was going to pick up a signal with my brain’s implants to detect ionospheric sounds, white noise, pings, space dust and clicks. The air foil wing that Major Kenemeyer flew had instruments on board that were tuned to earth’s frequency for locating spikes called ley lines.

The plan was to build a nuclear power plant to help Florida grow and modernize. Energy was crucial to post war development and the space program, and the Europeans had already gone nuclear. It took advanced physics and planning to set a reactor over the energy lines of the earth itself.

The reactors generate more energy than normal in place of earth’s gentle energy fields. The reactors send radiation and ionic wave patterns out along channels of least resistance using land, elements and weather patterns.

It was important that the nuclear reactors be set up correctly, so they didn't disrupt the weather patterns and electromagnetic flows. The surface and ionosphere act as the charged plates of a condenser which is really a charge storage device.

This electric field continually ionizes many of the molecules of the air's gases, and it, too, pulses in the extremely low frequency. Nobody wanted violent electrical storms because of the reactor and it could cause them by exciting clouds.

Before I got to go anywhere with the GPS mark program I had to get medical clearance. The doctor in charge of me and my electronics for that day was Dr. Ruff. He met me at the space center before I left on the air foil wing. He oversaw my equipment and checked it to make sure it was detecting the range of signals they wanted.

Dr. Ruff was not on the flight because he assisted the mission on the ground at the space center that day. He gave me the all clear to board the air foil wing. He told me to go sit in the jump seat across from the cargo door.

He said when the light is red stay in your seat and do not move around or I will beep you with a sound you don't like. I agreed to be good by nodding my head yes vigorously. I liked flying in the space ship and did not want to blow it. I was trying to find a new home.

Once we got on board the air foil for the ley line set up we all sat down. That day, I wasn't in a high-altitude suit because we were flying low under radars over the ocean, so I wasn't wearing a full-face mask testing oxygen.

Dr. Salmon, was always friendly and he knew I was frequency sensitive. He told me to listen for clicks from the dolphins in the water below which meant a low path.

Sometimes it took some time to prepare the coordinates into the computer system that had linked to a satellite. I was excited and bored, so I was trying to translate their conversation in German.

They were talking about noticing things out of order on the flight deck. There was cargo on board as if somebody else was flying the craft in the off hours. Major Kenemeyer was upset about it because he didn't know what they did to the craft. Kenemeyer asked Dr. Salmon about it and he said he couldn't answer any questions. Salmon pointed towards Cuba.

The air foil wing did not taxi down a runway. It left the hanger by a roll-out launch pad, then they would somehow hook it to a launcher. The air foil wing was lightweight.

We had to launch when Soviet satellites and Chinese satellites were not over us. Sometimes we only had thirty minutes to roll out, load and launch the craft. We were always silent in our crews until given the safe signs by the pilots.

Once it started, the air foil took less than fifteen minutes going slow at first and then faster over the water of the Atlantic Ocean to get to the location of the proposed nuclear power plant. It was absolutely soundless.

The target area for the nuclear power plant sat on some relatively high land with a lagoon. The lagoon had underground earth chambers like old tunnels from where the spring water cut through it.

There was also good sea water available with easy to cut chambers to cool the nuclear reactions. Most people don’t know that nuclear reactors can make gold if they are fine-tuned a certain way and Hutchinson was such a spot. This was a very nice place in general and it was chosen to build the reactors on the lagoon side.

Our air foil space ship was performing a series of slow sweeps with Kenemeyer at the helm. They were setting the ley line frequencies into their early computer like system. They charted everything. I was a GPS point person.

When we found a point, Dr. Salmon verbally confirmed his readings and we hovered until we got a green signal from the satellite on my radar box. It marked the points as we passed over the ley line. The two audio feeds matched up for a good ley line point on a heading.

I clearly remember almost finishing the job when a big burst of interference hit my ears through the box. About that same time, from the earth’s fields our antigravity engines were interrupted.

We were hovering about fifty feet above the sea water when I felt a dip. Major’s nose dropped and smacked the water hard. Then the tail rocked backward toward the sea.

Major boosted his two dry engines and I could hear the water splashing, but it was too late. The mid-section thrusters contacted with the sea water and cut out. We were about one thousand feet off the beach during low tide.

I crashed into the Atlantic Ocean with Major Kenemeyer and Dr. Salmon in the air foil wing. I was in my seat wearing electronics that could fry me. Dr. Salmon had blood on his head, but he could gesture for me to unplug my headsets. We took an assessment like we practiced during an emergency.

Major’s leg was stuck under a part of the flight console equipment that came loose and fell. He said he had blood in his boot, no broken bones. I tried to unplug and realized my collarbone had snapped on impact and was sticking up through my flight suit. I managed to unplug my head gear and painfully reached the release on my seat belt.

Dr. Salmon said; “Starfire, open the little cargo door if you can”. We had limited air and needed more.

It was more like a hatch they used to pass objects into the small cargo compartment. He was on a secure ham frequency to talk to space command using the secure alert codes.

I had a stroke weak left arm and a broken collar bone. I had to scoot out of my seat on the floor. Then, I had to slide up and use my stroke weak arm to get the lift handle up enough with whatever strength I had to open the little hatch. I could get through it if I had to.

I managed to pull it up on the first try after Major clicked the button to green. When I got it open, I could see turquoise water kicking waves and did not want to flood the air craft. Dr. Salmon talked to Major about getting loose because he said we were on a sand bar and the water would lift us.

They were trying to float out to sea for security reasons. It was early morning and it was clear. People would be coming to the beach soon.

Major was performing first aide on his leg wound with a wrap to stop the bleeding. He was talking to space center and telling them what happened as best as he could figure out. He said we had found a gamma ray and it released our antigravity seal, so we went down.

We had found unexploded ordinance that was coated with radioactive paint from World War II. I believe it was a sunken U Boat’s remains. The radiation had disrupted the resonance fields and made our craft unstable.

We were stuck at an angle sticking up out of the Atlantic Ocean. I didn’t know what was going to happen. The air foil was swaying in the tidal waters and high tide was coming in the next few hours.

We had to ensure we could exit the air foil wing if it took on water before it sank and we all drowned. We also knew we were in shark infested water and all of us were bleeding.

All of us were in gray one piece suits the same color as the craft. Our suits evaded radars like heart beat scanners from satellites, but we were still vulnerable.

We did look like aliens. Two tall greys and one small grey. Our ears were usually covered by headphones when we traveled. Our flight suits were hooked into pressure so as we went up in high altitude tests, we inflated. We were not inflated that day but had some floatation after the crash.

I could float and kick but could not swim very good due to my broken collar bone. I was trained well enough to survive and that is exactly what I did that day. Major was calling the secret space program to come get us in a hurry before the people came and the reporters got wind of our crash.

Pretty soon an army van showed up with a military officer in it. He had a gun and he was prepared to use it to keep beach goers away. He parked the van as a warning to others.

Down the street the police put up barricades and tape. They closed the one bridge to the island. They waved onlookers away and announced the coast guard had located some possible World War II torpedoes that were unexploded.

Meanwhile, fifty long miles away, a limousine from the space center was doing some high-speed driving to pick us up. Major was calling in his coded routines to order assistance using high alert codes.

A helicopter with a lift crane was dispatched and so was a private ship owned by Aristotle Onassis to pick up Major Kenemeyer’s little air foil wing.

I was waiting for instructions and keeping calm. Major put me in a straight-jacket to stabilize my fracture. We used them during contact.

I waited at my seat in the jacket holding my shoulder until a camouflaged raft with a Navy seal diver came to get us. They transferred me off the air foil wing and laid me down in the raft. I closed my eyes waiting to see my doctor Ruff.

I woke up at the hospital in a great deal of pain. He was right there standing over me looking perplexed. He had designed the seat belt that injured me. I made the mistake of calling him “Daddy” because I was in pain. I never saw him again after that mission.

To advance the study of space and the cosmos, the American space program used Nazi technology recovered from the war. To test waves of light energy which produced sounds, they used Kenemeyer’s ship to bounce lasers off the ionosphere. They called it light works or the light show.

Tesla theorized that ELF (extremely low frequency sounds) and VLF radiation (very low frequencies) could enter the magnetosphere, which is the magnetic field in space around the earth. Tesla thought that these types of waves can change its structure. He was later proven right. (Kimura, 1974)

The aerospace scientists did not want the misuse of energy to damage earth’s atmosphere and solar shields from the Sun’s radiation. They were learning. The global elite and military leadership wanted to learn how to control the weather using simple sound frequencies like the kind generated from objects like HAARP.

The magnetosphere and its Van Allen belts of trapped particles produce many kinds of electromagnetic resonance fields (EMR). Since they were initially studied through audio amplifiers, the first kinds discovered around 1920, were given different names like whistlers, dawn chorus, lightning and lion roars.

The aerospace scientists created instruments to measure many more frequencies and learned to expand the spectrum of sounds. Many of the sounds resulted from the VLF waves are associated with lightning, which bounces back and forth, pole to pole along magnetic ducts in the magnetosphere. This resonance amplifies the original VLF waves enormously. That is why lightning make a boom sound.

Satellites measurements have proven that artificial energies from power lines are similarly amplified high above the earth. That means that life gets dosed with waves of energized plasma, a phenomenon known as power line harmonic resonance (PLHR). That is one type of artificial energy that weather engineers use to create storms and steering currents.

Radio and microwave energy also resonances in the magnetosphere. The amplified energy interacts with the particles in the Van Allen belts, which produced heat, light and X-rays, all known types of energies. By the late 1970’s the science of weather knew how to manipulate the fallout of charged particles that serve as the nuclei for raindrops. (Robert O. Becker, The Body Electric, 1985)

THE GIFT OF SIN

Key Words: Mind Control, Gold, Cetaceans, Greys

Genetic engineering has been going on to provide the right kind of people on earth. The mind control weapons have facilitated both growth and dementia.

After the defeat of Hitler in 1945, the alien species associated with the Third Reich with were in big trouble too. Ford, Rockefeller, Soros, Kissinger, Cheney, Brzezinski and Bush had control of enough technology to force the issue and manipulate the aliens.

On the Arab side, the Saudi King and his Princes were looking for oil fields to develop and sell to the auto markets of the world. The German Nazi's had technology for cave expansion, underground tunnelling and oil rigs. The wealthy elite offered the aliens new underground bases in exchange for technology.

The aliens associated with the Third Reich were offering to use the Nazi space ships for GPS marking and satellite placement recommendations.

Texas politicians did not want the aliens to base out of Florida. This may have been a Kennedy assassination factor.

I'm sure that deals were struck to work with the alien species that are part of earth, so we just don't see them. That is just the kind of deal CIA George liked to make.

To balance the odds in the favour of Texas, the technology gangsters like CIA George, made deals to finance technology companies that made microwave ovens and solar calculators. Everything was top secret no matter what he did.

Right after World War II ended, the Third Reich aliens had to show themselves to the military leaders of the time. During the 1930's and 40's the Soviets, Russians, and Eastern Europeans had contact during the war.

The aliens were in retreat and waiting to see if the base agreements were carried out. People like my sponsor grandfather, Leo went to Antarctica to find out.

I personally had to ask the aliens to leave the space program because even if the military rejects you, the aliens still visit. I was so disappointed because I did not understand what was happening. My friendly contacts had to leave or surrender.

Spiritually, I was looking for something else to do since I had so many empty spaces that should have been human. I caught on that I was just a kid in experiments passed around for projects.

My last project in the MK Ultra Monarch program was in 1975, I worked at the holographic labs under the amusement park.

I want to tell you that I successfully made holographic butterflies with the help of light engineers. They drew them on glass. It took two days to animate them in 1970 with the Super Cray.

Right now, they are not out in the open for viewing or used in malls or restaurants because the Arab countries took the technology for free.

They already filed the patents years ago, not me. They were two thick layers of light, yellow and blue with beating wings.

I am hoping that artificial intelligence will arrange the code for the Monarch light butterflies, so they can become a new technology species for the New World Order.

They are quite lovely. Someday soon, the world may look like a scene from Roger Rabbit. Now, this is the really, cool part of it. The butterflies carry the thoughts of sinners.

The reason that the holographic butterflies can carry the sin is because I made their wings beat at matching rates, just like Al did with the motorcycle wheels.

I paired those wing rates with emotions just like Al did with the brainwaves pinned to the primal brain by frequencies.

I wanted to improve both Hell and Purgatory by decorating it with butterflies that carry Sin. I was fourteen years old when I finished this project. I have not had any contact with the Tech Gangsters since then.

JUPITER’S VORTEXES

As far as the future of the human, it is obvious, the future holds designer genetics for those with the money if you want to be human. Where are the blueprints for life stored? How does it move around from point to point?
The answer might be advanced artificial intelligence and lots of it is free. This could be useful to reduce the cost of politics and the justice system in general. We could balance our budgets and keep our promises. No human hands would be stealing from the cookie jar, would they?
Here is some more insanity that is important to Earth and time travel. The terra forming on Jupiter is terra farming of vortexes. Coiled radio waves form vortexes. Vortex points allow space travel and can be moved for illegal time travel. Your memories can be coiled and saved for export.
A vortex point creates a GPS point and can be unwound as a radio wave under certain conditions. After the wars, the aliens were asked to hybridize earth humans.

Are we being brainwave farmed from the smart meter to provide labour, buying power and mind control targets for rich people and their family wars? Let me give an example. Here is a brainwave farming example using dolphin hunting brainwaves.

The orca-whales like gold. Why do orcas like gold?

Bottlenose dolphins (cetaceans, whales) were taught to find gold in some of the military lab experiments in the shallow waters off the Bahamas.

They began training the gold scout dolphins using underwater targets like gold rings. Once they found gold they got rewarded.

This system went up to the Bios Cray computer to copy the sonar signals to find the gold for underwater exploration projects. The Tech Gangsters got the codes and made gold finding side scanning sonar for underwater treasure.

The dolphins love gold and get rewards from having it even though the dolphin doesn’t need gold at all. They need the fish from the trainer.

The military-medical-industrial elite copied their brainwaves to control the price of gold. If you have replicated orca brainwaves you probably love gold. You think like an orca when they are hunting.

If you own a little gold, then you are bottlenose.

If you own a lot of gold, then you are a whale.

To think like a computer program takes a minute of skill.

The Stepford Whores: Project MONARCH and Mind-Controlled Sex Slaves

In the months preceding September 11th 2001, the airwaves of cable news channels were filled with the saga of Congressman Gary Condit, and the cover-up of his affair with intern Chandra Levy. Levy disappeared on April 30, 2001--Walpurgisnacht--the most sacred witch holiday on the calendar. Condit's not-very-forthcoming statements on the matter, coupled with the fact that Chandra appeared to be on her way to visit him on the night she disappeared led to speculation that he was somehow involved with her kidnapping and/or death. This speculation reached a fevered pitch when bizarre details of Condit's sex life began to mount. Twenty-seven other women came forth claiming to have had sexual relations with the Congressman, including two women (15-years-old at the time), who claimed that he had violently raped them while still a State Assemblyman. Condit was described by one attorney involved in the case as "a serial predator of women." One of the women, Torrie Hendley, who met the leather-clad Condit at a Harley Davidson convention, revealed in an interview with The Globe tabloid newspaper that Condit enjoyed kinky, sadomasochistic sex, referring to his many ladies as his "sex slaves." She also said that he insisted on using code names with these women while talking on the phone, and refused to wear condoms, stating to Ms. Hendley that "there's a cure for AIDS, anyway."

Following the media blitz of the Clinton-Lewinski sex scandal, and then the Condit-Levy affair, many people began to wonder: Why do so many men in positions of power require lots of sex with a variety of people? And where do such men get this sense of entitlement, this attitude that they should be continually provided with a harem of sexual servants, maintained, oftentimes, at taxpayers' expense? Few, if any journalists brought up the amazing similarity between the story of Gary Condit's "sex slaves" and the stories of dozens of men and women who claim to have been forced into sexual slavery for the wealthy and powerful by none other than our own Central Intelligence Agency, through an offshoot of the MK-ULTRA mind control program known as Project MONARCH.

It is well-known now in most literate circles, from declassified documents available through the Freedom of Information Act, that the CIA engaged in a number of covert experiments in mind control, often on unwitting subjects, throughout the 50s, 60s, and 70s as part of a program known as MK-ULTRA. Thus, for example, we have the familiar stories of soldiers in Vietnam being subjected to involuntary testing of the effects of L.S.D. and other drugs on battlefield performance. MK-ULTRA had its roots in Project PAPERCLIP, a post-WWII operation authorized by Harry Truman, in which top scientists from Nazi Germany were smuggled into the United States to work with NASA, the military, and the intelligence community. Their newly acquired knowledge of mind control techniques had come from their experiments on prisoners in Nazi concentration camps, in which, according to experts, they learned of the effects of the calculated use of torture, drugs, hypnotism, electroshock, and sleep deprivation on an individual personality.

According to some, the result was found to be a fragmenting of the personality into separate components which are unaware of one another, creating what is known today as "Multiple Personality Disorder," or by the more recent, clinically-accepted term, "Dissociative Identity Disorder." The individual personality components could then be programmed to perform certain tasks, much like a computer. According to former FBI agent and mind control expert Ted Gunderson: “It’s a combination of torture, hypnosis, drugs. And what happens is, they torture them so much, that their personality splits in order to endure the pain and misery. When their personality splits, they [become] another person, and it’s through this technique that they train them.” Such techniques could, says Gunderson, create Manchurian candidates, unwitting agents of espionage who could courier sensitive messages and even commit assassinations against their will, without any recollection of these events.

For instance, consider the case of Candy Jones, a popular New York pin-up model who one day suddenly recovered repressed memories of having been used as a hypnotic courier for the government (i.e., mind control.) As most forms of hypnosis usually do, mind control training involves the use of “Neuro-Linguistic Programming,” teaching the brain to associate certain words or sounds with the performance of certain actions, both mental and physical. Under this definition, teaching your dog to “roll over” on command is Neuro-Linguistic Programming, although a more covert method would involve training him to roll over every time you said “ice cream,” and then to forget about the whole event as soon as you snap your fingers.

Although clearly unethical, such practices were justified by the CIA under the belief that the Soviets, America’s new arch-enemy, already possessed such covert weaponry of the mind. Former Nebraska State Senator John DeCamp, author of the book The Franklin Cover-Up,, recalls a conversation with Former CIA Director William Colby regarding the subject. “What he … [said] … was [that] after the Korean War, the American CIA and the American government, in fact, were very terrified. We believed that the ability of other countries, particularly China, Russia, North Korea … their ability in “brainwashing,” as it was known at the time, and mind control was developed to such a degree … you can imagine how dangerous that was, and we decided we couldn’t afford to be behind. For the very salvation of the country we had to catch up. And so millions and billions were poured into these programs … He said, ‘I’ll tell you one thing, John. When all is said and done, we were never behind, and we aren’t today.’”

Indeed, according to many self-proclaimed victims of mind control, we are well ahead of the game today, and most say the CIA’s motivation was never strictly “for the good of the country.” For instance, consider the rumored existence of “Project MONARCH,” the alleged offshoot of MK-ULTRA designed to create legions of so-called “mind-controlled sex slaves” for use by the rich and powerful. According to conspiracy theorist Fritz Springmeier, the project was called MONARCH after the butterfly of the same name. Training begins in early childhood, when, he says “Children who are traumatized have their legs tied and are electro-shocked and tortured until the alters (personalities) believe they are butterflies.” The whole program is based on the “Marionette Programming” purportedly perfected in Nazi Germany with the same aim as MONARCH, in which sex slaves were created who believed themselves to be puppets (“marionettes”) controlled by cruel masters.

The value of a mind-controlled sex slave is multi-faceted. For one thing, they can be used to satisfy the perversions of people in positions of power without jeopardizing that power, since a person under mind control is not likely to expose the event to public scrutiny. Furthermore, these encounters can be videotaped for the purpose of blackmailing public officials and businessmen should they at any time step out of line, or do anything to endanger the intelligence community’s global plan. (Some people who purport the existence of Project MONARCH might also believe that the CIA is under the control of the Illuminati “New World Order” conspiracy of global domination.)

Then there is the financial aspect. A sex slave can be prostituted from childhood on to wealthy individuals who will pay large sums of money for the experience. They can also be used in child pornography to be sold on the global market. Many MONARCH “survivors” claim that unwanted, expendable sex slaves are picked to star in the most controversial pictures of all--snuff films, the existence of which has yet to be proven according to the FBI. The slaves are also, say the stories, used as drug mules for the CIA’s secret trafficking of illegal substances.

The money derived from these black market transactions of drugs and sex is used, they say, to fund the CIA’s many top secret and under-budgeted black operations, as well as to line the pockets of the perpetrators. Potential slaves are chosen for their genetic propensity for suggestibility, hypnotizability, dissociation, and high intelligence. In the past ten years or more, a number of these so-called “survivors” have “recovered” their memories and come forward about their past abuse at the hands of the government. Many have written books, such as Brice Taylor’s Thanks for the Memories: The Truth Has Set Me Free, Annie McKenna’s Paperclip Dolls, and Cathy O’Brien’s The TRANCE Formation of America.. Of these, Cathy O’Brien is perhaps the most well-known.

It’s hard to think of a catchier opening line for a chapter than one that includes the words, “substituting his penis for my mother’s nipple.” Cathy couldn’t think of a better one either as she described how her “pedophile” father, Earl O’Brien, allegedly first began to train her sexually. Cathy claims to have come from a family of multi-generational incest perpetrators, where daddy abused all of the kids, and all of the kids abused each other. Growing up in Muskegon, Michigan, a "pedophile capital," according to Cathy, it wasn't long before Cathy's father was whoring her around for use in lucrative child pornography. In time, Mr. O'Brien was caught, but instead of going to jail, he was visited, says Cathy, by future President Gerald Ford, who offered him a deal: sell Cathy into the MONARCH program, and receive immunity from prosecution. The CIA allegedly had good reason to seek Cathy out because, she says, "…they knew that any child that was sexually abused to that extent would be suffering from this dissociative disorder that they were interested in targeting for mind control."

And so her formal MONARCH training began. "Not long after that ," she explains in her book, "my father was flown to Boston for a two-week course at Harvard on how to raise me for …Project MONARCH." From then on, Cathy was prostituted to a long list of high-ranking individuals, such as Michigan State Senator Guy VanderJagt, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, West Virginia Senator Robert Byrd (who later became her "owner" or "controller"), and the aforementioned Gerald Ford. She claims she was forced to engage in all sorts of strange perversions, from having sex with dogs to waving a small American flag with her rectum. This, coupled with her father's constant abuse and torture, kept her in a constant state of dissociation.

According to Cathy, she was controlled with form of Neuro-Linguistic Programming used on many MONARCH slaves, which involved the use of themes from Wizard of Oz, and various Disney children's films. She was taught to go into another dimension "over the rainbow" whenever the pain of the abuse became too much to bear, and to identify with Cinderella when her father assigned her a strict daily regimen of household chores, which was part of her slave programming. The hallucinogenic and multi-dimensional themes of Alice in Wonderland. were also quite extensively used. This was done, not just to Cathy, but to all her brothers and sisters as well, who were also being used in the program. As she writes in her book, “My brother, now 37, remains psychologically locked into those traumatic childhood years and is obsessed with Disney themes and productions to this day. His house is decorated in Disney memorabilia, he wears Disney clothes, listens to my father’s instructions on a Disney telephone, and maintains “When You Wish Upon a Star” as his favorite song, which has locked his children into the same theme.”

Interestingly, the Disney programming claim is one made by almost every “recovered” MONARCH slave, although it’s difficult to determine whether these claims began to surface before or after the publication of Cathy’s book. For example, a number of them say that they were taken to Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma, where they were placed in electrified “Tinkerbell” cages, and tortured into creating child alters that would, like Peter Pan., never grow up.

However, Cathy did grow up, and although supposedly subjected to daily sexual abuse and torture, she managed to maintain an “A” average throughout her scholastic career, “because when trauma occurs that’s too horrible to comprehend,” says Cathy, “the brain automatically goes into its own mode, and photographically records events surrounding the trauma … Since I was being traumatized all the time, I was photographically recording what I was being taught in school. So I got excellent grades.” Throughout her childhood, she was isolated from society and popular culture, with the exception of the Disney movies previously mentioned, and was heavily exposed to country music. According to Cathy, the country music scene is heavily infiltrated by MONARCH operatives, because the tours they travel in throughout North America easily facilitate the trade of slaves and drugs.

When Cathy got older, she was married off by “The Company” to Wayne Cox, who fathered her daughter, Kelly (also a mind-controlled sex slave.) Later, she was married a second time to country music MC Alex Houston. Concurrently, she was also symbolically married to Senator Robert Byrd, who became her “controller,” and largely dictated the events of her life from then on. She was sent to a sex slave training camp called “Charm School,” directed, she says, by Pennsylvania Governor Dick Thornburgh and Ohio State Representative James Traficant [now in prison for bribery and racketeering]. After she graduated, Cathy says, she became a so-called “Presidential Model,” and was used to satisfy the sadistic sexual needs of executive-level members of government. From that point forward, the “Who’s Who” list of johns she allegedly serviced became exponentially more impressive. She says she was nearly choked to death a number of times by Dick Cheney’s enormous penis, and was violently raped by both Cheney and George Bush Sr., after being chased through the woods in a form of human hunting called “The Most Dangerous Game.” She claims to have serviced both Bill and Hillary Clinton while the former was still Governor of Arkansas. She says she drove Hillary into a fit of ecstasy with the “Witch’s Face” that her handlers had carved into her vagina which, says Cathy, “can give men pleasure,” much like ribbed condoms do for women.

Cathy even claims that Hustler’s Larry Flynt was part of the conspiracy, and that he hired a photographer named Jimmy Walker to take pornographic pictures of her wedding night with Alex Houston, then had the photos published in one of his magazines. Writes Cathy, "Flynt was unequivocally the official White House Pornographer. [He] maintained … New World Order colleagues such as Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Ford, CIA Director Bill Casey, U.N. Ambassador Madeleine Albright, Senators Byrd and Spector, Congressmen Traficant and VanderJagt, Governors Thornburgh, Blanchard, and Alexander, and various world leaders such as Prime Minister of Canada Mulroney, President of Mexico de la Madrid, and Saudi Arabian King Fahd … to name a few." All of these people, by the way, are on Cathy's list of sexual assailants as well.

And another thing. Cathy O'Brien (like Brice Taylor, and a number of other proclaimed "Presidential Models") says that none of these high-ranking rapists ever used a condom, because both they and the Presidential Models had been inoculated against all sexually transmitted diseases. Says Cathy, "there was quite a bit of confidence surrounding the fact, and it was a known fact, that since I was used on a White House/Pentagon level … they would not get AIDS from me, because I was 'clean.' That was the term used."

And what was it that Gary Condit reportedly said to Torrie Hendley? "There's a cure for AIDS, anyway."

One of the consistencies that runs through almost all of the personal testimonies of the self-proclaimed MONARCH victims is the use of the occult and Satanism as a "trauma base." Cathy O'Brien vividly describes the "Rite to Remain Silent" she claims she endured at St. Francis of Assisi Church in Muskegon, a reversal of the Catholic mass in which she was allegedly doused in the blood of a freshly-slaughtered lamb and made to take an oath of secrecy. She also claims to have witnessed human sacrifices at Bohemian Grove retreat, an exclusive retreat for global movers and shakers, who meet on a private island every year in secret. They dress up in bizarre costumes and indulge in their most extreme perversions with mind-controlled “Stepford Whores,” much like scenes from the Stanley Kubrick film Eyes Wide Shut.

Brice Taylor, who claims to have bedded down every President except since John Kennedy (except Carter and Nixon), also says that she experienced similar rituals throughout her abuse, including those involving human sacrifices, anti-Christian night services at Christian churches, being buried alive in a coffin, and being hung upon a cross. Annie McKenna has recovered numerous memories, she says, of her MONARCH-trained family donning dark hoods, chanting, and performing strange rites in graveyards. Even her own children, the first of which she had at age 11, were sacrificed to the blood cult. Writes McKenna, “The ritual abuse served two purposes. First, it exposed a child to horrific trauma, which caused the child to dissociate and create alters. Secondly, the belief was that if we ever did remember, the ritual abuse memories would surface first, and the medical community and public would label us insane.”

The claims of mind control and MONARCH programming are just the latest details to be grafted onto the tales of Satanic Ritual Abuse (or SRA) that began to surface in the early 1980s. Although now largely discredited by the mental health establishment, SRA has long been a pervasive urban myth, if nothing more. Many groups, several of them affiliated with Protestant churches, believe in a large conspiracy of Satanists that spans the globe, and which controls the drug and child pornography industry (i.e., the Mafia), as well as, to the view of many, the government (i.e., the “Illuminati”). They believe that these people engage in the large-scale abduction and abuse of thousands of children for use in their sick, sadistic, Satanic sex rituals, and the pornographic documentation thereof. When not from "multi-generational Satanic families," like Taylor's and O'Brien's, where their parents willingly submit them to the MONARCH program, children are supposedly snatched off the streets--the familiar milk carton kids. According to the lore, the conspirators even infiltrate pre-schools and day care centers to access children there.

Ted Gunderson has personally investigated the famous McMartin Pre-School SRA case, even going so far as to hire an archeologist to dig for underground tunnels reported by the children. The children reported that in these tunnels they were subjected to sexual abuse, animal sacrifices, and Disney-based mind control programming by, among others, Steve Garvey, Chuck Norris, and Raymond Buckey, the school's owner. Gunderson claims, "we found the tunnels under the school. … We found 2000 animal bones …" Gunderson believes wholeheartedly that, "The Satanic cult movement dovetails with U.S. intelligence … in addition to being involved in … kidnapping, they were taking kids out of Boy's Town, and out of foster homes and orphanages, and flying them … to Washington, D.C. for sex orgy parties with congressmen and senators. Barney Frank … [has] been identified by the kids, and George Bush Sr. has been at the parties while he was Vice-President. …[We're] talking about a large-scale pedophile ring, and a large-scale kidnapping ring … known as "The Finders." It's a CIA covert operation running out of Washington, D.C. … that's just a cover name for finding children…"

"The Finders" and Project MONARCH were implicated in Nebraska's "Franklin Cover-Up," also investigated by Gunderson, and by the author of The Franklin Cover-Up, former State Senator John DeCamp. In a civil case against 16 people, including

Laurence E. King (manager of the failed Franklin Savings and Loan), Harold Anderson (publisher of the Omaha World Herald), and the Omaha Police Department, plaintiff Paul Bonacci was awarded $1 million by U.S. District Court Judge Warren Urbom in February 1999. In reference to King, the Judge found that he had "continually subjected the plaintiff to repeated sexual assault, false imprisonment, infliction of extreme emotional distress, organized and directed Satanic rituals, forced the plaintiff to 'scavenge' for children to be part of the defendant King's sexual abuse and pornography ring, forced the plaintiff to engage in numerous sexual contacts with the defendant King and others, and participate in deviant sexual games and masochistic orgies with minor children."

Bonacci testified that he was flown on hundreds of trips to Washington, D.C., Kansas City, Chicago, Minnesota, and Los Angeles, where he was taken to "thousands" of pedophilic and sadomasochistic parties, drugged, and prostituted to the rich and powerful. Bonacci admits to participating in the kidnapping of then-12-year-old paper boy Johnny Gosch in Des Moines, Iowa, a story profiled extensively on America's Most Wanted and a number of other television programs. Johnny's mother, Noreen Gosch is convinced that Bonacci is telling the truth, and is also convinced that her son was kidnapped by joint intelligence-organized crime elements involved in Project MONARCH. Says Noreen, "[Bonacci] told us that he was put into MONARCH training at a very young age, right at Offutt Air Force Base … Johnny … was put through the same training …" In 1999, Johnny Gosch, a grown man at that point, came to visit his mother for a brief, covert visit in the middle of the night. "He told me that he had been subjected to mind control … and that his job was to compromise politicians, and any VIP that they felt they wanted to do that to … He only mentioned the Satanic rituals briefly."

One of the accused perpetrators who has been implicated by Noreen Gosch, Paul Bonacci, Cathy O'Brien, and a host of other "MONARCH victims" is Lt. Col. Michael Aquino, a former Green Beret and senior U.S. military intelligence officer once involved in the study of "PSY-OPS," or psychological warfare. He wrote an extensive essay with Colonel Paul E. Vallely (a Fox News Channel analyst) called "From PSY-OP to MindWar: The Psychology of Victory." In this essay, the authors advocated the use of propaganda, subliminal messages, air ionization, and ELF waves (i.e., putting low frequency signals in TV and radio broadcasts to induce specific states of mind) in times of war, both domestically and abroad, in order to manipulate public opinion of the war. Another interesting fact about Micheal Aquino: He just happens to be the leader and founder of the Temple of Set, a splinter group of the Church of Satan, in which Aquino was once a high-ranking member. The Temple of Set now has a number of chapters that operate on military bases. Interestingly, this group's rituals often involve Nazi symbols and rhetoric, and Aquino once performed a Satanic "working" at Heinrich Himmler's castle of Wewelsburg while in Germany on "official NATO business."

Predictably, this has caused no shortage of controversy to surround Michael Aquino. In the late 1980s, a Satanic Ritual Abuse/Child Sexual Abuse scandal broke out at a day care center on the Presidio military base in San Francisco, where Aquino was stationed. The children identified Aquino, as well as a Baptist Minister named Gary Hambright, who was indicted but not convicted. These kids claimed that the people who molested them were part of a "devil worship club," and were able to describe the inside of Aquino's house, where the abuse was said to have taken place. Other children identified Aquino by his nickname, "Mikey," although Anton LaVey. claims that Aquino's nickname was actually "Mickey" because his peculiar haircut made him look like Mickey Mouse (yet another Disney connection.) Although Aquino was never indicted, and the charges against Hambright were dropped, several of the children contracted STDs, proving that someone had abused them. Later, after Hambright died of AIDS, the U.S. Army wrote to the children's parents urging them to get their children tested for HIV. They also paid a multi-million-dollar settlement to the victims. Furthermore, Aquino was "Titled" by the U.S. Army for "indecent acts with a child, sodomy, conspiracy, kidnapping, and false swearing," which means that they had probable cause to believe the offenses had been committed.

According to many, the incident at Presidio was an outgrowth of Project MONARCH, and these people believe Aquino to be integrally involved in the program. Paul Bonacci has identified Aquino as the one who ordered the kidnapping of Johnny Gosch, and says that Aquino had a "ranch" in Colorado that was a "safe house" for kidnapped children. Rusty Nelson, a photographer for the Franklin Cover-Up's. Lawrence King, and a convicted child pornographer, testified before a U.S. District Court on February 5, 1999 that he witnessed a suitcase full of cash being handed over to by King to Aquino that was "earmarked for the Nicaraguan Contras." Also, a number of mind-controlled sex slaves, including Cathy O'Brien., have listed Aquino as one of their "handlers." However, when I questioned Aquino about these allegations, he responded: "Throughout my entire career as an Army officer (1968-94), I never encountered any evidence of anything named or resembling 'Project MONARCH', never participated in anything involving children [or adult] 'sex slaves', never abused any children under any circumstances whatever, and never had any contact with any of the cranks who've thrown my name around with 'MONARCH.'"

The charges against Aquino perhaps lose credibility when we consider that many of the people who have made these claims have also implicated a so-called "Michael LaVey," who they say is a son of Anton LaVey.. Noreen Gosch says that Michael LaVey was interviewed on a 20/20 special about her son's kidnapping, during which, according to her, "[Michael] LaVey said that he had been with Johnny on many occasions at the Satanic ritual ceremonies, where they serviced different men for their owners." Unfortunately for Noreen, no independent confirmation has surfaced that Anton had any son by that name. The late Anton LaVey. himself has been implicated as a Project MONARCH participant by a handful of people, such as Noreen Gosch, but not in any specific way. However, it is interesting to note that Anton LaVey. did consider Disneyland to be one of the happiest places on Earth, and his daughter Zeena LaVey. listed the 1950s thriller The Most Dangerous Game. as her favorite movie.

The process of deprogramming a presumed victim of Project MONARCH--identifiable by abnormally wide eyes (from the electroshock), odd-looking facial moles (caused by stun guns), a plastic smile, and generally robotic behavior--is a strange and controversial one. Since slaves are programmed to self-destruct if they should ever find themselves talking about their memories, therapists wishing to override these programs must be armed with the corresponding "deactivation codes." Mark Phillips, who "rescued" Cathy O'Brien from mind control, and co-authored The TRANCE Formation of America., describes the process of deprogramming her: "I had to know certain codes, keys and triggers. I had to, and I was provided a few of those," by he says, covert communications from friends in the intelligence community. Thereafter, Cathy began to recover memories through extensive journal-writing practices. Brice Taylor used a collage method with pictures cut out of magazines.

Others use the more dubious methods of hypnosis, and similar New Age techniques to unlock memories supposedly repressed with programmed amnesia. Ritual trauma hypno-therapists such as D.C. Hammond, PhD., and Pamela J. Monday, PhD report discovering complex, multi-layered systems of programming that even take geometric shapes, such as pentagrams, hexagrams, or the cabalistic Tree of Life, complete with internal “landscapes” that have “mountains,” “castles,” and the like. They have found that some programs are guarded by “gatekeepers” with gothic, diabolical-sounding names, and different letters of programming are coded with letters from the Greek alphabet. For instance, Alpha is general programming, Beta involves sexual programming, Delta programming holds instructions for how to kill during ceremonies, Theta includes “psychic killing,” and Omega involves suicidal, “self-destruct” programming, as well as self-mutilation. Zeta programming is related to the production of snuff films, and Omicron has to do with drug smuggling.

However, many mental health professionals cast doubt on the techniques used by hypno-therapists, charging that such practices create rather than recover memories, and so do the people who are accused of such heinous crimes on the evidence of the allged victim’s “recovered memories.” The accused are backed by an organization called The False Memory Syndrome Foundation, whose spokesperson, Pamela Freyd, questions the motives of those who are, “using hypnosis, guided imagery, sodium amytal, relaxation exercise, participation in groups, reading suggestive literature and other techniques in an effort to excavate memories," Freyd explains. "Although people may remember things with any of these techniques, there is absolutely no evidence that what they remember is historically accurate." She also questions the validity of multiple personalities in general, stating that, "Many in the psychiatric community believe that MPD is iatrogenic, that is, caused by the use of hypnosis and the type of interviewing techniques of the doctor."

Confirming the validity of another person's memory is nearly impossible, especially if every other person involved in the memory denies that it took place. However, it may perhaps be unfair to label as "impossible" or "ridiculous" the memories of other people which merely lie beyond the spectrum of our own experience. Many of us received religious indoctrination from our family as we grew up, and were forced to participate in weird ceremonies that made us uncomfortable. Isn't it logical that if our parents were Satanists or occultists, they might subject us to similar indoctrination? And since Satanic and occult practices purportedly bestow worldly power upon their practitioners, isn't it logical that some of our most powerful leaders might participate in such practices? Isn't it logical that they would make use of occult-based mind control techniques such as hypnotism, rituals, mind-altering drugs, and Neuro-Linguistic Programming (i.e., rote memorization of "magic words")--techniques that have been traditional components of religious ceremonies, from the mystical priesthoods of Babylon, Greece, Rome and Egypt to the "cults" of today?

The CIA's interest in mind control is well-documented, and there was certainly a time, in which they had no compunction about subjecting unwitting subjects to experiments that might harm them, or which might go against their intended will. The idea that the CIA would traffic in guns, drugs and other contraband in order to fund their secret projects is becoming more generally accepted, especially after The San Francisco Chronicle's Gary Webb. investigated the funding of Contra aid in 1996.

Furthermore, we know that men in positions of power often require a greater-than-average number of sexual partners, often choosing extremely young women (or men), sometimes prostitutes, to satisfy their often kinky desires. Perhaps this is just a result of the greater-than-average testosterone levels often found in aggressive power-seekers. That the CIA would supply these prostitutes in exchange for their much-needed Black Ops funding, and that they would keep these prostitutes mind-controlled into silence using the above-mentioned techniques, so as to cover their own tracks, may not be impossible to believe.

Perhaps what people do find unbelievable is the sheer sensationalism of so many of the "Project MONARCH" stories. The mental picture of George Bush, Sr. sodomizing a seven-year-old boy, or of Bill Clinton participating in cannibalistic baby sacrifice, is not one that most people can take seriously. Even more difficult to overcome, perhaps, is a natural disbelief that arises when a person claiming to have been under complete mental robotism, and subjected to unimaginable torture throughout his or her entire life appears to "recover" so quickly after the "memories" are revealed during therapy. Some of them even go on to write books, conduct seminars, and make radio appearances, becoming a professional victim-expert. Perhaps we will never know who is and who isn't telling the truth about MONARCH mind control--unless the documents that supposedly exist are one day declassified. However, the tales of Project MONARCH provide an interesting framework in which to interpret current events, especially the never-ending sex scandals that perpetually crop up amongst our public figures.

The Most Dangerous Game: An Interview with Cathy O'Brien

Cathy O'Brien is the author, with her husband Mark Phillips, of The TRANCE Formation of America, and ACCESS DENIED For Reasons of National Security.. She says that she and her daughter Kelly were used for years as mind-controlled sex slaves for the CIA. Her husband is Mark Phillips, who, they claim, rescued her and her daughter from this life of abuse and deprogrammed Cathy's mind control conditioning. For years they have been on a crusade to educate the public about secret government mind control programs. This interview took place in October of 2001.

TRACY: At what age did you begin to be sexually abused?

CATHY: I was sexually abused as far back as I can remember, and I recall my father saying that he had abused me since infancy, substituting his penis for my mother's nipple.

TRACY: Who did he say this to?

CATHY: He said this to quite a few people who were involved in incest, which was real prominent in the area of Muskegon, Michigan, where I grew up. It was a common point of conversation, and was what I thought was the normal way people lived.

TRACY: So everyone in the town was doing it, and talking about it?

CATHY: Well, I don’t know about everyone, but everyone in my environment seemed to be involved in it, and since then Muskegon has been named as a pedophile capitol. Even the Muskegon Chronicle said that [Muskegon was] the primary place in the United States for pedophiles, so there was an extensive exposé on that. But the area where I grew up in was definitely predominantly full of incest and sexual abuse.

TRACY: So do you think that this had been going on for generations in that area? Is it just, like, a culture that developed over there?

CATHY: I’m not really sure exactly how it happened, but I do know that Project PAPERCLIP had brought over Nazi scientists that had learned that multi-generational incest-based families would have children that were sexually abused, which would result in a dissociative disorder that was a prime basis for mind control. So they were really interested in that aspect of things. And in Muskegon, the local politicians were actually sanctioning that type of activity, where there wasn’t any prosecution of the pedophiles in the court system, like my father. He actually received immunity from prosecution for using me in child pornography. The deal was that he would raise me according to the government specifications, which were based on the Hitler/Himmler research into the multi-generational incest children. So it was widely spread, widely known, and actually a deliberate effort that was going on in the Muskegon area at that time.

TRACY: So when did the mind control programming start for you? At what age?

CATHY: The mind control aspect began when I was about 6 years old, which was in the early 1960s, when the local politicians were sanctioning the local Michigan mafia child pornography rings, because they knew that any child that was sexually abused to that extent would be suffering from this dissociative disorder that they were interested in targeting for mind control. So they were trying to locate children like myself. And they found some child pornography that had been made, and my father was approached at that time by a criminal faction of our government that was interested in the proliferation of mind control, and told that he would receive immunity from prosecution if he would sell me into the project. So he did, and I was six years old at the time. So mind control conditioning began from a very, very early age.

TRACY: And who is this "criminal faction of the government." Is there a name for them?

CATHY: I don't know of a name, per se, for them, but the more people learn about mind control, and the more they research what mind control entails, how it's being used in various aspects of our society, like the military, and Special Forces, and levels of espionage in the capacity that I was used on the CIA's MK-ULTRA mind control during the Reagan/Bush administration--the more people know, the more they're going to be able to recognize who these perpetrators are, and what kind of controls they actually inflict, not only on individuals like myself, but also in a mass mind control aspect that was also taken from the Nazi Germany Hitler/Himmler research.

TRACY: A lot of people in the conspiracy theory field have a name for this group of people. They call them the Illuminati. People imagine them as being a secret society, or a cabal of organized people, and I was just wondering if you'd ever heard a term like that.

CATHY: I've heard various terms, but people participated in different secret organizations, and I think that's the key to where the problem lies, is in the secrecy. People have a right to this information, they need to know this information, and it's imperative that the facts regarding mind control be brought to light, and taken out of these secret societies. Things aren't so easily black and white. I can't just point a finger at one particular faction, or one particular group, because there's good and bad in everything, including the CIA. Not all CIA's bad. Not all government's bad, you know. It's just not that simple.

TRACY: When did you first hear the term "Project MONARCH," and associate that with what was happening to you?

CATHY: When I was about 9 years old was when I first heard that term, and at that time I was being routinely taken to the Governor's Mansion in Mackinaw Island, Michigan.

TRACY: Who was the governor at that time?

CATHY: The Governor was George Romney. That's when I was really being conditioned, and thrust into a more government level of mind control. He's not a main perpetrator. He was one that was actively involved in mind control in the educational system and everything. Names of course are in our book The TRANCE Formation of America., but my focus is more on just the mind control information rather than who the perpetrators are, because if people find out what the components of mind control are, they're going to be able to identify these people, and that's going to put us a lot further ahead, rather than information of who was involved back in the early 60s. But, nevertheless, that was the first time I heard the term "Project MONARCH," and I heard it at various times. Of course, I had no capacity to really understand that, aside from the fact that I knew that it was widespread.

TRACY: What were the methods used when you were a child to program your mind?

CATHY: I had a dissociative disorder, which is professionally defined as "the mind's sane defense against trauma too horrible to comprehend," and of course sexual abuse is too horrible to comprehend for a child. There's no place for that in the brain. The brain actually compartmentalizes the memory of that event so that the mind can function normally. So I had these dissociative barriers set up in my brain, which was already prime for conditioning, for programming, and for them to be able to put into my highly suggestible mind, a conditioning and information that they wanted in there for a base of future programming. So from the very outset, my whole environment was controlled. For example, my TV was controlled, what I read was controlled, and absolutely my music was controlled, because of the harmonic effects on the brain. The news that I received was all controlled. So having my environment controlled to that extent about what went in my brain, my knowledge base was actually formed according to what they wanted. We all form opinions, fact, and ultimately our actions based on what we know. And what we need to know is that there has been alternate knowledge that doesn't fit in a box, and we have got to learn to think further, and think beyond just what we have been told, and begin to look further and ask questions. Asking questions was something that I wasn't capable of under mind control. I could only accept information, only take it in. I had no ability to creatively use it, to think to use that information, but nevertheless it was pumped into my head at a rate that created what is termed "artificial intelligence" by some. It's a form of artificial intelligence that's actually pumped into the mind, because the brain accepts the information on a photographic level when trauma like incest occurs. These are the kind of facts that the Hitler/Himmler research had discovered, and was actually being built from and expanded on during my earliest years, in the course of bringing MK-ULTRA mind control so heavily into our society.

TRACY: I've heard this described many times by "survivors" of this, who say that there were levels of programming with Greek letter codes, like Alpha and Beta and Delta. Did that happen to you?

CATHY: That is something that I am ever so vaguely familiar with, but that would be a good question to talk to Mark about, because that is definitely not my area. That's more outside information rather than what I would know from the inside.

TRACY: You said that they controlled the music you heard. What did they want you to listen to?

CATHY: There was a lot of music going on back in those days that I have missed and have only found since I have been recovered and deprogrammed and have been able to choose music for myself. But the 60s freedom music I didn't get to listen to, and any kind of protest, or anything like that. Instead I had to listen to country music. That ultimately was the industry that I traveled in during the Reagan/Bush administration, under the control primarily of Senator Byrd, who was my owner in MK-ULTRA.

TRACY: When did Senator Byrd become your controller? And what was he like back then? Because now he's sort of a doddering old man. He's always shaking. Was he like that when you knew him.

CATHY: No. I've been familiar with him all my life, or all of my mind-controlled existence rather. Because there's not any "life" under mind control per se, because there's no capacity for free thought, no capacity for free will, or ultimately any soul expression. So I could only robotically do the things that I was told to do, and during those years I was exposed to numerous high-profile political perpetrators that were involved in MK-ULTRA. They are, of course, named in our book, The TRANCE Formation of America..

TRACY: What was the progression of controllers that you had. Was there more than one at a time?

CATHY: I had what is termed “handlers,” and handlers would make sure that I was in various places at certain times, either on military or NASA installations for mind control programming, or in and out of Washington, D.C. I traveled under the guise of the country music industry, because it provided a means of travel in and out of the Caribbean, Mexico, and Canada, which were primarily the areas I was used in, as well as all across the United States. So my handler would make sure that I was in designated areas at specific times, either for programming, or to carry out the covert operations that I was used in during the Reagan/Bush administration.

TRACY: OK, so Senator Byrd was not the only one. Is there a difference between a handler and an owner, or a controller?

CATHY: I had two different handlers in the course of being under absolute robotic mind control, and my father, I’m sure, would be considered a handler as well, because once he agreed to raise me according to government specifications, he followed their instructions and followed what they told him to do with me, and where to take me, how to condition me, how to control my environment, and things like that. So in essence, he was my first handler. When MK-ULTRA came into my life, the regimentation, the systematic kind of conditioning and abuse and programming that I received from that point on was far more structured than the natural high suggestibility resultant from the incest and the pornography that I was used in as a very young child. My father was approached and told. He didn’t think to do this on his own, in other words. He was being told. So he became a handler. Handlers follow instructions. Owners are the ones who decide which projects or which operations to use someone in, and in my case, that was Senator Byrd, and that was how I ended up on a higher government level. I first met him at Mackinaw Island, at the Governor's mansion when I was 13 years old, and that's when he became my owner, which lasted throughout my victimization right up until Mark rescued me and my daughter in 1988.

TRACY: As far as the operations that you were used in for Project MONARCH--it started out with prostitution and pornography, right?

CATHY: Right.

TRACY: And then did it move into other areas? Were you used as a drug mule?

CATHY: Well, I think the next step that was so significant to me was the use of occultism. At that time the local Catholic church--and again, I'm not saying that all Catholics are involved and that they're all bad, but there is a criminal faction within the Catholic Church, within the Order of the Jesuits, which is the intelligence arm of the Vatican, a part of which my family ultimately had ties into and was a further causation for me to be victimized within the church system. But nevertheless, the Catholic Church was heavily involved in the sexual abuse of children, which was widespread and has definitely come to light. They've had to pay out on numerous child abuse cases as a result. But the reversal of the Catholic Mass is, of course, Satanism, and being exposed to Satanism is definitely trauma too horrible to comprehend. Any kind of blood trauma like that is really horrible, and that was used to further dissociate my mind, further compartmentalize it for future programming. And that theme was used right through my second handler. Well, really, right on through my whole victimization there was always some aspect of occultism that came in as well. And alien themes were also a very common trauma base. Anything that's beyond our ability to affect or control, or something in our minds that we perceive as too big to be able to affect like that is what they would use to ultimately gain control. Superstition begins where knowledge leaves off, and superstition makes a person more suggestible and easily controlled, so they definitely used superstitious kind of themes to further program. Those were significant trauma bases.

TRACY: Yeah, I understand from your book that there were Satanic rituals that took place at this Catholic church. Were there Satanic rituals that took place elsewhere throughout your life?

CATHY: Definitely, and so often they're done more as a trauma base for mind control. It's even used in the military which, for example, has the occult Temple of Set, which is supposedly more intellectually based, which is used to traumatize people. That leaves them widely suggestible for mind control programming. It's a very deliberate method, and it has proliferated heavily on our military bases. And it was certainly a part of my victimization right up until Mark rescued my daughter and me. And I say "rescued" because I had lost my ability to even think to survive. There was nothing I could do to pull us out of our situation. I couldn't think about what was happening. I was so robotic by that time. It took someone with eyes to see and ears to hear, and a heart to care to be able to take us out of the situation that we were in.

TRACY: You seem to be saying that these people were not religiously Satanists. They were just using it to control people.

CATHY: Oftentimes that was the case.

TRACY: But do you think there is a spiritual aspect to this, where they actually believe in the power of Satan, or of these other gods?

CATHY: I think there are some that believe that, but the primary mind control programmers who use that for a theme certainly know better and know that the so-called "Satanic power" was in the form of a stun gun and sophisticated mind control programming [methodologies] that included harmonics, and a deliberate, systematic use of sleep, food, and water deprivation. That was what they really knew to be the ultimate power, and didn't have anything to do with anything spiritual.

TRACY: There was, in your programming, a lot of imagery from Disney and other popular children's movies which was used. And also there was something you were forced to participate in called "The Most Dangerous Game." Have you seen that movie, The Most Dangerous Game.?

CATHY: No.

TRACY: It’s this movie from the 50s about human hunting.

CATHY: I wonder if that was based on the military maneuver, or if the military maneuver sprang from it. I’m not familiar with that movie, but I am familiar with the military maneuver of playing “The Most Dangerous Game,” where a person is in the woods and attempting to survive while they’re being hunted. That was the kind of trauma that I was exposed to for programming purposes.

TRACY: I thought that it was significant when I found this out the other day: one of Anton LaVey’s favorite places in the world was Disneyland, and his daughter, Zeena LaVey’s favorite movie was The Most Dangerous Game..

CATHY: I think one of the strongest weapons is a scramble of fantasy and reality, kind of along the same lines as military programming tactics. They use a video game for military training, and they can’t tell reality from the video, so when they’re actually in a combat situation, it’s more like they’re just playing out a video game. They lose their ability to consciously comprehend what they’re doing, and to be able to critically analyze it, which is really essential. And so they end up just being able to point and shoot, point and shoot, without giving it any real thought to the magnitude of what’s actually happening. They’ll play it out more like a video game. And oftentimes with mind control programming, they would attempt to scramble it with a movie, hence the conditioning of the Disney movies and all, which were quite extensively used. But the primary one which was used was The Wizard of Oz., because of the kind of dimensional aspects that come into play of “over the rainbow.” We see a lot of indications that this is still going on today.

TRACY: Do you think that the movies were written and edited specifically for the use of mind control, or was the mind control adapted to the movies?

CATHY: That’s a good question, and I wouldn’t really know.

TRACY: When your father started participating in Project MONARCH, didn’t you say that Gerald Ford came over to the house to give him instructions?

CATHY: Well, he was a local politician, and as his career escalated, so too did my victimization. But then, again, I don’t know how you want to go about naming names and the best way to put it in this particular article, so I’ll leave it up to you and your discretion. But ultimately for names, I think I’d refer them to the book, because The TRANCE Formation of America. was written for the U.S. Congressional Select Committee on Intelligence Oversight, and the facts that are in the book are all well-documented, where they would be able to have a point of reference for understanding exactly the material that was written there, probably more so than the average person on the street. So the documentation, the absolute facts, and names are definitely in the book.

TRACY: So you don't want to talk about the specific people that were involved, is that what you're saying?

CATHY: I think that I would much rather be able to put out information on mind control, and the people involved in it, and the reality of it, and how widespread it is, so that people would be able to arm themselves with the knowledge and actually evolve with this knowledge, because knowledge is our only defense against mind control. And right now, at this point in time, it's essential that people have this information, because it's a key component of what's terrorizing America and the world today. Terrorism breeds mind control. Mind control breeds terror, and people have got to have the information on mind control now more than ever. It will be able to stop the sexual abuse of children, the injustice in the courts that is perpetrated on the children, and there is so much that we're going to be able to do when we have the information. I'm afraid it would even sidetrack people to say, "This person, that person is involved, or was involved then," when they can be seeing today who's involved based on a strong knowledge of mind control.

Going back to one other aspect, which personally I think is so very, very important, is the use of Satanism and everything like that, because they can't control a soul per se. When a mind is absolutely controlled, there's no free thought, and if there's no free thought, there's no free will. And without free will, there's no ability to have any soul expression. If a person doesn't have soul expression, they can't stand up for what they believe in, they can't stand up for a cause, they can't stand up for moral values, or anything like that, which I consider to be more related to soul. So it's not that they can control the soul, but by controlling the mind, they stop the person from being able to express it. I think that shows the magnitude of mind control, and how very important it is that people know that our knowledge base is being altered, that this information is being suppressed, and people are being led and misled by a deliberate use of a form of mass mind control, which is also called “social engineering.”

TRACY: How would you identify someone who was actually being purposely controlled to the point where they’re almost a robot. Is there some kind of telltale sign? Can you tell if someone’s a mind-controlled slave just by looking at them, or seeing the way they act?

CATHY: I can tell it just from having been there and experienced it, and seeing how widespread it is and where it’s used and everything. I’ve learned to recognize certain characteristics or traits of mind control. For example, people under mind control rarely blink. Their eyes stay wide open. And the micro-muscles in their face don’t move properly, so they don’t have proper facial expression. They may always smile. I smiled, I think, the whole time that I was under mind control. I had a little plastic smile plastered on my face. My face looked waxy otherwise, and there was no smile in my eyes, there was no twinkle, no depth to that little smile. There are certain mannerisms that can be recognized. There’s a more rigid stance, or something that might be equated more to a militaristic stance.

TRACY: It seems like if you were to go to a modeling school, this is what they’re trying to teach those women to do.

CATHY: That’s what Charm School did, and everybody that I was associated with back then was being programmed alongside of me. It was like they were cranking us out so that we’d pretty much look the same. You know, people that are conditioned the same way do seem to have a certain look, or certain mannerisms about them. Politicians have a way of looking a certain way. I’m not saying that they’re programmed. It’s just their knowledge base and the way they’re conditioned. Attorneys might have a way that they talk, and a way that they’re conditioned. You know, people have different projections, and folks that have been conditioned for mind control definitely have an identifiable projection that people need to know now more than ever. We’re being told that it’s up to us to stay alert, and on guard, and watch out for potential terrorists, anyone who’s acting or looking suspicious. Well, that’s not enough information. They need to release the information on mind control so that people will know exactly what to look for, exactly what characteristics and traits to be watching for. The more people know, the better off we’re all going to be in this effort to stop terrorism. I’ve got some insight into what mind control looks like.

I’ve got insight into some of the old characteristics. For instance, the stun gun was one used so predominantly, and a stun gun leaves electric prod marks that are two inches apart. It will actually leave moles, or raised places that turn into moles eventually. They’re oftentimes located on the face, and those are so easily identifiable. I see people all the time on TV, especially in pornography magazines, that have these stun gun prod marks on them. And when we become aware of exactly what these stun gun prod marks mean, that opens our eyes to being able to recognize mind control around us as well. I think that's another essential part. But stun guns aren't used as much today because they've moved technologically ahead with harmonics and different aspects now. Stun guns are still used, and the prod marks still show up on many people who were conditioned, particularly during the years I was used robotically under MK-ULTRA.

TRACY: Well, they used one on JonBenet Ramsey, didn't they? I remember the story coming out in The Enquirer, where they finally looked at the autopsy pictures, and they found these stun gun marks, two inches apart, just like you said, on her body.

CATHY: That's why this information is so essential. The more people know, the more they're going to be able to ask questions, and they're going to start seeing it in society all around them, and in these murders, and deaths, and terror and different aspects that come in to play, they're going to be able to say, "Oh that's what that is!," and they're going to start recognizing it. They're going to start noticing it in the music industry. It's used heavily in the music industry, and certain high-level entertainers have been subjected to it. There are lawsuits that have gone on because certain entertainers are given the harmonic equipment to use in their music, which drives their lyrics further into a person's head. If you think about it, people know that a song will bring them back to a time when they fell in love, for example, or a time when they were doing this, or doing that. Songs bring out memories because of how deep the harmonics carry into the brain. That has been fine-tuned and refined so much now that it is an essential tool. If the information on mind control were now released, people would realize that is what is causing people to take action with the lyrics that are going in their head. That's what's causing them to react, and carry out a murder based on having listened to this music or that.

It's not about free speech, and it's not about the lyrics. It's about harmonics, and that is one more key ingredient, and one more aspect of society where people need to become aware of exactly what mind control entails. Once they're aware of it, they can critically analyze and defend themselves against it, as well as recognize it around them so that we know what a terrorist looks like, what mind control looks like, and who's being abused, what's the devastation that sexual abuse ultimately creates, in raising suggestibility, and how people are being manipulated, even on a mass scale, through trauma. Any time trauma occurs, suggestibility rises. So when we have trauma, like we've got now, with this horrible terror that occurred in the United States, people everywhere are so highly suggestible at a time like this, they need to be on guard about what information is being pumped into their heads, especially if it's repetitious. They need to shut off their TVs, they need to think for themselves, and there are different methods they can use to be able to refocus themselves, and maintain their own freedom of thought at a time when the most extensive trauma occurs. So with this information, people are actually able to strengthen, and be far more vigilant. One of our last remaining freedoms is free thought.

TRACY: You said in your book that part of your programming was decorating your room in red, white and blue, with American flags. Is it getting to you now that everyone has a flag?

CATHY: Well, absolutely, I was very patriotic, and I think patriotism is one thing that's separating people from each other. This isn't about that. Terrorism isn't about countries. This is about individuals. This is a mind control issue, not a country issue, so if folks want to find strength in waving a flag, it's because they don't know the essential point and focus of what's really happening, and that's mind control. And once they realize that, then we're not going to have to take the strong divisions, either by race, country, religion, or anything else, but people can unite in peace and through love, rather than having to fight the so-called "enemy" of another country. That really isn't what this is about at all. So again, this is such an essential ingredient to what's happening in society today. Patriotism certainly isn't the answer. It's quite superficial. If people would just turn off their TVs, they'd be able to find a lot more answers than they would by going out and buying a flag.

TRACY: But hasn't it gotten to you that when President Bush and others talk about this war coming on, they refer to it in international terms, and they want everyone in the world to join in this fight against terrorism? Doesn't it seem like the ultimate end of this could be a one-world government?

CATHY: Well, ultimately, people aren't going to wake up in time, because this was such an enormous trauma that absolutely has shaken people to their knees. It's my fervent hope that we can be able to get information out through folks like yourself who are writing articles, and through every possible public means to get the information out on mind control so that people are going to be able to make a positive difference in time to stop this effort. You’ve got a situation where criminal activity has perpetuated to this point. The tons of covert activities that I was used in during the Reagan/Bush administration included the CIA’s covert operation of the drug industry. And the drugs, of course, were cocaine, primarily, as well as heroin. The poppy fields in Afghanistan were certainly a part of my victimization, and in our book, The TRANCE Formation of America. it’s mentioned as well. But the whole Iran-Contra thing feeds into it. At one time we were funding the war against the Soviet Union so that the Soviet Union would topple, because they were the Evil Empire at the time. And now all of the sudden we’ve got terrorists that have resulted from it. The negativity just continues to breed.

It’s very, very much like what’s happening in the military where they found out only 15% of the people could shoot their so-called “enemy,” they didn’t figure that number was high enough. They had to bypass critical analysis, and the way to do that was to get people to not think, just to do it. Point and shoot, point and shoot, without any thought or critical analysis of the fact that they were killing another person. The best way to do that was to condition them through video games, the same video games that our children are playing. I mean, they’re playing with a very, very dangerous weapon in itself that’s teaching them to bypass critical analysis. What happens then is that programming goes into place, where the military will point and shoot, point and shoot. And then they leave the military, they’re turned out onto the streets, without being deprogrammed. It’s turning our streets into a bloodbath, it’s creating extreme violence, and the children are being conditioned into violence that we’re seeing coming out now in the school systems. Because they’re being conditioned in exactly the same way, to take away that critical analysis. The whole negative aspect of everything is ultimately what is coming out onto us now through this terrorism, and when we realize what the cause is, and can be able to think for ourselves and critically analyze once again what’s really going on, we’re going to realize that war and fighting is not the answer. Then people will unite through natural attrition. They’ll unite with cause. They’ll unite with peace and love. Ultimately, that’s the kind of world unity that I would like to see. The only way that we can achieve that is by getting the information out on the reality of mind control, because this is absolutely a case where the truth makes us free.

TRACY: [Getting back to your childhood], how did you function in school while all of this was happening to you?

CATHY: I got very high grades in school. Mostly As, because when trauma occurs that’s too horrible to comprehend, the brain automatically goes into its own mode, and it photographically records events surrounding the trauma. For example, most people know exactly where and what they were doing when Kennedy was assassinated. That’s an example from that time when I was growing up that I think most people would be able to relate to, and that’s an example of how the brain photographically records events surrounding trauma. Since I was being traumatized all the time, I was photographically recording what I was being taught in school. So I got excellent grades. I wasn’t able to use that information, but I was still receiving the information. It was still being driven into my brain.

TRACY: So after you graduated high school, did you go on to higher education? Did you have a career?

CATHY: I had a couple of years of college just as I was being thrust totally into MK-ULTRA. When I was 18, of legal age, I was transferred to Louisiana, where I endured extreme occult trauma for a period of three years, which left me so primed for mind control that it was during those three years that I became absolutely robotic, and began being used on a government level. So, from about the time I was 18 years old on, I was used in government operations. But prior to that I went through education as far as I could, and that included several semesters of junior college.

TRACY: Did you have career goals in mind? And since the government was using you, were they also providing for you financially? Did you have a job?

CATHY: No, I wasn’t provided for financially. I worked different jobs, like most teens would, but I was working three jobs at the time, just menial jobs, plus going to school. And what this did was it kept me wore down. Sleep deprivation was necessary for the kind of conditioning that I was going through at that time.

TRACY: And when you talk about “severe occult trauma,” were there human sacrifices involved?

CATHY: Yes.

TRACY: Were you forced to participate in that?

CATHY: Was forced to see it, not participate, per se. It was a trauma base for me.

TRACY: And is Kelly your only child, as far as you know?

CATHY: Yes.

TRACY: Did they, while they were abusing you, have you on birth control?

CATHY: Oh yeah. Predominantly, yeah, but first I had Kelly. I had her during the years that I was being traumatized so horrifically with the occultism. Kelly was born into MK-ULTRA on a much more sophisticated level than I had been exposed to. She was conditioned literally from birth, and on a harmonics, high-tech level, whereas mine had been on a sexual abuse and trauma level. And that initial upbringing that I had was the kind of mind control that I was maintained under throughout my victimization, whereas my daughter Kelly was almost immediately thrust into the harmonic level. I couldn’t think to save her from it any more than I could think to save myself, and we could only do exactly what we were told to do, both of us.

TRACY: Now, when she was being programmed, would they take her away from you?

CATHY: Oftentimes, and sometimes not. It depends on the trauma base. Often multi-generational incest-based families will have children who are sexually abuse, who sexually abuse their children, and so it goes. Both my father and my brother were sexually abused, so they sexually abused me. In my case, for whatever reason, that gene didn't come through to me. I can't comprehend pedophilia. I cannot comprehend the sexual abuse of a child. Despite my whole upbringing, having been in it, for me to think of sexually abusing a child is just--I don't know why people would even want to do that, and I'm certainly not into the control thing either. My daughter's abuse was used against me to traumatize me. Of all the tortures, of all the traumas, of all the horrors that I saw and witnessed and experienced throughout my victimization, any abuse, including sexual abuse, of my daughter was the most horrible, horrible thing that I ever endured. It was absolutely awful.

TRACY: So they never forced you to participate in it?

CATHY: There were different situations that I was forced into with Kelly. For example, I was used in pornography throughout my victimization, from the time I was a little bitty child right on through. But most of the kind of sexual filming that was done was covert filming that was used for blackmail purposes. In cases like that, I am aware of several instances where my daughter was present, and that is truly the most horrible thing that I've ever experienced, and I've experienced a lot of awful things. But nevertheless, that was used.

TRACY: Was Kelly ever taken to Bohemian Grove?

CATHY: Yes. We both have been there.

TRACY: Is that like a big Satanic group meeting for people in positions of power?

CATHY: Again, this is where we separate the superstition from the hard-core facts. They would use that theme perhaps for traumatization, but it was not the leading theme, or the predominant theme whenever we were at the Grove. When we were taken to the Grove, it was usually a meeting of global leaders that were actively involved in the New World Order effort through mind control of the masses. They had the same agenda, they were like minds, and they would come together in a place like Bohemian Grove to meet and discuss their plans, and actually formulate them. The worst things I heard there had to do with mass genocide rather than occultism.

TRACY: So when they're having these meetings, and they're talking about New World Order policy, are those meetings separate from all the kinky sex that goes on there? Is that recreation that takes place after the meetings?

CATHY: Well, it's secretive there, and it's my experience that when these people got together, they didn't have, like, a formal round table sit-down with ties and suits, for Heaven's sakes. You know, this was very informal, and they would just talk as friends talk. Because they felt that they were in an environment that wasn't being monitored, and wasn’t being scrutinized by anyone, they felt free to do whatever they wanted. That certainly went into areas of perversion, and a lot of cocaine use, and whatever they were wanting to indulge in, they felt free to do.

TRACY: Have you seen Stanley Kubrick’s Eyes Wide Shut?

CATHY: Yeah, I have.

TRACY: Was that an accurate representation of one of these experiences at Bohemian Grove?

CATHY: You know, I think the theme was taken from that, but I can’t really relate to it. It’s not quite the same. But there are aspects of it that are probably more realistic than any other occult movie that I’m familiar with.

TRACY: They have the Cremation of Care ceremony (at Bohemian Grove), in which some people have accused them of sacrificing babies, by tossing them into a huge bonfire in front of a giant owl statue. But the official story from Bohemian Grove is that they’re actually tossing bundles of stick into the bonfire. Is that correct?

CATHY: Yeah, but that wasn’t a primary aspect of my victimization. It was part of a threat that whatever I did I had to do as though my life depended on it, because it did.

And I've certainly seen people die. The secretiveness of the Grove and what went on there would certainly lend itself to that kind of trauma.

TRACY: Have you ever seen babies sacrificed?

CATHY: During the horrible conditioning of those three years that I mentioned, yes.

TRACY: I've heard of "Mother Goddesses" who are used as breeders for these babies. Have you ever met anyone like that?

CATHY: No, actually, that goes into, I think, the more superstitious aspect of the occult, rather than the deliberate use of occultism for a trauma base for mind control. The level I was used on was a White House/Pentagon level, so it was pretty extreme, pretty regimented, whereas I think what you're talking about there is a little more New Agey, a little more along those lines. So I'm not as familiar with that. I'm more familiar with genetic studies in breeding that were going on for genetic purposes, and genetic mind control. That's what Project MONARCH is: it's a genetic mind control project, and it's part of MK-ULTRA. MK-ULTRA has different branches, and the one that I was subjected to was a genetic mind control project. So I'm more familiar with things from that end than I am from the aspect you mentioned. Like in my daughter's case, she was born for espionage. Her father was mind-controlled, and he was used in mercenary paramilitary operations in very murderous aspects. They wanted to breed those abilities in with mine, which were more on a message-delivering aspect and a sexual aspect. And so they combined two multi-generational mind control slaves for creating Kelly. That's all I know. That's the kind of thing that I was exposed to, was that kind of deliberate effort. I certainly wouldn't have chosen to have anything to do with Wayne Cox under any circumstances, especially to father my child.

TRACY: So you were used as kind of a storage server for information, and a courier, correct?

CATHY: Very much so, and used primarily in the drug industry. The cocaine operations were so heavy back in those days, in the Caribbean and Mexico. I was used on the groundwork of NAFTA with then-President De la Madrid and Vice-President Salinas, and it had been determined even back then, when I was being used, that Salinas was going to go into the office of President of Mexico when George Bush went into the office of President of the United States. So it was already pre-determined. Both of them were in the Vice-Presidential capacity, and yet both of them had more power and influence than the figurehead presidents of both our countries. I saw some extreme inner workings in the groundwork for NAFTA. I was used in the capacity of funding the New World Order efforts [via] the CIA's involvement in the cocaine industry.

TRACY: Did you have any prior knowledge that George Bush, Jr. was going to be President?

CATHY: I knew that he was being conditioned. I had seen him. I knew he was definitely jostling for that. But I didn't know that aspect of it. I did hear conversations about Bill Clinton, but, you know, I'd refer people to the book on something like that. I wouldn't want to be quoted on that.

TRACY: Do you still believe that you have an immunity to all sexually transmitted diseases--that they gave this to you as part of your training?

CATHY: I have no reason not to believe that.

TRACY: Do you think that "They," the bad guys, have purposely bred AIDS, and other diseases like that, or have allowed them to proliferate while they possess the antidote or the vaccine.

CATHY: Mass genocide has been discussed, and has certainly come to pass and been perpetrated. AIDS is something that I have cause to suspect in that regard, based on the operations I was used for in Haiti, and based on conversations that I heard. Also, consider the fact that they did not use any kind of sexual protection whatsoever in the sexual activities that I was engaged in with these various government leaders, even coming right back from Haiti where AIDS was already rampant. Also, there was quite a bit of confidence surrounding that fact, and it was a known fact--that since I was used on a White House/Pentagon level, and was what they termed a "Presidential Model," they would not get AIDS from me, because I was "clean." That was the term used.

TRACY: Are these perpetrators primarily white and male? I know that you had experience with Hillary Clinton, and some other wives of prominent people. Do you think that there are a lot of women that are involved in this as well, on a hierarchical level?

CATHY: I knew several that were heavily involved. I think the mindset or propensity towards the New World Order effort through mind control of the masses spans all genders, race, countries, and nationalities. I don't see any differentiation except mindset, and there are people that believe the only way to world peace is through mind control of the masses. How can we have world peace that way, if there's no soul expression? That's a different definition of peace, which I guess would require peace-keeping forces rather than the power of love.

TRACY: If they're talking about mass genocide, though, then there must be certain groups of people that they wish to eliminate. I mean, did you not get that impression?

CATHY: Especially from a genetic aspect, yes, they wanted what they termed the "less desirables" to be eliminated from the planet, because the planet was what they considered to be too overpopulated anyway. I've definitely heard conversations to that effect, and the predictions that I heard I've seen come about, particularly through the spread of AIDS.

TRACY: But there are elite strains within all of the races that you are aware of that were considered worthy by them to preserve, and it’s just the lower elements of all the races that they want to eliminate. Is that correct?

CATHY: I would say so to a large degree, but mostly it’s the ones in the so-called “secret societies,” the people who were of like mind that they considered to be the most evolved and the ones who should survive.

TRACY: Were you ever abused within the confines of a Masonic lodge?

CATHY: Oh yes. Oh yes! Even in my younger years, because my mother’s father ran a Masonic lodge in Michigan. I mean, it was definitely sprinkled throughout my victimization. But then again, I wouldn’t say all Masons are bad, but I don’t think all Masons know what the ultimate secrets are.

TRACY: But you think this New World Order philosophy might be one of the ultimate secrets of Masonic teachings.

CATHY: I believe it’s an ultimate goal of many of them that are involved in Masonic aspects. But then again, any time you’ve got secret societies, and information is suppressed, they operate on the philosophy that secret knowledge equals power, and if they’ve got secret knowledge, they can exercise it over other people. That’s exactly what's been happening for way too long, and that's why I say, "It's truth that sets us free." It's time to start telling their secrets. It's time for the truth to be brought to light so that everyone can see exactly what's going on, and as far as I'm concerned, that's the only way we're going to be able to effectively combat terrorism.

TRACY: Well, the thing is that people have very short attention spans, and they don't have to be programmed to be that way. They are that way naturally. So how do you distill a message so that it's actually useful for people who hear it? I mean, if they see a "60 Minutes" piece on this, is that going to do it? Because in mind control, they distill a message down to a phrase or a couple of words, and they repeat that over and over again until people have it burned into their brains. Is there some way of distilling this information so that people will finally catch on?

CATHY: They need to expand their thoughts, and ask questions, and think outside the box. They've been limited in their thinking for so long, and it's like, people have gotten lazy mentally. It's time that we expand our thinking. When I recovered from mind control, what I had experienced was a more exaggerated scale of what everyone goes through. I mean, there is a form of mind control on a mass scale. There is a social engineering. There is a conditioning that has taken place. That, combined with the deliberate militaristic aspect, through things like video games, and stuff, is further conditioning society: the suppression of pertinent information, the suppression of technology, the suppression even of a fact like harmonics. Once people know about that, then we can be more vigilant to protect our free thought, instead of just having things driven into our heads through TV and through music. This is pertinent information. Why should it be a National Security secret? Why are the components of mind control being kept secret under the guise of National Security? It’s National Security that’s threatening the security of our nation, threatening the security of our free thought, and threatening the security of humanity as we know it. People have a right to this information, and it’s time that it came out. When people realize that mind control is a reality, they’re going to begin to ask questions. Asking questions is the key for them to start thinking out of the box, thinking beyond what they’ve been told, thinking beyond the little bits and pieces that they’ve been allowed to know. They’re going to be able to stop and think, “Hey, maybe this isn’t exactly new information. Maybe this is just a little tidbit they’re feeding us. Now what more is there?”

And once people begin to ask the questions, their eyes are open, and they start looking further. So it’s not that we can give them a pat answer. As a matter of fact, when Mark and I taught mental health back in early 90s on how to help people recover from sexual abuse, from trauma, from PTSD, and all these dissociative disorders, we were telling them that they needed to teach people how to think, not what to think. For example, when people were recovering memories of incest or sexual abuse, they remembered that they had sexual abuse in their past, but because of the kind of compartmentalization that happens, they weren’t really sure, and they were trying to remember exactly what happened. Since the mind is so suggestible, if the therapist asks at that time, “Was that Daddy who did that to you?,” then it becomes Daddy in their minds. So that’s telling them what to think, whereas teaching them how to think is to teach them to question, and say “Who was that? What were the circumstances?” Even details like, “What were you wearing?” Little details like that will bring the truth forward, instead of being told what to think.

And that’s what’s happening in society, even now, with the terrorist attacks. As that happens, we’re told over and over again what to think, and we need to be told how to think. And how to think is to begin to ask questions, and look further than just what we’re told--to be able to learn how our brain actually works, and what the limitations are. It’s essential that people shut off their TVs and look into mind control, and arm themselves with that knowledge. Once they have that, they’re on the road to freedom.

TRACY: Now, in your memories of your past, do you have screen memories in addition to real memories? How can you tell them apart?

CATHY: The only way to recover memory that’s too horrible to comprehend is to make it comprehensible. And the only way to make it comprehensible is to take it from the emotional to the logical. The way to do that is by writing. So I wrote out my memories. And what that does is it switches the information into the logic part of the brain, because it takes the logic part of the brain to move a pen. So the information’s becoming logical as it’s being written. Once it’s logical, it becomes comprehensible. Once it’s consciously comprehensible, then a person begins to recover. I functioned under mind control on a subconscious level all those years, and I had no ability to consciously think, or to reason. I had no conscious awareness at all until I recovered the memory. And when I began to recover by using the logic part of my brain, and making the incomprehensible comprehensible, I gained a conscious awareness. With that conscious awareness came the ability to ask questions, and to critically analyze, and to look at things.

It’s real easy to separate a screen memory from a real memory under conditions like that. You ask yourself: “What happened before?” “Well, I sat in front of the TV, or a sat in front of a movie, you know, or this equipment was being used.” Those kinds of things are really easy to remember, so ultimately, when I deprogrammed, I deprogrammed the program first, and that made it easy to separate the reality from what was being pumped into my head. It’s a very deliberate process as a recovery mechanism from the kind of robotic mind control that I had. In the first years that Mark and I were publicly speaking, back in the early 90s, on the issue of mind control, since I was one of the very first to have recovered, we were actually teaching mental health professionals how to help the numerous survivors that they were seeing recover as well. And one of the first steps was to be able to separate the screen memory, to be able to teach them how to think rather than what to think. In those days false memory was proliferating rapidly, because mental health was ignorant and did not know what they were dealing with. The information on mind control had been suppressed from mental health from the earliest years, back when Dr. Ewen Cameron, who’s the founder of our A.P.A., was actually working on mind control for the CIA in Montreal, Canada.

Of course, Dr. Cameron and the CIA were found guilty of their involvement in that, and actually had to pay some of their Canadians victims in a lawsuit, which, if you’re interested, is in a movie that they released. It's brilliant. It's a documentary that they released in Canada called The Sleep Room.. It was banned in the United States, but they are aware in Canada of what went on because of Dr. Cameron. And Dr. Cameron is the one who suppressed the information initially from mental health to the point where they had to relearn. They've since even had to rename the dissociative disorder that is a basis for mind control from Multiple Personality Disorder, which is a misnomer, to Dissociative Identity Disorder. This is a much more well-defined term, not only for what the disorder is, but for how to recover from it. Whereas with Multiple Personality Disorder, they get all kinds of demonic possessions, and this and that, and all kinds of superstitions sprinkled in it so heavily that they've had extreme difficulty. I don't know of any cases that have recovered from the superstitious aspect, whereas with what's happening now, people are actually beginning to recover. So I am one of the very, very first, and I am extremely fortunate to have survived, to have been able to recover, and to be able to help bring this information to light.

TRACY: So you didn't have multiple personalities, is that correct?

CATHY: Well, they termed it that at one time, but it's actually a dissociative disorder that creates a compartmentalization of memory in the brain. So I didn't have multiple personalities. I had the essence of who I am, or my personality, that was shattered into so many different parts, so that, for example, the part where my father would sexually abuse me--that part of my mind would compartmentalize around that event so that the rest of my mind could function normally. I couldn't think to bring to mind his sexual abuse until it happened again. And when it happened again, the part of my brain that knew how to deal with it would automatically open. Our brains are really phenomenal. That part of my brain would open to deal with that trauma again and again, and that trauma is all that part of my brain knew. That's not a personality. That's not a whole person there. That's a little tiny fragment of my brain and my own persona that was reserved just for my father, and knew only my father's abuse. It was like going through existence with blinders on. I only knew certain politicians, I only knew certain sexual activities, I only knew to be involved in drug industry. But whatever activities I was forced to carry out, I couldn't think to bring it to mind to discuss it with anybody. I could only do exactly what I was told to do. And that wasn't various personalities, see, that's just simply compartmentalized memory.

TRACY: Yeah, I understand. You didn't walk around thinking that your name was Mary or Helen, or thinking you were a little girl.

CATHY: Exactly, exactly. See what a difference that makes for recovery? If someone's going through the role play of being this person, that person, and all, how are they going to recover? That's not reality. That's the misconception right there. Another really important point is: I was used in a sexual capacity in later years, during the Reagan/Bush administration, because my sexuality had been so heightened from the early sexual abuse. It had actually gone into an area of eating, or drinking, or survival, because of my father's substituting his penis for my mother's nipple. That goes in on the strongest of levels of just basic survival. That's where my sexuality went into a heightened mode, and it just stayed heightened all my life. Whether mind control is used on a sexually abused child or not, their sexuality is heightened.

TRACY: I hope this isn’t too personal a question, but I was kind of curious about it myself. You said that there was some kind of carving, some kind of scar that they put on your genital region. What was it?

CATHY: It was a vaginal mutilation carving that was used in pornography. It was used to fulfill some perversions, or whatever. It’s something that doesn’t go away, and it was something that was done to my vagina where it looks like there is a face that actually comes out. It’s hideous, and I remember exactly when it happened, how it happened, and how it was carved. I wasn’t given any drugs, or any kind of anesthetic or anything, so I certainly was acutely aware of it, and it was painful. But it’s appearance has a function, which I don’t get (but then again, I don’t get a lot of these perversions), and then it also has some physical aspect that can give men pleasure in a little bit different way. So they knew what they were doing, and I’m not the only one that’s been carved that way, but I don’t know of anyone that’s survived who has it. It’s definitely evidence that doesn’t go away. Kind of like stun gun prod marks, you know, it just is there.

TRACY: So you said that it gives the man pleasure. Is this, like, the same concept as ribbed condoms?

CATHY: Yeah, maybe.

TRACY: Was it distinctive? Would you say that if a person found a pornographic picture of you that was taken, you could match it up?

CATHY: Oh yeah, absolutely. No question about it.

TRACY: You said that Larry Flynt had some pictures of you taken in Hustler. Do you know when those were taken, and when they were published?

CATHY: Yeah, different ones in different ways for different purposes. I'm not really sure what all magazines were used, but there were a couple that do stand out more.

TRACY: But you wouldn't know what to tell me if I were to go through some back issues to try to find you in there, or anything?

CATHY: You know, on some of them, yeah. He's got a few that are more underground than Hustler.

TRACY: How old is Kelly now?

CATHY: 21 [In 2001].

TRACY: So if she’s been locked up in a juvenile institution, shouldn’t she be getting out about now?

CATHY: She was turned out when she was 18. She is on her own to a degree, but Kelly still needs rehabilitation desperately for the high-level mind control that she was exposed to. In essence the key that locked the door to her mind needs to be used to unlock it. When I recovered my memory, and remembered the trauma, that actually took down the barriers in my brain, which gave me access to those parts of my brain. Instead of compartmentalization, I now have free-flow full access to all of my mind. In Kelly’s case, her compartments were created through harmonic vibration, and they need to be harmonically vibrated back down. So she’s still got the compartments in her brain that can be accessed, and she still is definitely accessible. She has an extremely difficult time just getting by, particularly with this administration that’s in right now. She’s having a really hard time.

TRACY: Wasn’t she forbidden while she was in the juvenile facility from using the word “George Bush”?

CATHY: Yes, it’s a matter of court record. She and I were both forbidden to say the words “George Bush,” “Wizard of Oz,” and “mind control.” That’s pretty weird, in itself, that they would put that in a court record. Kelly’s court case--there wasn’t anything legal about it. So much so that a District Attorney actually went before the court on Kelly’s and my behalf, and told the judge that he was in violation of this law, and this law, and this law. And the judge at that time said, “Laws do not apply in this case for Reasons of National Security.”

TRACY: And reasons for that were never given, right?

CATHY: No, but it’s rare. Usually those kind of statements are made behind closed doors, rarely as a matter of public record in court. But the fact that the National Security Act has been invoked in my daughter’s case is pretty significant in itself. It’s pretty validating to the magnitude of what she went through. So the gross injustices that she went through while in the custody of the State of Tennessee are to me just as horrific and horrible as what she endured under mind control. It’s awful what that child has been through. Just absolutely horrible.

TRACY: What was she being institutionalized for?

CATHY: This is kind of complex, but brainwashing was one of the first forms of mind control used on an espionage level, and like I said, Kelly had been born and bred for an espionage level from the onset. In the old days they used to give the old cyanide pill, that you may have heard about, which they would take before being tortured, so that they could die with their secrets instead of revealing them. That pill has been replaced with programming. The subconscious mind can be manipulated to the point where it controls the areas of breathing and the respiratory area, and blood flow, so that even military Special Forces, for example, can take a bullet and not bleed. So they figured that they didn’t need to have that cyanide pill anymore. Why not just program espionage agents with an automatic circulatory or respiratory failure? In Kelly’s case, hers is respiratory failure, activated as soon as she begins to remember her past. When we were in Alaska, after Mark rescued Kelly and me, we felt safe for the first time in our whole lives. We knew love for the first time. It was such a dramatic difference. I really thought I had died and gone to Heaven. I believe that in one of those near-death experiences that I had actually crossed over, and I thought that Kelly and I had died, but of course we hadn’t. Since we felt safe, we began to remember, and the memories started flashing, and they were intrusive, and bits and pieces of what had happened started coming forward. Up until that time, I was completely amnesiac about my past. I didn’t know where I had been for ten years. I didn’t know what had happened. I had absolutely no memory of it whatsoever. When Mark first rescued me, I really thought that I was 24 years old. It was a trip finding out I was 30.

TRACY: They had lied to you about your age?

CATHY: I had no concept of time. Under mind control, since there’s no ability to maintain a continuity of thought or a conscious awareness, there’s no concept of time. And with no concept of time, there’s no ability to know how old you are. And they actually did some studies on aging based on that, because if a person doesn’t know how they’re supposed to act their age, or how they’re supposed to look, they don’t, and people don’t age properly. Oftentimes people under mind control are age-inappropriate. Their age doesn’t show in their face. They can maintain a youthful look way beyond what’s normal. So I had no concept of time. I’ve caught up with that since those days, now that I’m aware. But since we felt safe, we began remembering. When we began remembering, Kelly went into respiratory failure. When she went into that programmed respiratory failure, she was taken to Humana Hospital in Anchorage, Alaska. She wasn’t responding to any kind of conventional medication. That’s the first time that I heard the term “Multiple Personality Disorder.” That’s the first time I heard a term applied to what we had experienced. The psychiatrist that was treating her initially diagnosed her with Multiple Personality Disorder, with active mind control programming.

TRACY: That’s a diagnosis?

CATHY: That’s a diagnosis. And that diagnosis was rejected by the State of Tennessee when she was thrust into their custody. When they took custody of her, they would not accept diagnoses from outside the state, and of course the cover-up ensued from there. But Kelly ended up in the custody of the State of Tennessee because of a Federal program, the Violent Crimes Claims Commission, that was actually overseen out of Washington, D.C. It was a catch net, in essence, and Kelly was scooped up immediately, and thrust into the Tennessee system. Once it was determined in Alaska what she suffered from, that diagnosis was picked up, and the State of Tennessee took custody of her through illegal and immoral means. And she was raised in their custody, then, right up until she was 18 years old, and of legal age, and it left her in quite a mentally devastated condition. But Kelly does know who and what Mark and I are up against. She has had enough memory to be aware of that, which has given her a very deep and profound insight into life, into reality, into what’s happening these days. In so many ways she’s a wise person, yet at the same time her ongoing need for qualified rehabilitation leaves her unable to hold down a job, for example, or to become a contributing part of society like she would like to be. She’s still not free to be what she wants. She doesn’t have the ability to have the soul expression to do exactly what she would choose.

TRACY: Is she not accepting help from you and Mark?

CATHY: She and I are very, very close, and we’ve had a lot of conversations since she’s been out of custody and everything. But there’s extreme limitations on it because when she sees me, when we’re together, when we talk about anything, it triggers memories. Because she feels safe and loved, it automatically starts to flood her mind. When it floods her mind, she goes into respiratory failure. And that’s a reality that she and I live with to date, which has got to be one of the most cruel things that any parent and child could ever endure. She knows that, like truth, I’m not going to go away. I’m not going to abandon her needs in any way whatsoever, and Mark and I are totally dedicated to getting the information out on mind control. Instead of operating out of desire for vengeance on the perpetrators, or wanting to expose their political influence and all so much, it’s more out of love for humanity, love for Kelly, love for the children that motivates us. Love is the most powerful force in the universe, and it’s certainly what drives Mark and I today. Hate, vengeance--those kind of negativities are immobilizing, and they actually hinder progress. There isn’t time for that. It’s essential to get the information out for Kelly’s sake and for everyone’s sake.

TRACY: Now, is there significance in the name “Kelly,” because I know that Brice Taylor’s daughter is named “Kelly,” and there are some others also. It’s been said that slaves were told to name their daughters “Kelly” for ease in tracking, or something like that. That’s what I’ve heard. What’s your answer?

CATHY: I don’t know, it’s something about--what’s it called: “Kiley,” the messenger of death, or something? There’s some negative aspect to why they wanted it. It’s really more occult based.

TRACY: Oh, Kali, the Hindu Goddess of Death!

CATHY: Yeah! And I’ve got a sister named Kelly. My daughter’s named Kelly. I didn’t have any choice in that. Yeah, there are a lot of Kellys out there. Just because someone’s named that certainly doesn’t indicate any kind of conspiracy, or mind control, or anything like that. But nevertheless, there is an inordinate number of Kellys out there that have been used on that level. I think that’s even why they used the name “Kelly Bundy” [on Married … with Children], because it was so prevalent.

TRACY: I’m so glad that you gave me that answer, because the other thing about how it makes it easier to track them doesn’t make any sense. If you’ve got 100,000 Kellys that you’re supposed to track…

CATHY: That sounds like something that would come more from the Brice Taylor/Sue Ford direction, since you brought up her name. She is someone that I am certainly familiar with. I think that she's done more damage than anybody with her misinformation, based on the fact that the mind control aspect is something that she pulled in initially from false memory through her therapist, and kind of stuck to. I can't imagine what would motivate somebody to do that. Nevertheless, she was sexually abused, that I'm aware of from having known her, and she suffered from Dissociative Identity Disorder, and needed to recover from that. She is one of the most prominently known victims of the False Memory Syndrome that was being perpetrated through the mental health system, and which she continues to perpetrate through the misinformation and disinformation that she's putting out there, which I think is a crime against humanity in itself. I wish she would stop, and I wish that she would ultimately find her own peace and know that truth makes her free. But you know, of course that's not something that I can do. All I can do is just count on the reality that truth always prevails, and love wins.

TRACY: I was wondering what you would say about her, because I haven't read her whole book [Thanks for the Memories], but I did read an excerpt where she says that she went and stayed at your house, or that you stayed at her house, you and Mark, and then she supported you financially for months and months, and went through all this programming. And then she says, "At the end of it all, Mark told me that I wasn't a victim after all." And it sounds so horrible. I was just wondering what you had to say.

CATHY: Actually, I had heard that she had rewritten her original novel, when it was a novel, which I think would have been admirable. She's someone that Mark helped recover from a Dissociative Disorder, because we were working real close with mental health back in those days, and the whole False Memory Syndrome was there. And it is possible for someone to recover from Dissociative Disorder while having had implanted false memories through bad therapy, with the "Was that Daddy that did that?" type of questions. Recovery was possible, and she did recover, but all it did was … I don't know. Somewhere along the way she picked up a weird motive and a weird direction. I can't understand why somebody would do that, but she did nevertheless. So what does that mean about the recovery process for someone like that? I don't know. It just means we've got a whole world of problems out there that we've got to overcome, from the misinformation and disinformation that began back with the Dr. Ewen Cameron mind control at the very onset of the organization of mental health. That's another case where mental health itself needs to think outside of the box, and think beyond the education that they paid to have, and realize that a PhD doesn't mean they know it all.

TRACY: I think one of the side effects of this information about Project MONARCH coming out is that there are a lot of desperate people out there who have been traumatized in their past, but what they really want is attention.

CATHY: It's really hard to understand that, you know? For me it is.

TRACY: I don't find it hard to understand. It's like the same type of people who go around saying that they were abducted by UFOs. I think that it's the same scenario. I mean, there are just so many people who come out saying that they were victims of mind control, and you can tell that they're just congenital liars. And maybe they did experience some form of mind control, but how do you separate that from the fact that they're liars?

CATHY: Exactly. People are people, whether they've suffered from a dissociative disorder or not. When they recover, people are people, and personally, I don't choose to live in the "victim mentality," or the "survivor mentality." There's too many exciting aspect to life. There's too much to learn, too much to grow with, and this is a phenomenal process. I am so fortunate to have recovered from all of that, and to be free to think for myself and to be myself. Living true to soul and being myself every day is a non-stop, constant pleasure that I never take for granted. It's given me different priorities in life, a different perspective on life. Things that other people think are worth arguing about and fighting about, to me seem really trivial in comparison to the magnitude of what really happens in this world, and the wonder of our brains.

Where we're going to be able to go with this information on mind control is exciting in itself. It will give us a view into the other 90% of our brain that we haven't used. We're always told that we use about 10% of our brain, and with a dissociative disorder, you're blasted into other parts of your brain. So much has been learned, and there are so many exciting things ahead for people to learn, about what their brains are capable of. Once they realize it, they can utilize it. But that's an exciting aspect to the future that keeps me hopeful that people will wake up, arm themselves with the information so that we can get the problems taken care of. The truth makes us free, and once we’re free, we’re going to be able to expand, and learn and grow in ways that people never dreamed were even possible. The future looks really exciting from my perspective. I can’t imagine miring it down by clinging to some negativities of the past

Access Granted: An Interview with Mark Phillips

Mark Phillips is Cathy O'Brien's husband, and co-author with her of The TRANCE Formation of America., as well as the more recent ACCESS DENIED For Reasons of National Security. He claims to have rescued her and hr daughter Kelly from the CIA's Project MONARCH and mind-controlled sex slavery. This interview took place in October of 2001.

TRACY: How did you come to know about mind control and Project MONARCH?

MARK: Well, Project MONARCH--that information I'll have to relate a little bit later on. I became acquainted with mind control--certainly not trauma-based mind control, that was something that I was just aware of, but I had absolutely no interface with it whatsoever. I worked in a variety of positions working closely with the intelligence community. The Central Intelligence Agency was one of those communities. The others I can't really go into any detail on because I did sign an oath of secrecy. However, I worked in the capacity as a Defense Department subcontractor, so I'm not bound by the same oaths as would be someone who worked strictly military. I became acquainted with mind control, or external control of the mind through just association with now declassified information that was acquired at the Primate Center in Atlanta, and out in Colorado, and at various other Defense Department subcontracting installations that were researching, and doing what I call "mind mapping." I use that term loosely. I don't think that is a real term. But that's really how I became aware of mind control, and how it was being used, particularly within the Soviet Union. This was during the late 60s and early 70s, when there were large masses of people in certain places within the Soviet Union, primarily within Russia proper, that were being used for a variety of methodologies, including just normal information control. They were more or less sequestered from the rest of the population of the country at the time, and all of the information that they were fed was very controlled, and very contrived.

There were also a number of studies going on in the area of genetics, and I was not privy to any of those specifically. That was how I became acquainted with one of the projects. There were about 120 odd projects that I was aware of, and I recall the names of about a dozen or so of them. But Project MONARCH was one that was used, actually one of the smaller ones. They were not using specifically blond-haired, blue-eyed people--you know the Nazi mentality-type family genetic line. They weren't following that specifically. They were more or less staying within the blond-haired areas, but they were using people of all mixed nationalities. Project MONARCH was one that was used in Michigan, Pennsylvania, small parts of Ohio within a number of religious sects there, as well as in California--in Northern California, particularly. Beyond that, I don't know of any other place where Project MONARCH was an active project. [Editor's note: the use of Monarch programming and its trail of victims is likely more widespread, including Canada.] There has been some information released, but the name of Project MONARCH has never, ever been declassified, and since I did not work in that project, I can talk about it, because it's hearsay. It has never been a term that has shown up in any Freedom of Information Act documents. All the genetic research that I know about, with regards to MK-ULTRA, for instance--none of the Project names have been released, that I know of.

TRACY: And besides blond hair, what other genetic qualities were they looking for?

MARK: They were also looking for certain bone structure. They were looking primarily at the family involved. Even though I wasn't aware that they were specifically targeting multi-generational incest, I knew that they were looking at families. Particularly I was aware of the twin studies, and I was also aware of the research that was specifically targeting persons or families that had at least two generations of very specific artistic capabilities that seemed to be genetically encoded. It was pretty benign stuff, frankly, and it certainly did not prepare me for what I ran into in 1988 when I met Cathy O'Brien.

TRACY: How did you meet Cathy, and what did you think when you first met her?

MARK: Well, the first time I saw her, I believe, was at the airport, when she was meeting her handler and husband by the name of Alex Houston, a so-called "country music MC" and state fair ventriloquist, supposedly an entertainer. I didn't find him very entertaining. But nevertheless, he and I had a business relationship, and I didn't have to tolerate his so-called "entertainment business." I met Cathy very briefly, like "Hello." Virtually no eye contact when she picked Alex up at the airport. It was a most peculiar thing: most business people, when they're in a partnership, usually have dinners, and they have social gatherings with the families of their partners, and this did not happen with myself and Alex Houston. Why, I never really questioned, and since I did not particularly want to socialize with him anyway, it really didn’t matter. He and I didn’t really seem to share any common interests. He played golf and I didn’t, and he was into country music, and I wasn’t. It more or less stopped there.

I met Cathy, actually, at a party that I had in my house, to which Alex brought her. That was the first time that I actually met her, or had any chance to talk to her, and talking to her was very much like talking to my hand. She really wasn’t very responsive. I was concerned just in the back of my mind because of the amount of white that was at the top of the iris of her eyes. In other words, her eyes were really wide, and she didn’t have a proper blink response, which I equated more or less as probably stemming from some sort of trauma in her life. I really wasn’t interested in knowing much about her because she did not reflect her ego as having much intellect driving it, and I was not interested in pursuing any intelligent conversation with her. She had a plastic smile, and wasn’t dressed like anyone that I associated with, either. She looked very much like a 1950s prostitute, and I did not find that to be conducive with anything that I wanted to have any association with, frankly. I thought perhaps that that was conducive to the country music business, and that was the reason that she was dressed in that kind of attire. I didn’t associate it with anything else. I had no reason to. She had very little to say to me.

TRACY: And when did you catch on?

MARK: Actually, I didn't catch on. Mind control is so subtle that when people tell me that "I can see that that person is under mind control," I immediately just walk away from them, because, quite frankly, unless you are very well-versed in this particular science, and you literally test the person … There are some things you can do to test someone's suggestibility, and this sort of thing, on the spot. And linguistically, you can listen to someone and know if they're this or that. But knowing if someone is under mind control, per se, is virtually impossible unless these people are clinically tested, and that wasn't my forte. I mean, I had an interest in the mind, but certainly not in mind control, per se. It wasn't until I was in China that I was notified, because of my company. I was president of the Uniphayse Corporation, and Uniphayse was a manufacturer of large capacitor bank systems to help the mining industry over there conserve on energy so they wouldn't have to shut down those mines. Shutting a mine down is like shutting a glass or a steel plant down--it costs more to start it back up than it would to have kept it running, and they had a huge energy shortage over there because of when they lived in their proverbial "Bamboo Curtain," and to the West in China it is a constitutional law that they have to maintain a balance in trade.

In other words, it cannot be indebted to any country. In order for them to literally launch into the 20th century, they had to technologically speaking, be able to keep up. They had to be able to provide goods and services, and those goods and services, of course, took energy to produce. And as a result, they had a tremendous need for energy conservation, and that was what my company provided. It was an ancient technology to help them produce more product at a lesser cost. It was the Chinese military, of course, that ran the mining industry, because anything made out of metal, the Chinese military is in charge of. I know this sounds peculiar, but this is Chinese law. Now this is the People’s Republic of China. This is not Taiwan we’re talking about.

At any rate, my counterparts were Chinese military people, and it was at the ribbon-cutting ceremony of our factory at the Chin-Chin province that I was notified that my partner, who was not present with me at the time, Alex Houston, was involved in both child and adult pornography, which is punishable by death in China. He was also engaged in drug running and money laundering. This would be very much like telling you that there’s an alien sleeping under your bed, or something. It totally blew me away. I could not even begin to comprehend it or believe it, because even though I had no personal relationship with Alex Houston, he did not appear to me to be on an intellectual level with the people that I had been associated with by working within the intelligence community. Of course, I worked within the scientific aspect of it, and these people were very, very bright, and most of them very nice people, as far as I knew. I heard stories about people engaged in espionage, the proverbial “Manchurian Candidate” production facilities located on certain military bases, using technologies that were brought over from Project PAPERCLIP. But I personally had no contact with that. I mean, it was just idle chatter with some scientists that I was acquainted with, most of them with NASA.

The intelligence officer who confronted me with the information about Alex Houston, and offered to buy his shares of stock out, which I thought was a takeover, literally, of all of my work to set the company up, and to bring in the engineers from all over the United States to do all of this. I thought my investment of time and money had gone down the drain with their takeover. I had been warned that this could happen. It’s called a joint venture agreement, which is what I had. But that was not the case. They literally let me maintain that extra 1%, so I was still installed as President of the company, and I was not going to loose my position, or the company, or my shares of stock. They were even going to fund it, which they did. They gave me the money to buy Alex Houston out, and I did buy him out.

But in the process, when they did all of this, I contacted someone when I got back in the United States from the State Department that I knew through a channel, and told him that I had seen documentation not only on Alex Houston, but also on myself, that was classified. I said, “I don’t know whether they falsified it on Alex Houston, or if any of their story is true. I have no way of knowing. But I am going to launch a personal and private investigation on it. But I did want to alert you that the very people that I am in business with are in possession of classified documents on Mark Phillips, and some of that stuff looked like it had original stamps on it, and original signatures.” Any time you read a classified document, particularly on the work history of some individual working in the intelligence community, somebody has to sign a piece of paper. Back in those days you would sign it on the border, or on the side, or you stamp it and sign it, and some of those papers they had were originals, or at least they certainly appeared to be.

Moving on, I was totally just blown away by the fact that a couple of days later, or some time past, I don’t know, a day or two, I got a call back from an unidentified person with the State Department who related enough detail to me for me to know that it was, indeed coming from that office, to leave the case alone, never mention it again, that it had no significance, and don’t probe it, in essence. I’m paraphrasing. I’ve got them written down here somewhere. But nevertheless, I was completely shocked into the reality by what I had heard from that Chinese intelligence officer, and by my partner in China, who was a major arms dealer for the Chinese, and he owned a ship line. His name was Mr. William Yoon, a very good man, by the way, in spite of his profession, and he informed me that they had no reason to lie about it, and that he knew for a fact that it was true. I trusted Mr. Yoon implicitly. I had no reason not to. He had never misled me and never lied to me. He was very clever and very wealthy and successful businessman, Korean by birth, and lived in Hong Kong at that time.

It was Mr. Yoon who told me that it would be nice if someone could help that woman out, and that little girl that she had, but it would be impossible since, in essence, he was just echoing what that Chinese intelligence officer had told me, that Alex Houston was connected all the way to the White House. Well that was absurd to me. At the time, it just was totally off-the-wall. However, when I got back home, and had that fly up in my face, I did launch an investigation through some friends of mine who were still active within the intelligence community, both within the military, and with the CIA. I was then informed that this was in fact true, and that I had best leave it alone. At that point in time, I was trying to make a decision as to what to do, because I needed to go back to Hong Kong for business reasons, and I could not be laden down with a couple of people that were literally traumatized out of their minds. I certainly wasn't qualified to help them myself.

So through a string of events that are outlined in our book, The TRANCE Formation of America., I moved on to making a personal decision, actually based on one pivotal point: the local sheriff came and told me about the surveillance that I had been enduring. I lived in a rural area. He informed me that my life was in jeopardy, that friends within the FBI had informed him, out of the Nashville office that I was as good as dead if I did not leave that woman and that girl alone, and stay away from it. That was the inspiration to move forward, and I do not take threats lightly, nor do I ever discuss them with anybody. Cathy and I have a rule: we do not discuss any harassment or threats, period, because I don't want anybody getting credit for it. I'll go after them my own way.

And as a direct consequence, since I knew what I was up against, I thought I'd just try to outsmart them, and get Cathy and Kelly into some form of qualified help. I certainly had the money to do it, and I thought I had the connections. But unfortunately, there was so little known about helping people, and the physicians around the United States and Canada that were doing public research developing a treatment modality for what they call "polyfragmented"--it was called Multiple Personality Disorder back in those days, which couldn't be further from the truth. I'm glad they changed the name. But nevertheless, I couldn't find anybody. The first person that did contact me was Dr. Jolyn West out of UCLA. And of course he's dead now. Hopefully I'll have his records soon. They normally release them a couple of years after they're dead, under the FOIA. But I was contacted by Dr. West's office because I had put an inquiry out, and apparently one of my inquiries hit the wrong button, and I wound up getting the bad guys all over me.

TRACY: You mean you were threatened?

MARK: Um, how many times? The bottom line is, I came from that world. It was absurd to threaten me, because for one thing, threats are meaningless. These people don't threaten you, they just do it. I told Cathy at the time, "Actually these people are being very polite. These threats are a polite way of saying 'Please, please don't go any further with this.'" So I took what I had and turned it over to some people, like the Head of U.S. Customs at that time. I turned it over to him through channels that he trusted. In other words, I did it through political channels out of Washington, and through intelligence channels out of Langely as well, to ensure that the information got into the hands of the people that could be acquainted with some of the players involved in this stuff. And since I had very little hard proof at the time, I proceeded just to focus on getting Kelly some help, and in the process was handed information, piece by piece, on how to help Cathy. Because Cathy had not been structured by anybody, as far as a doctor making the usual mistakes of asking "How does that make you feel?," and doing re-associations with the traumas that she had endured, she recovered quite nicely.

It took about a year, actually about 9 months almost to the date from the time that I started. And I got this information through a series of 800 numbers that were given to me in a most clandestine, covert way. I don't even know who I was talking to, and I didn't know if the information was real. I mean, it sounded logical, and it was easy to apply, but I didn't know if I was hurting her, or if I was helping her. I had no clue, except that she seemed to be getting better, and by that I mean that she stopped her constant state of dissociation. She acquired a sense of time. She acquired a sense of self, and who she was, and where she'd been. Then I started collecting those details up, handing them over to people that were in a capacity, working for the government, to get them verified. And when they started getting them verified, one or two of them made their usual mistakes, They tapped on the wrong doors, apparently, and that created some very serious problems. As a result I was almost indicted for something that I didn't do. That's usually what they do.

TRACY: What was it?

MARK: Well, they said that I had written a threatening letter to the President of the United States. That was untrue. I had written a letter to the President of the United States, even though I knew that he was named and involved in the thing, but I had a federal lawyer eyeball the letter, and then I had a United States congressman read it, and then hand-deliver it to the President. I think it was that simple. So I was clear 100%. So when the FBI took me down and fingerprinted me, I actually thought it was probably one of the funniest things, a pathetic type of humor. Because, I mean, my fingerprints, they must have had 10,000 copies of them. To put me through that intimidation process was ridiculous. I had lost everything that I had, and, you know, if you back somebody up against a wall after you've taken everything away from them, and then you threaten them, then they have nothing to lose. A man that has nothing to lose is extremely dangerous, if he knows the rules, and I did know the rules.

TRACY: What were you doing to deprogram Cathy?

MARK: Well, the process of actually deprogramming somebody--you don’t ask them any questions. It’s not like most people would think. I had to know certain codes, keys and triggers. I had to, and I was provided a few of those, enough to get the information flow going inside of her own head. She had to write. She wasn’t allowed to verbalize. I wasn’t able to ask her any questions. Really, what it amounted to was, I was no more than a bodyguard and a nurse, and a housekeeper, and a cook, if you want to get right down to the nuts and bolts of it. The process is outlined in our book. We’d be on this phone for quite a while if I went through each step, but basically I had to just sequester Cathy away from all forms of information. In other words, her suggestibility was so high that if she saw an ad on TV for Kentucky Fried Chicken, she could taste it and smell it in the house. I mean, it was the Pavlovian Dog thing. So I had to keep her away from all sources of information. She had to pretty much live inside of her head during this period of time, and I was, of course, just trying to keep us alive through what little savings that I had left. I was just making sure that the bad guys didn’t know that I was interested in any of the content of what she was saying.

Quite frankly, the stuff she was telling me was outside of my realm of experience. I had never knowingly been acquainted with anyone who had been a victim of family incest. I wasn't raised that way, nor would I have been able to recognize it, even. So the stuff that she was telling me sounded 100% totally preposterous. The only thing I did was, I made sure that there were certain things that could verify whether or not her memories were correct. For one thing, she would write them down, and three weeks later, if she could remember exactly what she wrote down, word for word, verbatim, and the beginning and the end of the particular event that she was describing, and the smell and the tastes involved, in other words, the olfactory sense, if it was involved, then I knew it wasn't what is called a "screen memory," or a false memory. Everybody has false memories. Everybody has screen memories, and two people, if they see an accident, will recall it differently, for instance. But when someone is under trauma, they have a photographic memory, and if they are at the point of that trauma, the photographic memory also is compartmentalized cellularly. In addition to that, they also have complete memory as far as the olfactory sense goes, and that's pretty much the tell-taler right there. One of the oddest things that I ran across with Cathy was, she had forgotten that she had ever been able to dream in her entire life.

Many years later, Cathy and I got onto the lecture circuit, and of course we attracted mental health and law enforcement first, because I thought that would be the safest way of getting this information out, and the most credible way of getting it out. I never dreamed of going public with it. Quite frankly, they shoot messengers, and this kind of stuff would be hard for most people to accept, because they have these impressions that entertainers and people involved in high-level politics might be sociopaths, but they're not pedophiles. Or, they might be this, but they're not that. So I didn't think it would be a good idea to go public with this. I think I’m jumping around a bit. I was mentioning the dream state thing being the oddest part. When we got on the road, a number of people would come and tell me that they knew they were under mind control because they dreamed this, and they dreamed that, and they dreamed this, and I’m thinking: “Yes, you definitely have a problem, but I’m not qualified to diagnose you. How about taking this test?” And this test is commonly called a D.E.S. test. It’s a test for your level of suggestibility, and dissociativeness that all of us have.

TRACY: What do the letters stand for?

MARK: I was afraid you would ask that. Oh my goodness. I can almost see it myself. I do not have the luxury of a photographic memory. But nevertheless, the DES test was developed around 1990--1991, and it was a result of some information I had released, as well as a number of physicians who were studying the rise in the phenomena of what was then called Multiple Personality Disorder. Particularly they were studying individuals coming out of the military. These people were projecting different personas, but they were unaware of each other. But in fact it was one personality that was fragmented, and what they were seeing were the coping skills that each persona or fragment had developed. They were naming them, and labeling them, and all this incredible nonsense. It became almost humorous, except that it was so sad for the patients. These doctors would stand up and say, “Well, I’ve got a patient with 712 personalities,” and another one would say, “That’s nothing. I’ve got one with 1215 personalities.” And it became a spitting match, and it was almost absolutely absurd. Cathy probably had thousands of persona fragments, and many of them were because of the change in histamine. Her face would change, and her eye color would change, and her skin would change. There were a lot of changes that the religious community for many years called demonic possession. I mean, it is quite frightening. If you see it for the first time and you don't know what you're looking at, it's terrifying, as a matter of fact. I won't say "quite frightening," it's just plum terrifying.

However, there is a very logical, scientifically-based reason for this change, and there's also a reason why the person doesn't dream at night, or have any recall in dreams. I happen to believe--and this is a theory of mine that has yet to be proven, publicly--I happen to believe that everyone dreams, regardless of whether they're under mind control or not. But under mind control, they have absolutely no recall whatsoever of any dreams. Now, if someone is suffering from horrific abuse, yes, they'll dream at night. If they've endured a severe trauma where perhaps they endured a near-death experience, they will have horrific dreams as a result of it. And people who suffer from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder have horrific dreams. All the stuff that's been happening as a result of the recent terrorist attacks has caused untold numbers of people to suffer from varying levels of Posttraumatic Stress Disorder, with horrific nightmares that either could be or could not be directly associated with what they saw on television.

TRACY: If dreams are supposed to happen mostly during the Rapid Eye Movement stage of sleep, and if these mind controlled slaves can't blink when they're awake, maybe that can't do it when they're asleep, either.

MARK: Well, that's a very good observation. What you just said is very true. Most dreams occur during the R.E.M. state. The R.E.M. state occurs after about 2 or more hours of rest. It normally occurs between two and four hours, and you normally have around 17 minutes per episode of R.E.M. state. And this particular sleep state is not possible for someone under mind control to have, because if they do allow these people to go into R.E.M. state, then the sleep deprivation thing is over. Their brain chemistry will return back to a normal level, and these people will rebel and run. You know, the fight or flight syndrome kicks in. So, yes, when someone is under mind control, the R.E.M. state is interrupted, and it is interrupted first through a ritualistic program. Whoever their handler is has to interrupt their sleep through some kind of trauma, so that they are not allowed to go into R.E.M. sleep. And once this pattern is established, it becomes part of their nightly routine. With Cathy, and Kelly as well, that was the first thing that I noticed. They did not sleep soundly. They would just sleep restlessly for an hour or an hour and a half, under the 2-hour minimum that it requires to have R.E.M. sleep, for your brain chemistry to change.

TRACY: I was curious about whether or not you had any experience with personally: I'm always hearing about these Project MONARCH slaves, and how they have levels of programming that correspond to Greek letters. Did you have any experience with that?

MARK: No. As a matter of fact, these stories circulate, and we hear them, and at one point in Cathy's relationship with me, when we were spending most of our days in court, I mean, literally, for a couple of years, I didn’t have much else to do except research this stuff. And so, yeah, I followed the trail of some of these stories, and they always dropped back into the same mental institution, and the same person. It was a doctor who was recognized as credible who had released this information, without any validation whatsoever. Actually, someone who’s been a victim of mind control would not know it. They would never have any conscious awareness of it, unless they had gone through the deprogramming process, or unless they had some sort of brain surgery. There are a number of extraordinary conditions that might trigger some memories, but people who claim mind control, with the Alpha-Beta-Delta-Theta programming denote some stuff that does have some basis of reality to it.

As far as the symbols going for the victims themselves, of course they wouldn’t know that stuff. But there has been reference, very credible reference that cannot be proven because that kind of information has been redacted from the FOIA files for MK-ULTRA. I can tell you categorically, “Yes, there’s Delta programming, yes, there’s Beta programming. Yes.” But no, I’m not going to say that victims of this stuff were aware of any particular Greek alphabet.

Where's Johnny? An Interview with Noreen Gosch

Noreen Gosch is the author of Why Johnny Can't Come Home and founder of the Johnny Gosch Foundation, which can be found at johnnygosch.com. Her son Johnny Gosch was kidnapped in 1982. The case was very high-profile and was featured several times on America's Most Wanted. However, media interviews became harder to obtain when Ms. Gosch began voicing her opinions about the alleged connection between her son's kidnapping and Project MONARCH. This interview took place on September 3, 2001.

TRACY: Why do you think your son was chosen to be kidnapped?

NOREEN: From the reports that we have gotten, from Paul Bonacci, who was one of the victims, and a witness providing us with information, Johnny was chosen because he fit the description of what they were looking for in the pornography and prostitution industry. Paul Bonacci testified to this fact in a courtroom February 7th of 1999 before Federal Judge Urbom.

TRACY: Do you know what the specific traits were that they were looking for?

NOREEN: Well, he was blond, blue-eyed, and tall. They looked for kids that were from the type of homes where they would be, basically, in a normal situation. Not a one-parent home, but the typical two-parent home, you know with the pet dog and that type of thing. A paper boy. They had been, according to Paul Bonacci, kidnapping kids that had been runaways, kids that were fairly streetwise, and they decided--by they, I mean the people that were involved in this particular kidnapping--they decided to go for kids that might not be as streetwise, perhaps just a little more naive. This is what Paul Bonacci said when the Judge asked him that question, and it sounds pretty logical when you consider the kidnapper's point of view. I suppose they feel that those kids are easier to intimidate and/or manage when they have them under their control.

TRACY: I read the sample chapter from your book posted on your web page. You seem to believe that the police department was purposely bungling the investigation.

NOREEN: Oh, it's not that I seem to believe it. It happened. The morning of the kidnapping, we had five witnesses, and every one of them saw the man, talked to the man, saw the man flicking the dome light on and off three times. A second man came out from between two houses and followed Johnny around the corner. Then the witnesses heard the slamming of the car, the screeching of the tires and this car pulling away from the scene heading North on 42nd Street [in Des Moines, Iowa], which takes you right out to the interstate. One of the witnesses was a 44-year-old attorney who is now a judge, and yet when all of this information was presented to the police, the police chief said they considered him a runaway, and they weren't going to do anything for three days. My contention is, when there's a bank robbery, they don't call it runaway money for three days.

When Johnny was taken, we had what most families don’t have, which is that we had five witnesses on the street, and each of them witnessed a different part of the kidnapping. One of the witnesses happened to be a 44-year-old attorney who is now a judge. Pretty reputable. Pretty credible. And yet, they wouldn’t look. They wouldn’t call in the FBI. They refused. They wouldn’t do aerial searches. They wouldn’t use free volunteer canine teams to begin to search for our boy. We as a family had to do this all on our own. And something is wrong in an investigation when this happens. Many years later, I learned that our police chief, the one who is no longer in office, Cooney, is extremely good friends with the Police Chief from Omaha, Robert Wadman. And Robert Wadman was involved in the Franklin Credit Union cover-up., which was a porn and prostitution ring operated in Omaha, Nebraska, that was uncovered in the late 80s. And our Police Chief went over to the parties that they had. The Police Chief from Omaha got one of the girls pregnant.

TRACY: So he himself was a pedophile and involved with the same group that kidnapped your son?

NOREEN: That’s right. And I learned all of this later, much, much later, and then two and two made four. It became pretty simple why the Police Chief wouldn’t call in the FBI, why he wouldn’t do certain things. They didn’t want me to find Johnny. They didn’t want me to uncover what had really happened to him.

TRACY: And you learned all of this from Bonacci?

NOREEN: Bonacci, and then there have been a number of other witnesses, victims that we have talked to since Bonacci came forward, and they all tell the same story, with the same people involved. And these other witnesses are credible. Paul Bonacci was real credible in a court of law.

TRACY: And what about the Des Moines Register? Two of their paper boys were kidnapped, and they didn't seem to have much interest in the subject.

NOREEN: Yes, isn't that curious too?

TRACY: Well, why do you think that is? Do you have any theories?

NOREEN: From what I know about pedophile rings, people who are very influential can be involved, in any city, stretching all the way to Washington, D.C., as we found out. It's very possible that there are people right here in Des Moines that are involved. Someone else is protecting them.

TRACY: You don't think that they might have set your son up to be kidnapped in the first place?

NOREEN: I have not ruled that out. That's still under consideration. You can consider it, and you can get pieces of information and evidence, but when it becomes difficult is when you try to prove it in court. You can know it, but if you can't prove it by all the means necessary, then you have to just sit on your information. We know, basically, what happened to Johnny, why, who, how, and much of it was brought out in that court case in 1999. Once we got the Judge's ruling, I went back to the county attorney, the police officials here, and asked them to talk to Paul Bonacci. That's something they have never done. They have never interviewed the boy. And today [September 3, 2001] there was a big article here in the Des Moines Register about a retiring police detective. That police detective happened to be the one that worked on the Eugene Martin case [another, possibly related kidnapping.] And it said in this article that he would probably go to his grave not knowing what happened to these two boys. Well, part of the reason why they'll go to their grave not knowing is because they didn't investigate one of the key people who could have answered all of their questions. They refused to talk to Paul Bonacci. We have tried for many years to get them to sit down with him, so that he can tell them what happened.

TRACY: Is he still there in town? Is he available?

NOREEN: Paul Bonacci lives in Omaha, Nebraska, which is about two hours away. He would talk to them if they asked, but you see they don't, and the reason they don't is because they simply don't want the story of Eugene Martin and Johnny Gosch to come out. They do not want any implications towards anyone that they're trying to protect. That's sad to say, but that is the situation that I'm up against here. And my only hope and help is to be able to go public with everything that I know, and to remain in a public situation where I speak out about it, rather than cowering in silence. There’s safety in bringing out the truth. Are you familiar with John DeCamp. at all, and the Franklin Credit Union.? He’s a good fellow. He’s worked in this almost as long as I have. It will be 19 years Wednesday since Johnny was kidnapped, and John De Camp. came in to this in the 1980s, when Paul Bonacci, who was accused of another crime wrote a letter to him, and asked John DeCamp to come represent him. John agreed to represent him. And it was during one of their initial visits that Paul Bonacci told him that he had been in the car, and helped to kidnap Johnny.

TRACY: Did Bonacci mention anything about this pornography ring being linked to the CIA and Project MONARCH?

NOREEN: Yes, he did. He also told us that he was put into MONARCH training at a very young age, right at Offutt Air Force Base. Offutt is one of the training centers. I have also over the years received communication from some of the former Air Force men who worked at Offutt, and they confirmed what Paul Bonacci told me. Since I’ve gone public I get lots of information just by people contacting me, and these two gentlemen had worked at the Offutt Air Force complex during the 80s. They said that is where they brought kids to put them through the rigorous MK-ULTRA training.

TRACY: So, do you believe that’s what happened to your son as well?

NOREEN: Yes, that is the information we have, through Paul, through private investigators, and many years of searching, and interviewing other victims who were also with Johnny at many periods of time. They all reveal that he was put through the same training.

TRACY: Didn’t your son come back and visit you at some point in 1997?

NOREEN: In 1997, I had been on a network TV show just a couple of months before this had happened--the Lisa Gibbons program. She asked me if I wanted to give a special message to Johnny on the show, and so I did. I said to him that I just knew that he was alive, and that I would help him no matter what had transpired in his life. I gave my address on national television where he could find me. And within three months, there was a knock on my door at 2:30 in the morning. I about had a heart attack--seriously, I did. I could hardly believe my ears when I heard him say “It’s me.” I asked through the door who was there, and this voice said, “It’s me. It’s Johnny. It’s me, Mom.” And I looked out the peephole on the door, and our hallways are very well-lit at this apartment complex. I could see him out there, and his eyes had not changed. Yes, he was older, yes. He was grown-up and physically developed into a young man, but the eyes had not changed, and I knew it was my son. He did have a young man with him, and he did not volunteer his name, he did not want me to know who it was. They both came in, and we talked for about two hours. And I offered to have someone come who I felt I could trust, because I thought Johnny was home to stay. And when I said that I would call somebody, he became very alarmed. He said, “You don’t understand. No one can know I was here.

I'm bringing you information that I want you to take to law enforcement. Hopefully they will make some arrests. But no one can know it came from me just yet."

And so I promised him I wouldn't tell anybody, and I didn't. For two years, I told no one. My own mother didn't know. And it wasn't until I was in that court room in 1999, and John DeCamp. asked me the question, if I had seen or talked to Johnny in all of that time, and I had to answer, because the judge made me answer the question. There was a reporter in the room, so of course she wrote everything down. And I did take the information that I received from my son to the County Attorney. I asked for a special meeting. I just could not tell him that the informant who came forward was my son. I had to tell him that it was just someone else, because I did honor my son's request. And the police typically said they weren't sure what they would do with the information, if anything, which is always their response. And so I told them that I had my own attorney with me, because I felt that was what I needed for my own protection. I did inform the County Attorney that I had come in voluntarily, and shared my information with them, and so therefore they could never accuse me of withholding info. And I told them that they could conduct their investigation in any way they chose, and I would continue doing the same with mine.

TRACY: Did your son tell you all about the mind control?

NOREEN: Yes, he did. He told me that he had been subjected to mind control, and many of the horrendous things that he had been forced to do. He did, however, hold back on some of the information, I think probably out of embarrassment, you know, for himself, and some sensitivity for me. Because some of it would be pretty graphic, as you can probably understand.

TRACY: Did you understand that he had been sold as a prostitute to high-ranking businessmen and politicians?

NOREEN: That's correct. That's what he told me--that he had been used in that manner, and that his job was to compromise politicians, and any VIP that they felt they wanted to do that to.

TRACY: And were there Satanic rituals involved?

NOREEN: He only mentioned the Satanic rituals briefly. He didn't go into depth about them as far as the details of what they did, but he did say that was part of what they did, and that was also confirmed at an earlier date by Paul Bonacci, and the other victims that I have talked to. Because there have been others that have come forward besides Paul, but they did not want their name in the press. But they had also been part of this ring, and they had also been with Johnny on many occasions. And to date, we have interviewed 45 of them. We have quite a few, yeah. As you see, all of this information was presented to the police. All of this was given to them. And they still say that they do not want to talk to Paul Bonacci. They're just not interested.

TRACY: So the attitude of the police hasn't improved at all over the years?

NOREEN: No, it hasn't. They're content to leave this as an unsolvable case, and it's just the opposite. It's quite solvable, if they were willing to investigate Paul, and take the information that he has given, which is part of court transcripts where the judge ruled that he was telling the truth. If they would take that information and work, then they would have it. But they are not interested in doing that. I've even gone to the governor of our state, and the governor's response was, "Well, this is really none of my concern, two missing boys in Iowa." And then he suggested that I take my problem to the Department of Public Safety. Well, they do traffic lights. They do zoning for traffic situations. They help make those decisions for the city. So they won't help either. And yet for the Governor [Tom Vilsack], it is within his power. He could direct the department of criminal investigation to work on this. He has that power. But he has chosen not to. Now why do you suppose that is? I'll tell you why. We found out that this Governor is extremely close friends with the former governor of Nebraska [Bob Kerry], who was involved with this whole Franklin mess. They have been long-time friends. Our Governor brought Governor Kerry's sister over here and gave her a top key position here for six figures, and there was quite a collusion there.

TRACY: I've heard from a lot of proclaimed Project MONARCH victims that Presidents of the United States have been involved.

NOREEN: Yes, that's what I have heard as well. I've gotten a lot of help and a lot of information from John DeCamp, and another man is Ted Gunderson, who is a former FBI agent. He's one of the good guys, however. In the early 1980s he retired, and went into private practice as a private investigator, but he still has the connections to get information. So with his help, coming on board with Johnny's case, and John DeCamp with his knowledge of the Franklin situation, we were really fortunate, and we started putting the pieces of the puzzle together concerning Johnny. And we found out that Johnny's case is right smack in the middle of this whole Franklin situation. Law enforcement doesn't want to touch it. They don't want to touch it in Omaha, Nebraska, and they don't want to touch it in Iowa. They'd just as soon let this rest, and wish that I would just go away and forget about it. But you see, there were two young boys that were ripped off the street here in Des Moines, Iowa. My son first, and then within two years, Eugene Martin. Both boys are gone. Identical circumstances. We know that the cases are connected. And yet we have a governor who says that this is none of his concern. Don't you think that's a very odd statement by a politician who might want to get re-elected some day? Why is it not his concern? Why? Well, let's go back to his association with Nebraska. What is he possibly involved in that hasn't come out? I don't know. It's either one of three things: he's either incredibly stupid, incredibly naive, or he's involved in something, and he's hiding it to protect himself and/or his friends. I would choose the latter. Because you know he's not a stupid man, and he's not a naive man.

TRACY: It must make you very uncomfortable to know so many people in positions of power are involved in this somehow.

NOREEN: Oh, it does. It’s very disheartening when you realize that you’ve worked all these years, and you have the truth, and they choose not to accept it. When I went to the County Attorney, I was shocked. ‘Cause I took the transcripts from the court, and the judge said that Paul Bonacci was telling the truth. And he just looked at me and said, “Noreen, we just aren’t going to accept the judge’s ruling.” It took the wind out of me. I couldn’t believe it. I said: “Wait a minute, this is a Federal court ruling, doesn’t it apply in every state?” And he said, “Well, we’re just not going to accept it.” So then I appealed to the governor, and he told me the same thing, that this was none of his concern, and I should go to the Department of Public Safety. So, does this sound like passing the buck, shuffling the hot potato? It doesn’t take a rocket scientist to figure out what’s going on here in Des Moines, Iowa. I don’t have any qualms about saying this. I’ve said it on TV programs, I’ve said it in various articles where I’ve been interviewed, and I’m very cautious about my safety. But the public needs to know that this is going on, because it’s not only going on in Iowa, but no doubt other states, and if they could do this to me, and to my son, they can do it to anybody. The men who took my son, and Eugene Martin, and many other kids, have not been caught, have not been punished, and there is absolutely nothing to prevent them from striking here again, or in any city they choose.

TRACY: Did either Paul Bonacci or your son tell you that Michael Aquino was involved in this somehow?

NOREEN: That information first came from Paul Bonacci, who told us that Aquino--he kept referring to him as “The Colonel”--came to the location in Sioux City, Iowa, where they had held Johnny captive for about 14 days. That’s where they took the first pictures of him while he was being molested. And Paul Bonacci stated that he came there and gave the kidnappers cash for having done the job of kidnapping Johnny. He basically bought Johnny from them. And then he took Johnny with him to Colorado. The next time Paul Bonacci saw him was about a year later, at this Colorado location that he said belonged to the Colonel. Then we also heard the same information from probably 25 of the 45 other victims that we have talked to and interviewed.

TRACY: Do you know where this location was in Colorado?

NOREEN: It was a couple. They had one that was called a safe house, and it was kind of an old house up in the mountains of Colorado. America’s Most Wanted did a show on Johnny, and then they did five updates. And on one of those last updates, America’s Most Wanted, with Paul Bonacci, went to this location, and they filmed it, and it was on television. And they showed that in the basement they had cages where the kids were locked up when the adults would have to leave. That was just one of the houses. They had them in New Mexico and Arizona. They called them “safe houses.” But there was also living quarters there in Colorado. Kind of a ranch, they called it, where Aquino supposedly had his place, and they went to this place quite often, where they would have, you know, different activities planned. And the kids would be flown by plane to these locations for parties. They were also transported at night. They would drug the kids, and they would then sleep. They would just have them all in the back of the van, and they would travel to wherever they were going. They would travel by night, and then have the kids to the location the next day for one of their parties.

TRACY: I think I remember reading that there was a relative of Anton LaVey involved. I remember reading it. They said it was his son, "Michael LaVey."

NOREEN: Anton's son agreed to be filmed and interviewed by 20/20. They were involved in much of the information gathering with their detectives. And during the interview with them LaVey said that he had been with Johnny on many occasions at the Satanic ritual ceremonies, where they serviced different men for their owners. And the only reason he agreed to speak in front of cameras was because the father is now dead. Then I found out very recently that Anton LaVey's daughter lived in Des Moines. She was here during the 90s. And Anton LaVey came to Des Moines and stayed here for quite some time prior to his death, which I did not know until about four months ago [May 2001].

TRACY: I'm really confused, because to my knowledge, Anton LaVey doesn't have any sons by that name. Is this an illegitimate child or something?

NOREEN: I don't know what the circumstances are, but there are two daughters and a son that I know of. I know of one man through a third party who dated one of his daughters. Since I've gone public with this aspect of the story, people hear about it, and they are very willing to contact me with the facts. That’s how I found out that his daughter had lived here. And then I did some checking on it with my detectives, and sure enough, he was here.

TRACY: Well, I’m really curious about this Michael LaVey character, because one of my good friends was friends with Anton LaVey. for years, and he’s the one who told me that Anton LaVey. doesn’t have a son named Michael. So I’m really interested in tracking this guy down, because either he’s lying about being Anton LaVey. son, or Anton LaVey’s. has a son that nobody knows about.

NOREEN: It’s very possible that he does have a son that nobody knows about, or that is not publicized. The information that I got on that was given to me by 20/20 after they had done the interview. And they had victims, 45 of them, all on tape talking about this whole thing, including MK-ULTRA, including all the sex, and prostitution, and pornography, and the Satanic rituals, which many of these kids participated in.

TRACY: And I presume that none of this footage got aired.

NOREEN: It hasn’t yet. They have a one-hour special called “The Johnny Gosch Show” ready to go, and I don’t know when they’re going to release it. I know that there have been other people who have tried to get the rights to it, and 20/20 won’t release it to anybody. They’re holding onto it. They want to wait until Johnny is located, and then they want to run it. They don't want to jeopardize his life any further. And within all that material is the LaVey interview.

TRACY: From your impression, what do you think the role of Satanism is in this? Do they really religiously believe in the Satan concept, or is this just kind of a fetish?

NOREEN: I think it's more a means of control of kids. That's what I think it is. Because, you know, you grab a kid from somebody, some little 12-year-old kid, and you take him away from his mom, his dad, everything he knows, his toys, his room, and you start to brainwash him. To start to break him down. You can tell him anything, at that point, and have him believe it, so that you can gain complete control of him. So that you could walk into a public place and know that he wouldn't run, because of what you've indoctrinated into him. All these young victims that have been kidnapped, like Johnny, they've been gone for over half their lives. They've been away from their families. This is all they've known. Their education stopped at 12. They have not been educated in any school. And the one thing that I learned from these victims, because I asked this question of just about all of them that I've talked to: When you got sick, or when you needed a dentist, what did they do? Did they take you to a dentist, to a doctor?" And the answer was the same with every kid. "Oh no. They wouldn't risk taking us to a doctor's office. They brought their doctors to us. They had their own." Further proving that pedophiles come in all sizes, shapes, and career levels. The medical profession is not exempt. But they had their own, and they brought them in, because, you know, think about it: kids are going to get sick.

They’re going to need medical care, they’re going to need things. And this is the answer we got from every single one of them.

TRACY: So what is it that binds all of these people together. Just an interest in pedophilia?

NOREEN: No. Money. Kiddy porn is a multi-billion dollar industry in this country. How did it get that way? Supply and demand. There are pedophiles that are rich enough that they don’t have to dirty their hands and go out and grab a kid, or solicit a kid. All they have to do is call somebody who supplies it to them, brings the kid to them. The internet is a new playground for pedophiles too.

TRACY: So you can order a kid online?

NOREEN: They have chat rooms. They go into chat rooms, and they begin to make an approach with children, begin to lure them into conversation. The reason I know this is ‘cause I work with an internet detective. He poses as a 13-year-old child in a chat room. He has pedophiles approach him. He learns the name of the pedophile, and in some cases, the pedophiles have even Federal Expressed airline tickets for him to travel to their home. As soon as he gets an identification, he contacts the National Center for Missing Children in Washington. They then contact the police and/or FBI in the town, and the arrest is made. They’ve brought down some pretty big ones in the last year. They got one of the top executives with Burlington Industries, and they got one of the top executives of Eastman Kodak.

TRACY: Burlington. Are those the people that make the coats?

NOREEN: Textiles. Mmm Hmm. Both cases were due to go to court in May [2001], and both executive plea bargained, probably pushed enough money around in the court, and they did not have to go through the court process. But that’s two biggies in this country, and they were caught by the internet. There’s another one that involved a pretty famous surgeon in the midwest. This is a doctor that you or I might go to and put our lives in his hands. He was arrested for luring a 13-year-old girl to a motel room for prostitution.

TRACY: So if money is the motivating factor, why is the CIA involved? Are they involved in the child pornography industry just to raise funds for their various projects?

NOREEN: That, and they were heavily into the mind control aspect of it. That’s how it all got started in the first place. The mind control, remote viewing, all of that was being used and taught to our spies for the purpose of protecting America. And then there were people within that organization that thought, “Oh, this would be cool. Let’s use it on kids.”

TRACY: So what they get out of it is the chance to experiment on children?

NOREEN: A lot of experimentation has gone on with kids, yes, as well as soldiers, and prisoners in our prisons. They've all been exploited over time. And the way this all got started, I'm sure that you're aware of the German scientists and how this whole mind control project developed in our country, or why we even have it.

TRACY: So when you met with your son for those few hours, did you see in his personality any evidence of this? Did it seem like he had multiple personalities?

NOREEN: Yes.

TRACY: Really?

NOREEN: I would say that he probably does. I didn't see too much of it displayed that night, but knowing how they work, knowing all that the other victims have told me, I do believe that it would have been difficult for him to have escaped it. Now, the only reason why Johnny is free now is because he and several other boys did escape in the late '80s. They stole a car in the city, and that's how they got away. They went to one of the boys' homes, Jimmy. He had been a runaway, and he was later grabbed by these guys. He got to know Johnny, as well as some of these other kids. When Jimmy took these kids to his father's home, he just told him that they were buddies of his that had needed a little help, a place to stay for a couple of nights. So his father let them stay there, gave them some meals, and then some of these kids, one of which was my son, moved on. Jimmy's parents didn't look too hard for him when he turned up missing, because he had run away in the past, and they just figured he'd turn up sooner or later. I've talked to this man many times. He's a CPA, a very well-respected man. He did not realize that the boy that was staying in his home was my son. He didn't realize it until he saw his picture on America's Most Wanted, which was just a couple of months later. At that point he called me, and he felt so terribly bad, because he said, "I had your son right here. I could have called you, but I didn't know it was your boy until I saw the show." And the man was quite reputable. Johnny did stay there. He was there. And I know the circumstances of his escape. That's probably the only reason why he's still alive. After these kids outlive their usefulness, are no longer marketable for prostitution and pornography, then there's only a couple of choices: they either make a break for it, or they're killed, or they're turned into perpetrators, and made a criminal.

So in Johnny's case, he and these other kids had the guts to try and get away. This is what some of these other victims have told me, that Johnny had tried repeatedly to get away, even shortly after he was captured, and that he took a lot of beatings because he kept trying to get away, to get back home. So this wasn't anything new, him fighting back, and trying to be free of them. If you're familiar at all with what happened to Paul Bonacci, when he came forward, people said that he was nuts. People said that he was not credible, wasn't telling the truth, that he was a dingbat. Multiple Personality Syndrome obviously meant he was nuts. John DeCamp. and I worked eleven years before we got the judge's ruling. Eleven years it took to get the ruling. Well, now, Johnny knows Paul Bonacci, so do all these other kids who have escaped. Johnny and these other kids are too afraid to come forward, seeing what was done to Paul for telling the truth. They saw him being charged with another crime, and having to spend five years in prison for just keeping quiet. I believe that these other boys and my son will come forward. I'm quite sure of that. It's because of the fear of the way that the system will treat them. Because they haven't done anything wrong. They were kidnapped. They were forced into this. And yet, they're afraid that they won't be believed.

TRACY: So what do you think it would take to bring your son back, to get him to come forward?

NOREEN: What it would take would be some high-profile publicity showing that the police actually took a hold of the information that was provided by Paul Bonacci, and are working it like they should have back in 1989 when Paul Bonacci first came forward. You see, we've spent over a decade here [now nearly two decades] that's been wasted.

TRACY: I suppose that if the police did finally decide to investigate this, and they chose a couple of individuals to prosecute, then Johnny could come forward, and he would receive immunity.

NOREEN: He would receive immunity, and also protection. Because that was his other big fear when he was here. He said I didn't understand why he couldn't just stay here. You know, "It's over. You're back home. We'll go to a county attorney in the morning, we'll talk it over, blah blah blah." He said, "Mom, you don't understand. There are so many of the high officials in this country that are involved in this. I know because I've been with them. They're involved in this. What makes you think my life would be safe if I was in their hands? They would kill me for what I know." He said, "Your life is not safe either, for all that you're doing, and coming out publicly. You have to be very, very careful." And that was the other reason he did not want me to tell anyone that he had been here, for as long as I could possibly keep it. And I will have to tell you, when my mother found out that Johnny had been here, that I hadn't told her, she was absolutely shocked that I could keep it silent, and tell no one, absolutely no one. When I had to live with that for two years, and try to figure out a way to help my son without jeopardizing him, it was very hard for me, because I didn't know who I could turn to, or if I could turn to anyone and trust them. My attorney did not know Johnny had been here. When we went into that meeting, he believed, just like the county attorney was told, that there was an informant that had come forward with this information. Because when I went into that meeting, I turned over a list of names of people that were involved, what their part was, how they kidnapped Johnny, how they selected him, where they took him, the house where they had him, who came and bought him, every bit of it was given to the county attorney. And all I told him was that an informant had come forward. I was not at liberty to tell him that it was my son, because it would have jeopardized Johnny's life, and he was my first priority.

TRACY: Can you name some of the names that were on that list, besides people that we've already mentioned?

NOREEN: I can't, at this time, because these people have not been charged with a crime. The county attorney has them. The police have them. But if I name them publicly, then they can come after me with slander and/or any kind of libel suit.

TRACY: But these are nationally-known figures, some of them.

NOREEN: Some of them are, yes. Some are local.

TRACY: Did you come across any information indicating that some of the revenue being derived from this child prostitution was being funneled to the Nicaraguan Contras?

NOREEN: We did come across some of that information. That was provided to me by Karen Burns, at ABC's 20/20. You see, when 20/20 stepped into this, and asked for exclusive rights to do a one-hour special on Johnny's story, they had someone investigate, so that we could get the information that we needed, close the case, and then I could go to the county attorney and say, "This is what we've learned." Well, when I did that, we know what resulted. They said they wouldn't accept it, or the judge's ruling.

TRACY: Do you think 20/20 would be willing to talk about this show that's in the can right now?

NOREEN: No. There have been others that have tried to get information out of them, and they say, "Oh no. There's no story there." And there are a number of reasons why they don’t want to talk about it. I have one young man who told me that he tried to get the story. He’s also with ABC, but just another show, and they wanted to do the Johnny Gosch special. So they went to 20/20, and they were told: “Back off the Gosch story. It’s classified. No one else can have it, and 20/20 owns it.” He represents a different show on ABC, and he was quite upset that he couldn’t get it.

TRACY: Yeah, I’m surprised that they wouldn’t even talk about it.

NOREEN: They’re not ready to do their thing yet, and so they’re not going to give a clue to anybody else.

TRACY: Oh, if they talk about it then some other show will do it, and that’s what they don’t want.

NOREEN: Yes. Then they’ll be scooped. And that’s why they’re keeping a tight lid on it.

TRACY: But if they aired the show, it might blow this whole thing wide open, and that might make the atmosphere safe for Johnny to come back.

NOREEN: That’s exactly right. I have a feeling that there’s been perhaps some involvement by the CIA or the FBI here too. When America’s Most Wanted was preparing to do Johnny’s story, just days before the show was to air, the FBI called America's Most Wanted, called John Walsh, as a matter of fact, and told them to kill the Gosch story. And Paul Sparrow, who was the producer at that time, called me and said that he had talked to John Walsh, and they decided they were going to do the show regardless, even though the FBI was threatening them. But the FBI did not want the information that I was going to give to go nationwide. They wanted to kill the story. That came first-hand from John Walsh and the producer. That's another red flag: why would the FBI want to cancel the Gosch story? Why would they find it so threatening--the information that Paul had to share? You have to ask these questions, because it makes people start to think, "Wow, what if it would have been my kid, or my nephew, or my niece that had been taken, and the parent did all that Noreen has done, and this is what they do?" I am not a person who has ever been a conspiracy theorist. I was not even into reading about them. I know there are plenty of books out there, but I had not even delved into anything like this. When Johnny was kidnapped, it happened in such a swift manner, from the time that he left the house, that I knew the kidnappers were organized. I knew there were two of them, from the witnesses.

What I didn't know (and it took many years, and the help of John DeCamp. and Ted Gunderson, and some detectives from 20/20, and my own detectives) was that it was tied to this level of prostitution and pornography. I knew when they took my son, they weren't going to take him to Disneyland to show him a good time. I knew that it had something to do with sexual abuse of children, of course. But I had no idea that it was that sophisticated in our country, let alone the fact that they used mind control on the kids. I mean, this isn't something that you just pick up any paper and find out about. In fact, back in the ‘80s, no one even said the word “pedophile.” I knew there had been sexual abuse of children, beause I saw it in the news, but no one used the word “pedophile.” I didn’t even know what it meant. I had no clue what the word meant until my son was taken.

Then I got another eye-opener when I went to Washington D.C. in 1984, and I was called in to testify before the organized crime hearings. At that hearing, the FBI presented physical evidence as well as testimony. They had a table full of paraphernalia that had been confiscated from pedophiles. On the table were books on how to molest toddlers and leave no marks, how to lure a child to a car. These were all bound books. Somebody went to the trouble of publishing them. And then there were sexual torture toys--that type of thing. But the book that startled me the most was a small book, it was kind of like a spiral bound thing, and in it there were lots of pictures of kids. But these were kids that had not been kidnapped yet. It was like a catalogue. And everyone there at the senate hearing, the press, everybody was shocked. And yet, after the presentation of this, our congress did nothing. It was like the senate hearing was just an exercise for the day. “Well, OK, let’s get all these parents, and let’s do something to make everybody feel good, make them think we’re going do something.” But they never did. Johnny was photographed before he was kidnapped. Johnny was photographed on his way home from school.

TRACY: And wasn’t one of the people involved in the kidnapping posing as a policeman before it happened, and talking to your son?

NOREEN: Yes, at a football game.

TRACY: Do you know who that was, then?

NOREEN: It was a West Des Moines policeman.

TRACY: So it was a policeman?

NOREEN: It was a policeman, and he paid particular attention to Johnny.

TRACY: So there were other members of the police department involved from the very beginning.

NOREEN: I'm sure that there were, yes. And this particular officer would not consent to being interviewed by our detective.

TRACY: Since you've delved into conspiracy literature and the subject of Project MONARCH, do you buy into any of the theories involving the Illuminati--that this is some secret occult brotherhood that goes back thousands of years? Do you entertain those thoughts at all?

NOREEN: I think there's a distinct possibility that some of the people involved in this could very well involve themselves in that. But there's probably also a lot of them that work these kiddy porn situations that are not, that simply do it for the money, or the trade-off in drugs, or whatever else they're getting in exchange for the use of children. So I think you might have a mixed bag there. I've done a lot of reading on the Illuminati. I don't discount it. I believe that it exists, and that they intend to bring the New World Order, but I just don't believe that all pedophiles necessarily fall under that umbrella. I think we have too many that are creative and find ways to use kids as innovatively as they can.

TRACY: Did you come across any information that in addition to kidnapping children, they raise them, they breed them for this purpose?

NOREEN: Yes, we came across information that there were breeder mothers whom they have impregnated for the designed purpose of bearing children to be kept within this organization. Therefore there are no birth records that they can trace, like they can with somebody missing. They make sure that there is nothing recorded. Many of these are babies that are sacrificed within their Satanic rituals. And I've heard this from a lot of the victims. In the back of my book, I invite victims of this horrible thing to contact me, and I give my email address, and I answer all emails. I was just deluged. I was getting 50 emails a day. And many of those came from victims who are now adults that have been through the multi-generational abuse, that weren't kidnapped like Johnny was, but nevertheless as children, this was the way they had to live. And they bear the scars, emotionally, because of all that they were put through.

TRACY: Have any of your informants come up with a name for this organization, or is it just a number of different ones?

NOREEN: It’s a number of different ones that operate throughout the country. This particular one that was involved in taking Johnny was based out of Omaha, Nebraska. That’s just one. But there’s more. They ship the kids around. It’s an international situation. And yet you’ll have politicians, you’ll have the FBI stand up in front of a microphone and say crime is going down these days, that crime against children is on the down-sweep. Well, that just isn’t true.

TRACY: Are they not counting these?

NOREEN: They’re not counting them, right. They’re not recording them properly. Because when a child is taken, and moved from one place to another, that constitutes abduction, that constitutes kidnapping. When a child has been molested, and many times, murdered, the charge that is given to the man that is caught, if they catch him, is Murder One. The fact that the child was kidnapped first and sexually abused beforehand are minor charges that come down later. So they’re not always caught in the record-keeping of kidnapping. And those types of crimes are cases where it is maybe a pedophile who is acting alone. He’s not operating within a big organization. I call him your garden variety.

The ones that live in Our Town, USA all their lives. And they might be the guy that volunteers for the scouting, or whatever, just so that they can get close to kids. And they molest over, and over, and over, and they get the kids to keep quiet. And then you have the ones that kill. And finally you have the ones that belong to these organizations.

I’ve had to go to five different prisons since Johnny was taken, to meet with inmates, to get information. The one that I will never forget, that still raises the hair on the back of my neck happened to be a serial killer. He had molested little kids, girls, and he had also killed them. But he had information, so I went to see him. During our conversation he gave me all the information he thought he could, and I said to him: “I have to know why you killed those children. Because you wore a ski mask, so they didn’t know who you were. They couldn’t identify you. So why kill them?” And he got this smile on his face, and he said: “You don’t understand. At the moment my victims know that I’m going to kill them, that look of fear in their eyes, that is my turn-on.” Well, I never forgot the look on that guy’s face. He’s not much above an animal in the way that he would hunt down a child like it was his prey. But the look of fear in the eyes of a child, when they know they are going to die, that is his turn-on. It made me sick. All I wanted to do was go out and take a shower after being in that room with him. But see, how many of those do we have running around the country? I don’t know what the estimated number of serial killers is, or if they even know.

TRACY: So do you think this is what happens to most kids that disappear?

NOREEN: I think it happens to a great number of kids that disappear, and nobody looks. They write it off as a runaway, or a case that can't be solved. Most of the guys that were on Johnny's case from the beginning have either retired, or they have died now. So we've got a new, younger crop of men that are at the department. They have young kids. They are raising families. They know that they don't want their kids hurt. So they are a little more sympathetic to me. I have one detective in particular. He has twin sons, and he has been very good. He has tried to talk to the police chief. The new police chief, by the way, is from Omaha, Nebraska, and a good friend of the old police chief from Omaha. He begged his chief to start a task force within the department to do nothing but work on Johnny's case and Martin's case until they were solved. He was told by the police chief to stop trying to help Noreen solve this case. In other words, "Back off." And the detective said, "Why?," and he said "We don't want this to go any further." Well, he came to me to tell me that. He said that: "If you ever bring it out publicly with my name, I'll have to deny it to protect myself." But he said, "You need to know what you're up against. They're not going to help you. They're not going to do one thing with the information that you have worked so hard to get, and that you've proven to a court of law in Nebraska. They're just simply not going to do it, because they don't want this case to go any further." That came directly from the police detective. He came to me with this after I had published the book, otherwise it would have been in the book, just without using his name.

TRACY: It must make you feel kind of hopeless.

NOREEN: Well, it doesn't make me feel that it's going to end any time soon, but I keep hoping. I have a great deal of faith. I'm very strong. And I just can't believe that there's a supreme being in the universe, a god, that would let you go through all this, and let you work this hard to try and find the answers to help your child, and along the way do the work that I've done to help other kids--I just don't believe that this could be allowed without finally being given a resolution of some kind. I already have the knowledge of what happened to him. The resolution is what's beyond my grasp right now.

TRACY: Do you believe he's safe now?

NOREEN: All I know is that he's hiding, and that's what he has to do to remain safe right now. So I know he's probably not living the kind of life that I would want for him, you know, like in a nice home, with education, and maybe a nice wife with kids. Because he's almost 30 [now 38]. He's probably living hand-to-mouth, with very little money, just trying to get by. Nobody wants that for their kids. It kind of hurts me to know that I've got one son out there that has the bare minimum of what most people would consider adequate living. Now that I know that he's away from them, I know that he's not being mistreated anymore, so that's a comfort. But he can't come home for dinner. He can't come home for Christmas. He's too afraid to even come near the family. He's afraid they'll grab him. What all the victims have told me is that after they kidnap the kid, after they've given them the initial drugs, and their first sexual abuse contact, they take them out and they force them to commit a felony. And therefore they have leverage. They tell the kids, "You try to get away, and we'll turn you in. If you try to get away, you can never go to a police person to help you, because you’ve committed a felony. You’re wanted.” And you tell a twelve-year-old kid that, they’re going to believe you. If that’s all you’ve been told, from the time you were ripped away from your parents, you would live in that fear. You would not go to a policeman for help.

The Franklin Cover-Up: An Interview with John DeCamp

John DeCamp is the author of The Franklin Cover-Up., and a former Nebraska State Senator. He has been a good friend to Noreen Gosch and a colleague to Ted Gunderson. This interview took place over the phone on October 3, 2001.

TRACY: Would you first tell me briefly how you came to investigate “the Franklin Cover-Up”?

JOHN: Purely accident. I was hearing some of the stories on the street from some of the senators, and I was one of the first ones to stand up and say, “This is absolute nonsense, and this couldn’t be, and if I really believed any of this, I’d be the first to do something about it.” So I got a call then from a kid who was in jail named Paul Bonacci, who asked me to at least come see him and talk to him. I went to see him, talked to him, talked to a psychiatrist sent by the state to examine him, ’cause they thought he was acting strange. He was a multiple personality. I became convinced that I should look further, and kept looking, and once I got involved, I just kept getting deeper and deeper. I ended up representing a number of the children involved. So I started out on the opposite side completely.

TRACY: Did you come to the conclusion that what was happening to these kids in Nebraska, where they were getting kidnapped and being used as prostitutes, was an outgrowth of Project MONARCH?

JOHN: I came to the conclusion that for sure some of the children who were truly involved in this--and for every real one, there's somebody who makes up their own story or something--but anyway, for every kid legitimately involved, there always seemed to be a linkage or a relationship to some sexual improprieties, and compromise, that being a key ingredient of MONARCH. Of course, [former CIA Director William] Colby, who was kind of my best friend and mentor, assured me that there was no such thing as MONARCH officially; that's the name the kids knew the program by, but that was not the official name, and you won't find anything in the official record by that name.

What he did say, however, was, after the Korean War, the American CIA and the American government, in fact, were very terrified. We [the CIA] believed that the ability of other countries, particularly China, Russia, North Korea, at "brainwashing," as it was known at the time, and mind control was developed to such a degree, that, he said, "I know this sounds silly, and you'll laugh when I tell you, but we at the Company (meaning the CIA) actually believed that the Russians had developed techniques so that they could put someone in the same room with, let's say, the President of the United States, and through E.S.P. actually know what he's thinking. And you can imagine how dangerous that was, and we decided we couldn't afford to be behind. For the very salvation of the country we had to catch up. And so millions and billions were poured into these programs," and he said, "I'm sure there were some horrible abuses, but that wasn't the intent." The intent was to "save the country." And then he said one other thing. He made particular mention of one fact. He said, “I’ll tell you one thing, John. When all is said and done, we were never behind, and we aren’t today.”

TRACY: What role do you think Satanism played in “the Franklin Cover-Up”. and Project MONARCH? Some people seem to be of the opinion that it was just used as a mind-control technique to traumatize the children.

JOHN: I think that’s probably a fair statement. I don’t know. I don’t claim to know enough about any of this. I don’t now if there’s a Satan, but I know that there are cults that claim to be Satanists, and they do some pretty bizarre things. I’m always one of those who’s the opposite of the conspiracy theorists. I look for practical explanations for virtually everything.

TRACY: So you don’t think that all these people were part of a particular group or cabal of occultists?

JOHN: Not particularly. I find that difficult to believe, but I’ll admit that I don’t know. All I know is that there are some horrible things that are happening to some young people. It did happen, and I’m sure it’s still going on: the combination of mind control, using techniques from some of the “Satanism-type activities,” or whatever. One of the key things involved creating multiple personalities. As I understand it, you can create a personality that’s literally like a robot, that does what you want, or can be programmed for particular activities, and I am quite certain from talking to enough people, and seeing enough information that such techniques exist. What banner they run under, whether it be Satanism in some occasions, or mind control, or military intelligence, or National Security, or whatever, I think it boils down to the same thing. The most malleable mind of all is that of a young person, particularly someone about 11-15 years old. You get the right material, or tool, or equipment, and you apply the right techniques, which seem to almost inevitably involve things that we would normally consider sexual aberrations, and then you throw in some other techniques learned over the ages, and particularly the practice of skills by some of the better psychiatrists, or psychologists, or whatever, involving some drug use, and pretty soon you have a mixture of a product that you can breed horrible creatures with--people who will do what you want and accomplish certain goals.

TRACY: Do you think that this is what happens to most of the children that go missing? That they're inducted into these pornography rings.

JOHN: I don't know. Certainly some are. Whether that's what happens to most or whatever I don't know.

TRACY: Don't you think it's strange that so many public officials and wealthy businessmen are involved in this type of activity, like child prostitution, and particularly that they seem to be interested in homosexual activity with male children? That just seems so out of proportion to the rest of society.

JOHN: I think it’s a fair statement what you just said. There seems to be an inordinate percentage of individuals that adhere to a little different sexual code who are involved in these particular practices. Whether they got into them, and then got compromised into staying in them, I don’t know. But when you just start looking you certainly start seeing a disproportionate percentage. But then, you’re talking about some pretty strange practices too.

TRACY: Yeah, I just was wondering why people in positions of power seem to be predisposed to this.

JOHN: I don’t really know. I just know that if you were doing a study, that’s one of the things that you would first take note of. There seems to be an inordinate percentage of that particular cast of characters, when you’d think normally that it should be quite the opposite. It should be the dregs of society that you’d find involved in this, and instead, so typically the most shocking surprise is when you discover that the personalities involved are often the best and brightest and most respected, and most trusted.

TRACY: So in your position now I imagine you still deal with a lot of people who are in politics or who are wealthy businessmen. Does this make you wary of them.

JOHN: Oh, not more than anybody else, no.

TRACY: Do you think that some of the money for these activities was used for secret government operations, or Contra Aid, things of that nature?

JOHN: I believe that it's fairly well known. I don't think there's any contest among those that know that the CIA, and to a degree the FBI, determined for a significant period of time that they were vested with the responsibility to save the country, and that the politicians were kind of incompetent, and they needed a funding source where they wouldn't have to be accountable. That was the key thing. They needed a funding source where they didn't have to be accountable to Congress in explaining what they were doing, and that resulted in things such as arms dealing and drug dealing, whether being on the fringes of it, or making sure that it could occur, and then getting a pay-off. I have no doubt in my mind today, painful as it is for me to say it, that the CIA engaged in this conduct.

But the problem started when they decided that they had to save the country because the politicians were too dumb, and they couldn't get the necessary funds to do what they thought they had to do. Of course, any time you go off on that track, then you have the abuses crop in, and what was a noble goal turns into a whole bunch of stealing and theft, and that sort of thing. And that's what I believe occurred. It was the old "end justifies the means" thing that got out of control, the end being that "we have to protect the country from the bad people, and we're the secret agency vested with the responsibility, but we don't have enough funds, because politicians aren't smart enough to know that we have to do these things, and so we have to have a funding source where we don't have to explain anything.” Well, what’s the funding source? The most quick, easy, available funding source to get that kind of money without having to explain anything is drugs.

TRACY: And prostitution.

JOHN: Oh yes.

The Finders: An Interview with Ted Gunderson

Ted Gunderson is the author of How to Locate Anyone Anywhere Without Leaving Home. He is a former FBI Special Agent, radio talk show host, and expert on Satanic conspiracies. This interview took place on August 25, 2001.

TRACY: I know you worked for the FBI. How did you first get introduced to the subject of Project MONARCH?

TED: Right after I retired, I opened a private investigative firm in Westwood, Los Angeles, California, which is by the UCLA campus, and my first major investigation was the Geoffrey MacDonald case. He's a former Green Beret doctor who was convicted of murdering his wife and two children at Fort Bragg. The murders occurred on February 17th, 1970. Anyway, I got involved in that investigation, and I had 19 witnesses. It's probably the most highly publicized legal trial case in the history of the United States other than maybe O.J. Simpson's. Within 10 months, as a matter of fact, on October 25, 1990, I obtained a signed confession from the girl who said that it was her Satanic cult group that was involved in the murders. He did not commit the crime.

Now once you get involved in such a case, the first thing you're going to do is look at the evidence, look at the testimony, see where evidence was lost, stolen, destroyed, and altered by the government. The Satanic cult group that was involved in the murders was also involved in a large-scale drug operation, bringing drugs in military planes, including

C.I.A., from Southeast Asia into the various bases in this country during the Vietnam War. And the cult that wiped out the family went in without the permission of the higher-ups in their operation, which included police officers, two attorneys in Fayetteville, North Carolina, and high-level military personnel. The cult did not obtain permission from them to do that. They went in randomly and did this. And the higher-ups in the military were afraid that if there was an investigation of the cult it would expose the whole drug operation. By the way, there's documentation in Time Magazine, January 1, 1973 about the drug operation. Anyway, the girl gave me the confession. By the way, she died January 1983 under mysterious circumstances.

TRACY: How'd she die?

TED: She was in her apartment, and she died of slight pneumonia, weak lungs, and cirrhosis of the liver. She had called us about two weeks earlier and said that she was under surveillance by two guys in suits in the neighborhood. She was nude from the waist down, and the kitchen faucet was running. That's a Satanic sign, by the way.

TRACY: Why's that? What does it mean?

TED: The signs that they are involved with are Earth, Wind, Fire, Water, and then a combination of all of those. Those are just part of their ritual, you know. Anyway, her six-month-old child was on the floor, dehydrated, but alive, and did survive. I don't know what happened to the kid, but she died that way. So anyway, I went public with the information, and I was on a number of major TV talk shows. I was on CNN debating Freddy Casaba. I was on a number of other shows, like Geraldo, and also on radio talk shows. I came forward with this information that Dr. MacDonald did not commit these murders. They were committed by a Satanic cult group. So as a result of that, people just virtually came out of the woodwork from all over the country. People who didn't know each other from the East Coast, West Coast, South, North, and so forth, and told me about the Satanic cult groups in this country. A lot of them were victims themselves--adult survivors, we call them. So that was my introduction into what was going on, and I'm saying to myself, "If somebody from New Hampshire is furnishing me with the same information as somebody from California, and they don't know each other, I mean, there's got to be something to this.

So then from there, I was involved in other cases, including a case from Nebraska. It's called The Franklin Cover-Up. That case involved military training at Offutt Air Force Base. I ended up talking to some of the kids who were victims themselves, talking about the MK-ULTRA mind control program. They received their training at the base. They opened up to me. They told me all about their training. I have documentation of it. It's in a book called The Franklin Cover-Up by John DeCamp, a former State Senator in Nebraska. So anyway, in that case, it not only involves MK-ULTRA, but it involves a large-scale kidnapping ring. One of the kids that's been talking to us and giving us a lot of information is Paul Bonacci. One of the victims was a twelve-year-old newspaper boy named Johnny Gosch, who was kidnapped on his paper route in Des Moines, Iowa. It involves some of the leading people, and businessmen, and so forth, in Omaha, Nebraska., such as the publisher of the Omaha World-Herald. His name is Harold Anderson. It involves the Society Editor of the Omaha World-Herald. They were identified by the kids. It involves a fellow name Eugene Mahoney who was the head of the Forestry Service, who was on the Vice Squad of the Omaha Police Department. And these kids identified these people as involved in not only their training at Offutt Air Force Base, but also in the Satanic movement. This large-scale kidnapping ring was kidnapping kids all over the country. They were being held in safe houses after they were kidnapped. Some of them were auctioned off in Toronto, Canada, some of them were auctioned off here in Las Vega, Nevada. I've talked to, and have in my hip pocket, Rusty Nelson, who was the lead photographer for the group. He's been identified as involved, of course, and he has thousands of photographs of sexual exploitation and sexual involvement by some of America's leading politicians.

TRACY: Like who?

TED: George Bush, Sr.

TRACY: So you've seen these pictures of George Bush sexually abusing children?

TED: Yeah. Well, he's got them involved in sexual exploitation. I haven't seen the pictures yet because they're in a cave in Colorado. Rusty Nelson's in Oregon, and if we ever get enough money, we'll go over there and pull these pictures out.

TRACY: Do you know where this stuff is located?

TED: No, Rusty is the only one that knows. It's at about 12,000 feet. So the only time you can go in there is the spring or the summer. You can't go in there in the winter. But anyway, he's got the pictures. We are talking about a large-scale pedophile ring, and a large-scale kidnapping ring. The ring, by the way, is known as "The Finders." It's a CIA covert operation running out of Washington, D.C. I have a copy of a U.S. Treasury report on an investigation of the Finders that was quashed and closed down. The FBI refused to investigate it.

TRACY: Why are they called "The Finders"?

TED: Because that's just a cover name for finding children, and actually what they're doing is picking them up and kidnapping them. It's part of the Satanic cult movement in this country today. The Satanic cult movement dovetails with U.S. intelligence to some degree. It's like any other organization: there's good and bad in every organization of people. They, in addition to being involved in this kidnapping ring, were taking kids out of Boy's Town, and out of foster homes and orphanages, and flying them out of Sioux City, Iowa to Washington, D.C. for sex orgy parties with congressmen and senators. Massachusetts Senator Barney Frank has been identified by the kids, and George Bush Senior has been at the parties while he was Vice-President. He became more discreet as time went on, I guess. That's my introduction to it--a combination of those two cases, and going public with the information, and these people just coming from everywhere.

TRACY: You're saying that there are large elements of the CIA, and the government in general that are part of a Satanic cult. Is it just a number of Satanic cults, or is there one large organization?

TED: No, that's hard to define and clarify. First of all, you have to go back. When I learned about this, I started saying to myself, "Well, why, how, when, what, and where?" So as a result of my research I learned about an organization called the Illuminati. And I've got all sorts of information about the Illuminati. The Illuminati was an organization founded in 1776 in Germany, and its purpose was to take over the world. A fellow named Adam Weishaupt set forth 24 goals at the request of the Rothschild family out of England. And the goals were to control the mainstream media, to corrupt the youth through sex and drugs, to put their own people as agents behind the scenes, to put them in as leaders, etc. Anyway, that's what it's all about. And their activities dovetail with the Satanic movement, into the U.S. intelligence community, the CIA in particular. I think that the deterioration of the FBI over the last 25 years or so is the reason. I think it's the Illuminati. I think the FBI's been used as a political pawn. When I got on in 1979 we were not involved in politics whatsoever. We used to tell the Attorney General to go jump in a lake when he would call up and tell us to do something ridiculous.

TRACY: So, did you not know about any of this when you were working for the FBI?

TED: Not a thing. It was only after I got out and started operating on my own that I learned what was going on.

TRACY: Did you then reflect on some of your experiences in the FBI and realize that there might have been some connections?

TED: No, I didn't, because when I was in the FBI, I never ran across this. I think that's what's happened since then. In my day the FBI was a straight organization. We didn't have any problems like they're having now. We didn't have any Wacos. We didn't have any Oklahoma Cities--which is a cover-up, by the way. McVeigh was a political pawn, just like Lee Harvey Oswald. We didn't have any Ruby Ridges. We did have the Kennedy Assassination. I did learn, since I got out, by the way, that that was a joint CIA-Chicago mob hit. Of course, I have all kinds of information about the CIA involved in drugs. I mean, you know, Iran-Contra is an example of it. All this information just kind of melds in and dovetails, and one element is scratching the back of the other element.

TRACY: So would you say that the CIA has been under the control of the Satanic Illuminati since the very beginning?

TED: No, not from the beginning. Like with the FBI, I think it's happened in the last 25 years. I think they've been infiltrated by this Illuminati movement, and again that dovetails with the Satanic movement, and you're talking about human sacrifices. I'll give you an example. Here about a month ago [September 2001], in a two-day period we had about 14 children disappear here in Las Vegas. It was on the news, then it was on one time on ABC, and then nobody ever heard any more about it. So when I heard about it, I called the Metro police here. First of all, I called my informant, who was the official photographer in Nebraska for the group back there. By the way, he's been arrested, and he's on bail, and he's on probation right now for pornography. I called him, and he told me about the landing strip that's out in Las Vegas where they were flying these kids out of. So I called the Metro police here in Las Vegas, and I told them: "Look, I have information that they were flying kids out of here, 10 or 12 years ago, at least, but it's certainly worth looking into today, and if you want to send somebody over to the house, I'll be happy to sit down with them and give you all the information on it. It's a landing strip in between here and Pahrump, Nevada. Pahrump is about 50-60 miles away, out in the country some place.

TRACY: Yeah, Art Bell is out of Pahrump.

TED: By the way, he sued me. Oh yeah, I'm the guy. Remember when he went off the air? He blamed me for all of that. But it was a BS lawsuit. He claimed that I made statements about him being a child molester, and I never did. But anyway, that's another story. Anyway, I called Metro, and said I have this information, and well, I haven't heard from them yet. Doesn't it kind of make you wonder about what's going on? Why wouldn't they look into that right away, when you've got missing kids, you know?

TRACY: I don’t know, but it seems like they don’t take the whole missing kid thing seriously in the first place.

TED: That’s because too many people are involved. Reader’s Digest in July, 1982 had an article about 100,000 children who disappear every year and are never heard from again. Well, I mean, that’s serious. And we’re not talking about runaway teenagers. We’re talking about 2-to-7-year-old kids. And they’ve covered it up.

TRACY: So you think most kids that are kidnapped are being taken by the Satanists?

TED: Oh, there’s absolutely an international child-kidnapping ring. These kids are auctioned off on the auction block for $50,000 each. Anywhere from actually $15,000-$50,000, according to Rusty Nelson.

TRACY: And where’s all this money going? What’s it being used for?

TED: It’s going into the pockets of these individuals, you know, the Illuminati members, and others.

TRACY: Are all these kids, you think, being mind-controlled as well?

TED: Yeah, that’s part of the program. In Des Moines, Iowa we got the Johnny Gosch case, the newspaper boy. His mother, Noreen has been involved in this research. John DeCamp has been involved in this research. We’re talking about reputable people. I’m a reputable individual. Nobody listens to us, but we’re out there shouting from the rooftops.

TRACY: Did you talk about Project MONARCH and the government and stuff when you went on the Geraldo show?

TED: No, I talked about Satanic cults. I was on four of his shows, and I was on a show with Michael Aquino. He’s been accused. In fact, Johnny Gosch told his mother that Aquino was one of the kidnappers, that Michael Aquino was the one that bought him.

TRACY: And Noreen Gosch also says that there’s someone named Michael LaVey who told her this, Anton’s son. But Anton LaVey doesn’t have a son by that name, officially.

TED: Anton LaVey does have a son. He’s been castrated.

TRACY: Excuse me?

TED: Yeah. Anton LaVey has a son called Anton LaVey, Jr. And you know he died a couple of years ago. I got the documentation. I’ve got 216,000 pages of documentation on MK-ULTRA. I receive probably four or five phone calls a week from these people, because they’re all looking for help. I mean, they’re desperate people.

TRACY: Now, do you believe all these people, or do you think there are some people that are just trying to get attention?

TED: Half and half. Some I believe, some I don't, some I think are plants. I've had a number of people planted on me.

TRACY: So there is a lot of harassment.

TED: Harassment? Oh my God, are you kidding me? It's unbelievable. I go to get in my car, and the direction signal's turned on in the morning. They used to run surveillance on me until I started chasing them out of the neighborhood. I'd put my gun on them and go after them. That happened twice, and I got them cornered one time, and I reached under the seat for my gun, and there was too much traffic. Maybe I would've shot them, maybe I wouldn't. Who knows. But anyway, they realized "This guy's crazy. We'd better stay away from him." So now what they do is these little tactics like come into my hotel room when I travel and leave little signs. And I've been burglarized here in my house. They took some of my research. "They" are probably joint CIA-covert operations. These people are highly-trained and professional burglars and assassins, or killers. I knew the head of George Bush, Sr.'s assassination squad. He had 3000 men around the world he could call on to do their dirty deeds.

TRACY: The President had an assassination squad?

TED: Oh yeah, they all do. The current Bush President [George W. Bush] probably has one, I’m sure. Clinton had one too. They operate out of the White House. It’s the National Security Council. The NSC doesn’t answer to anybody but the President.

TRACY: With President Clinton and all of the women that he was involved with, do you think a lot of those were mind-controlled sex slaves?

TED: Not only Clinton, but I think past Presidents. Brice Taylor says that she’s had sex with every one of them except Jimmy Carter since she was 15 or 16 years old.

TRACY: Aren’t there a lot of people in the entertainment industry involved as well?

TED: There are some. I don’t know if there are a lot. But I worked the McMartin case. I’m the guy that went in there in 1990 in the spring and hired an archaeologist, and we found the tunnels under the school. The kids said there were tunnels under the school.

TRACY: What exactly did they look like?

TED: Well, they were tunnels that had been filled in. We were there for 34 days with the whole team of archaeologists.

TRACY: Was this covered by the news at all at the time?

TED: Yeah, but the mainstream media wasn't going to touch it. Nobody would do anything with it. The Los Angeles Times had one article on it.

TRACY: Did you find carcasses or skeletons of animals?

TED: We found 2000 animal bones. We did not find any human bones. We had everything analyzed. It cost thousands of dollars. I spent personally $17,000 out of my pocket on that project, and then some of the companies that worked with us donated their time, and we had monetary donations from others. Anyway, I'm the guy that went in there and found the tunnels, so I'm not too popular with my adversaries. And yes, those kids identified some actors. One was Chuck Norris, whom they said was involved.

TRACY: So, do you think that's likely to be true, or do you think that's just something that they told the kids?

TED: Oh, I don't think there's any question that the kids were telling the truth. Because they [officials?] said that they were hallucinating, but the kids talked about tunnels under the school, they talked about being flown up into the mountains. Well, I know the abandoned Satanic site in Crestmount, I've got pictures of it. And I went up there and took pictures, and when the case broke I called Dale Reuben, the prosecutor, and I said, "I think I know where the kids were taken." She wasn't interested. Nobody wanted to look at it. And the kids said there were tunnels under the school. There were tunnels under the school--they'd been filled in, and I have a 186-page report by the archaeologists that documents it. This wasn’t me going out and digging. I’m just an investigator. This was an archaeologist. This was a doctor from UCLA. We kicked their asses.

TRACY: So, do you think the prosecution in that case was being controlled?

TED: Yes, I do.

TRACY: And so this whole operation in the McMartin school was part of Project MONARCH?

TED: Yes, there’s no question in my mind. I’ve been trying to do something about this for years, ever since I ran into it and discovered it. I even had my own radio talk show for two years.

TRACY: Oh, was that a national talk show?

TED: Yeah, it was all over the world, actually. It was short wave out of Nashville, WWCR, Worldwide Christian Radio. I’ve done probably a thousand radio shows myself. As you can tell I can talk right off the top of my head, and I have the documentation to back it up. “They”--meaning this evil element within our government--they’re very concerned about me, because I’ve got the documentation. I have it hidden in four different locations. I went on a ten-day trip a year ago last June, and, Hell, they came in here and stole a bunch of my boxes--somebody did. They didn’t take any jewelry or anything like that, they just took my research. They’re so concerned about the research I have that they don’t know what to do about me. You know, and I don’t back down to them, either.

TRACY: So you don’t know specifically who it was that broke in?

TED: They didn’t break in. They have keys for everything. They’re professional burglars, professional killers, they’re assassins; they’re almost every evil word you can think of. That’s what we’re dealing with. And like I said, this involves our US intelligence community, the CIA in particular, and then later on the FBI, whereas in the past it didn’t. There’s no question about it. What they do is, the CIA recruits out of Special Forces. McVeigh came right out of Special Forces class. They recruit them out of there, and then they train them to be assassins and killers, and to run their drug operations. Now McVeigh wrote a letter to his sister, I don’t know if you remember this or not. He said this in his letter. This is public information. So I’m not talking off the top of my head.

TRACY: Do you think that most of the cases you hear of Satanic Ritual Abuse are all parts of this government operation?

TED: Oh, I don’t think there’s any question that it’s an organized ring, if that’s what you’re looking for. There is a conspiracy here. There’s no question about that.

TRACY: And what’s the overall goal?

TED: The overall goal is to take over the world.

TRACY: They just essentially want everyone to be mind-controlled slaves?

TED: They want to take over the world. They want a two-class society: the very rich, and then the slobs, like us, you now, the servants? It’s well-planned, and it’s well-organized, and if you look at the 25 goals that were set forth in 1776, 230-some years ago, you’ll see that most of those, are about 85% complete today. Like corruption of the youth through sex and drugs. I mean, look at what’s going on with our youth today. Control of the mainstream media. Do you think the mainstream media is going to have the guts to print what I’m telling you now? Hell, no. And I’ve got the documentation. I’ve got cabinets full of material, to prove that I’m right. Hell, no, they won’t, because they’ve got the Brokaws, and the Rathers. You know, you’ve got those people. They’re all being controlled. They wouldn’t dare talk about this because they’d lose their jobs. Nor would the Los Angeles Times, or the New York Times. They won’t touch any of this stuff. Maybe Hustler Magazine has the guts to print this, I don’t know. Let me tell you a little hook, here. It’s really interesting. One of the… Who’s the owner of Hustler?

TRACY: Larry Flynt.

TED: Yeah, Larry Flynt's former body guard was at the time a contract killer, and attempted to take my life in 1987. His name was Bill Menser.

TRACY: What were the circumstances?

TED: Well, there was a fellow named Mike Riconosciuto from the CIA, who was talking, exposing these people. You see, when people come forward from the inside who can give direct knowledge of what's going on, they either end up dead or in prison. Well, Mike Riconosciuto started talking. He's in prison now for 30 years. But Mike and I worked together back in the early 80s, and we put five people in jail who were contract killers. One of them was Bill Menser. Menser was one of Flynt's bodyguards. A guy named Lamatta was another. And they were convicted of murdering a guy named Roy Raiton from Long Island, New York, along with Lani Jacobs. Jacobs, of course, was female, not working for Larry Flynt. Anyway, one of the people we put in jail was arranging for contract killings, and his name was Dr. John P. Nichols, out of Indio, California. And when he got out, he called Menser, and told Menser to do his job on me. I was able to avoid Menser, and Mike and I put Menser in jail. We went to the D.A. and told him all about his involvement in the Roy Raiton murder and everything. So anyway, Larry Flynt will know all about Menser, he'll know all about Lamatta, and a guy named Lowell was the one who drove the car that night when they killed Roy Raiton. And that puts a little twist on this. Larry Flynt had people right in his midst who were involved in this. And Bill Menser was known as "Charles Manson II" in Hollywood. He's a killer.

TRACY: What do you think about JonBenet Ramsey?

TED: I have no documentation on that, but the scenario fits a Satanic cult ceremony.

TRACY: In that she was killed on Christmas night?

TED: Yeah, that's a big Satanic holiday.

TRACY: And Chandra Levy, too, disappeared on Walpurgis Night.

TED: She disappeared on May 1st, a big Communist holiday.

[Editor's Note: She disappeared between April 30, Walpurgis Night, and May 1st, which is May Day. They are primarily pagan holidays, although May Day is a traditional protest day for Socialists.]

TRACY: Would you speculate that Condit, then, is a controller as well?

TED: I have no idea, but from what I've read and seen, I wouldn't be surprised. But it definitely appears that he was involved in kinky sex, which of course, I guess, there's millions of people who are involved in that in this country and around the world.

TRACY: You heard that he specifically referred to his women as “sex slaves.” [Source: The Globe.]

TED: Well, there you go. That’s what they are, they’re sex slaves.

TRACY: How do they go about programming these people?

TED: It’s a combination of torture, hypnosis, drugs. And what happens is, they torture them so much, that their personality splits in order to endure the pain and misery. When their personality splits, they became another person, and it’s through this technique that they train them. Then in training they make it so that they can give them a trigger word, say “green,” or “red,” or pick up the phone and call them. And they have an assignment to go out and do something--like, say, go out and do a hit, or something like that. That’s kind of a layman’s definition of it, but that’s the way it works.

TRACY: Have you spoken to anyone who was a controller or programmer?

TED: Oh yeah, sure.

TRACY: And so they told you this as well?

TED: Oh yeah, I've got it from all kinds--I've got it 15 ways from Sunday. These people all talk like they're crazy, but there's so many of them, and they don't know each other, and their stories are the same, so there's got to be something to it.

TRACY: I've noticed that a lot of the women are really weird. Like Cathy O'Brien. She sounds like she's really smart, and she sounds like she knows a lot about the history of mind control, and all sorts of things. But then she'll use really inappropriate words in a sentence, and it just seems like there's a lot of common knowledge that she doesn't have. And a lot of these women are like this. So it does seem like they really have been isolated from society, and just grew up in the whole Satanic cult world with no exposure to real life.

TED: Well, half of them sound crazy, and the other half sound semi-crazy. But this is so prevalent, and it's from so many sources, that there's absolutely no question about it. By the way, I've got the Congressional reports where Congress investigated back in 1977. So, hey, Congress knows about it.

TRACY: They investigated MK-ULTRA, or Project MONARCH specifically?

TED: MK-ULTRA and Project MONARCH. Yeah, I've got all this information. The reports are available. I've got all this information right back here in my little cabinet drawer some place.

TRACY: To what extent do you think people in the Federal government know about this?

TED: I think they know, but they're covering it up. They don't want to come forward with it. A lot of people do. I personally went back to Washington in 1986-1987, talked to some congressmen, senators, administrative assistants, and told them about this. Biden was one, Dan Coats out of Indiana, former congressman and senator, was another. And then I backed it up with documentation, with paper. So they know about it. I don't know why they won't come forward with it. First of all, it's unbelievable, and if you start talking about it, people will think you're crazy. But you know, hey, Congress investigated it, but it was basically not reported by the mainstream media again.

TRACY: How many people do you think there are out there who are mind control subjects?

TED: Well, O'Brien will tell you about 10 million, but I personally think it's between 3 and 4 million. And it's there. The grandmother in the McMartin case [Virginia McMartin] told one of the mothers that she travels all over the world and sets up these pre-schools. And Dr. Roland Sommit out of UCLA Hospital has made the statement that there are 50 other pre-schools in the country where the kids talk about tunnels under the school.

TRACY: Would you say it's just dangerous to send your kid to pre-school?

TED: It depends. You have to investigate it. Now, if the pre-school says: “OK, you cannot come here between the hours of nine and four, even if you’re a parent,” then that’s Number One. You don’t go there. You don’t put your kid in that school. Because, why would they object to you coming in and checking on your kid, right? Then if the kid, let’s say, had a little blood in the diapers, and so forth. We’re talking about two, three, four-year old kids with a little blood in the diaper. You certainly don’t want to send your kid back to that. Or if the kid doesn’t want to go to school, listen to your child. I’ve got a checklist here of signs of what to look for with your kids. This goes on and on, and I can talk for hours on this.

TRACY: Have you heard of the supposed electrified cages full of babies at China Lake?

TED: No, I can’t say that I’ve heard about that. But I have heard, you know, rumors that there are underground cities, and that some of these kids are being kept in those underground cities. Now Paul Bonacci in Omaha, Nebraska has made the statement that he was involved when he was 10-13 years old. He was used as a decoy in malls, and parks, and so forth, to attract kids that age, and then the adults grab them and run off with them. And Paul Bonacci received his training at Offutt Air Force Base. That’s one of the military bases. And I tell you, it’s kind of ironic, but Michael Aquino was at Fort Bragg at the time of the Geoffrey MacDonald murders that I talked about when I first started talking to you.

TRACY: Have you talked to Michael Aquino?

TED: No, I don't have anything to do with him. There's a guy named Craig Lockwood who has some phenomenal information about this. He can really fill you in. He wrote a book called Other Alters. It's all about the Satanic cult movement in this country, and it's about Michael Aquino. It's an interesting story. He told me that this sold 15,000 copies in just a couple of weeks. His publisher was really excited about it. Then all of the sudden he was sued in Minneapolis where the publisher is, and they found out that Michael Aquino went around and bought all of them out. Now you have to have a pretty good-sized network to do that. He bought all the books, and then sued the publisher, and also Craig. But Craig won the lawsuit.

TRACY: So that means the judge believed that this had actually taken place. And in the Presidio case [a sexual abuse case in which Aquino was accused], didn't the Army have to pay a substantial settlement to the parents of the kids?

TED: Yeah, I think they did. We had the thing in Westpoint, too, and there was a captain there who resigned his commission because of that, mostly 'cause it was a cover-up.

TRACY: I just remember something about a sexual harassment lawsuit. So that was part of Project MONARCH as well?

TED: Oh yeah. These pre-schools are, I believe, prep schools for these people to indoctrinate these kids and expose them to the Satanic movement.

TRACY: re some of these kids also raised in Satanic families, specifically for this purpose?

TED: Oh yeah. Of course. I talked to a woman who was sent to law school by them to study immigration laws. They would fly her Germany to bring kids back into this country. She'd drop them off, bring them in at Kennedy Airport, and turn them in to two men. Then she'd disappear, and go back and get another one.

TRACY: So are there physical or psychological traits that they look for in these kids? Do they choose kids specifically for reasons?

TED: No, I don't think so. One of that tactics that they use is, say I'm a perpetrator, or I'm a pedophile. I'll contact an individual who I know can arrange for the kids, and I'll say "OK, I want a 13-year-old boy or girl, whatever the case might be, blue-eyed, blond-haired." And then that person would go out and get pictures of about four or five kids surreptitiously, come back, show me the pictures. And I say, "Oh, I want this one." Then they go and kidnap the kid. Like an order, you know? It's like looking at a catalogue. "Oh, I'll take this coffee pot, or I'll take that automobile," or whatever the situation might be.

TRACY: Don't they also get a lot of kids at Disneyland?

TED: Yeah, they've quashed that, I understand. Kids have disappeared at Disneyland regularly. There are kids who've disappeared here in Las Vegas, and of course the officials are being very careful not to let that out to the public because this is a big entertainment center.

TRACY: And a lot of the slaves say that Disney imagery was part of their programming.

TED: Oh, absolutely. Everyone that I've talked to on the west coast had some training at Disneyland. I've talked to hundreds of them in the last 22 years. It's quite an elaborate operation. There has to be a central location, there has to be people in charge, it has to be organized, and hey, it's covered-up. The ones who are involved in this, you know, it's a secret who they are, and it's a secret what they do, but it does involve human sacrifices and Satanic ceremonies, period.

TRACY: Have you heard of Mormons being involved in this?

TED: Heavily involved in this. At the very top. I've got a whole paper on that. They did their own investigation in 1990 of it, and they came up with the same thing. I've got all the reports, by the way. That's just typical of my documentation.

TRACY: So they were investigating themselves, and they found evidence of human sacrifices?

TED: Well, they found evidence of Satanism, which would include human sacrifice.

TRACY: Does the police force ever investigate this?

TED: No. They don’t touch it. There’ve been police officers who have tried to do something about it who have ended up dead, or they’re re-assigned. These people are killers. We’re not talking about nice people. And they’ll stop at nothing to further their cause. Anybody who gets in their way is dead, or gets put in jail. I have a list of the leaders of the occult movement on the west coast, which is my insurance policy. If anything happens to me, that goes out to the public.

False Memories: An Interview with Pamela Freyd

Pamela Freyd is the co-founder of the False Memory Syndrome Foundation. She founded the organization with her husband Peter Freyd in 1992 after their daughter Jennifer Freyd, a Professor of Psychology at the University of Oregon, accused Peter of abusing her sexually as a child, based on memories she had recovered through therapy. This interview took place on August 28, 2001.

TRACY: Is “False Memory Syndrome” (specifically related to memories of child sexual abuse) a relatively new phenomenon? If so, when do you think this problem first began, and what were the causal factors?

PAMELA: It’s important to begin any discussion of the topic of false memories with the fact that all the mental health professional organizations have issued statements saying that the only way that one can distinguish a true from a false memory is through external corroboration.

We all have false memories but generally they don’t make a huge difference in our lives. When such a memory leads to the accusation of criminal behavior of another person, however, the stakes are raised. To be falsely accused of the unforgivable crime of child sexual abuse places individuals in a quandary. How does anyone prove a negative?

The Foundation has done a number of surveys of the families that have made contact. One of the questions in a survey we are just now analyzing is “In what year did you learn about the accusation?” We have one person in 1970 and another in 1971 who said they were accused in those years based solely on the claim of a “recovered repressed memory” with no other external evidence. We have a total of 12 reports from the 1970--contrasted with more than 550 reports for just the years 1991-1992. The frequency data indicate that the recovered memory phenomenon is a fad--at least based on the data from the surveys. The numbers have been in decline since 1992.

The McMartin case in 1983 received national media attention and made child abuse and Satanic Ritual Abuse a front page topic. Sociologists have referred to the false memory/child abuse accusations phenomenon in terms of a “moral panic.” Child abuse is inherently evil and as statistics about its frequency increased, so did fear. When people are afraid, they panic. That’s why schools have fire drills so that students don’t panic should there be a fire. People often get trampled in panics caused by fires and they get accused in moral panics.

The explosive period of the fad appears to have begun in 1987-1988. Whether it is a cause or an effect is not clear, but 1988 saw the publication of the book The Courage to Heal by Ellen Bass and Laura Davis. Since that book has been listed as the most recommended book by psychotherapists (at least in the early 90s) it is possible that it helped spread the beliefs.

TRACY: Could you estimate what percentage of “recovered” abuse memory claims investigated by your organization are found to be based on false memories?

PAMELA: The Foundation cannot determine the truth or falsity of an accusation in the absence of external corroboration anymore than anyone else can. Indeed, the Foundation would not be the appropriate group to conduct investigations since it could be said to be biased. The Foundation does not “certify” anyone but rather has as its purpose to disseminate information about the nature of memory. Individual families have tried to get mental health professionals to investigate the accusations and have filed complaints for that purpose. Because the accusers would not release any records, however, this approach did not work. Some families brought lawsuits in the hope that this would open an investigation, but again, without access to records, there is little that can be done. What is left then, are the cases in which a child sued and that case then went to court. Most of these types of cases have been dismissed for lack of evidence.

What the Foundation noted was that the reports from the people who made contact showed certain patterns, and it was these patterns that brought alarm to scientists and psychiatrists who studied memory. Therapists were using hypnosis, guided imagery, sodium amatol, relaxation exercise, participation in groups, reading suggestive literature and other techniques in an effort to excavate memories. Although people may remember things with any of these techniques, there is absolutely no evidence that what they remember is historically accurate. Indeed, because these are suggestive techniques, it is highly probably that the patients pick up the suggestion and create false memories.

It’s important to remember how memory works. If it worked like a tape recorder, storing everything that was experienced, it would make sense to dig for memories because the problem would be one of access. But that is not how memory works. People store bits and pieces and even these bits and pieces can be lost and altered over time. When someone has a “memory” it is a highly creative process of reconstruction. The bits and pieces are woven together to make a story that makes sense to the person in the here and now. People fill in the blanks. They incorporate information from a variety of sources.

TRACY: What telltale signs do you look for to determine if a recovered memory is false? What would it take to convince your organization that a recovered memory was true?

PAMELA: I repeat what I wrote previously, the Foundation has no way of knowing whether a particular memory is true or false in the absence of external corroboration. If any of the suggestive techniques I mentioned previously are used (i.e., hypnosis, sodium amatol, guided imagery, relaxation exercises, participation in survivor groups, reading suggestive literature, seeing suggestive videos, etc) the task becomes virtually impossible. Any memory that arises using such techniques must be suspect because of the suggestibility inherent in the use of the techniques themselves.

TRACY: Does your organization on the whole reject claims of childhood Satanic Ritual Abuse? Are there any cases of SRA that your organization has investigated which were not found to be the result of False Memory Syndrome?

PAMELA: Kenneth Lanning (1992) of the FBI investigated many cases and found no external corroboration for the types of claims to which you are referring. A much more extensive study was conducted by psychologist Gail Goodman and colleagues for the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (1994). They found no external corroboration for the many cases they examined. What they did find was that “a very small group of clinicians, each claiming to have treated scores of cases, accounted for most of the reports of ritualistic child abuse.” In Great Britain, anthropologist La Fontaine (1994) examined all the cases of claimed Satanic Ritual Abuse (SRA) in that country and came up empty handed for evidence. She found that belief in SRA was closely linked to fundamentalist religious groups. In 1995, Bottoms, Shaver, Goodman and Qin examined whether religious beliefs can foster child abuse. They were alarmed at finding cases “involving the withholding of medical care for religious reasons, abuse related to attempts to rid a child of evil, and abuse perpetrated by persons with religious authority,” and argued that as a society greater effort should be made to protect children in these circumstances.

Evidence for an intergenerational Satanic cult that breeds children that they then abuse does not seem to exist. Rebellious teens may dabble with Satanic symbols and ceremonies and there are religious groups that focus on Satan but there is no evidence for the kinds of claims made in books such as Michelle Remembers.

TRACY: I understand that 18% of the claims that you investigate involve some form of SRA. Can you speculate on why so many such claims have come forth since the 1980, all remarkably similar?

PAMELA: The McMartin case put SRA on the front page and into the minds of many people. I suspect that the similarity of the claims is due to the fact that books such as “Michelle Remembers” were quite popular and that authority was given to these beliefs by some television programs, both those that brought on “experts” and those that displayed patients who held such beliefs. Within the therapeutic community, ideas were spread at continuing education seminars. There are now, however, hundreds of former patients who, once they left the therapeutic context, came to realize that their memories of Satanic abuse were fantasy, although deeply disturbing and painful at the time of belief.

TRACY: Has your organization specifically investigated the claims of people whose recovered memories involve the so-called secret “Project MONARCH,” supposedly the CIA’s experimental program aimed at creating “mind-controlled sex slaves” and Manchurian Candidate-like assassins through the infliction of severe childhood trauma, along with the use of drugs and hypnosis?

PAMELA: No. The Foundation has limited its focus to issues of families torn apart based solely on claims of recovered repressed memories of childhood sexual abuse.

TRACY: According to both alleged victims of and self-proclaimed experts on Project MONARCH, the above-described techniques (including the use of rape, torture, and "Satanic Ritual Abuse") so traumatize the young mind of the victim that it splits off into numerous separate personalities, to compartmentalize the trauma. Each of these personalities can supposedly then be programmed to perform specific tasks without the knowledge of the others. These programs can purportedly be accessed later through the use of pre-arranged code-words and signals, which automatically trigger the hypnotic state in the victim. Does your organization have any opinion on whether or not such programming is even possible using the techniques described above?

PAMELA: The FMS Foundation has not been involved in examining any of the claims about CIA brainwashing. The purpose of the Foundation is to provide the public and professions with accurate information about memory and to help those families who contact the Foundation by providing information. I think the following passage by Philip Zimbardo and Susan Andersen addresses scientific understanding on the CIA mind-control topic:

"John Mark's (1979) expose of the CIA's secret mind-control program made it clear that no foolproof way of "brainwashing" another person has ever been found. (The word "brainwashing" is used here in its popular connotation, which came out of movies and sensationalized press accounts--that is, absolute control over another. This is not what the leading researchers [Lifton, 1961, Schein, Schneier, & Barker, 1961] of the Korean War-era "brainwashing" meant by their terms, thought reform and coercive persuasion, respectively.) Electroshock therapy, hypnosis, exquisite torture devices, and psychoactive drugs have not proved adequate for the task of reliably directing behavior through specific scenarios designated by would-be manipulators. It is a person (or various persons) in a convincing social situation–not gadgets or gimmicks–who control the minds of others. the more worried we are about being regarded as ignorant, uncultured, untalented, or boring, and the more ambiguous the events that must be evaluated, the more likely we are to take on the beliefs of those around us to avoid being rejected by them ." (Michael D. Langone (Editor) Recovery from Cults: Help for Victims of Psychological and Spiritual Abuse., Norton, 1993, page 106.)

Although it has been often repeated that severe childhood trauma causes the mind to split and multiple personalities to develop, there is no scientific evidence to that effect. This notion spread after the publication of Sybil.. In the last five years two things have occurred that cause grave doubt as to whether Sybil was actually a multiple personality. First was an interview with Herb Spiegel, M.D., one of the doctors who treated her. Spiegel said that Sybil was not MPD. Second was the discovery of some tapes of talks between the doctor and author who wrote the book Sybil.. In these tapes, it appears that Sybil's MPD was created by these two.

That someone has the manifestations of MPD is not at issue; they may. The question is what is the cause of the symptoms. Many in the psychiatric community believe that MPD is iatrogenic, that is, caused by the use of hypnosis and the type of interviewing techniques of the doctor.

TRACY: Has your organization specifically investigated the claims of the following people:

- Brice Taylor (a.k.a. Susan Ford, author of Thanks for the Memories: The Truth Has Set Me Free?

- Cathy O'Brien (author of The TRANCE Formation of America.)?

- Arizona Wilder (author, Revelations of a Mother Goddess)?

PAMELA: The FMS Foundation is not an investigative group. Its purpose is to provide information about the nature of memory as it has appeared in the scientific literature. There are hundreds, probably thousands, of stories that people have written about their recovered memories of torture of some sort--in past lives, in space alien abductions and in Satanic rituals. Evidence is lacking for the existence of these events--other than the stories. A case study or a story is not scientific evidence although it can be used as a basis to being a scientific program. When it comes to memory, the scientific program has been in place for many years, and what has been discovered is how suggestible people are.

A very well-known memoir is that of Binjamin Wilkomirski, who wrote of his childhood in German concentration camps (Fragments). The existence of the concentration camps is not an issue as is the existence of space alien abductions, past lives and intergenerational Satanic cults. The book received numerous prizes and he was given awards and spoke around the world. The publisher withdrew it in 1999 when it was discovered that the memoir was fiction. The author had spent the war years in Switzerland.

It's interesting how this ties in with Satanic Ritual Abuse. Credibility had been given to the Wilkomirski. story when it was confirmed by a Laura Grabowski who claimed she had known Wilkomirski. at Auschwitz. But in an interesting twist, it appears that Laura Grabowski was quite confused. Her real name is Lauren Stratford and she is the author of Satan's Underground., a book in which she describes being forced to be a "baby breeder" in a Satanic cult. An expose of Grabowski appeared in the Nov, 1999 Cornerstone Magazine. Lauren Statford was born in Tacoma, Washington, and has spent her entire life in the United States. [Editor's note: According to Cornerstone's website, cornerstonemag.com, "Lauren Stratford doesn't exist, except as the pen name of Laurel Rose Willson, and Satan's Underground is only one of the stories she's told about her life."]

TRACY: Some high-profile and outspoken "child abuse survivors" with recovered memories have also claimed to be victims of "harassment" by the FMSF after coming forward with their accusations. Does your organization engage in any contact with the alleged victims that could be construed as such?

PAMELA: The only persons I know who might fit your description are David Calof and Laura Brown, Ph.D. They are both therapists rather than survivors and have both complained about being picketed by Chuck Noah, a retired construction worker in Seattle, Washington. One look at the names on the Scientific Advisory Board of the FMS Foundation should belie any idea that the Foundation is interested in picketing as a way to educate people about the nature of memory. The Foundation has held conferences and seminars. And indeed a number of these were picketed by people opposed to the Foundation. The Foundation is interested in fostering family reconciliation where it is possible, not in harming anyone.

I cannot answer your question unless you tell me what you are referring to. What harassment? Who? When? In the same manner, I might ask if you have stopped beating your husband or whomever. How does one respond to such insinuations?

TRACY: Is the term “False Memory Syndrome” recognized by the psychiatric field at large?

PAMELA: The term is now in most dictionaries and even in the OED. To my knowledge no one has sought to have it included in the “Diagnostic and Statistical Manual” of the American Psychiatric Association. The foundation is interested in promoting therapy in which the development of false memories is not a likely outcome. Did PTSD exist before it was included in the DSM? Did MPD exist before inclusion in the DSM? Since there have been at least a dozen professional mental health journal issues devoted to the topic of false memories, I must assume that it is recognized at some level by professionals.

TRACY: Is there any difference between a false memory and outright lying?

PAMELA: A lie is a deliberate falsification often for some purpose. People with false memories believe them sincerely and with much conviction, especially if some hypnotic techniques are involved. There is a difference.

Postscript: Satanic Ritual Abuse and Sex Slavery in the New Millennium

I have a little bit of experience with “Satanic Panic.” When I was 14 years old and living two doors up from my best friend in the small town of Sherwood, Oregon, I got exposed to it first-hand. I already had a reputation for having a “dark” personality in my high school. I was into Goth music, I wore black clothes, and I sometimes read books about the occult. My friend, who also listened to Goth music and wore dark clothes, had recently begun to develop a similar reputation. One day my friend’s aunt came into town to visit his family, and brought with her a set of documentary videos made by an Evangelical church group about Satanism. She showed the videos to my friend’s parents. By the end of the day, they were convinced that their son was a Satanist, and that he was possessed by demons. They held a group prayer ritual in the living room with the aim of removing the demonic influence from the house.

Shortly after this happened, my friend had a fight with his parents about an unclean bedroom that resulted in him being committed as an in-patient at a local mental hospital, where counselors repeatedly tried to get him to confess some deep secret of personal shame. He had no idea why his parents had done this to him or what the counselors were after, but within a week he was released. When he returned home, he found that all of his Goth CDs and most of his clothes had been burned in a bonfire in his backyard by his parents. Next, he was taken to see a Christian counselor from his parents’ church, who presented him with a list of addresses that had been found in his bedroom. My friend recognized them as a list of record stores in downtown Portland that he had drawn up last time he went shopping for music. The counselor asked if these were the locations of his “Satanic meetings,” and even presented surveillance photographs taken from outside of these establishments. This was the first time my friend realized that his parents and their church had launched an investigation with the aim of proving that he belonged to a Satanic cult.

Within a couple of weeks, I too found myself at the center of an investigation. Counselors at school began quizzing me frequently, and even brought my parents in for an interview. They never did say what they were investigating me for, but the endless suspicion and questioning caused me to drop out of school and take up instead at a local community college. At this time the landlord of the house where I lived unexpectedly reneged on our lease agreement, and my family was forced to move.

Later my friend also dropped out and joined me at the college. We moved on with our lives and forgot about the whole thing. It wasn’t until two years later that a slip of the tongue from my friend’s grandmother revealed some of the context of what had happened. Apparently, his parents (who raised sheep on a farm) had discovered one of their sheep brutally butchered in the barn. They leapt to the obvious conclusion: “Our son and his friend Tracy must have done it! They must belong to a Satanic cult! Tracy is probably the high priestess!” They even had enough imagination to conclude that their son had probably blocked out the traumatic memory of committing the sacrifice, and would need to be committed to a mental hospital so that his memories could be recovered.

According to my friend’s grandmother, his parents had gone to the school principal and the local police with their suspicions. They had even accused my parents of being involved, and said that we had a “Satanic star” hanging in our living room window (which was actually a sun catcher shaped like a sun with a smiley face). His grandmother said that the police had actually tapped my phone looking for proof that we had butchered the sheep, but found none.

I suppose as a teenager I didn't have that much of a reputation to ruin, but my parents did, and it seems they may have been forced to move out of their house because of this smear. If it is true that my phone was tapped by the police, that compounds the injustice a hundred time. What gave these people the right to try to ruin our lives with their baseless accusations? How dumb did the police and school counselors have to be to go along with it? Is suspicion of "Satanism" really enough to justify locking up a kid up in a mental hospital against his will? There is one more nagging question: who killed the sheep anyway?

I have no doubt that this experience caused my interest in occultism, which before had been no more than a fashion statement, to flourish into a serious study. When I grew up and became an occult writer, even writing about conspiracy theories involving the "Satanic Illuminati," I found myself being accused by other writers of involvement in the conspiracy. I found conspiracy flow charts on the internet linking me and my acquaintances to the Trilateral Commission and the Bilderberg Group. This time, though, I understood the hysteria, and found it more humorous than threatening.

Still, having been on the receiving end of these accusations, you may wonder why I have written and published so much information about so-called Project MONARCH. Many researchers think that stories of Satanic Ritual Abuse are urban legends, and those who claim to be victims are smearing those they accuse just as I have been smeared in the past. Certainly I know from experience how easily this can happen. But I also now know first-hand a great deal about secret societies, and the types of people who are typically drawn to join occult groups. While this is only a stereotype, it is not uncommon to find that these people have symptoms of megalomania, socio-pathology, sadism, sexual deviance, an attraction to evil, and a willingness to do anything that they think will help them to acquire more power. I know that many occult rituals do involve bizarre sex acts, and sometimes blood sacrifice. Some occultists include their own young children in rites and practices which may be remembered by them as unpleasant or frightening. For sure, the same thing can be said about religious zealots of any stripe, but occultists are no exception. There is also certainly a confluence between the membership of certain occult groups, and involvement in things like government, intelligence, high finance, and organized crime. Most definitely, many occult groups use techniques on their membership that can only be called "mind control," and intelligence agencies have been experimenting with mind control for many decades now.

Furthermore, we know that the statistics on human trafficking in our modern world are horrifyingly huge, as are the statistics on missing and abused children. It is estimated that 27 million people are currently enslaved today, most of them as sex slaves. The State Department says that somewhere between 600,000 and 800,000 people are illegally trafficked across borders throughout the world. 70% of these are female and 50% are children. The "vast majority," they say, end up in the sex trade. This puts an entirely different spin on the subject of illegal immigration across the Mexican border. We talk about issues of racism and depressed wages, but it seems there is a much more important issue at stake when you consider that so many of those crossing the border, according to our own government, are not just working family people seeking a better life, but rather unfortunate victims of the human sex trade. We know that the Mexican border is purposely left porous, and illegal alien criminals are routinely set free from jail to offend again, for reasons of political expediency. But perhaps the lax border issue is connected to something more than the courting of the Latino vote.

Another thing we know about the sex slave industry is that it is incredibly cruel and sadistic. Because of its underground nature, it is impossible to estimate numbers accurately, but from the evidence and eyewitness testimonies we do have, we know that sex slaves are not only repeatedly raped, but beaten, tortured, and eventually killed. Often this abuse is perpetrated merely for sexual pleasure by sadistic people, and sometimes it is captured on film to be sold to a sick audience always hungry for more. Some of this is also part of the conditioning of the slave: breaking down their will power for purposes of mind control. There is no doubt that the principles of Stockholm Syndrome (also known as Trauma-Bonding) and Dissociative Identity Disorder are being purposely studied and utilized by these slaves' handlers. They also know who to pay off in order to ensure that government officials look the other way. Sexual favors from slaves are often used for these pay-offs, and the proceedings are secretly filmed for future blackmail. There is no doubt that sex slavery could not exist without complicity from people in governments all over the world, including our own.

But what evidence is there of a global confluence of Satanism, sex slavery, and intelligence agencies as posited by the Project MONARCH stories? Most of that evidence has come from the testimonies of the people featured in this book, and much of it is hearsay. You can take it for what it's worth. However, I have noticed that since I wrote the original "Stepford Whores" article for Hustler in 2001 (included in this book), a number of cases have popped up in the news that seem to bear the earmarks of the same phenomena detailed in this book.

For instance, the latest Michael Jackson child molestation case made me suspicious as detailed rumors that started pouring during the trial. According to the stories, Jackson had for many years been bringing 12-to-14-year-old boys to his circus-like Neverland Ranch in California, showering them with toys and gifts, plying them with alcohol (“Jesus Juice,” or wine in a Coke can), and sexually molesting them. In many cases, the parents of the boys seemed to be complicit in what was going on, as they repeatedly brought their sons to spend the night alone in bed with this strange grown man. Perhaps not coincidentally, Jackson reportedly showered the parents with gifts as well, including large sums of cash.

Friends of Jackson have reported his tendency to slip into child-like characters that seem like alternate personalities, his favorite being Peter Pan, “because he never has to grow up.” He seems to be obsessed with the concept of wearing masks, and transmogrification, as demonstrated in the videos for his songs “Thriller” and “Black or White.” This desire to transform himself has obviously led to Jackson’s disastrous plastic surgery, and presumably ties in with the fact that he forces his children to wear masks while they are in public. Indeed, viewers of Martin Bashir’s famous 2003 documentary exposé of Michael Jackson saw that he appeared to live in a 24-hour fantasy world of his own making in which he pretended to be a child. He shows all the signs of someone suffering from Dissociative Identity Disorder.

Jackson also shows the signs of having been sexually abused as a child, and indeed has accused his father Joseph of abusing him, as has his sister LaToya. Michael is known to have had psycho-sexual problems since early on. His highly-publicized marriage to Lisa Marie Presley is believed to have been a publicity stunt, while his marriage to Deborah Rowe was part of a scheme in which his first two children were produced through in vitro fertilization. They divorced in 1999, and Jackson had another child in 2002, but nobody knows who the mother is. The kids have always had their faces covered when shown in public. Some say this is partly because he is hiding the fact that they are obviously not his biological children.

So who are these kids, and what is happening to them in Michael Jackson's custody? We may never know, as Jackson was acquitted of the molestation charges, and immediately went running to Bahrain, a known child prostitution center where pedophilia is openly tolerated. The question of the children's safety becomes even more paramount when we consider allegations made by Jack Gordon, the former husband of Michael Jackson's sister LaToya, who claimed in a tell-all book to have witnessed Jackson sacrificing monkeys in occult rituals, and physically abusing his pet monkeys on several occasions. In a similar vein, Vanity Fair reported in March 2003 that in 2000 Michael Jackson paid a voodoo witchdoctor in Mali $150,000 to put a curse on his 24 most-hated enemies, including Steven Spielberg and David Geffen. The ceremony, which reportedly took place in Switzerland, required Jackson to bathe in the blood of 42 freshly-sacrificed cows.

Was Michael Jackson a Project MONARCH victim as a child? It has been said that the CIA's MK-ULTRA targeted members of the entertainment industry, and that many famous child actors and singers were in fact mind-controlled slaves. The name of his ranch, Neverland, as well as his obsession with Peter Pan, are suspicious, for as we know, this imagery was allegedly used as a programming base for MONARCH children, according to Cathy O’Brien. And what shape could you once see from the air when you fly over Neverland Ranch, made out of colorful flowers and bushes? The image of a Monarch butterfly.

Want another example? Take the case of the Hosanna Church in Ponchatoula, Louisiana. In May of 2005, police in the Tangipahoa Parish Sheriff's Office had just begun to investigate claims by a woman who said her children had been sexually abused by people at the church. All of the sudden the pastor of the church, Louis LaMonica, walked into the station unsummoned and offered to help them with their investigation. A quote from a New York Times article from May 25, 2005 explains what unfolded next:

“Mr. Lamonica, 45, matter-of-factly told them of having sex with at least two boys, from the time they were 4 until they were 12 or 13, as well as having sex with a dog, Mr. Carpenter said, adding that Mr. Lamonica did not act as though he was confessing to crimes. He was just trying to be helpful.”

Another article from the Associated Press from June 11, 2005 reveals what had seemingly been going on for the last several years. Witnesses described Satanic rituals in which cats were sacrificed, and “as many as two dozen” children of all ages were raped and/or molested, the cat blood being poured onto their naked bodies. In several instances, children were allegedly made to have sex with dogs. Physical evidence that was found at the church included ceremonial robes and the residue of pentagrams painted on the floor.

Why did Louis Lamonica walk into the sheriff's office and start confessing all of these things, apparently not thinking that he would get in trouble? Did he have some reason to suspect that the police would be sympathetic to him? It is one of the greatest mysteries of this case. At any rate, it only became more bizarre when lawyers for Lamonica's co-defendants (many of whom had already signed confessions) claimed that their clients were innocent by reason of "brainwashing." They said that an influential member of the church, not Lamonica, had used powers of persuasion to get these people to sign their confessions. The alleged motive for this was never explained. But many other members of the church continued to testify that the abuse did in fact occur. An article from November 29, 2007 in the Hammond Star reported from the trial about one of the witnesses, married to one of the accused and mother to one of the alleged victims:

> "Monica said that when she asked [her husband] why he was sexually abusing his own daughter, he said he wanted to make her 'non-human,' or nothing more than an object of his pleasure."

The Hosanna Church trial is still ongoing as of this writing. In February of 2008 Louis Lamonica requested that the trial be moved to a new location, a motion that is currently still being considered.

Of course, many alleged cases of Satanic Ritual Abuse are supposed to have taken place in churches and religious institutions that use Christianity as a cover. Certainly there have been many real cases of children that were sexually abused in church, most notably by Catholic priests. William H. Kennedy has written an excellent book on the subject that links the phenomena of priest sex abuse to Satanism. It is called Lucifer's Lodge: Satanic Ritual Abuse in the Catholic Church. In it Kennedy reveals that many high-profile priest abuse cases contained Satanic and occult aspects that were ignored by the mainstream media. Among these is the case of Father Paul Shanley, an accused child-molesting priest who is linked with the founding of pro-pedophile group NAMBLA (the National Man-Boy Love Association), and with the Satan-worshipping Process Church of the Final Judgment. The latter has been connected by some writers to a series of ritualistic murders all over the United States, and former members claim they were involved in the trafficking of child pornography, including snuff films.

The existence of a snuff film industry is something that is denied by some researchers, who believe that it is merely an urban legend. They say that all alleged snuff films that have come to the attention of investigators turned out to be fakes. However, other investigators who have seen the same films disagreed. A film called Snuff that was purported to be the real thing was famously released in 1977, but the production company (ironically called "Monarch Films") admitted it was fake when threatened with prosecution. This famous incident appears to be in large part the basis of the argument that snuff films are merely "urban legend." But the fact is, we know that all over the world children are kidnapped, sexually abused and tortured, used in pornographic films, and murdered every single day. The odds that all of these things might have at least once happened at the same time--child rape, torture and murder caught on film and illegally distributed--seem likely to be high. Some believe it is worse than this--that snuff films are indeed an integral part of the child porn industry. Supposedly they are available only to the highest rollers, with the buyers paying anything between $5,000 and $40,000 for a custom-made limited edition film production.

A great deal of information about alleged snuff films came out with the trial and investigation of Belgian serial child murderer Marc Dutroux. The Dutroux case was one that I was unfortunately not aware of at the time I wrote the article for Hustler, but it indeed matches up with many of the elements of the Project MONARCH stories contained in this book. Dutroux and his wife Michelle Martin had already been convicted of kidnapping and raping five girls in the 1980s (they had spent no more than three years in prison for their offenses) when in 1996, two missing young girls were found in the torture chamber secretly concealed within their basement. They also found the bodies of four other girls between the ages of 8 and 19, two of them starved to death (apparently by accident) as well as that of an adult accomplice, who was killed for failing to feed the two starved girls. All of the girls had been viciously raped and tortured repeatedly during their time in Dutroux's basement.

During the investigation and trial that followed, it was revealed that police had on many occasions failed to follow up on evidence that would have caught Dutroux much earlier, and possibly could have saved the lives of the girls. Several witnesses, including Dutroux's own mother, had reported to police their suspicions that he was connected to the disappearances of several local girls. Dutroux's house had been under police surveillance for this very reason when he took two girls out of his house to have them murdered, and later brought in two more to lock in his dungeon. Police supposedly had not noticed any of this while they were watching his house. They also failed to hear the screams of the girls locked in the basement when they searched Dutroux's house in 1995, after he had been arrested for car theft, for which he spent three months in jail. It was during this time that those girls starved to death.

The police incompetence did not cease after the arrest. Indeed, the original state prosecutor of the case complained of obstruction of his investigation from every level of government. Several witnesses came forth after Dutroux's arrest, alleging that they had been abused by him and others as part of a Satanic child prostitution and pornography ring that dealt in extreme torture and snuff films. These witnesses also said that clients of the ring included some of Belgium's most prominent politicians and businessmen, as well as members of Belgium's royal family. Dutroux himself confirmed all of this and more with his own testimony and statements to reporters. He admitted that he was part of a child porn and snuff film ring, and claimed that powerful elements in Belgium did not want his true story to be told. The prosecutor was taken off the case prematurely, a move that prompted an unprecedented outcry from the outraged Belgian public. 300,000 of them marched in Brussels to express their anger. Nonetheless, the case continued to be handled by a prosecutor and investigators who were now uninterested in following the leads in the case connecting Dutroux to any larger network, especially ones which included important members of the Belgian aristocracy.

But some unpleasant information about that aristocracy did surface in the wake of the Dutroux trial, and that is the existence of "pink ballets"--kinky top secret sex parties attended by the well-to-do of Belgium. Here is a quote from the UK's Telegraph from March 16, 1997:

> “Punch-drunk Belgium is reeling from a new shock after a senior police officer confirmed last week what has long been rumoured: that some of the country's leaders indulge in sex parties, known ironically as ‘ballets roses.’
>
> It is a world of outwardly respectable private clubs in discreet suburbs of Brussels, Antwerp and Liège, but where, on arrival, members remove not just their coats, but their tops, bottoms and underwear as well.”

The article also stated that the “ballets” may be a method used by organized criminals to compromise powerful people in government:

> “Hugo Coveliers, a Belgian senator, argues that the ‘ballets roses’ are not independent of one another, but part of a system ‘which operates to this day and is used to blackmail the highly placed people who take part.’”

More recently, Portugal is reeling from its own shocking revelations about powerful people and pedophilia. In October of 2007, the UK’s Daily Mail ran a story about an orphanage in Lisbon called “Casa Pia” (“House of the Pious”)) -- a state-run network of homes caring for upwards of 4,000 children -- where kids were regularly taken away in a van and pimped out to a high society pedophile ring. These children were allegedly taken repeatedly to the homes of “some of the leading members of Lisbon society--ranging from Portuguese government ministers and high-ranking diplomats, to famous television stars and members of the judiciary.” They were drugged and raped.

Much of it was filmed. Videos of some of these attacks were found in a child porn raid in Paris.

As in the case of Marc Dutroux in Belgium, the police in Portugal have been incompetent to the point where it almost seems like they're doing it on purpose. There was actually photographic evidence showing the alleged ringleader of the pedophile group and the victim children in the same room with some of the accused politicians, but the police "accidentally" lost these photos. That was in 1982, when the allegations first surfaced. Nothing was done and the abuse at Casa Pia continued. It took the filing of many more police reports over the next 21 years before arrests were made in 2003. The investigation led to the discovery four children who had been abducted from Casa Pia and imprisoned in the home of a Portuguese ambassador, as well as photographic evidence of the abuse. The accused ringleader, Carlos Silvino, has been quoted as saying he does not fear prosecution because, "They can't touch me--there are too many people involved."
